University of London. Four years subsequently, he resigned his Edinburgh appointments on being elected Medical Officer of Health for Mid-Cheshire. While holding this office, he was appointed Examiner in Materia Medica in the University of Edinburgh, and on the invitation of the Senate of the University of London, Examiner in Public Health in that University. In 1877 he returned to Edinburgh to assume the duties of Professor of Materia Medica, to which office he was promoted on the resignation of Sir Robert Christison. In the following year he became also a Professor of Clinical Medicine, and in 1880 Dean of the Faculty of Medicine. Along with these University appointments, he holds that of Medical Adviser to the Prison Commission of Scotland and of Chief Medical Adviser of the Standard Life Assurance Company. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society; a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh; an Honorary Member of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain; a Corresponding Member of the Thérapeutical Society of Paris, and of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia; and a member of many other learned societies. In 1877 he was appointed one of the two medical members of the Admiralty Committee to report on the causes of Scurvy in Sir George Nares's Arctic Expedition; and he was President of the Section of Materia Medica and Pharmacology at the International Medical Congress held in London in 1881, and President of the Section of Materia Medica and Therapeutics at the meeting of the British Medical Association in 1885. In 1897, the Senatus of the University of Edinburgh awarded to him the Cameron Prize for the highly important and valuable addition to practical Therapeutics resulting from his researches and practical observations on the cardiac remedy, Strophanthus. Dr. Fraser is the author of "Characters, Actions, and Therapeutic Uses of Physostigma Venenosum" (awarded a Thesis Gold Medal by the University of Edinburgh, and the Barbier Prize of the Academy of Sciences of Paris), Edinburgh Medical Journal, 1863; "The Physiological Action of Physostigma Venenosum," Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1866-67; "On the Connection between Chemical Constitution and Physiological Action" (conjointly with Professor Crum Brown), Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1868-69 (awarded the Macdougall-Brisbane prize of the Royal Society of Edinburgh); "An Investigation into some previously undescribed Tetanic Symptoms produced in Cold-blooded Animals by Atropia," Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1868-69; "An Experimental Research on the Antagonism between the Actions of Physostigma and Atropia," Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1870-71; "The Dyspnoea of Asthma and Bronchitis; its Causation, and the Influence of Nitrites upon it," American Journ. of the Med. Sciences, 1887; "Strophanthus hispidus: its Natural History, Chemistry, and Pharmacology," Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1889 (awarded the Keith Prize of the Royal Society of Edinburgh); "On the rendering of Animals immune against the Venom of the Cobra and other Serpents, and on the Antidotal Properties of the Blood-Serum of the Immunised Animals," Proceed. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1895, and Nature, April 1896; "The Antivenomous Properties of the Bile of Serpents and other animals," Proceed. Roy. Soc. Edin., 1897, and Brit. Med. Journal, July 1897; and of many papers on clinical medicine, therapeutics, and the physiological action of medicinal substances. His work has been chiefly in the direction of determining the physiological effects of medicinal substances, with the view of establishing an accurate and rational basis for the treatment of disease. Address: 13 Drumsheugh Gardens, Edinburgh.

FRECHETTE, Louis Honoré, C.M.G., LL.D., Quebec, a French-Canadian littérateur and journalist, was born at Levis, opposite Quebec, Nov. 16, 1839. He received his education at the Quebec Seminary and at the College of Nicolet. He studied law, and was called to the Bar of Lower Canada in 1864. He became a voluminous contributor to the newspaper press of the French province, and edited successfully Le Journal de Quebec and Le Journal de Levis. In 1862 he published a collection of poems, under the title of "Mes Loisirs." In 1866 he settled in Chicago, where he published a French paper called L'Amérique, and was foreign correspondent in the land department of the Illinois Central R. R. Co. He returned to Quebec in 1871, and entered political life, representing his native county of Levis in the Dominion Parliament from 1874 to 1878. Since then he has published five additional collections of poems, entitled respectively "Pêle-Mêle," 1877; "Les Fleurs Boréales," 1880; "Les Oiseaux de Neige," 1880; "La Légende d'un Peuple," 1887; and "Les Feuilles Volantes," 1891; and also a poem on "J. B. de La Salle." While at Chicago he had also published another poem, called "La Voix d'un Exilé," 1869. "Les Oiseaux de Neige" and "Les Fleurs Boréales" were crowned by the French Academy at Paris in August 1880. For a few years he was chief editor of La Patrie, Montreal, and in 1890 occupied the clerkship of the Legislative Council, Province of Quebec. He has received the degree of LL.D. from three different Universities, and is known as the "national poet" of French Canada. He is a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and, in 1897, he was created a C.M.G. His address in Montreal is 404 Sherbrooke Street.

FREDERICK, The Ex-Empress, Victoria Mary Louisa, the Princess Royal of England, was born Nov. 21, 1840, and was married to the late Emperor Frederick III. of Germany on Jan. 25, 1858, and has seven children, of whom the eldest is the present Emperor William II.

FREDERICK WILLIAM LOUIS, Grand-Duke of Baden, born Sept. 9, 1826, succeeded his father, the Grand-Duke Leopold, as Regent, April 24, 1852, to the exclusion of his elder brother Louis, who was mentally incapable of governing. Since 1853 he has been continually engaged in struggles with the ecclesiastical power, and at the end of 1855 banished the Jesuits from the Duchy. In September 1856 he had a narrow escape from assassination. He assumed the title of Grand-Duke, Sept. 5, 1856, and married the daughter of the Emperor William I. of Germany, September 20. An ardent advocate of German unity, he became an ally of Prussia in the Franco-German War (1870-71), and the Badenese soldiers contributed in no small degree to the triumph of the German arms, thereby making themselves intensely unpopular with their former friends and neighbours, the people of Alsace. He was one of the first to accept the Constitution of the new German Empire and to acclaim the new German Emperor at Versailles. In 1881 he was seriously ill, and Baden was under a regency for a year. In 1886 he presided at the great quinqucentenary festival of the University of Heidelberg.

FREMANTLE, General Sir Arthur James Lyon, G.C.M.G., C.B., is the son of the late Major-General John Fremantle, C.B. He was born in 1835, and after passing through Sandhurst, entered the army in 1852 as Ensign of the 70th Foot (East Surrey Regiment). Shortly afterwards he joined the Coldstream Guards, and was promoted Lieutenant and Captain in 1854, and Lieutenant-Colonel in 1860, in which year he was also appointed Assistant Military Secretary at Gibraltar. In 1871 he received the brevet of Colonel, and commanded a battalion of the Coldstream Guards from 1877 to 1880. His next staff appointment was that of Aide-de-

Camp to the Duke of Cambridge. He was promoted Major-General in 1882; and in the Sudan expedition of 1884 he commanded the Brigade of Guards, and was also appointed Governor of Suakim, successfully defending that town against many assaults. He was mentioned in despatches, created a C.B., and appointed Chief of the Staff in Egypt. For some years he was Deputy Adjutant-General at Headquarters for the Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers, and for a short time was the General in command of the Scottish District, relinquishing that command in 1894, in order to take over the duties of Governor and Commander-in-Chief at Malta. He is also a J.P. for Middlesex and London. On the occasion of the Queen's birthday in 1898, he was created G.C.M.G. He married in 1864, Mary, a daughter of Richard Hall, Esq. This lady died in August 1898. Addresses: 32 Cadogan Place, S.W.; and the Palace, Valetta.

FREMANTLE, The Hon. Sir Charles William, K.C.B., was born at Swanbourne, Bucks, on Aug. 12, 1834, and is the third son of the late 1st Lord Cottesloe (who was M.P. for Buckingham, 1827-46, and held the offices of Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of War, and Chief Secretary for Ireland, and was subsequently, 1846-74, Chairman of the Board of Customs, and died Dec. 3, 1890) and his wife, Louisa Elizabeth, daughter of Field-Marshal Sir George Nugent, G.C.B. She died in 1875. Sir Charles William Fremantle was educated at Eton; appointed a Clerk in the Treasury, April 1853, and was Private Secretary successively to Sir William Hayter, Sir William Hylton Jolliffe, and the Hon. Henry Brand (afterwards Speaker of the House of Commons and Viscount Hampden), Parliamentary Secretaries of the Treasury. He was appointed, in 1866, Private Secretary to Mr. Disraeli, who was then Chancellor of the Exchequer, and subsequently, in 1868, First Lord of the Treasury. In 1867-68 he was Secretary to the Boundary Commission appointed by the Representation of the People Act, 1867, of which Viscount Eversley was the Chairman. In 1868 he was appointed Deputy-Master and Comptroller of the Royal Mint; and in 1870 was constituted principal executive officer of that department, the Mastership of the Mint having by the Coinage Act of that year been vested in the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being. He retired from that appointment in 1894. He was appointed, in 1876, a member of the Playfair Commission, to inquire into the constitution and management of Public Departments, and in 1886 a member of the Royal Commission on Gold and Silver, which reported on the question of bi-metallism. Since the date of Sir Charles Fremantle's appointment to the Mint, annual reports have been issued by that department, giving full information, not only as to the coinage of the United Kingdom, but also as to the coinage and currency of other nations. In 1896 Sir Charles was appointed one of the official directors of the Suez Canal Company. He married, in 1865, Sophia, daughter of the late Abel Smith, M.P. for Woodhall. Address: 12 Buckingham Palace Gardens, S.W.

FREMANTLE, Admiral the Hon. Sir Edmund Robert, K.C.B., C.M.G., F.R.G.S., the son of the 1st Lord Cottesloe, was born on June 15, 1836, and entered the navy in 1849. As midshipman in H.M.S. Spartan, he took part in the Burmese War of 1852, receiving the Burmese medal. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1857, Commander in 1861, and Captain in 1867. As Captain of H.M.S. Barracouta he was the senior Naval Officer in the Ashanti War of 1873, and served on shore throughout the whole of that campaign. While superintending the artillery during a skirmish, he was severely wounded in the right arm. For these services he received both the C.B. and C.M.G., and the thanks of both Houses of Parliament. In 1881 he was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and held that office until promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral in June 1885. Sir Edmund was selected as second in command of the Channel Squadron in 1886, and became successively Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies, in China, and at Plymouth. During his command in China the war between that country and Japan took place. He was promoted K.C.B. in 1889, and also has Royal authority to wear the Prussian Royal Order of the Crown of the first class, which the German Emperor conferred upon him, and the Order of the Brilliant Star of Zanzibar of the first class. These Orders he received while Commander-in-Chief on the East Indian Station, where it was found necessary to land a naval brigade, which he commanded in person, for a punitive expedition against the Sultan of Vitu in East Africa in 1890. Sir Edmund is a Gold Medallist of the Royal United Service Institution, and also has the unique honour of possessing the gold, silver, and bronze medals of the Royal Humane Society for saving life at sea on various occasions. He is a direct descendant of one of Nelson's particular friends and best captains, Captain Fremantle of H.M.S. Neptune, who served at Trafalgar, and is the second Fremantle within thirty years to hold the Devonport command. Sir Edmund published in 1880 an Essay on Naval Tactics. He married, in 1866, Barberina, daughter of R. M. Isaacs, LL.D., of Sydney, New South Wales. Address: Admiralty House, Devonport.

FREMANTLE, The Very Rev. the Hon. William Henry, M.A., D.D., is the second son of the late Lord Cottesloe, and was born in 1831. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford; obtained a first-class in classics in 1853, gained the prize for the English essay in the following year, and was Fellow of All Souls' from 1854 to 1863. He was Curate of Middle Claydon, Bucks, from 1855 to 1857, and Vicar of Lewknor, Oxfordshire, from the latter date till 1865, when he was appointed by Earl Russell to the rectory of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, Marylebone. From 1878 to 1880 he was Select Preacher at Oxford. In 1882 he was chosen Bampton Lecturer at Oxford, and later in the same year he was appointed by Dr. Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury—one of whose Chaplains he had been since 1861—to the canonry residentiary in Canterbury Cathedral. In the same year Canon Fremantle accepted the position of Fellow and Theological Tutor of Balliol College, a position which he vacated at the end of the summer of 1894. In 1895 he became Dean of Ripon. He has written or edited "Ecclesiastical Judgments of the Privy Council," 1865, in conjunction with the Hon. G. C. Brodrick; articles in the Contemporary, Fortnightly, and Nineteenth Century Reviews, 1866-82; and "The Doctrine of Reconciliation to God through Jesus Christ," 1870; "The Gospel of the Secular Life" (University Sermons), 1882; "The World as the Subject of Redemption" (Bampton Lectures), 1885; "A Pleading against War from the Pulpit of Canterbury Cathedral"; "Church Reform," in the Imperial Parliament Series; articles on St. Jerome, &c., in the "Dictionary of Ecclesiastical Biography"; and a translation of the chief works of St. Jerome in the "Library of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers," 1893. He married, in 1863, Isabella, daughter of Sir Culling Eardley, Bart. Address: The Deanery, Ripon.

FREY, Emil, formerly President of the Swiss Republic, was born at Arlesheim, Basle, Oct. 24, 1838, and emigrated early in life to the United States, fighting all through the Civil War in the ranks of the Northern army, in which he rose from private to colonel. In 1865 he returned to Switzerland, and began to take an interest in political affairs. He was made Secretary of State for the canton of Basle, and it was through his influence that the public schools were freed from Church control. In 1882 he was appointed Swiss Minister to the United States, which post he occupied till 1887.

FREYCINET, Charles Louis de Saulces de. See DE FREYCINET.

FRIEDLÄNDER, Dr. Michael, was born on April 29, 1833, at Introschin, a small town in Prussia, province of Posen, where he remained during his childhood and youth. He left the place (after the great events of 1848) in 1851 to continue his studies in the capital of Prussia. He first studied under Bellermann, until 1856, when he finished his training, and matriculated as student at the Berlin University. He there attended the lectures of Professors Trendelenburg, Boekh, Hengstenberg, Benary, &c., and also studied Hebrew Theology under the Rabbis, I. Oettinger and E. Rosenstein. Dr. Friedländer graduated at Halle in 1862, his dissertation being "De Persarum Regibus veteribus." He subsequently obeyed a summons to Berlin to become the Director of the Institute for the teaching of the Talmud of the Talmud Association of that city. In 1865 he left Berlin to become Principal of the Jews' College, a post which he still holds. Dr. Friedländer is a member of the Committee of the Society of Hebrew Literature. Under its auspices he has published: "The Commentary of Ibn Esra on Jesaiah, edited from MSS. and translated with Notes, Introductions, and Glossary," 1873-77; "The Book of Jesaiah, the Anglican Version, emended according to the Commentary of Ibn Esra"; "The Hebrew Text of Ibn Esra's Commentary of Jesaiah, edited according to MSS. and accompanied by a Glossary, with Short Dissertations on subjects connected with the Commentary," 1874; "Essays on the Writings of Abraham Ibn Esra," 1877; "The Guide of the Perplexed of Maimonides, translated from the Original Text, and Annotated," 1881; "The Jewish Family Bible, containing the Pentateuch, the Prophets, and the Hagiographa, Hebrew and English," 1882; "Spinoza, His Life and Philosophy" (two papers read before the Jews' College Literary Society), 1888; "The Design and the Context of Ecclesiastes," in the Jewish Quarterly Review, 1888, Vol. I., No. 1; "The Age and the Authorship of Ecclesiastes," in the Jewish Quarterly Review, 1888, Vol. I., No. 4; "Text Book of Jewish Religion"; and "The Jewish Religion," 1890. In 1892 he revised a volume of "Outlines of Jewish History."

FRIPP, Alfred Downing, M.V.O., F.R.C.S., born at Blandford, Dorset, in 1862, is the only surviving son of the late Alfred Downing Fripp, the water-colour artist, by his marriage with Eliza Banister Rae. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and possesses the degrees of M.B. and M.S. of the University of London. He is an Assistant-Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, where he is also Senior Demonstrator in Anatomy, and is Surgeon-in-Ordinary to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, whom he attended after his accident. He married, in June 1898, Margaret Scott, only daughter of T. B. Haywood, of Woodhatch, Reigate. Address: 19 Portland Place, W.

FRITH, William Powell, retired R.A., born on Jan. 9, 1819, at Studley, near Ripon; lost his father while young. In 1835 he entered the Art Academy, conducted by Mr. Sass, where he continued for three years, studying drawing and composition; in 1839 he exhibited, at the British Institution, a portrait of one of the children of his preceptor. This was followed, in 1840, by "Othello and Desdemona," and "Malvolio before the Countess Olivia," exhibited at the Academy the same year; and in 1841, by his "Parting Interview between Leicester and Amy Robsart." In 1842 he exhibited at the British Institution a sketch from Sterne's "Sentimental Journey," and contributed to the Exhibition a scene from the "Vicar of Wakefield," representing Olivia and the Squire trying to ascertain which was the taller. Three years later he contributed the well-known picture of the "Village Pastor," which was the means of placing him on the roll of Associates of the Royal Academy. After becoming A.R.A., Mr. Frith almost entirely discontinued his contributions to the British Institution, except in 1852, when he sent a small female portrait, entitled "Wicked Eyes." In 1847 he produced his large picture of "English Merrymaking a Hundred Years Ago." His picture of 1849, entitled "Coming of Age," was in the same vein, and was a great popular success. Mr. Frith continued to exhibit, and in 1852 he was elected R.A. A number of Shakespearean and other pictures followed, and in 1854 his "Life at the Sea-Side" was bought by the Queen. The famous picture, "The Derby Day" (now in the National Gallery), was exhibited at the Academy in 1858. For the next four years Mr. Frith did not exhibit much, being occupied in painting the large picture of the "Railway Station." He exhibited at the Academy in 1865 "The Marriage of their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alexandra of Denmark, in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, March 10, 1863" (painted for the Queen); and in 1868, "Before Dinner at Boswell's Lodgings in Bond Street," 1769. This work was sold in 1875 for £4567, which, up to that date, was the highest price ever given at auction for any picture during the artist's lifetime. Since that time Mr. Frith has constantly exhibited both illustrations of literature and pictures after the manner of his old successes, "The Railway Station," &c. Of these, "The Private View of the Royal Academy" (1881) has been the most ambitious. His Hogarthian series, "The Road to Ruin" (1878), is also well known. Mr. Frith published his "Autobiography" in 1887, and "Further Reminiscences" in 1888. He is a member of the Academies of Vienna, Belgium, and Sweden. By his own desire, he was placed on the list of retired Royal Academicians in 1890. Address: 114 Clifton Hill, N.W.; and Athenæum.

FROST, Thomas, born in 1821 at Croydon, was formerly in business there as a printer, but retired in 1848, and adopted the literary profession. He participated actively in the Chartist agitation, and was one of the delegates to the Reform Conference at St. Martin's Hall in 1852. He was a contributor to Chambers's "Papers for the People," and in 1854 editor of the Magazine of Art. He was a leader-writer for the Birmingham Journal for several years from 1855, and subsequently for the Liverpool Albion and the Shrewsbury Chronicle, down to 1872. He was editor of the Gentleman's Journal in that and the preceding year. Mr. Frost is the author of: "Half-Hours with Early Explorers," 1873; "The Old Showmen and the Old London Fairs," 1874; "Circus Life and Circus Celebrities," 1875; "Lives of the Conjurors," "Life of Thomas Lord Lyttelton," and "Secret Societies of the European Revolution," 2 vols., 1876; "Forty Years' Recollection," and "In Kent with Charles Dickens," 1880; "Modern Explorers," 1882; and several stories of adventure for boys. In 1886 appeared his "Reminiscences of a Country Journalist." He became editor in 1881 of the Sheffield Evening Post, in 1882 of the Barnsley Times, and in the following year of the Barnsley Independent.

FROUDE, Robert Edmund, F.R.S., M.I.C.E., Assoc. Mem. Council I.N.A., Superintendent, Admiralty Experiment Works, Haslar, was born on Dec. 23, 1846, at Dartington Passage, in South Devon, then occupied by the Ven. Archdeacon Froude, his grandfather. He was third son of the late William Froude, F.R.S., the eminent investigator of scientific problems connected with naval architecture. His grandfather by the mother's side was Governor Holdsworth, of Dartmouth, South Devon, and his paternal uncles were the famous historian and the Oxford Tractarian, Hurrell Froude. He was at a private school at Heavitree, near Exeter, in 1856-58; in 1858-63 at St. Andrew's College, Bradfield, Berks; and in 1853-64 at the Oratory School, Birmingham, under the superintendence of the late Cardinal (then Dr.) J. H. Newman, once his father's tutor at Oxford. He was preparing for Oxford when a failure of health necessitated his abandoning his studies, and spending two winters abroad. After this he assisted in the experimental work on which his father was then engaged; and when, through the instrumentality of Sir Edward Reed (then Mr. Reed, Chief Constructor of the Navy), the Admiralty Experiment Establishment was instituted at Torquay, under the superintendence of Mr. W. Froude, Edmund Froude received a salaried appointment in the staff of that establishment. He was placed temporarily in sole charge of the establishment when Mr. W. Froude left for the Cape in 1878, and was appointed Superintendent on Mr. Froude's death in 1879. He has continued to hold that office to the present date. In 1886 the establishment under his charge was transferred from Torquay to Haslar, Gosport, the experimental plant being at the same time largely remodelled and improved. He became an Associate of the Institution of Naval Architects in 1880, member of the Institution of Civil Engineers in 1884, and of the Society of Arts in 1890, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1894. He has contributed papers to the Institution of Naval Architects, the United Service Institution, the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, and the Royal Society of Edinburgh. In January 1894 he delivered the Watt Anniversary Lecture to the Greenock Philosophical Society. Addresses: North Lodge, Alverstoke; and Athenæum.

FRY, The Right Hon. Sir Edward, F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., F.S.A., F.G.S., second son of the late Mr. Joseph Fry, of Bristol, by Mary Anne, daughter of the late Mr. Edward Swaine, of Reading, was born at Bristol, Nov. 4, 1827, and educated at the College, Bristol, and at University College, London, of which he is a Fellow. He graduated B.A. at the University of London in 1851, taking honours in classics and animal physiology. In 1855 he was appointed by the Crown a member of the Senate of the University of London. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1854; in 1869 he received a silk gown; and in April 1877 he was appointed a Judge of the High Court of Justice. On the latter occasion he received the honour of knighthood. In April 1883 he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone to the vacant Lord Justiceship of Appeal, caused by the elevation of Lord Justice Brett as the Master of the Rolls. He retired from the Bench in the year 1892. He is a Privy Councillor, and a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, and has been an Examiner in Law to the University of London and the Council of Legal Education. During the year 1897 he presided over a Royal Commission to inquire into the working of the Irish Land Acts. He is a F.R.S., F.S.A., and F.L.S.; also a D.C.L. of Oxford, and LL.D. of Edinburgh; an Honorary Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford; a Governor of the Charterhouse School and of Clifton College; and a Trustee of the Hunterian Museum. He is the author of "A Treatise on the Specific Performance of Contracts," 1858, 1881, 1892; and of some theological works, including: "The Doctrine of Election," 1864; "Essays on the Accordance of Christianity with the Nature of Man," Edinburgh, 1857; "Darwinism and Theology," 1872, a reprint of letters in the Spectator; "British Mosses," 1892; and of articles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and the "Dictionary of National Biography." He married, in 1859, Mariabella, daughter of the late Mr. John Hodgkin, barrister-at-law, of Lewes. Addresses: Failand House, Failand, near Bristol; and Athenæum.

FRY, Oliver Armstrong, M.A., the second son of the late Henry Fry, D.D., Rector of St. George's, Hobart, was born in that town in 1855. Coming to England at an early age, he was educated at Magdalen College School, Oxford, and at St. John's College, Oxford, whence he graduated in 1879 (M.A. 1883). Pending his call to the Bar he was for a short time a schoolmaster, and for longer a "coach" for various competitive examinations. Called to the Bar by the Middle Temple in 1881, he continued to take pupils, but wrote also for various newspapers and reviews, especially for Vanity Fair, whose tone and policy he greatly admired; and when, in 1887, Mr. Thomas Gibson Bowles, M.P., the founder of that journal, asked him to assist in the editing, he gave up his legal practice to do so. Two years later, when Mr. Bowles sold Vanity Fair, he became its editor, and he now both manages and edits that journal, which is the oldest of its kind. He has published one or two small educational works, and at one time he had a close connection with the Educational Times. He has also lectured regularly at the Birkbeck and elsewhere, and he was once offered a judicial appointment in Siam. He married, in 1884, Annie Zetterquist, third daughter of the late George Crabb Rolfe, Vicar of Halley and Crawley, Oxfordshire. Addresses: 141 Portsdown Road, W.; and 7 Essex Street, Strand, W.C. (Vanity Fair Office).

FRY, Sir Theodore, Bart., is the second son of the late Francis Fry, Esq., F.S.A., of Tower House, Bristol, by Matilda, daughter of the late Daniel Penrose, Esq., of Brittas, co. Wicklow. He was born on May 1, 1836; is a J.P., and nine years County Alderman of Durham, Lord of the Manor of Cleasby, Yorks, N.R.; F.S.A., Hon. Member of University College, London, and Chairman of the firm of Sir Theodore Fry & Co., Limited, iron manufacturers, Darlington. He sat as M.P. for Darlington from 1880 to 1895. He married in 1862 Sophia, eldest daughter and co-heiress of the late John Pease, Esq., of East Mount, Darlington, and Cleveland Lodge, Great Aytton, Yorks. He was created a Baronet in 1894. Address: Woodburn, near Darlington.

FRYE, William P., American statesman, was born at Lewiston, Maine, Sept. 2, 1831. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1850, and studied and practised law. He was a Member of the Legislature of Maine in 1861, 1862, and 1867; was Attorney-General of the State in 1867-69; was elected a Trustee of Bowdoin College in June 1880; received the degree of LL.D. from Bates College in July 1881, and the same degree from Bowdoin College in 1889; was elected to the Forty-second Congress, and re-elected to the Forty-third, Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses; was elected to the United States Senate and took his seat March 18, 1881; was re-elected in 1883, 1888, and 1895. In August 1898 he was appointed a Commissioner to arrange terms of peace with Spain.

FRYER, Sir Frederick William Richards, K.C.S.I., Lieutenant-Governor of Burmah, was born in 1845, and is the son of F. W. Fryer, Esq., of West Moors, Dorset, and Emily Frances, the daughter of John Richards, M.P. He entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1864, became Deputy-Commissioner of the Punjab, 1877, was promoted to be Commissioner of Upper Burmah in 1886 and Chief Commissioner in 1892. In 1894 he was appointed an additional Member of the Viceroy's Council, and was created a K.C.S.I. in 1895. In March 1897, on the establishment of a local Legislature in Burmah, under the provisions of the Indian Councils Act, he was promoted to his present rank. He married in 1870 Frances, daughter of W. E. L. Bashford, Esq. Address: Government House, Mandalay.

FULLER—FURNISS

FULLER, Melville Weston, LL.D. American jurist, was born at Augusta, Maine, Feb. 11, 1833. He graduated from Bowdoin College in 1853, studied law, and began its practice in Augusta in 1853. For a short time he was one of the editors of the Age, and President of the Common Council. He became City Attorney in 1856, but resigned that office on his removal to Chicago in June of the same year. There he rose to the highest rank in his profession, and was connected with many important cases. He was a Member of the Illinois Constitutional Convention in 1862; of the lower branch of the State Legislature from 1863 to 1865; and was a Delegate to the Democratic National Conventions of 1864, 1872, 1876, and 1880. In 1888 President Cleveland nominated him Chief-Justice of the United States (the highest judicial position in America), and on October 8 of that year he entered upon the duties of that office. Both the Northwestern University and Bowdoin College conferred the degree of LL.D. upon him in 1888, and Harvard University in 1891.

FULTON, Sir Forrest, Q.C., LL.B., Common Serjeant of London, was born at Ostend on July 12, 1846, and is the youngest son of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Fulton, K.H., and Fanny, daughter of John Symson Jessopp. He was educated under Dr. Jessopp at Norwich Grammar School, and afterwards, in 1867, graduated B.A. in the University of London. He became LL.B. in 1873. Entering at the Middle Temple he became a Barrister in 1872. He is Counsel to the Treasury at the Middlesex Sessions and Central Criminal Court, Senior Counsel to the Post Office, and Counsel to the Mint, Hertfordshire. In 1886 he became M.P. for West Ham (North), and was defeated at the general election of 1892 by Mr. Archibald Grove, Liberal, who polled only thirty-two more votes. He read an address of welcome to the King of Denmark on the occasion of his visit to the city in 1892, and received the honour of knighthood. He has published a "Manual of Constitutional History." Addresses: 27 Queen's Gardens, Lancaster Gate, W.; and The Cottage, Sheringham, Norfolk.

FURLEY, Sir John, has been for twenty-five years Commissioner to the National Aid Society, and is one of the most distinguished wearers of the Red Cross. The stretcher of which he is the inventor is used by ambulance corps in all parts of the world. It has greatly facilitated their labours, and has rendered Sir John Furley's name familiar wherever ambulance work is going on. Sir John is a Knight of St. John, and received the honour of the K.B. at the New Year, 1899.

FURNEAUX, Rev. William Mor-daunt, M.A., of Swilly, Devon, head-master of Repton School, was born July 29, 1848, at Walton, Warwickshire, and is the eldest son of the Rev. William Duckworth Furneaux, of Swilly, and Louisa, daughter of William Dickens, D.L., J.P., of Cherington, Warwickshire. He was educated at Marlborough College and Christ Church College, Oxford (B.A. 1872, M.A. 1875), and became an Assistant-Master at Clifton College in 1873, at Marlborough College, 1874-82. He has been head-master of Repton School since 1882. He was appointed Canon of Southwell in 1891. Addresses: Repton Hall, Burton-on-Trent; and Gwyl Annedd, Penmaenmawr.

FURNISS, Harry, caricature artist, was born March 1854, at Wexford, Ireland, of English parents. His father was an engineer, his mother the daughter of the well-known Newcastle-on-Tyne author, publisher, and politician, Eneas MacKenzie, the founder of the Joseph Cowen political school of that place. He was educated in Dublin, and began drawing for periodicals and magazines at a very early age. Mr. Furniss came to London at the age of nineteen, and has ever since been constantly engaged in illustrating. For many years he was a regular contributor to the Illustrated London News, mostly depicting the lighter side of every-day life, but occasionally acting as a serious "special" for that paper. In the latter capacity he made a sketching tour of the distressed parts of England in the winter of 1878, and has followed political campaigns through the country, &c. His first drawing in Punch appeared in 1880, and he joined the regular staff four years after; at this time his Punch Parliamentary Views were collected and published in an édition de luxe. His principal works in Punch are Parliamentary scenes and sketches of members, with few exceptions drawn direct in the Houses and finished in the studio. Besides his work in Punch he has illustrated the following works published from the same office: F. C. Burnand's "Happy Thoughts," A Beckett's "Comic Blackstone" coloured plates, and Burnand's "Incomplete Angler." He has contributed drawings to nearly all the chief magazines in London, Harper's in America, and others, and to numerous papers, the World and Vanity Fair among them. He has also brought out books for children, 1885-86, with coloured pictures, entitled "Romps." In 1890 he was elected one of the original Fellows of the Institute of Journalists. During 1887 he lectured on "Arts and Artists" and "Portraiture Past and Present." He afterwards (1891) produced his first entertainment, "The Humours of Parliament," which he gave all over the country for two seasons. This was followed by "America in a Hurry," produced after a visit to the United States. These, with "Harry Furniss at Home" and "Stories and Sketches," he has given through the United Kingdom. He made a tour of the world (1897-98), visited the United States, Canada, Australia, and other countries. Mr. Harry Furniss severed his connection with Punch in 1894, and afterwards edited a comic threepenny weekly entitled Lika Joko. This was amalgamated with the New Budget, a continuation of Mr. Astor's Pall Mall Budget, but finding it too stereotyped a publication, Mr. Furniss discontinued it (1895), and has recently (May 1898) produced his own periodical entitled Fair Game, at present published monthly. Address: 23 St. Edmund's Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.

FURNIVALL, Frederick James, M.A., Ph.D., born, Feb. 4, 1825, at Egham, in Surrey, is the eldest son of the late George Frederick Furnivall, surgeon, received his education at private schools at Englefield Green, Turnham Green, and Hanwell, at University College, London (1841-42), and Trinity Hall, Cambridge, (B.A. 1846, M.A. 1849). He was called to the Bar in 1849, but has devoted his life mainly to the study of Early and Middle English Literature, and has established numerous societies of which he is director, for promoting the study of special works; the Early English Text, 1864; the Chaucer, 1868; the Ballad, 1868; the New Shakspeare, 1873; the Wyclif, 1882; the Brown-ing, 1881; and the Shelley, 1885. Through his societies Dr. Furnivall has raised and expended over £40,000 in printing early MSS. and rare books. He was also one of the founders of the Working-Men's College, and taught there for many years besides being a captain in its volunteer corps and president of its boat club. He was one of the first builders of narrow wayer-boats (1845), and introduced sculls instead of oars into fours and eights. He started the Hammersmith Girls' Sculling Club in 1897. Dr. Furnivall has edited a large number of early English and other works, amongst which may be mentioned Robert of Brunne's "Handlyng" and "Chronicle," Walter Map's "Queste del Saint Graal," "Percy's Folio MS. of Ballads and Romances," "The Babees Book," Harrison's "England" (1577-87), Caxton's "Book of Curtesye," a Six-Text print of Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales"—a very valuable aid to the study of Chaucer—and Parallel-Text editions of the poet's "Minor Poems," and "Troilus and Cressida," &c. To these may be added several of the Shakspeare quartos in fac-simile, and the Introduction to a one-volume edition of the works, called "The Leopold Shakspeare." In 1890 Dr. Furnivall published a note on "Robert Browning's Ancestors." His most important recent works are his editions for the Early English Text Society, of Hoccleve's "Minor Poems," 1892, and "Regement of Princes," 1897. Address: 3 St. George's Square, Primrose Hill, N.W.

FURSE, Canon Charles Wellington, M.A., J.P., was born in 1821, and is the son of C. W. Johnson, of Torrington, and a daughter of the Rev. P. Wellington Furse, of Halsdon. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford. He was ordained in 1848, and has been Principal of Cuddesdon College from 1873 to 1883; Rector of St. John the Evangelist, Westminster, 1883-94; and, since 1894, Canon and Archdeacon of Westminster. He became Hon. Canon of Christ Church in 1873. He has published "Helps to Holiness," and "The Parish Church and the Parish Priest." He married (1) a daughter of the Rev. J. S. B. Monsell, and (2) Gertrude, daughter of Henry Barnet. Addresses: 1 Abbey Garden, Westminster, S.W.; and Halsdon House, North Devon.

GADOW, Hans Friedrich, Ph.D., Hon. M.A. Cantab., F.R.S., Strickland Curator and Lecturer on Zoology in Cambridge University, was born in Pomerania on March 8, 1855, and is the eldest son of the late M. L. Gadow, Inspector of Royal Forests in Prussia. He was educated at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, and at the Universities of Berlin, Jena, and Heidelberg. At the last-mentioned he studied under Gegenbauer between 1878-80. During his period of compulsory service he served in 1879 as a Lieutenant in the Prussian Army Bodyguards (8th Foot). Coming to England, he was in the Natural History Department of the British Museum from 1880 to 1882. He has published "In Northern Spain," 1897; the volume on Birds in Bronn's "Thier-Reich," besides some ten papers in the Transactions of the Royal Society, the Journal für Ornithologie, and in other scientific journals. In conjunction with Professor Newton and others he is one of the chief contributors to the "Dictionary of Birds," 1893-96. He married Clara Maud, eldest daughter of Sir George Edward Paget, K.C.B., F.R.S., Regius Professor of Physic at Cambridge. Address: Museum of Zoology, Cambridge; and Cleramendi, Great Shelford.

GADSBY, Prof. Henry, was born near London on Dec. 15, 1842, and educated at St. Paul's Cathedral. His first important work was a choral setting of the 130th Psalm, which was produced by Henry Leslie at St. James's Hall, in 1863. In 1864 he produced his first symphony, which was followed in 1868 by a cantata on the subject of Longfellow's "Golden Legend." His next works were "Alice Brand," a cantata; a Festival service for eight voices for "the Sons of the Clergy Festival," 1873; and an overture ("Andromeda") for the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts. In 1874, at the request of his old friend and schoolfellow, Sir John Stainer, Prof. Gadsby wrote a concerto for organ and orchestra, which was played at the Crystal Palace. At the same time he was commissioned to write an overture for the British Orchestral Society, which was successfully performed at the St. James's Hall. This led to a second commission, and he wrote an "Intermezzo and Scherzo" for the same society. In 1874 he succeeded the late John Hullah as Professor of Harmony at Queen's College, London, and on the death of Sir William Cusins, he was elected Professor of the Pianoforte and Director of the Music at the same institution. In 1886 Prof. Gadsby wrote appropriate music for the "Alcestis" of Euripides, which was acted in Greek at the Christmas of that year, by ladies of Queen's College. This music was afterwards produced at the Crystal Palace, and was followed by "The Lord of the Isles," a cantata, sung at the Brighton Festivals, and "Columbus," a cantata for male voices sung at the Crystal Palace, with Mr. Edward Lloyd in the solo part. This was also sung at Oxford, where in 1886 the "Cyclops," a cantata, was produced. In 1886 the Philharmonic Society commissioned Prof. Gadsby to write them an orchestral work, and the result was the "Forest of Arden." In 1887 his third symphony was produced in honour of the Queen's Jubilee at the Crystal Palace. It is in the key of D major. One of Prof. Gadsby's latest works is music to the "Andromache" of Euripides, written for Queen's College in 1893. Professor Gadsby is now chiefly employed as a teacher of music. Since its commencement he has been Professor of Pianoforte and Harmony at the Guildhall School of Music, and is one of the Examiners of Schools and Colleges appointed by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy and Royal College of Music. Besides the above-mentioned works, Prof. Gadsby has published many anthems and services, a string quartette in C, and a "Treatise on Harmony." Professor Gadsby has also written for the celebration of the Jubilee of Queen's College, an anthem "Except the Lord build the House," an ode, the words of which were written for the occasion by Mr. C. E. Maurice (son of the founder of Queen's College), and the music to Tasso's "Aminta," performed during the Jubilee week in May 1898. Address: Queen's College, Harley Street, W.

GAGE, Lyman Judson, American financier, born at De Ruyter, New York, June 28, 1836, had to earn his own living from the age of fifteen, became a clerk in a bank at eighteen, and in 1855 removed to Chicago, where after a time he became connected with the Merchants' Loan and Trust Company. He rose step by step until he became cashier, and gained such a reputation in this post that he was called to be cashier of the important First National Bank of Chicago in 1868, and in the same year was elected President of the American Bankers' Association. In 1891 he was made President of his Bank. He was the first President of the Columbian Exposition Company, and has been known throughout the country for his views on honest money and banking reform. In 1897 he became Secretary of the United States Treasury.

GAIL, Hamilton. See DODGE, MARY ABIGAIL.

GAIRDNER, James, LL.D., son of the late John Gairdner, M.D., F.R.C.S.E., was born at Edinburgh, March 22, 1828, and was educated there. In 1846 his father obtained for him an appointment in the Public Record Office, and in 1859 he became Assistant-Keeper of the Public Records. Dr. Gairdner has edited "Memorials of Henry VII." (in Rolls Series), 1858; "Letters and Papers illustrative of the Reigns of Richard III. and Henry VII." (in the same series), 2 vols., 1861-3; "Historical Collections of a London Citizen" (for the Camden Society), 1876; and "Three Fifteenth-Century Chronicles," 1880. He has also edited eleven volumes (vols. v. to xv., 1880-96) of the "Letters and Papers of Henry VIII." (one of the Calendars of State Papers published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls), a work begun by the late Prof. Brewer, and still in progress. He edited in Mr. Arber's series a new edition of the Paston Letters (3 vols., 1872-5); and he is the author of "The Houses of Lancaster and York" (1874), in Messrs. Longmans' Epoch Series; "Life and Reign of Richard III." 1878 (a new and enlarged edition of which is now on the eve of publication); of the volume "England," in the Christian Knowledge Society's series, entitled "Early Chroniclers of Europe," 1879; and of "Henry VII." in "Twelve English Statesmen," 1889. He has also contributed numerous articles to the "Dictionary of National Biography." He received the degree of LL.D. at Edinburgh in 1897. He married in 1867. Address: West View, Pinner, Middlesex.

GAIRDNER, Sir William Tennant, M.D. Edin., K.C.B., LL.D., F.R.S., Professor of Medicine in the University of Glasgow, and Senior Ordinary Physician to H.M. the Queen in Scotland, was born in Edinburgh on Nov. 8, 1824. He is the eldest son of the late Dr. John Gairdner, who was long officially connected with the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, and occupied the Chair of the College in 1832. Prof. Gairdner received his education in Edinburgh, passing from public and private schools there to the University, where he attained the degree of M.D. in 1845, and was awarded one of the four gold medals in that year for a thesis "On Death." Almost immediately after his graduation, he accompanied the Earl and Countess of Beverley to Rome, as their travelling physician for the winter. On returning to Edinburgh in May 1846, he served for two years in the Royal Infirmary, and in 1848 succeeded Dr. Hughes Bennett as Pathologist to that institution. While acting in that capacity, Dr. Gairdner wrote numerous memoirs and conducted voluntary classes in pathological anatomy, especially in microscopic pathology, which was then being vigorously pursued in the Edinburgh School. In 1853 he began to lecture on the Practice of Medicine in the Extra Academical School, and continued to do so until his appointment to the Chair of Medicine in the University of Glasgow in 1862. Some of the personal relations formed during this period, especially with Drs. Warburton Begbie, Murchison, Sanders, and others, were the subjects of an address to the Royal Medical Society in Oct. 1893, which, being a record of reminiscences of the old Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, has been included in the 2nd vol. of the "Edinburgh Hospital Reports." In 1862 Dr. Gairdner published a volume on "Public Health in Relation to Air and Water," which was a record of the first course of lectures on Sanitation ever delivered in Scotland. As a result of this publication, Dr. Gairdner was, in 1863, appointed Medical Officer to the city of Glasgow. The post was a new one, arrangements being made in the first instance so as to enable it to be held along with the professorship; these arrangements continued for nine years, during which period many severe epidemics were dealt with. Some of the fruits of this experience were alluded to in an address delivered to the Sanitary Institute, at its meeting in Glasgow in 1888. Glasgow was threatened with cholera in 1866, and the preparations for this epidemic developed new principles of action, of which some account was given in the transactions of the Association of American Physicians (September 1891). In 1866, also, Dr. Gairdner accompanied the Lord Provost of Glasgow, the late Mr. John Blackie, along with Mr. John Ure, the Chairman of the Sanitary Board, and Mr. Carrick, the city architect, to Paris, to report on the Imperial improvements in that city; and one of the results following very directly from this visit, and from the previous experience placed on record as to the impossibility of dealing adequately with epidemics in the tenement-houses and slums of Glasgow, was the Glasgow City Improvement Act (1867), which completely revolutionised the sanitation of the city, and became the basis of much subsequent legislation elsewhere. Besides the works already mentioned, Dr. Gairdner is the author of many papers and memoirs, and published in 1862 a volume entitled "Clinical Medicine: Observations recorded at the Bedside, with Commentaries." In 1888 "Lectures to Practitioners" was published, jointly with Dr. Joseph Coats, and in 1889 a volume entitled "The Physician as Naturalist," containing, inter alia, the papers published originally between 1864 and 1869, tending towards a much reduced scale of alcoholic stimulation in fevers and other acute diseases. From the Edinburgh University Prof. Gairdner has received the degree of LL.D.; from Trinity College, Dublin, the degree of M.D. (honoris causa); and from the Royal College of Physicians of Ireland its honorary Fellowship in 1887. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and was recently a Vice-President of the Pathological Society of London; besides being an Honorary Fellow of the Clinical, the Medical, and the Medico-Psychological Societies of London. In 1888 he became the Annual President of the British Medical Association on the occasion of its meeting in Glasgow; and in 1893 he was unanimously elected President of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh; this being the first occasion on which the Chair of the College has been occupied by one not residing in Edinburgh or the neighbourhood. Sir Wm. Gairdner, who received the dignity of K.C.B. in January 1898, is the representative of the University of Glasgow in the General Medical Council of Education, &c., as well as in the University Court. In 1870 he married Helen Bridget Wright of Norwich. Address: 225

St. Vincent Street, and 9 The College, Glasgow.

GALE, James, Ph.D., F.G.S., F.C.S., an inventor, born at Crabtree, near Plymouth, Devonshire, in July 1833, was educated at Tavistock. While still a youth he was afflicted with the total loss of sight, but was able to become for a time a partner in a manufacturing business, and subsequently practised as a medical electrician at Plymouth. In 1865 he announced that he had discovered "a means of rendering gunpowder non-explosive and explosive at will, the process for effecting the same being simple, effectual, and cheap, the quality and bulk of the gunpowder remaining uninjured." Arrangements were made for a trial of the process at the Government House, Mount Wise, Plymouth, June 27, 1865, and the experiments, carried on in the presence of a number of military and naval officers, were attended at the time with satisfactory results. The invention consists of mixing powdered glass with the gunpowder, which is thereby rendered unexplosive. The glass can, by a simple process, be again separated from the gunpowder, which, of course, then resumes its explosive character. Mr. Gale is likewise the inventor of the ammunition slide-gun, the fog-shell, the balloon-shell, &c. He was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1866; a Fellow of the Geological Society the same year; and received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the University of Rostock in 1867. Dr. Gale's talents have been extremely versatile, and his public services have been many and varied. He has taken part in numerous public meetings and committees, and his services, before leaving Plymouth, in connection with the Blind Asylum and the Board of Guardians, were of a highly valuable nature. A portrait of him has been placed in the British Museum of Portraits at South Kensington, by order of the Council. Address: 169 Adelaide Road, South Hampstead, N.W.

GALE, Norman Rowland, poet, was born in 1862, and is the second son of William Frederick Gale, of Kew. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A.), after which he was a schoolmaster for some years. His first work to attract attention was "A Country Muse," published in 1892, and this has been followed by a second series of the volume; by "Orchard Songs," 1893; "Cricket Songs," 1894; and "Songs for Little People," 1896. "A June Romance," published in 1894, is his principal prose work. Mr. Gale is also a frequent writer of reviews. He is the pastoral poet among young modern English writers. Address: Oakfield Cottage, Rugby.

GALLIENI, General, Joseph Simon, Governor-General of Madagascar, was born April 29, 1849, and left Saint Cyr as Second Lieutenant, July 1870, serving in the Marines. In 1879 he was of great use to General Faidherbe in Senegal, and in 1880 was charged by the Government with a mission to Ahmadou, the Chief of Segou, to contract an alliance. M. Gallieni set out from Saint Louis in 1880, and, after many contests with the intervening tribes, he arrived at Segou in June 1880. He found Ahmadou very unwilling to agree to anything, even to accepting his presents, but after ten months' chaffering with this chieftain, he succeeded, in March 1881, in obtaining from him a treaty giving to the French exclusive rights of commerce on the Upper Niger. On March 21 he returned to Saint Louis, and the Geographical Society of Paris awarded him its gold medal. In 1886 he was promoted Colonel and given the Governorship of Upper Senegal. Later, he was appointed to a Colonelcy of Marines at Brest, and in 1888 he was made an Officer of the Legion of Honour. He has published the results of his travels under the titles of: "Mission d'Exploration du Haut Niger," 1885; and "Deux Campagnes au Soudan," 1890. In September 1896, Madagascar was made a French colony, and Colonel Gallieni was appointed Commander-in-Chief. His vigorous and determined policy made a great improvement in the condition of the country, since he cleared the trade routes of brigands. In March 1897, General Gallieni found it necessary to exile Queen Ranavalona to the Island of Réunion. He has also approved of the plan of connecting the coast with the capital by a canal.

GALLIFET, Gaston Alexandre Auguste, Marquis de, a French general, born at Paris, Jan. 23, 1831, joined the army in April 1848, and became Colonel in December 1867. He commanded the 3rd Regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique, took part with the Army of the Rhine during the Franco-German war, and was promoted to the rank of General of Brigade, Aug. 30, 1870. During the second siege of Paris he commanded a brigade of the Army of Versailles, and was unenviably distinguished for his frightful severity to the Commune prisoners. In 1871, he was sent into Africa, and placed at the head of the subdivision of Batna, and had a considerable share in the pacification of the unsubdued tribes. He took charge of the expedition on El-Goliah, which presented numerous difficulties for the transport of troops; but he overcame all obstacles, and executed a rapid march through a desert country and severely punished the revolted tribes (December 1872 to March 1873). On the general reorganisation of the army, the Marquis de Gallifet (who had become very intimate with M. Gambetta) was named to the command of the 3rd Brigade of Infantry of the 8th Army Corps, and of the subdivision of the department of the Cher. Promoted to the rank of General of Division, May 3, 1875, he obtained the command of the 5th Division of Infantry, and in February 1879, that of the 9th corps d'armée. In 1882 he was promoted to the command of the 12th Corps at Limoges, and at the end of three years was appointed a member of the Conseil Supérieur of War. In 1891 he conducted his part of the French autumn manoeuvres so brilliantly that the military medal was conferred on him (September 1891). After again conducting the autumn manoeuvres in 1894 he retired from active service. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in June 1855; made Officer, April 1863; Commander, April 1873; Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, July 1880; and Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, July 1887. He has been Inspector-General of many corps d'armée; and, in case of war, Commander-in-Chief. He is an authority of European reputation on cavalry and cavalry manoeuvres. His Paris address is 15 Rue Lord Byron.

GALLON, Tom, novelist, was born in London on Dec. 5, 1866. He was educated privately, and has been a clerk in the City, a schoolmaster, a shorthand-teacher, secretary to a provincial mayor, and an occasional writer for the press. His novels are "Tatterley," 4th edit., 1898; "A Prince of Mischance," 1897; "Dicky Monteith: a Love Story," 1898. Address: 8 Serjeants' Inn, Temple, E.C.

GALLOWAY, Earl of, Sir Alan Plantagenet Stewart, Bart., K.T., was born in London on Oct. 21, 1835, and succeeded his father as 10th Earl in 1873. Entering the Horse Guards in 1855, he retired as a Captain in 1869. As Lord Garlies he sat in the House of Commons as member for Wigtownshire from 1868 to 1873, and he acted as High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland from 1876 to 1877. Lord Galloway has been Hon. Colonel of the 4th Battalion of the Royal Scots Fusiliers since 1891. He is married to Mary Arabella, daughter of the 2nd Marquis of Salisbury, K.G. Address: 17 Upper Grosvenor Street, W.; and Galloway House, Garlieston, &c.

GALTON, Francis, D.C.L. Oxford, Hon. Sc. D. Cambridge, F.R.S., third and youngest son of S. T. Galton of Duddeston, near Birmingham, grandson of Dr. Erasmus Darwin, author of "Zoonomia," and cousin of Charles Darwin, the naturalist, was born in 1822, and educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, which he left to study medicine, first at the Birmingham Hospital, and subsequently at King's College, London. He graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1844; travelled, in 1846, to the White Nile, then rarely visited; and in 1850, accompanied by Mr. Anderson, made an exploration of the then unknown Damara and Ovampo lands in South Africa, starting from Walfisch Bay. For this journey, of which he published an account, he received a gold medal from the Royal Geographical Society; in whose proceedings he took for a long time an active share. Mr. Galton is author of the "Art of Travel, or Shifts and Contrivances in Wild Countries," a work which went through five editions between 1855 and 1872; also of "Meteorographica," 1863, which was the first attempt to chart the progress of the elements of the weather on a large scale, and through which the existence and theory of anti-cyclones was first established by him. In later years he has published the following works, bearing more or less directly on Heredity and on the measurement of the various faculties: "Hereditary Genius, its Laws and Consequences," 1869; "English Men of Science: their Nature and Nurture," 1874; "Inquiries into Human Faculty and its Development," 1883; "Natural Inheritance," 1889; "Finger Prints," 1893; "Average Contribution of each several Ancestor to the total Heritage of the Offspring," Proc. R. Soc., 1897; also several memoirs on anthropometric subjects and on new statistical processes applicable to anthropometry, including that of composite portraiture. He received one of the gold medals of the Royal Society in 1886. He was general secretary of the British Association from 1863 to 1868; President of its geographical section in 1862 and in 1872; and of the anthropological sections in 1877 and 1885; President of the Anthropological Institute, 1885-88; and has been Vice-President of the Royal and the Royal Geographical Societies. He has been a member of the Meteorological Council of the Royal Society ever since its first institution, and is Chairman of the Committee to whom the management of the Kew Observatory is entrusted. He married, in 1853, Louise, daughter of the Very Rev. G. Butler, sometime head-master of Harrow, and subsequently Dean of Peterborough; she died, 1897. Addresses: 42 Rutland Gate, S.W.; and Athenæum.

GAMGEE, Arthur, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S., was born at Florence on Oct. 10, 1841, and was educated at University College School, London, and at the University of Edinburgh. After filling the office of Assistant to the Professor of Medical Jurisprudence at Edinburgh from 1863 to 1869, he became an Assistant-Physician and Lecturer on Materia Medica in St George's Hospital, London. In 1873 he was appointed the first Brackenbury Professor of Physiology in Owens College, Manchester, and he was Fullerian Professor of Physiology at the Royal Institution of Great Britain from 1882 to 1885. He now holds the title of Emeritus Professor of Physiology in Owens College, and is engaged in private practice, and in researches connected with Physiological Chemistry. Professor Gamgee has translated and edited "Hermann's Human Physiology," 1873 and 1878; and is the author of "Text-Book of the Physiological Chemistry of the Animal Body, 1880-93," and of many original papers on Physiological subjects. Address: 5 Avenue du Kursaal, Montreux, Switzerland.

GANZ, Wilhelm, the eminent pianist and composer, was born at Mayence in 1833, and first came to London in 1848 as a lad of fourteen with his father. In a little time he was engaged as one of the second violins at the New Philharmonic. Mr. Ganz became associated, in 1872, with Dr. Wylde in the direction of the New Philharmonic Concerts, and, on the retirement of Dr. Wylde in 1879, himself took the control of these historic performances, a position which he filled for three years, retiring in 1882. Since that time, Mr. Ganz has remained prominently before the English musical world as an accompanist and composer, and, during his life in London, extending over a period of fifty years, the great majority of the most successful musicians have, at some time or other, appeared under his auspices or profited by his introduction into the higher ranks of the musical profession. For instance, he introduced such works as Berlioz's "Roméo et Juliette" and Liszt's "Dante," and organised a special course of programmes, in which M. Saint-Saëns played the solo parts of his four concertos. During his directorship of the Philharmonic Society, M. Vladimir de Pachmann, the Russian pianist, Madame Sofie Menter, and Madame Essipoff were first brought to the notice of English audiences. Mr. Ganz has composed many songs, several of which are said to be particular favourites with Madame Patti, at whose wedding with Mr. Nicolini he was "best man." A most successful concert in commemoration of Mr. Ganz's fifty years' stay in London was given at the Queen's Hall in June 1898, and many artists of high distinction signified their friendship for Mr. Ganz by taking part therein. Address: 126 Harley Street, W.

GARDINER, Samuel Rawson, D.C.L., LL.D., son of Rawson Boddam and Margaret Baring Gould Gardiner, was born March 4, 1829, at Ropley, Hants, and educated at Winchester and at Christ Church, Oxford. He became an honorary student of Christ Church, was in the First Class in Lit. Hum. in 1851, in 1884 Fellow of All Souls', and in 1892 Fellow of Merton; and for some time held the Professorship of Modern History at King's College, London. He was Examiner in History at Oxford University, 1886-89. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University of Edinburgh, and of D.C.L. by the University of Oxford. Dr. Gardiner has written "The History of England from the Accession of James I. to the Disgrace of Chief-Justice Coke," 1863; "Prince Charles and the Spanish Marriage," 1869; "England under the Duke of Buckingham and Charles I.," 1875; "The Personal Government of Charles I.," 1877; "The Fall of the Monarchy of Charles I.," vols. i. and ii., all which were republished in 1883-84 as a collected History of England, 1603-1642; "Introduction to the Study of English History," conjointly with Mr. J. Bass Mullinger, 1881; "The First Two Stuarts and the Puritan Revolution," 1875; and "The Thirty Years' War," 1874. On Aug. 16, 1862, a Civil List Pension of £150 was granted to him "in recognition of his valuable contributions to the history of England." His "History of the Great Civil War," vol. i. 1886, vol. ii. 1889, vol. iii. 1891, was republished in 1893 in 4 vols., crown 8vo. In 1894 he published vol. i. of a "History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate," and vol. ii. in 1897. On the death of Professor Froude he was offered the Regius Professorship of Modern History at Oxford. Permanent address: 7 South Park, Sevenoaks.

GARDNER, Mrs. James. See RORKE, MISS KATE.

GARDNER, Professor Percy, M.A. Oxford, Litt.D. Cambridge, was born in Hackney, London, Nov. 24, 1846, and educated at the City of London School and Christ's College, Cambridge. In 1871 he was appointed Assistant in the Department of Antiquities, British Museum; was elected Fellow of Christ's College, 1872; was appointed Disney Professor of Archæology, Cambridge, 1880; and Lincoln and Merton Professor of Classical Archæology, Oxford, 1887. He has been editor of the Journal of Hellenic Studies since its first issue in 1880; and is the author of "The Types of Greek Coins," 1883; several volumes of the British Museum Catalogues of Greek Coins; "New Chapters in Greek History," 1892; "Manual of Greek Antiquities," in conjunction with Mr. Jevons, 1895; "Sculptured Tombs of Hellas," 1896; and numerous papers in learned journals. Professor Gardner is Vice-President of the Society of Hellenic Studies and of the Numismatic Society; Ordinary Member of the Imperial German Archæological Institute; F.S.A., &c. Professor Ernest Gardner, Professor Percy Gardner's brother, was formerly Principal of the British Hellenic School at Athens. Address: 12 Canterbury Road, Oxford.

GARNETT, Richard, C.B., LL.D., late Keeper of Printed Books in the British Museum, is the eldest son of the late Rev. Richard Garnett, Assistant-Keeper, and was born at Lichfield, Feb. 27, 1835. He was appointed Assistant-Keeper in the Printed Book Department of the British Museum in 1851, and Assistant-Keeper of Printed Books in 1875; was Superintendent of the Reading Room from 1875 to 1884, and became Keeper of Printed Books in 1890, a post which he held until his retirement in February 1899, after winning the enthusiastic esteem of readers during 47 years' service. Dr. Garnett's encyclopædic knowledge of books is proverbial. He is the author of "Primula, a Book of Lyrics," 1858; republished with large editions as "Io in Egypt, and other Poems," in 1859; and again with numerous additions and omissions as "Poems," in 1893. His other poetical works include "Poems from the German," 1862; "Idylls and Epigrams, chiefly from the Greek Anthology," 1869, republished in 1891 under the title of "A Chaplet from the Greek Anthology"; "Iphigenia in Delphi, a Dramatic Poem," 1890; and "Dante, Petrarch, Camoens, cxxiv. Sonnets," 1896. As a writer of fiction he has produced "The Twilight of the Gods," 1888, and a number of other fanciful tales published in periodicals, but not yet collected. He is also the author of lives of Carlyle, Emerson, and Milton in the Great Writers series, and of a biography of Edward Gibbon Wakefield in "Builders of the Empire"; of "The Age of Dryden," 1895, in the series of English literary histories edited by Professor Hales; of "A Short History of Italian Literature," 1898, in the series of literary histories edited by Mr. Gosse; of a survey of Victorian literature to 1887 in Mr. T. H. Ward's "Reign of Queen Victoria"; and of monographs on William Blake and on Richmond and its neighbourhood in "The Portfolio." He is the editor of the series of Library Manuals published by Mr. George Allen, and has contributed largely to the transactions of the Library Association of the United Kingdom. He has also edited his father's "Philological Essays," 1859; "Relics of Shelley," a collection of poetical fragments discovered by himself among the poet's MSS., 1862; selections from Shelley's poems and his letters, in 1880 and 1882; De Quincey's "English Opium Eater," 1885; Warton's "Old Shropshire Oak," 1886; the works of Thomas Love Peacock, 1891; Drayton's "Battle of Agincourt," 1893; and in the same year Beckford's "Vathek," with an introduction in which the literary history of the book was fully told for the first time. In 1896 he edited the poems of Matthew Arnold, with a critical preface; and in 1897 the choicest works of Coleridge, with an elaborate essay on the genius of the poet, and a selection from Browning, illustrated by Mr. Byam Shaw. In 1892 he translated and edited the Spanish merchant Antonio de Guaras's narrative of the accession of Queen Mary, from a unique MS. in the British Museum. He has contributed extensively to periodical literature, and written numerous articles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and "Dictionary of National Biography." He has taken an active part in the improvements effected of late years in the library of the British Museum, and from the first superintended the publication, commenced in 1881, of the general catalogue of printed books. He was President of the Library Association in 1892-93, and of the Bibliographical Society in 1895-97. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Edinburgh in 1883, and he was made a C.B. at the beginning of 1895. In 1863 he married Olivia Narney, daughter of Edward Singleton, of co. Clare. Address: The British Museum.

GARRETT, Edward. See MAYO, ISABELLA FYVIE.

GARRICK, Hon. Sir James Francis, K.C.M.G., Q.C., was born in 1835, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1878. He was a member of the Assembly of Queensland from 1867 to 1868, and again from 1877 to 1883, whilst he acted as Attorney-General of that colony from 1878 to 1879, and was its Postmaster-General in 1884. He was Agent-General for Queensland, in London, from 1884 to 1888, and again from 1890 to 1895. Sir James Garrick, who was created a K.C.M.G. in 1886, now occupies the position of Judge of the Supreme Court of Queensland, and is also Chairman of the London Bank of Australia. He was married in 1865 to Catherine, daughter of the late J. J. Cadell, M.D. Address: 207 Cromwell Road, S.W.

GARROD, Sir Alfred Baring, M.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., Physician Extraordinary to her Majesty the Queen, was born at Ipswich, May 13, 1819, educated at the Ipswich Grammar School and at University College and Hospital; graduated at the University of London, and was placed first in medicine, both at the M.B. examination, 1842, and at the M.D. examination, 1843. He was Assistant-Physician to University College Hospital, 1847, and Physician and Professor of Therapeutics and Clinical Medicine in 1851. In 1863 he became Physician to King's College Hospital and Professor at the College, and in 1874 was made Consulting Physician to King's College Hospital. He was made a Member of the Royal College of Physicians of London in 1851, Fellow in 1856, Senior Censor in 1887, and Vice-President in 1888. He delivered the Gulstonian Lectures at the College, on Diabetes, in 1858; lectures on the New Remedies of the British Pharmacopoeia in 1864, and the Lumleian Lectures on the Physiology and Pathology of Uric Acid, especially in relation to Renal Calculi, in 1883. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1858. In 1896 he was appointed Physician Extraordinary to the Queen. The following is a list of Sir Alfred Garrod's contributions to medical science: "On the Conversion of Benzoic into Hippuric Acid in the Animal Economy," 1843, Chemical Society's Transactions. In June 1847 Sir Alfred Garrod discovered the presence of uric acid in the blood of gouty subjects. A communication upon this was read before the Medical and Chirurgical Society in February 1848, and published in the Transactions for that year. In 1849 he published in the London Journal of Medicine, "Researches on the Pathological Condition of the Blood in Cholera." During the next seven years various papers were published in the Medico-Chirurgical Transactions, "On the Condition of the Blood and Urine in Gout, Rheumatics, and Bright's Disease," and "On the Treatment of Acute Rheumatism by Alkalies"; also "On the Effects of Caustic Alkalies in decomposing the active principles of Belladonna, Stramonium, and Hyoscyamus, and destroying their Physiological and Medicinal Effects." In 1885 he published "The Essentials of Materia Medica and Therapeutics," a work which has gone through a large number of editions, and has been very extensively used as a text-book on the subject. In 1860 Sir Alfred Garrod published his work "On the Nature and Treatment of Gout and Rheumatic Gout," for which latter he proposed to substitute the name of Rheumatoid Arthritis, a name which is now almost universally received by the profession. This work contained all his researches on the pathology of those diseases. It also contained an account of the action of the Lithia salts and their value as remedial agents. Sir Alfred Garrod first introduced Lithia as an internal remedy. Lithia was, at the time he published his work, almost unknown, but is now used in every country in the treatment of gout and renal calculi. The work has been translated and published in German and French. In 1889 Sir Alfred Garrod published in the pages of the Lancet the results of his inquiries, over many years, of the value of very small but long-continued doses of sulphur in the treatment of liver, skin, and joint affections; also on the value of the treatment at Aix-les-Bains. Address: 10 Harley Street, W.

GARTH, The Rt. Hon. Sir Richard, Q.C., P.C., is the son of the late Rev. Richard Garth, of Farnham, Surrey, and was born at Lashden, Hants, on March 11, 1820. He is the son of the Rev. Richard Lowndes and Mary Douglas, and in 1835 assumed the name of Garth. He was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of M.A. At College he captained the University Eleven in 1841-2. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1847, and went on the Home Circuit. He sat in Parliament for a short time (1866-68) in the Conservative interest, as one of the members for Guildford. In March 1875 he was appointed Chief-Justice of Bengal, and received the honour of knighthood. He resigned the Chief-Justiceship in 1886. Address: Morden, Surrey.

GASKELL, Walter Holbrook, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., son of John Dakin Gaskell, of Highbate, Barrister-at-Law, and Anne Gaskell, was born at Naples on Nov. 1, 1847, educated at Sir Roger Cholmondeley's School, Highbate, and entered at Trinity College, Cambridge, in October 1865. He was elected to a foundation scholarship in 1868, and obtained a degree in the Mathematical Tripos (26th Wrangler) in 1869. After taking his degree, he determined to read for a medical career. At that time Dr. M. Foster came to Cambridge, and under his influence he determined to devote himself to physiological research. He went to University Hospital in 1872, finished his medical studies, and took his M.D. degree in 1878. In 1874 he went over to Leipzig and worked with Professor C. Ludwig for a year, mainly at the circulation of blood through muscle. In 1875 he came back to England, and settled down at Grantchester, near Cambridge, working in the physiological laboratory and assisting in the teaching of the physiological department in Cambridge. At the end of 1888 he left Grantchester and went into Cambridge to reside, and in 1893 he built a house at Great Shelford, where he now lives. In 1881, his paper "On the Rhythm of the Heart of the Frog, and the Action of the Vagus Nerve," was chosen for the Croonian lecture, and in the following year he was elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society. In 1883 he was made a University Lecturer in Physiology; in 1889 was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity Hall; in 1888 was awarded the Marshall Hall Prize of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society for his investigations on the "Sympathetic Nervous System," and elected to the fellowship of that Society. In 1889 he was awarded the Gold Medal of the Royal Society for his researches into the innervation of the heart and the nature of the sympathetic nervous system, and in 1895 the Royal College of Physicians awarded him the Baly Medal. In 1894 the Hon. LL.D. was conferred upon him by Edinburgh University, and in 1897 he received a similar degree from McGill University, Montreal. Since 1871 he has published—chiefly in the Journal of Physiology—a series of papers relating, in the first place, to the innervation of the heart, which led to the investigation of the structure of the heart, nerves, and so to that of the whole sympathetic system. The main paper, giving the results of these investigations, was published in the Journal of Physiology, 1886, vol. vii., under the title "On the Relation between the Structure, Function, and Distribution of the Nerves which Innervate the Vascular and Visceral Systems." The continuance of the same line of thought has led to a new conception of the meaning of the cranial nerves, and to the theory that the central nervous system of the vertebrates is in reality derived from the coalesced central nervous system and alimentary canal of a crustacean-like ancestor. The chief papers in which the evidence for this theory is given are: "On the Relation between the Structure, Function, Distribution, and Origin of the Cranial Nerves; together with a Theory of the Origin of the Nervous System of Vertebrata," Journal of Physiology, vol. x., 1889;

"On the Origin of the Central Nervous System of Vertebrates," Brain, vol. xii., 1889; "On the Origin of Vertebrates from a Crustacean-like Ancestor," Quarterly Journal of Microscopic Science, 1890. Also in 1896 he was elected President of the Physiological Section at the meeting of the British Association in Liverpool, and chose for the subject of his address the "Origin of Vertebrates." He is now publishing a series of papers dealing with this subject in the Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, the first of which has already appeared. In 1875 he married Catharine Sharpe, daughter of R. A. Parker, of Highgate, of the firm of Messrs. Sharpe, Parker & Co., solicitors. Address: The Uplands, Great Shelford, near Cambridge.

GASQUET, Rev. Francis Aidan, D.D., O.S.B., is the third son of Dr. Gasquet, was born in London on Oct. 5, 1846, and was educated at Downside College, Bath. He was Superior of the Benedictine Monastery and College of St. Gregory, Downside, from 1878 to 1884. Father Gasquet is a Church historian, and among his published works there may be mentioned: "Henry VIII. and the English Monasteries," 1888; "Edward VI. and the Book of Common Prayer," 1890; "The Great Pestilence," 1893; "The Last Abbot of Glastonbury," 1895; "A Sketch of Monastic Constitutional History," 1896; "The Old English Bible, and other Essays," 1897; and he has edited Montalembert's "Monks of the West." He was one of the scholars who assisted the Papacy in its investigations into the whole question of the validity of Anglican Orders. Address: 4 Great Ormond Street, W.C.

GATACRE, Major-General Sir William Forbes, K.C.B., D.S.O., was born in December 1843. He entered the army in 1862 as Ensign of the Middlesex Regiment, and was promoted Captain in 1870, Major in 1881, and Lieutenant-Colonel in 1882. For several years he was the Instructor in Surveying at the Royal Military College. In 1879 he was appointed Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General at Aldershot, relinquishing that office the following year to take over a similar one in Madras. In 1885 he became Deputy Quartermaster-General in India, where he has seen considerable war service. He joined the staff of General M^cQueen, and took part in the Black Mountain Expedition on the Hazara Field Force which was organised in September 1888, for the punishment of the Akozais who had murdered Major L. R. Battye. Colonel Gatacre was mentioned in despatches and received the D.S.O. In Burma he commanded the Bombay Lancers and dispersed the rebels in a conflict near Pakoka. He was also engaged in the Tonkin Expedition of 1889. In January 1894 he was promoted to be a Brigadier-General of the Bombay Command, being afterwards chosen to command a Brigade of the Relief Force of the Chitral Campaign of 1895. He conducted the action of the 17th April at Mamagai and the passage of the Jambatal and Lawarai Passes, was mentioned in despatches, and received a C.B. In 1898 he was appointed to the command of the British Brigade in Egypt, and was the first man through the zariba at Atbara. He was created K.C.B. Dec. 1898. He married in 1895 Beatrice Wickens, third daughter of Lord Davey. Address: Senior United Service Club, S.W.

GATLING, Richard Jordan, M.D., was born in North Carolina, Sept. 12, 1818. While a boy he assisted his father in perfecting a machine for sowing cotton-seed, and another for thinning out cotton plants. Subsequently he invented a machine for sowing rice. Removing to St. Louis in 1844, he adapted this invention to sowing wheat in drills. For several winters he attended medical lectures at Laporte (Ind.) and at Cincinnati, and in 1849 removed to Indianapolis, where he engaged in railroad enterprises and real estate speculations. In 1850 he invented a double-acting hemp-break, and in 1857 a steam plough, which, however, he did not bring to any practical result. In 1861 he conceived the idea of the revolving battery gun which bears his name. Of these he constructed six at Cincinnati, which were destroyed by the burning of his factory. Afterwards he had twelve manufactured elsewhere, which were used by General Butler on the James River. In 1865 he improved his invention, and in the year following, after satisfactory trial, it was adopted into the United States service. It has also been adopted by several European governments. More recently he has invented an improved method of casting large cannon of steel, and also a torpedo and gunboat, a pneumatic gun for discharging high explosives, and a novel gun-metal, composed of a mixture of steel and aluminium. He has visited Europe several times, and he exhibited his guns at the Paris Exposition in 1867. In 1888 Mr. Gatling established himself at Hartford, Conn., where his gun foundry is now situated.

GATTY, The Rev. Alfred, D.D., is a member of a Cornish family, but was born in the City of London, April 18, 1813. He was educated at the Charterhouse and Eton. For a short time he prepared for the legal profession, but in April 1831 he entered at Exeter College, Oxford, and whilst an undergraduate printed a small volume of poems. At the beginning of 1836 he took the degree of B.A., and in 1837 was ordained by the Bishop of Ripon to the curacy of Bellerby, in the parish of Spennithorne, Yorkshire. In 1838 he graduated M.A., and in the following year married Margaret, the younger daughter of the Rev. Dr. Scott, best known as having been the friend and chaplain of Lord Nelson. In the year of his marriage he was presented to the vicarage of Ecclesfield, near Sheffield, where he has ever since resided. In 1846 he received a numerous signed request from his parishioners, that he would publish the sermons they were accustomed to hear from him, to which he assented; and in 1860 he was presented by them with £120, and the desire was expressed that he would take his Doctor of Divinity degree at Oxford, with which, after consulting his archbishop, he also complied. The 50th year of Dr. Gatty's incumbency was celebrated on Sept. 26, 1889, with great cordiality by his parishioners, who presented him with an admirable portrait of himself, painted in oils by Mrs. S. E. Waller. Mrs. Gatty, being highly accomplished, and with fine literary taste, joined her husband in writing a Life of Dr. Scott in 1842, which was quickly out of print. They also subsequently edited a Life of Dr. Wolff, the missionary, which passed through two editions; and they described their Tour in Ireland in 1861, under the title of "The Old Folks from Home," which had a like success. Mrs. Gatty was also assisted by her husband, during her long fatal illness, in the compilation of her last work, "A Book of Sundials." On Oct. 4, 1873, Dr. Gatty lost his gifted wife, after ten years of suffering, during which time her intellect never lost its strength or clearness. The late Mrs. Ewing was their daughter, who wrote tales for the young, including "Jackanapes," "The Story of a Short Life," &c. Dr. Gatty's own literary works are a volume of Sermons, 1846; a second volume of Sermons, 1848; "The Bell: its Origin, History, and Uses" (second edition, 1848); "The Vicar and his Duties," 1853; "Twenty Plain Sermons," 1858; "The Testimony of David," 1870; a folio edition of Hunter's "History of Hallamshire," to which he added about one-third new and chiefly modern matter, 1869; also "Sheffield: Past and Present," 1873; "A Life at one Living," 1884; and in 1894, a fifth edition of "A Key to 'In Memoriam,'" annotated by Lord Tennyson. In 1861 he was appointed a rural dean by Archbishop Longley, who during the following year bestowed upon him the honorary dignity of Sub-dean of York Cathedral. It has been Dr. Gatty's singular fortune to have served, at one benefice, under six Archbishops of York. Address: Ecclesfield, Sheffield.

GAUDRY, Jean Albert, F.R.S., French paleontologist, was born at St. Germain-en-Laye, Sept. 16, 1827, and was educated at the College, Stanislas. In 1853 he travelled in the East, visited Cyprus, and resided in Greece from 1855 to 1860. When he returned to France, he was given a post in the Natural History Museum, where he was nominated Professor of Palæontology in 1872. Ten years afterwards he was elected a Member of the Academy of Sciences; he is also a Member of the Royal Society of London, which has awarded him the Wollaston Medal. He was promoted Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1886. He has published several geological works on the countries he has travelled in, among which the most important are: "Géologie de l'île Chypre," 1862; "Animaux Fossiles de l'Attique," 1862-67; "Les Ancêtres de nos Animaux dans les Temps Géologiques," 1888.

GEDDES, Sir William Duguid, LL.D., Principal and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Aberdeen, was born in Glass, near Huntly, Aberdeenshire, on Nov. 21, 1828, and educated chiefly at Elgin Academy, and thereafter at University and King's College, Aberdeen. He obtained his first important appointment by competitive trial in 1853 as Rector of the Grammar School of Aberdeen, in succession to Dr. James Melvin; in 1855 he was elected Professor of Greek in his own University; thereafter he became, in 1860, Professor of Greek in the United University at the union of King's and Marischal Colleges in Aberdeen, in which office he continued until December 1885, when he became Principal of the University. In 1876 he received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He is also D.Litt. of the University of Dublin, and has been Vice-President of the Society for Hellenic Studies. In 1892 he received the honour of Knight Bachelor. Among his numerous published works have been: "A Greek Grammar," first issued in 1855; this has gone through many editions; an edition of the "Phædo of Plato," first published in 1863, second edition in 1885; "Problem of the Homeric Poems," 1878; "Flosculi Græci Boreales," 1882. He is also a Vice-President of the New Spalding Club in Aberdeen; and he issued in 1888, along with Mr. Peter Duguid, a volume on the Heraldic Ceiling of the Cathedral Church of St. Machar in Aberdeen. His latest work has been the "Musa Latina Aberdonensis," of which the first volume was issued in 1892, and the second in 1895.

It is as a classical scholar and teacher and a literary archæologist that he has attained distinction. Since 1885 he has been largely engaged in administrative work as Principal, and has taken a prominent part in securing the extension of the University buildings, now proceeding at a cost of over £100,000. In 1859 he married Rachel, daughter of W. White. Address: Chanonry Lodge, Old Aberdeen.

GEGENBAUR, Carl, German anatomist, was born at Würzburg, Aug. 21, 1826, and was appointed Professor at Jena in 1855, whence he went to fill a similar position at Heidelberg in 1873. His chief works are: "Comparative Anatomy," which was translated into English by Ray Lankester (g.v.) in 1878, and "Human Anatomy," 1883. His "Festschrift" (3 vols., 1896-97) was contributed to by the leading scientific men of Germany. Address: Heidelberg.

GEIKIE, Sir Archibald, F.R.S., F.R.S.E., D.C.L., D.Sc., LL.D., Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, eldest son of the late James Stuart Geikie, author of "My Heather Hills" and other well-known Scottish songs, born in Edinburgh Dec. 28, 1835, and educated at the High School and the University; was appointed to the Geological Survey in 1855. He is a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, of the Geological Society of London, &c., and a Correspondent of the Institute of France, of the Academies of Berlin, Vienna, Belgium, Munich, Turin, Stockholm, Philadelphia, New York, and of many other foreign academies; and is the author of numerous geological memoirs in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, in "Memoirs of the Geological Survey," in the Quarterly and North British Review, in Nature, &c.; of "The Story of a Boulder," 1858; "The Life of Professor Edward Forbes" (conjointly with the late Dr. George Wilson), 1861; "The Phenomena of the Glacial Drift of Scotland," 1863; "The Scenery of Scotland viewed in connection with its Physical Geology," 1865 (new edition, largely re-written, 1887); "A Student's Manual of Geology" (in conjunction with the late J. B. Jukes), 1871; "Physical Geography," and "Geology," in the Science Primers, 1873; "Memoir of Sir Roderick I. Murchison: with notices of his Scientific Contemporaries, and of the Rise and Progress of Palæozoic Geology in Britain," 2 vols., 1874; "Geological Map of Scotland," 1876; "Class-Book of Physical Geography," 1877; "Outlines of Field-Geology," 1879; "Geological Sketches at Home and Abroad," 1882; "A Text-Book of Geology," 1882 (3rd edition, 1893); "A Memoir of Sir A. C. Ramsay," 1894; "A Class-Book of Geology," 1886; "The Ancient Volcanoes of Britain," 2 vols., 1897; "The Founders of Geology," 1897; "Geological Map of England and Wales," 1898. On the extension of the Geological Survey, in 1867, Sir Archibald was appointed Director of the Survey of Scotland; and in December 1870 he was nominated by Sir Roderick Murchison as first occupant of the new chair of Geology and Mineralogy founded in the University of Edinburgh by Sir Roderick and the Crown. He resigned the chair in 1882, and was succeeded by his brother. The University of St. Andrews conferred on him the degree of LL.D. in Feb. 1872; and the same degree was given to him by the University of Edinburgh at its tercentenary celebration in April 1885. He has also received the degree of D.Sc. from the Universities of Cambridge and Dublin, and of D.C.L. from that of Oxford. On the resignation of Sir Andrew Ramsay he was at the close of 1881 appointed Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, and Director of the Museum of Practical Geology, London. He was Foreign Secretary of the Royal Society from 1889 to 1893; President of the Geological Society, 1890-92; and President of the British Association, 1892. He has received a Royal Medal from the Royal Society, the Wollaston and Murchison Medals of the Geological Society, and has been twice awarded the Macdougall Brisbane Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was knighted in 1891 for his jubilee services. He married, in 1871, Alice Gabrielle, youngest daughter of the late Eugène Piquetel, of Lyons. Addresses: 28 Jermyn Street, London, S.W.; 10 Chester Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.; and Athenæum.

GEIKIE, Professor James, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., the younger brother of the above Sir Archibald Geikie, and the son of the late J. S. Geikie, was born in 1839 at Edinburgh, and was educated at the High School and University of Edinburgh. In 1861 he joined the Geological Survey, in which service he rose to be District Surveyor or local director of the Survey in Scotland. He resigned this position on his appointment in 1882 to the Murchison Chair of Geology and Mineralogy in Edinburgh University, which he now occupies, in succession to his brother. On the institution by the Royal Commission of a Faculty of Science in that University, he was elected Dean of the Faculty. Professor Geikie holds several honorary degrees, is member of many scientific societies in this country, and honorary or corresponding member of the Geologiska Föreningen i Stockholm, the Videnskabselskab i Christiania, the Société Belge de Géologie, the American Philosophical Society, the Boston Society of Natural History, &c. He is the author of many papers dealing with Palæozoic and Pleistocene Geology and Physical Geography. His principal works are: "The Great Ice Age, and its Relation to the Antiquity of Man," 1874 (3rd edit., 1894); "Prehistoric Europe; a Geological Sketch," 1881; "Outlines of Geology," 1886 (3rd edit., 1896); "Songs and Lyrics by H. Heine and other German Poets," 1887; "Fragments of Earth-Lore," 1893; "Earth Sculpture, or the Origin of Surface-Features," 1898. In 1876, at the request of the Colonial Office, he accompanied the late Sir Andrew Ramsay to inspect and report on the water-supply for the town and garrison of Gibraltar. Professor Geikie is an original member and one of the founders of the Royal Scottish Geographical Society, of whose organ—the Scottish Geographical Magazine—he is honorary editor. He has received the Macdougall Brisbane Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and the Murchison Medal of the Geological Society. He married Mary Simson, youngest daughter of John Somerville Johnston, of Crailing Hall, Jedburgh. Address: 81 Merchiston Avenue, Edinburgh.

GELL, The Right Rev. Frederick, D.D., Bishop of Madras, son of the late Rev. Philip Gell, of Derby, born in 1821, took his B.A. degree at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1843, of which he was a scholar, and soon afterwards gained the Bell University Scholarship, obtained a Senior Optime, and was placed in Class I. of the Classical Tripos. He then became Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College. He proceeded to the degree of M.A. in 1846. Having been Chaplain to the Bishop of London, and one of her Majesty's preachers at Whitehall, he, in 1861, was consecrated to the see of Madras. Address: Cathedral Road, Madras.

GELL, Sir James, J.P., First Deemster of Man, was born in the Isle of Man on Jan. 13, 1823, and was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man. He became a Manx Advocate in 1845, was High Bailiff of Castletown from 1854 to 1866, Chairman of the Insular Justices in 1879, Chairman of the Manx Board of Education, 1872-81, and in 1897 was Deputy-Governor of the Isle of Man. He was for long Attorney-General of Man, ex-officio Member of the Legislative and Executive Councils, is Trustee of King William's College, and since 1895 has been an Ecclesiastical Commissioner. In February 1898 he took his seat in the Common Law Division of the Manx High Court on his appointment to the Bench, and received the congratulations of the Bar through Mr. Ring, the new Attorney-General, who referred to his high attainments as a Manx legislator, and to the distinguished services he had rendered to the island in the office of Attorney-General. Among other works he has edited "The Statutes of the Isle of Man," 1836-48. He was knighted in 1877. He married in 1850 a daughter of the Rev. William Gill. Address: Castletown.

GENOA, Duke of, Thomas Albert Victor de Savoy, only son of the late Prince Ferdinand, Duke of Genoa, the brother of King Victor Emmanuel, was born Feb. 6, 1854. After receiving an English education at Harrow School, he went through a regular course of study in the Marine College at Genoa, and came out an officer of the Royal Italian Navy, in which capacity he was entrusted with the command of the Vettor Pisani, a corvette of the first rank, bound on a voyage round the world. The vessel completed her cruise in 1880, and the Duke's journal of the voyage was published at the close of that year.

GEORGE I., Christian William Ferdinand Adolphus George, King of the Hellenes, second son of the King of Denmark, and brother of the Czarina and of the Princess of Wales, was born Dec. 24, 1845, and served for some time in the Danish navy. After the abdication of Otho I., the late King of Greece, in 1863, the vacant throne was first tendered by a majority of the Greek people to Prince Alfred of England, whose nomination the English Government refused to accept. It was then offered to Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, who declined it; and eventually to Prince Christian, who, with the concurrence of his own family and the consent of the Great Powers, accepted it, and began to reign, as King George I., on June 6, 1863. Since the year 1876, when active trouble broke out in the Balkan Peninsula, King George's position has been very difficult. His country gained a considerable addition of territory by the decision of the Conference which followed the Congress of Berlin. In 1886, after the revolution at Philippopolis and the Servo-Bulgarian war, Greece (under a rash minister, M. Delyannis) was for declaring war against Turkey, and was only stopped by the firm attitude of England. Towards the end of 1896, however, serious disturbances took place in Crete, and the Christian inhabitants of the island were exposed to great dangers. On Feb. 5, 1897, it was announced by M. Delyannis that Greek warships would be sent to the island, the object being to protect Greek subjects, and not, so the official statement ran, to demonstrate against Turkey. This decision was thought to have been made owing to pressure from the King, and the popular enthusiasm was great. The disturbances on the island increasing, a flotilla of torpedo boats, under the command of Prince George, the second son of the King, and military forces under Colonel Vassos, were despatched to Crete, for the further protection of the Christian population. In March hostilities broke out between Greece and Turkey, and the Crown Prince Constantine was appointed Commander-in-Chief. The Greek army meeting with several reverses, and these being attributed to the inefficiency of the Crown Prince's staff, the King sent for M. Delyannis, and asked him to resign; this action was received with unanimous favour by the people. The Prime Minister refused to resign, and the King forthwith displaced him, and appointed M. Ralli in his room on April 28. In consequence of further defeats of their army, the Greek Government were obliged to accept the principle of self-government for Crete, and they placed the interests of the country in the hands of the Great Powers. On the conclusion of the armistice, peace negotiations between the Ambassadors of the Powers and the Porte were entered upon in June. The peace preliminaries were put before the Greek Chamber, and the Government asked for a vote of confidence; this, however, was refused, and the Cabinet resigned on September 30. The King thereupon asked M. Zaimis, a follower of M. Delyannis, to form a new Ministry. In February 1898, whilst driving in the country near Athens, and accompanied by his daughter, Princess Marie, a determined attempt was made on his life. As the royal carriage was ascending a hill, two men were observed standing at the roadside, who fired several shots whilst the King was passing them. King George and the Princess fortunately escaped, although the footman received a ball in his leg. The elder of the two criminals, named Karditzis, was subsequently arrested, and was supposed to belong to a society holding Anarchist views. On the following morning a solemn service of thanksgiving was held, at which all the royal family were present. On leaving the Cathedral, the King was received with the greatest enthusiasm by the assembled crowd. The King of the Hellenes pays a yearly visit to the Court of Denmark, with which he keeps up warm relations, as also with that of Russia. He was married at St. Petersburg to the Princess Olga, daughter of the Grand-Duke Constantine, Oct. 27, 1867. The Princess Olga was born Sept. 3, 1851. HIL son Constantine, Duke of Sparta, the Crown Prince of Greece, was married at Athens on Oct. 20, 1889, to the Princess Sophie of Prussia, the aunt of the Emperor of Germany. The Princess Alexandra of Greece was married in June of the same year to the Grand Duke Paul of Russia.

GEORGE, Ernest, is the son of the late John George, and was born in London on June 18, 1839. He was educated at Brighton and Reading, and entered the Royal Academy as a student, where he gained the R.A. gold medal for Architecture in 1859. He was articled to S. Hewitt, architect, and began to practise in partnership with T. Vaughan; he has subsequently worked with Harold Peto and with A. B. Yeates. Amongst his works the principal ones are: "Studeleigh Court" and "Ronsdon," Devon; "Motcombe," Dorset; "Batsford," Gloucester; "Poles," Hertfordshire; "Buchan Hill," Sussex; "Dunley Hill," Surrey; "Shiplake Court," and houses in Harrington Gardens and Collingham Gardens, South Kensington, and in Cadogan Square and Berkeley Square. Mr. George has, as well, devoted a good deal of time to etching, and has published: "Etchings on the Moselle," "Etchings on the Loire," &c. In 1896 he was awarded the Queen's Gold Medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects. Addresses: 18 Maddox Street, W.; and "Redroofs," Streatham Common, S.W.

GÉRAULT-RICHARD, Jean, French journalist and politician, was born in the Garthe in 1858. He started life as a carpet-weaver at Le Mars and came to Paris in 1880, where he wrote songs, at first rustic, then political and socialistic. He wrote for La Bataille, a Socialist newspaper edited by M. Lissagaray, and then for La Petite République. In 1893 he founded the Chambard, a print in which he grossly insulted the President of the Republic. He was arrested and condemned to a fine of £120 and two years' imprisonment in 1894. The Socialist party by way of protest elected him a deputy for Paris, and he was included in the general amnesty on the accession of M. Faure, January 1895.

GERMAIN, Antoine-Henri-Marie, a French politician and financier, was born at Lyons, Feb. 19, 1824. He was one of the founders, and is now the Chairman, of the great financial company, the Crédit Lyonnais. In 1869 he was elected as Liberal member for the 3rd Circumscription of the Ain, and was chosen again at the general election for the National Assembly in 1871. He has several times been returned since as a moderate Republican. As the embodiment of "Left Centre" principles, and as one of the highest French authorities on finance, M. Germain has always held a very distinguished position, and his rare speeches on the different budgets have made an impression, not only in Paris, but throughout Europe. He is opposed to much of the financial policy of the Republic. He has published several economic treatises, of which "La Situation Financière de la France en 1886" may be mentioned.

GERMANY, Emperor of. See WILLIAM II., FREDERICK WILLIAM VICTOR ALBERT.

GÉRÔME, Jean Léon, Hon. R.A., was born at Vesoul, Haute-Saône, May 11, 1824, studied in his native place, went to Paris in 1841, and entered the studio of Paul Delaroche, under whose direction he pursued, for a time, his studies at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts. He remained under that celebrated artist until 1844, and accompanied him in his journey to Italy. Returning to France in 1845, he exhibited, for the first time, at the Salon of 1847; went on an excursion to Turkey and the eastern banks of the Danube in 1853, and to Upper and Lower Egypt in 1856. These travels furnished him with numerous subjects for his paintings. In December 1863 he was appointed Professor of Painting in the Ecole des Beaux-Arts. Since 1847 M. Gérôme has exhibited: "The Virgin, the Infant Jesus, and St. John"; "Bacchus and Cupid"; "A Greek Interior"; the "Frieze" of the vase commemorative of the Great Exhibition held in London in 1851; "The Age of Augustus and the Birth of Jesus Christ"; "Rembrandt"; a "Portrait of Rachel"; "The Plague at Marseilles"; "The Death of St. Jerome"; "Lioness meeting a Jaguar"; "Rex Tibicen," 1874; and "L'Eminence Grise," 1874. To these may be added several classical and Eastern subjects, especially "Cæsar and Cleopatra," a very famous picture; "The Slave Market of Cairo"; "Promenade of the Harem"; "Le Poète, la Soif," 1888; "Un Coin du Caire," 1890; and numerous pictures of Arab and Egyptian life. He has in recent years devoted much attention to sculpture, one of his latest works being a group entitled, "Pygmalion and Galatea," 1892. M. Gérôme obtained a third-class medal in 1847, two second-class medals in 1848 and 1855, and higher medals at more recent dates, and the decoration of the Legion of Honour in November 1855. He was decorated with the order of the Red Eagle in 1869, and appointed a Commander of the Legion of Honour in February 1878, and is a Member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts. He is represented at the Luxembourg by his famous "Combat de Coqs," and by a painted Tanagra statuette. His "Cleopatra" and "Cardinal in Grey" were last seen in the Guildhall Loan Collection of 1898.

GERSPACH, Edouard, was born at Thann, Alsace, in 1833, and is now Director of the National Manufactory of the Gobelins, and of that of Mosaics. His publications have chiefly been upon mosaics, the manufacture of glass, and the decorative arts. He has in preparation two works, one, "La Manufacture des Gobelins," and the other, "Les Anciennes Faïenceries Françaises." He has published "La Mosaïque," 1881; "L'Art de la Verrerie," 1885; and "Les Tapisseries Coptes," 1890.

GERSTER, Madame Etelka, was born at Kaschau, in Hungary, June 16, 1857. At a very early age she evinced musical abilities of no ordinary kind. By the advice of the director of the Conservatoire at Vienna, who chanced to hear her sing at the head of one of the Catholic processions of her native town, she was placed under the tuition of the far-famed Madame Marchesi, with whom she studied most diligently for three years (1873-76). In the meantime, rumours of her wonderful voice had got abroad, and offers were made to her from several German towns. Etelka, however, declined these, as she was determined to begin her career in an Italian school; and in January 1876 she made her début at Venice, under the management of Signor Gardini, in the character of Gilda, in Verdi's "Rigoletto," and with wonderful success. Almost at once followed the parts of Ophelia, Lucia, Amina in "La Sonnambula," and "Margarite," which last character she at first sang, as it was originally written, in French. Her next triumph was at Berlin, where she created such a furor as had never been known previously in the German capital. The demand for places was so great that the administration of the theatre was compelled to ask the public to apply by writing, and it is said that more than 21,000 applications were refused. She then made a short sojourn at Buda-Pesth, where she appeared in the operas of "La Sonnambula," and "Hamlet." The "Hungarian Nightingale," as she has been called, next went to St. Petersburg and Moscow, where she carried everything before her, and was, at the Emperor's express desire, appointed "Kammersängerin." For her co-operation in the Court concerts, his Majesty presented her with 4000 marks and a handsome bracelet, while the Empress gave her a magnificent chain ornamented with pearls and diamonds. After she had sung at Pesth and Breslau, Mr. Mapleson had the good fortune to secure her, and she came to London. Here she first sang before an English audience on June 23, 1877, in "La Sonnambula." She at once became a great favourite with the English public, and her performances at Her Majesty's Theatre during the season of 1878 were a continued series of successes. In the same year she married the Impresario Gardini, and has since retired from public life.

GEVAERT, François Auguste, born July 31, 1828, at Huyse, near Oudenarde, is the son of a baker, and was originally destined by his parents to follow that trade. His great musical talent, however, becoming apparent, he was sent in 1841 to the Conservatoire at Ghent, where he studied under Sommère and Mengal. He was then appointed organist of the Jesuits' Church, and in 1846 a Christmas cantata of his composition was performed in Ghent. In May 1847 he gained the first prize for composition at the national competition at Brussels, but was allowed to postpone his foreign tour for two years, during which his first two operas, "Hughes de Somerghem," and "La Comédie à la Ville" were produced in Ghent. In 1849 he proceeded on his tour, and went to Spain. His reports on Spanish music were printed in the bulletin of the Académie of Brussels for 1851. On Nov. 27, 1852, he produced "Georgette" at the Théâtre Lyrique in Paris, and in October 1854, "Le Billet de Marguerite," both with extraordinary success. For his cantata, "De Nationale Verjaerdag," composed in honour of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the reign of King Leopold, he received the Order of Leopold. In 1867 he was appointed Inspecteur de la Musique at the Académie de Musique, Paris, a post which he retained until September 1870, since which time he has devoted his attention more especially to the history of music, and in 1875 brought out the first part of his "Histoire et Théorie de la Musique dans l'Antiquité." His other works comprise "Quentin Durward," 1858; "Château Trompette," 1860; and "Le Capitaine Henriot," 1864; all produced at the Opéra Comique, Paris, with great success; as was also "Les Deux Amours," at the theatre of Baden-Baden, 1861. In connection with the history of music he has written "Leerboek van den Gregoriaenschen zang," 1856; "Traité d'Instrumentation," 1863; and "Les Gloires d'Italie," 1868; and in the last five years, "Nouveau Traité d'Instrumentation," 1885; "Traité d'Orchestration"; and "Les Origines du Chant Liturgique de l'Eglise Latine," 1890. In 1871 he succeeded Fétis as Director of the Conservatoire at Brussels, and was elected a Member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts in 1873.

GIARD, Professor Alfred, former Député du Nord, was born at Valenciennes, Aug. 8, 1846, and educated in his native city, and also at Douai until 1867, when he entered l'Ecole Normale Supérieure. He took his degree in 1875; and, after holding some minor appointments, became Professor of Zoology at the Faculté des Sciences de Paris, in 1880. He is the author of numerous papers on zoological subjects, respecting which he is a strong supporter of Darwinianism. He is a member of the Comité Consultatif des Pêches Maritimes; and founder and director of the Laboratoire de Zoologie Maritime de Wimereux. In 1887 he was appointed Maître des Conférences at l'Ecole Normale Supérieure, and was subsequently appointed first occupant of the chair of Zoology founded at the Faculty of Sciences by the town of Paris. After his election to the Chamber, in 1882, he took an active part in politics, holding the views of the extreme Left, but retired when the Scrutin de liste was re-established. His Paris address is 14 Rue Stanislas.

GIBBONS, Cardinal James, Archbishop of Baltimore, was born in Baltimore, U.S.A., on July 23, 1834, entered St. Charles's College, transferred in 1857 to St. Mary's Seminary, and on June 30, 1861, was ordained priest there. He was made assistant-priest at St. Patrick's, Baltimore; made pastor of St. Bridget's, Canton; was promoted to the Cathedral, and made Secretary to Archbishop Spalding. He became Assistant-Chancellor of the Second Plenary Council of Baltimore in 1866; was made Vicar-Apostolic of North Carolina in 1868, and opened schools, built asylums, erected churches, and increased the number of priests from five to fifteen. He was translated to Richmond in 1872, and made its bishop and the coadjutor of Archbishop Boyle of Baltimore in 1877, and succeeded him the same year. At the age of forty-three he was Archbishop of the greatest See in North America. Working with the same activity in establishing asylums, schools, homes, &c., he was appointed by Leo XIII. to preside over the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, and was rewarded for his services by a Cardinal's hat, June 30, 1886. The silver jubilee of his episcopal consecration, which occurred on August 16, 1893, was celebrated with great pomp by a concourse of Archbishops and Bishops on October 18 of the same year. He has written many pastorals and two books; "The Faith of our Fathers," 1876, said to be the most popular book of the kind of our day; and "Our Christian Heritage," 1889. These books have been translated into many languages, and have served to increase his popularity with all classes. In 1897 he published "The Ambassador of Christ."

GIBSON, The Right Hon. John George, youngest son of the late Mr. William Gibson, of Rochforest, co. Tipperary (who was Taxing Master in Chancery), and brother of Lord Ashbourne, was born in Dublin on Feb. 13, 1846, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he had a brilliant career, taking the first two gold medals in Classics and History and Political Science. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1870, and joined the Leinster Circuit. He was created a Queen's Counsel in 1880, and in 1885 was elected Conservative member for the Walton Division of Liverpool, which he represented also in the next Parliament until 1888, when he was raised to the Bench. In 1886 he was appointed her Majesty's Third Serjeant-at-Law, and in Lord Salisbury's second administration (1886) held the posts of Attorney-General and Solicitor-General for Ireland. Since 1888 he has been Justice of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, Ireland. He married, in 1871, Anna, daughter of the Rev. John Hare.

GIDDENS, George, actor, was born at Bedford on June 17, 1855, and is descended from Berkshire and Wiltshire farmers. He was educated at National Schools, and first went on the stage at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh. He subsequently toured with Charles Wyndham in America, and in 1878 joined the latter at the Criterion Theatre, London, where he was a popular favourite until 1894 in "The Two Roses" and other plays. Since 1894 he has played at Drury Lane Theatre in "The Derby Winner," "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," and "The Passport," and latterly has played the extremely humorous principal part in "A Night Out" at the Vaudeville Theatre. Address: 4 Albert Road, Regent's Park, N.W.

GIFFEN, Sir Robert, K.C.B., F.R.S., LL.D., was born at Strathaven, Lanarkshire, in 1837, and educated chiefly at the parish school in that town. He was employed as clerk in a solicitor's office, partly in Strathaven and partly in Glasgow, from 1850 to 1857, attending for two sessions at Glasgow College in 1856-57 and 1857-58; and was afterwards employed in a commercial house in Glasgow from 1858 to 1860, becoming connected with the press in the latter year as sub-editor and reporter on the staff of the Stirling Journal. In 1862 he left Stirling for London, to occupy a position on the staff of the Globe newspaper, with which he was connected, as sub-editor and contributor, until 1866. For a short time after that he assisted Mr. Morley in the Fortnightly Review; from 1868 to 1876 he was assistant-editor and principal contributor to the Economist, under Mr. Bagehot, being also from 1873 to 1876 City editor of, and writer of the Trade and Finance article in, the Daily News. In 1876 he was appointed chief of the Statistical Department of the Board of Trade. This office was merged in 1882 in that of Assistant-Secretary, Commercial Department, and in 1892 the branch was again enlarged, and Sir R. Giffen was appointed Controller-General of the Commercial, Labour, and Statistical Departments. During his connection with the press he was a contributor to the Fortnightly Review, Saturday Review, Spectator, and other journals, and in his official capacity has written numerous reports on commercial matters, besides giving evidence on similar subjects, e.g., sugar bounties, gold and silver, Channel tunnel, labour, financial relations, &c., before numerous Committees of the House of Commons and Royal Commissions. In 1892 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; he was a member of the Royal Commission on Agriculture, 1894-97, and was created C.B., 1891, and K.C.B., 1895. In 1881 Mr. Giffen resigned his post at the Board of Trade, and was understood to be for some time on the staff of the Times, but the post was not actually vacated, only leave of absence was given for a considerable time to enable him to fulfil the engagements which he had made in view of his resignation. He retired finally in 1897, on reaching the age of sixty. He is the author of "Stock Exchange Securities: an Essay on the General Causes of Fluctuation in their Price," published 1878; "Essays in Finance," 1st series, 1879 (4th ed. 1886), 2nd series, 1886, &c. Several of the papers published in the two volumes of "Essays in Finance," above noticed, consisted of papers read before the Statistical Society, or addresses as President; among the principal being a paper on Recent Accumulations of Capital in the United Kingdom, read 1878; the Use of Import and Export Statistics, read 1882; and the Progress of the Working Classes, read 1883. Among other subjects treated are the Depreciation of Gold, 1848-72 (1887); Trade Depression and Low Prices, 1885, and Gold Supply, the Rate of Discount and Prices, 1886; The Growth of Capital, 1890; and The Case against Bimetallism, 1892. He married (1) Isabella, daughter of D. M'Ewen, in 1864; and (2) Margaret Anne, daughter of George Wood, of Aberdeen, in 1896. Addresses: 9 Bina Gardens, South Kensington; and Athenæum.

GIGLIUCCI, Countess, née Clara Anastasis Novello, fourth daughter of Mr. Vincent Novello, musical composer, born in London, June 10, 1818, at an early age displayed so much musical talent as to induce her father to give her a thoroughly professional education. Her progress repaid the care bestowed upon her, for at the early age of eleven years she won, by competition, her admission as a pupil into the Conservatoire de Musique Sacrée at Paris, where for two years she studied assiduously, and at one of the public examinations of the pupils was complimented by Charles X. and his Court. On the closing of the institution, in the Revolution of 1830, she returned home, fitted to take a prominent part among the singers of the day, at the concerts of the Philharmonic Society, and other leading musical entertainments. When only seventeen years of age she was elected an Associate of that Society, and soon afterwards accepted an invitation from Mendelssohn to take part in the Leipzig Gewandhaus Concerts. In Berlin and Vienna she was equally well received; and so great was her success at the first-mentioned place, that the late King presented her with introductions to his sister the Empress of Russia, and to the Court of Vienna. Before this time Malibran and Rubini advised her to go to Italy, and study for the stage. Her success at Vienna induced her to take part in the musical festivals in Lombardy, and she felt disposed to follow their advice; but, owing to engagements at St. Petersburg and in Germany, could not carry out this plan until 1839-40. She appeared at Padua, in 1841, in the character of Semiramide, with such success that engagements at Bologna, Modena, and Genoa followed, and in 1842 both Rome and Genoa endeavoured to secure her for the fêtes of the Carnival. In 1843 she returned to England, and sang in London and Manchester; and having married Count Gigliucci, she withdrew from the stage in 1844. Circumstances, however, induced her to return in 1850; and she constantly appeared in concerts, oratorios, and operas, on the Continent and in London, until 1860, when she finally retired.

GILBERT, Alfred, R.A., D.C.L., sculptor, was born in Berners Street, London, in 1854, and is the son of Alfred Gilbert, musician. He first studied his art under Boehm, in 1874, after which he went to Paris, where he studied at the École des Beaux-Arts under M. Cavelier. At the end of three years he went to Rome, where he executed the "Kiss of Victory" in marble. He first attracted attention by his "Perseus Arming," and some time later he exhibited a small bronze head, which made a great impression on all the artists who saw it. In Rome he also executed "Icarus" amongst many other works. In 1886 he exhibited at the Royal Academy the plaster model of the "Enchanted Chair," and at the Grosvenor Gallery a small statuette. He has executed the tomb of the late Duke of Clarence in the Memorial Chapel, Windsor, and the Shaftesbury Fountain, in the middle of Piccadilly Circus. He has also executed a number of busts of eminent men, such as the late Henry Fawcett, the Bombay statue of Lord Reay, and the late Sir Richard Owen. Mr. Alfred Gilbert, R.A., was elected an honorary member of the Society of Designers in the place of the late Sir Edward Burne-Jones in December 1898. The other honorary members of the Society are Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, and Sir E. J. Poynter, President of the Royal Academy. The election of honorary members is only made by the unanimous vote of the Council. He was elected an A.R.A. in 1887, and a Royal Academician in December 1892. In 1875 he married a daughter of Francis Gilbert, of Oshawa. Addresses; 16 Maida Vale, W.; and Athenæum.

GILBERT, Sir (Joseph) Henry, Ph.D., LL.D., Sc.D., F.R.S., son of the late Rev. Joseph Gilbert, was born at Hull, Aug. 1, 1817. After his school education, he met with a gun-shot accident, which much impaired his health for some time, and also deprived him of the sight of one eye. He commenced his College course at the University of Glasgow, where as elsewhere he devoted special attention to Chemistry, working in the laboratory of the late Professor Thomas Thomson. He next studied at University College, London; attending the classes of Professor Graham and others, and working in the laboratory of the late Dr. Anthony Todd Thomson, then the Professor of Materia Medica, Therapeutics, and Toxicology. A short time was then spent in the laboratory of Professor Liebig, at Giessen, where he took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Returning to University College, London, Dr. Gilbert acted as class and laboratory assistant to Professor A. T. Thomson, in the winter and summer sessions of 1840-41; attending other courses at the College at the same time.

He next devoted some time to the chemistry of calico-printing, dyeing, &c., in the neighbourhood of Manchester. In 1843, Dr. Gilbert became associated with Mr. (now Sir) J. B. Lawes, of Rothamsted, Hertfordshire; and from that time has continued to be engaged with him in a systematic series of researches on Agricultural Chemistry and Physiology. The results of their investigations have been published in a series of papers, now numbering more than 100, in various journals, among which may be mentioned: The Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society, the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, the Journal of the Chemical Society, the Reports of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, the Journal of the Society of Arts, &c.; also in some official reports, and elsewhere. Dr. Gilbert was elected a member of the Chemical Society in 1841, the year of its formation; and he contributed to the first volume of its "Memoirs" a translation from the original German of a paper on the Atomic Weight of Carbon, by Professors Redtenbacher and Liebig. He was President of the Society in 1882-3. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1860, and in 1867 the Council of the Society awarded to him, in conjunction with Mr. Lawes, one of the Royal Medals. He is also Fellow of the Linnean Society, and of the Royal Meteorological Society. In 1880 he was President of the Chemical Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. In 1882 and 1884 he visited Canada and the United States, travelling over wide areas, to study the conditions of the agriculture of those countries. In 1884 he was appointed Sibthorpe Professor of Rural Economy in the University of Oxford, and he was reappointed for a second period of three years in 1887. He was knighted in 1893, the Jubilee year of the Rothamsted experiments. He has retained the Directorship of the Rothamsted Laboratory ever since 1843, and in February 1894, the Society of Arts awarded him the Albert Medal in recognition of the work he has there achieved. Sir Henry Gilbert received the honorary degree of M.A. at Oxford in 1884, that of LL.D. at Glasgow in 1883, and in Edinburgh in 1890, and of Sc.D. at Cambridge in 1894. He is Honorary Member of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, of the Chemico-Agricultural Society of Ulster, of the Academy of Agriculture and Forestry of Petrovskole, and of the Royal Agricultural Society of Hanover; Foreign Member of the Royal Agricultural Academy of Sweden; and Corresponding Member of the Institute of France (Academy of Sciences), of the Society of Agriculturists of France, of the Society for the Encouragement of National Industry in Paris, and of the Institut Agronomique et Gorigoretsk. He is also Chevalier du Mérite Agricole (France); and (in conjunction with Sir J. B. Lawes) Gold Medallist of Merit for Agriculture (Germany). He married (1), in 1850, Eliza, daughter of the Rev. George Laurie (she died in 1853); and (2), in 1855, Maria, daughter of B. Smith. Addresses: Harpenden, St. Albans; and Athenæum.

GILBERT, Josiah, born at the Independent College, Rotherham, Yorkshire, Oct. 7, 1814, son of the Rev. Joseph Gilbert, grandson of the Rev. Isaac Taylor, of Ongar, was educated chiefly at home, became afterwards a student in the Royal Academy, practised as a portrait-painter for some years in London, but has lived since 1843 at Marden Ash, Ongar, engaged in literary and artistic pursuits. He is the author of "Art, its Scope and Purpose," 1858; "Cadore, or Titian's Country," 1869; "Art and Religion," 1871; was joint author of "The Dolomite Mountains," 1864; edited "Autobiography and other Memorials of Mrs. Gilbert (formerly Ann Taylor)," 1875, which has gone through four editions, and he published "Landscape in Art before Claude and Salvator," in 1885. Mr. Gilbert is a member of the Alpine Club. Address: Ongar.

GILBERT, William Schwenck, B.A., J.P., was born Nov. 18, 1836, at 17 Southampton Street, Strand, London, and educated at Great Ealing School. His intention was to enter the Royal Artillery, but while studying for his examination the Crimean War came to an end, and the examination was postponed until he had passed the age of admission. He took the degree of B.A. at the University of London, was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple in November 1864 (having been a clerk in the Privy Council office from 1857 to 1862), and was appointed Captain of the Royal Aberdeenshire Highlanders (now the 3rd Battalion Gordon Highlanders) in 1867, from which he retired in 1888 with the honorary rank of Major. Mr. Gilbert is well known as a dramatic author and contributor to periodical literature. His first piece, "Dulcamara," was produced at the St. James's Theatre in January 1866. He is also author of: "Robert the Devil," "The Merry Zingara," "La Vivandière," and "The Pretty Druidess" (burlesques); "An Old Score," "The Princess," "Ages Ago," "Randall's Thumb," "Creatures of Impulse," "A Sensation Novel," "Happy Arcadia" (Gallery of Illustration), and many other minor pieces; "The Palace of Truth," a fairy comedy, November 1870;

"Pygmalion and Galatea," a fairy comedy, December 1871; "The Wicked World," a fairy comedy, January 1873; "Charity," a play, January 1874, at the Haymarket Theatre, where the three preceding pieces had also first appeared; "Sweethearts," a dramatic contrast, Prince of Wales's Theatre, November 1874; "Broken Hearts," a fairy comedy, Court Theatre, 1876; "Tom Cobb," a farcical comedy, St. James's, in the same year; "Thespis, or the Gods grown Old," and "Trial by Jury" (both written in conjunction with Sir Arthur Sullivan), at the Gaiety and Royalty respectively; "Dan'l Druce," a drama, at the Haymarket; and "Engaged," a farcical comedy, at the same theatre; "The Ne'er-do-Well," Olympic, 1878; "Gretchen," Olympic, 1879; "Foggerty's Fairy," Criterion; "Comedy and Tragedy," Lyceum; "Princess Toto," "The Gentleman in Black," and "Topsy-Turveydom"; and "The Sorcerer," an opera, Opera Comique, September 1877; "H.M.S. Pinafore," which ran two years at that theatre; the "Pirates of Penzance, which ran more than a year; and "Patience, or Bunthorne's Bride," Opera Comique and the new Savoy Theatre in 1881, which ran twenty months. This was followed by "Iolanthe, or the Peer and the Peri," which ran thirteen months; "Princess Ida, or Castle Adamant," which ran nearly as long; "The Mikado, or the Town of Titipu," which ran nearly two years; "Ruddigore, or the Witch's Curse," which ran ten months; "The Yeomen of the Guard," which ran fifteen months; "The Gondoliers," which was produced in 1889, and ran eighteen months. "The Mountebanks," which was written in collaboration with the late Alfred Cellier, was produced in January 1892, and ran eight months; and "Utopia, Limited," and "The Grand Duke," which were written in collaboration with Sir Arthur Sullivan, were produced in October 1893, and had long runs. He also wrote "His Excellency," a comic opera, in conjunction with Dr. Osmond Carr; and "Brantingham Hall" and "The Fortune-Hunter," neither of which were successful. "The Mikado" has been performed in Berlin, Vienna, Amsterdam, and other Continental towns. These operas were, with three exceptions, all written in conjunction with Sir Arthur Sullivan. "The Palace of Truth" is based on a story of Madame de Genlis; "Gretchen" on the Faust legend; and "Princess Ida" on Tennyson's poem; but the other pieces are original. Mr. Gilbert's "Bab Ballads," originally published in Punch, have since been printed in a separate form; so likewise have many of the lyrical pieces from his operatic libretti, under the title of "Songs of a Savoyard." In 1897 the

"Bab Ballads" and "Songs of a Savoyard" were incorporated in one volume, with illustrations by the author. In June 1891 Mr. Gilbert was appointed a Magistrate for Middlesex. Address: Grimsdyke, Harrow Weald, Middlesex.

GILBERTSON, Edward, was born in London in 1813. The early years of his life were passed in various parts of Russia, the language of which country he speaks fluently. He left Russia in 1840, and for several years after his return to London was a frequent contributor of leading articles to the Daily News and other papers. In 1857 he became Secretary to the Ottoman Bank in London, and during the following four years paid several visits of inspection to the branches at Beyrout, Smyrna, and Constantinople. In 1861 he undertook the management of the bank in the latter city, and in 1862, as member of the Financial Commission, had the chief direction, under Edhem Pacha, of the operations for withdrawing the Caimé, for which service he received the third class of the Medjidieh. In 1863 he was one of the signatories of the concession of the Imperial Ottoman Bank; and from that date until May 1871 was Assistant Director-General of the Bank at Constantinople. He has taken an active part in negotiating all the Turkish public loans in which the Bank was interested since 1858, and has been a member of various financial commissions formed by the Ottoman Government, such as that for the improvement of the system of public accounts, for the Budget of 1867, &c. The Sultan, in recognition of his services to the imperial treasury, has conferred on him the Order of the Osmanieh of the third class. Upon his arrival in England in May 1871, he was unanimously elected a member of the committee of the bank in London.

GILBEY, Sir Walter, Bart., fifth son of the late Henry Gilbey, of Bishop Stortford, and Elizabeth, daughter of the late William Bailey, of Stansted, Essex, was born in that town on May 2, 1831. His active life commenced when, as a boy, he was articled to his cousin, an estate agent at Tring. He afterwards held a clerkship in one of the offices located at that time in the House of Lords, which he held until the Crimean War broke out, when, through Sir Benjamin Hawes, he obtained an appointment to go out to the Crimea as a civil servant of the Crown in the Pay Department. His duties carried him to the Convalescent Hospital on the Asiatic shore of the Dardanelles, where he passed nearly two years. On arriving in England the two brothers founded the firm of W. & A. Gilbey, wine merchants, of which he was, until 1893, the head. In 1893 the firm was registered under the Limited Liability Act as a private company, of which Sir Walter is the chairman. It is not, however, in the regions of commerce that Sir Walter is best known. Agriculture and horse-breeding have found in him one of their most liberal patrons. He is one of the trustees and was president in the year from June 1895 to June 1896 of the Royal Agricultural Society of England. He was largely instrumental in raising funds for the show of the Royal Agricultural Society held at Kilburn in 1879, and in 1889 he was Chairman of the Show Committee on the occasion of the Jubilee show of the Society, held at Windsor, when he received the Gold Medal from the Mansion House Committee in commemoration of his efforts in raising funds for this show. He is on the Councils of the Smithfield Club, of which he was President in 1896, and the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution. Sir Walter has issued an appeal annually since 1887, on behalf of this institution, and claims to participate in the church offertories at harvest thanksgiving services, which has resulted in an increase of the Institution's funds to the amount of over £5000 annually. He is also on the Council of the English Jersey Society, of which he was President in the year 1886. He also occupies the position of Chairman of the Royal Agricultural Hall Company; and the Horse Shows held there for a number of years past have been largely under his management. Sir Walter Gilbey is also one of the Governors, and a member of the General Purposes Committee, of the Royal Veterinary College. He has in addition taken an active part in the formation of the Shire Horse Society, of which he was President in 1883, succeeding the Earl of Powis. He is the first Commoner who has held that position, his Vice-President in that year being the Duke of Westminster, K.G. After an interval of twelve years his name was removed under the bye-laws from the list of Vice-Presidents and ex officio members of the Council, when he was again elected President of the Society (in 1898). The Hunters' Improvement Society, the Hackney Horse Society, and the London Cart Horse Parade Society may be said to have been created by him. He was President of the Hackney Society in 1889, of the Hunters' Improvement Society in 1889, and has been Chairman of the Cart Horse Parade Society since its foundation. Sir Walter Gilbey, when residing, some fifteen years ago, at Hargrave Park, Stanstead, Essex, was a successful breeder of Jersey cattle, and he has been also a very successful breeder of shire, hackney, hunter, and thoroughbred horses, at the paddocks attached to Elsenham Hall, Essex, where he resides. He twice won the Champion Prize for the best horse in all classes at the Shire Horse Society's London shows, viz., in 1883 and 1886. He has twice won the Champion Prize for hackney stallions at the London Hackney Show. He was also a successful exhibitor at the Hamburg International Show in 1883, the International Exhibition at Amsterdam in 1884, and the International Exhibition at Brussels in 1888 and 1897. After the latter show, the King of the Belgians appointed him a Chevalier of the Order of Leopold for his assistance in promoting the success of the show. He originated the Table Poultry Show in connection with the Smithfield Fat Cattle Show in the year 1894, having for its objects the encouragement of farmers and others in the production of an increased supply of table poultry, and has borne the whole expenses of the show himself. He is the author of various articles and pamphlets having for their object the encouragement and improvement of horse-breeding, notably the "Old English War Horse and the Shire Horse," identifying the present breed of shire horses with the old English war horse, a pamphlet which was very favourably reviewed by the press, and has since run to a second edition. He has also published two books on "Harness Horses" and "Young Racing Stock and How to Feed Them," and is about to publish in book form a series of articles on "Animal Painters and their Works," which have appeared in Baily's Magazine. He has also published (Vinton & Co., New Bridge St., Blackfriars) a life of George Stubbs, R.A., the famous animal painter. He was created a Baronet in 1893. He married Ellen, daughter of the late John Parish, of Bishop Stortford, in 1858. She died in November 1896. Addresses: Cambridge House, Regent's Park; and Elsenham Hall, Essex.

GILCHRIST, Percy Carlyle, F.R.S., M.I.C.E., was born at Lyme Regis, Dorsetshire, on Dec. 27, 1851, and is the eldest son of the late Alexander Gilchrist, Barrister, and Anne Burrows. He was educated at Felstead Grammar School, and at the Royal School of Mines, of which he is an Associate. He is well known as a metallurgist, and is one of the founders of the Thomas Gilchrist process for making steel. He is a Director, and was a founder, of the North-Eastern Steel Company, Ltd., of Middlesbrough. Address: Frognal Bank, Finchley Road, N.W.

GILDER, Richard Watson, LL.D., American poet, was born at Bordentown,

N.J., Feb. 8, 1844. He was educated mainly by his father, the late Rev. W. H. Gilder, a Methodist minister and writer, who established a seminary at Bordentown, and afterwards at Flushing, L.I. For a brief time, when the Confederates invaded Pennsylvania in 1863, he served in the Union army, and took part in the defence of Carlisle. He began the study of law, but the death of his father (1864) compelled him to abandon it in order to earn his own living. For a year he was a paymaster on the Camden and Amboy Railway, and then became journalist. From 1865-68 he was on the staff of the Newark (N.J.) Advertiser. In 1868 he, with Newton Crane, established the Newark Register, to the editorship of which in the following year he added that of Hours at Home, a New York monthly. The Register not proving profitable, Mr. Gilder in 1870 accepted the associate editorship of Scribner's Monthly (now the Century Magazine), then recently started, into which Hours at Home was incorporated. On the death of Dr. Holland in 1881, Mr. Gilder was made editor-in-chief of the Century, a position which he still holds. In addition to his editorial and literary labours, Mr. Gilder takes an active interest in all public matters. He is a member of many clubs in New York, and was the first President of the Fellowshipcraft. He was the first President of the Kindergarten Association, and is one of the founders of the Society of American Artists, the American Copyright League, the Authors' Club, the Free Art League, the City Club, and the Sculpture Society. He received the degree of LL.D. from Dickinson College in 1883, and of A.M. from Harvard University in 1890. His published works (all poems) are: "The New Day," 1875; "Lyrics," 1885; "The Celestial Passion," 1887; "Two Worlds, and other Poems," 1891; "The Great Remembrance, and other Poems," 1893; five books of song, 1894; and "For the Country," 1897.

GILKES, Arthur Herman, headmaster of Dulwich College, was born Nov. 2, 1849, is the son of William Gilkes, chemist, of Leominster, Herefordshire, and was educated at Shrewsbury School, 1859-68; Christ Church, Oxford, 1868-72; was first class in Moderations, 1870, and first class in Literis Humanioribus, 1872. He was Assistant-Master at Shrewsbury School, 1873-85, and was appointed Headmaster of Dulwich College, 1886. He is the author of "School Lectures on Electra and Macbeth"; "Boys and Masters"; "The Thing that hath been"; and "Kallistratus." In 1892 he married the daughter of B. M. Clarke, Clairville, Sydenham Hill. Address: The College, Dulwich.

GILL, Charles Frederick, Q.C., son of Charles Gill, of Dublin, by Kate, the second daughter of Joseph Moyers of Dublin, was born at Rathmines, Dublin, on June 10, 1851. He was educated at the Royal School, Dungannon, Ireland; and he married on Nov. 6, 1878, Ada, the youngest daughter of John Crossley Fielding, the Grange, Forest Hill. He became a student of the Middle Temple in June 1871, and was called to the Bar on April 30, 1874. He practised on the South-Eastern Circuit, and Sussex Sessions; he was appointed Junior Counsel to the Post Office in 1886, Senior Counsel 1887; Junior Counsel to the Treasury at the Central Criminal Court in January 1889, Senior Counsel in September 1892; Junior Counsel to the London Bankers' Association in 1889. He was appointed Recorder of Chichester in March 1890, and he is a member of the General Council of the Bar. He has, during the past fifteen years, been engaged in a great many of the important criminal trials which have taken place. In January 1899 he was made a Q.C. Addresses: 4 Embankment Gardens, Chelsea, S.W.; 3 Temple Gardens, E.C.

GILL, David, F.R.S., LL.D., Hon. F.R.S. Edin., Astronomer Royal at the Cape, born June 12, 1843, is the eldest son of the late David Gill, Esq., J.P., of Blairythian and Savock, Aberdeenshire, by Margaret, daughter of Gilbert Mitchell, Esq., of Savock, in the same county. He was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen. He obtained his first experience in practical astronomy in the observatory at Aberdeen, and in a private observatory which he erected in the same city. Mr. Gill was associated with Lord Lindsay in the designs and details of the large observatory founded by that nobleman at Dunecht in 1870, taking the position as chief of the staff. He thus became engaged in the organisation of the expedition to the Mauritius, fitted out by Lord Lindsay, for the observation of the transit of Venus, on which occasion advantage was taken of the circumstance of a heliometer forming part of the equipment, to determine the sun's distance by measures of the planet Juno. The details of this work were published by Lord Lindsay as the joint work of himself and Mr. Gill. In connection with the same expedition, Mr. Gill arranged and personally conducted the whole of the chronometric and telegraphic longitude determinations connecting Berlin, Malta, Alexandria, Suez, Aden, Bombay, Seychelles, Réunion, Mauritius, and Rodriguez. It was while engaged upon these operations that he undertook, at the request of the Khedive, the measurement of the first base line of the geodetic survey of Egypt. In 1877 he went to Ascension to observe the opposition of Mars. In 1881 he published, in the Memoirs of the Royal Astronomical Society, an account of a determination of the Solar Parallax from observations of Mars, at Ascension, in 1877. In the same year a difficult task, the organisation of elaborate longitude operations connecting Aden, Zanzibar, Mozambique, Delagoa Bay, Durban, Port Elizabeth, and the Cape, was performed with equal care; 1882 saw him organising observations of the minor planets Victoria and Sappho, which were carried out at the principal observatories of the world; and the same year he made the arrangements for the observation of the transit of Venus, in South Africa. In 1883 he set on foot the geodetic survey of South Africa, a scheme which he had urged upon the Government without ceasing since 1879. From 1881 to 1883 he was likewise engaged in researches on the Parallax of the fixed stars, an elaborate memoir on which subject he has published in the Memoirs of the Royal Astronomical Society. More recently (1893) this has been republished as "Heliometer Observations for Determination of Stellar Parallax made at the Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope." In 1875 he received the Medjidieh (3rd class) from the Khedive for his scientific labours in Egypt. In 1881 he was made LL.D. of Aberdeen University; in the same year he received the Valz Medal of the Paris Academy of Sciences for researches on the Solar Parallax; and in 1882 the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society of London for his Heliometric observations of Mars and the discussion of his results. In 1883 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1884 made LL.D. of Edinburgh University. Dr. Gill is a magistrate for county Aberdeen, one of the trustees of the South African Museum, and was also some time a Member of the South African University Council. Address: Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope.

GILL, Edmund, landscape painter, was born Nov. 29, 1820, in the parish of Clerkenwell. His father was by trade a japanner, but Edmund soon turned his attention to painting, and succeeded in occasionally exhibiting pictures in the Academy. After passing some years in Shropshire, Edmund Gill came, in 1841, to London, and became a student at the Academy. He has since been a regular exhibitor of landscapes, stormy coast scenes, and waterfalls, with few exceptions from Welsh and Scottish scenery, painted in the minute style that recalls the manner of the early Dutch artists.

GILLIAT, John Saunders, M.P., J.P., was born in 1829, and is a son of the late J. K. Gilliat, of Fernhill, Berks. He was educated at Harrow and at University College, Oxford, where he took a fourth class in Lit. Hum. in 1851. From 1886 to 1892 he was M.P. for Clapham and Battersea, S., and since the latter year has represented Widnes, Lancs., as a Conservative. Mr. Gilliat is a Director of the Bank of England, and in 1883 was its Governor. He is a member of John K. Gilliat & Co., American merchants and bankers. He married, in 1860, Louisa, daughter of M. Babington. Addresses: 18 Prince's Gate, S.W.; and Chorleywood Cedars, Rickmansworth.

GILLIES, The Hon. Duncan, ex-Premier of Victoria, was born in Glasgow in 1834, and went out to Victoria in 1852. He was elected a Member of the Victorian Parliament in 1859, and was Minister for Lands in 1868, and again from 1875 to 1877. He held the office of Minister for Railways from 1872 to 1875, and from 1880 to 1883; and became Premier in 1886. He was Chairman of the Federal Conference held at Melbourne in 1890; on November 5 of which year, his Ministry being defeated, he resigned, and Mr. Munro became Premier. He, on taking office, gave, in a few plain figures, the sort of damnum hæreditas to which he had succeeded. He said: "The late Treasurer took office early in 1886. He had a large income from revenue during the specially-favoured Exhibition and land-boom years. He supplemented his actual income by mortgaging our future income from the sale of valuable city and suburban lands. He borrowed £1,500,000 in February 1886; £3,000,000 in January 1887; £1,500,000 in January 1888; and £3,000,000 in January 1889. From the Victorian stock he got £130,000 in December 1888. He borrowed £4,000,000 in April 1890, and got from the Victorian stock £26,411 in June 1890. In all he received £13,156,411 of borrowed money in a little over four years. He went out of office on Nov. 5, 1890, leaving to his successor a debit balance in the revenue account of £502,282, and the ear-marked farmers' bonuses to be provided for, contracts in hand between one and a half and two millions, the trust funds reduced to £337,271, the loan funds to £394,404, and matured debentures amounting to £850,000 to meet immediately!" In 1887 he was offered and refused a K.C.M.G. In 1894 he was appointed Agent-General for Victoria. Address: Melbourne.

GILMAN, Daniel Coit, LL.D., President of the Johns Hopkins University, was born in Norwich, Conn., July 6, 1831. After graduating as Bachelor of Arts at Yale College, in 1852, he devoted two years to travel and study in Europe, and subsequently became Librarian and Professor of Physical Geography in Yale College, where he remained from 1856 to 1872. He took an active part in the organisation of the Sheffield Scientific School, the Yale School of Fine Arts, and the Winchester Observatory of Yale College. His interest in public instruction led to his appointment, in 1856, as Superintendent of the Public Schools of New Haven, and afterwards, in 1865-66, as Superintendent of the Public Schools of Connecticut. In 1872 he became President of the University of California; and in 1875 he was called as President to take part in the organisation of a university in Baltimore, to which Johns Hopkins had given a large endowment. This institution is devoted to the advancement of the higher education of young men, the encouragement of research, and the publication of learned works. Mr Gilman was one of the judges in the Centennial Exhibition of 1876, one of the original trustees of the Slater Fund for the education of Freedmen, an official visitor of the United States Military Academy in 1875, and of the United States Naval Academy in 1876 and 1888. He has been President of the American Social Science Association, an active promoter of Civil Service reform, and of charity organisation, and of training handicrafts. He became, in 1893, President of the American Oriental Society, President of the Slater trustees (above mentioned), and a trustee of the Peabody Educational Fund. During the period of organising the Johns Hopkins Hospital he was for several months its Director. He has travelled widely in the United States and Europe, and on the Mediterranean. His addresses, reports, and reviews, chiefly but not wholly pertaining to educational subjects, would make, if collected, several octavo volumes. His views upon higher education may be gathered from eighteen reports to the Johns Hopkins University, from many addresses delivered in Baltimore, from an address before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard University, 1887, and from three articles in the North American Review, "On American Education, 1776-1876"; "On the Idea of the University," 1881; "On the Idea of the College," 1882. He delivered opening addresses at Sibley College (Cornell University), Adelbert College (Cleveland), Bryn Mawr College (near Philadelphia), the Women's College (Baltimore), the Slater Museum of the Fine Arts (Norwich), the Dearborn Astronomical Observatory (near Chicago), the College for Promoting Manual Instruction (New York), and the Sage Library of Cornell University. The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws has been conferred on him by Harvard, Yale, and Columbia.

GINSBURG, Christian David, LL.D., an eminent Rabbinical scholar, was born in Warsaw in 1830, and educated there in the Rabbinic College. He was one of the original members appointed by Convocation for the revision of the English version of the Old Testament Scriptures, and is the author of "An Historical and Critical Commentary on the Song of Songs," and on "Ecclesiastes," 1857; "The Kariates, their History and Literature," 1862; "The Essenes," 1864; "The Kabbalah, its Doctrines, Development, and Literature," 1865; "The Massoretha-Massoreth of Elias Levita," in Hebrew, with Translation and Commentary, 1867; "Jacob ben Chajin's Introduction to the Rabbinic Bible," Hebrew and English, with notices, 1867; "The Moabite Stone," 1871; "A Commentary on Leviticus," 1882; "The Massorah," four imperial folio volumes, 1880-86, a work of vast erudition. Dr. Ginsburg has been a contributor also to Kitto's "Encyclopædia of Biblical Literature"; Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible"; and the "Encyclopædia Britannica." In 1897 he published "Fac-similes of the Manuscripts of the Hebrew Bible," and "Introduction to the Massoretico-critical Edition of the Hebrew Bible."

GIOLITTI, Francesco Giovanni, Italian statesman, was born at Mondovì, Oct. 27, 1842, and became a barrister at the age of eighteen, taking the degree of LL.D. four years later. In 1866 he entered the magistracy at Turin, and soon after was given a post under the Minister of Justice by Signor Vigliani, whence he passed to the Ministry of Finance under Signor Sella, where he showed rare aptitude, and was made a Councillor of State in 1882. The same year he entered Parliament as Deputy for Cuneo, and at once distinguished himself by his grip of financial questions. At that period he supported Signor Crispi (q.v.), and was appointed by him Minister of Finance, Sept. 19, 1890. In this position, without opposing the large expense necessitated by the Triple Alliance, he endeavoured to bring about economies in the Ministry of Public Works, to which he was unable to gain the adhesion of the Chamber. In consequence, he resigned on December 8, and this was one of the causes leading to the fall of the Crispi Cabinet. In May 1892, on the fall of the Marquis di Rudini, he was charged to form a Cabinet in which he held the posts of Premier and Minister of the Interior. A fortnight after, he tendered his resignation, which the King refused to accept. This rendered a dissolution necessary, and Signor Giolitti having cleverly obtained a vote of supply for six months, the elections of November, in the same year, resulted in a great triumph for the Government. At this time the scandals in connection with the Bank of Naples and the Bank of Rome led to a demand for a parliamentary inquiry, and the Premier not conducting the investigation with sufficient vigour for the Parliament, a coalition was formed against him, and he again tendered his resignation in May 1893. The King again refused to accept it. However, in November of the same year, he resigned definitely, and was succeeded by another Crispi Ministry.

GIPPS, General Sir Reginald Ramsay, K.C.B., son of Sir George Gipps, K.C.B., R.E., sometime Governor of Australia, was born in 1831, and educated at Eton. He entered the Scots Guards as Ensign in the year 1849, and was promoted Lieutenant and Captain in 1854; Major by brevet in 1856, Colonel by brevet in 1871, and Major-General in 1881. He took part in the Crimean War, being wounded at the battle of the Alma. He was also engaged in the sortie from the garrison of Sebastopol, in which the Russians were repulsed with the loss of 2000 killed and wounded, and was again severely wounded at the battle of Inkermann. He was mentioned in despatches, and was awarded the Crimean Medal with four clasps, 5th class of the Legion of Honour, 5th class Medjidie, the Turkish Medal, and the Brevet of Major. During 1881 he was a Brigadier-General in Ireland, and from 1884 to 1889 was Major-General in Command of the Home District, being shortly afterwards appointed Deputy Adjutant-General for the Militia, Yeomanry and Volunteers at Head-Quarters. He was promoted to a K.C.B. in 1888. In 1892 Sir Reginald Gipps acted as Military Secretary to the Duke of Cambridge, and was promoted full General in 1894. He married (2), in 1886, Evelyn, daughter of Colonel Feilden of Dulas Court, Hereford. Addresses: 11 Chester Street, S.W.; and Sycamore House, Farnborough, Hants.

GISSING, Algernon, novelist, born at Wakefield on Nov. 25, 1860, is the son of Thomas Walter Gissing, late of that town (originally from Suffolk), and Margaret, his wife, née Bedford, Worcester-shire. Educated at private schools, and trained originally for the law, he was admitted a solicitor early in 1882. He practised for a short time in his native town, but ultimately abandoned the legal profession and took entirely to that of letters. This brought him to London for two or three years, but love of the country impelled him to withdraw thither, and for the last few years he has spent the bulk of his time in rural seclusion. He has published several novels, all of which deal with country life, and amongst which are: "A Village Hampden," published in 1890; "A Moorland Idyl," in 1891; "Between Two Opinions," in 1893; "At Society's Expense," in 1894; "The Sport of Stars," in 1896; and "The Scholar of Bygate," in 1897. Address: Willersey, near Broadway, Worcestershire.

GISSING, George, novelist, was born at Wakefield on Nov. 22, 1857, and educated at Owens College, Manchester. His writings, which may be said to belong to the school of English realism, are "The Unclassed," 1884; "Demos," a satire on the seamy side of the Labour movement, 1886; "A Life's Morning," 1888; "Thyrza," 1887; "The Nether World," 1889; "The Emancipated," 1890; "New Grub Street," a picture of the less showy aspects of modern authorship, 1891; "Denzil Quarrier," 1892; "Born in Exile," 1892; "The Odd Women," 1893; "In the Year of Jubilee," 1894; "The Whirlpool," 1897; "Eve's Ransom," 1895; "Human Odds and Ends" (short stories), 1897; "The Town Traveller," 1897; and "Charles Dickens: a Critical Essay," 1898. Address: c/o Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen, 16 Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

GLADSTONE, Catherine, was daughter and heiress of Sir Stephen Glynne, who died when she was very young, her mother being left in charge of the estates during the minority of her son Stephen, then only eight years of age. The Rector of Hawarden, the Hon. George Neville, was Lady Glynne's brother. In those days Hawarden was but a Cheshire village, and not of good reputation, as the great coach road to Holyhead passed through it, and four times a day the mails made the road ring with their bugles and the bustle they brought with them. Mr. Neville called a meeting and remonstrated with the inhabitants on the bad character Hawarden had gained, saying that as one means of promoting a better state of things he would urge his sister, Lady Glynne, to lessen the number of local public-houses, and to cause those that were left to shut on Sundays during divine service. Thus was the work of social reform begun in the parish of Hawarden. In 1839, Catherine Glynne married the rising young statesman, W. E.

Gladstone, on the same day as her younger sister married Lord Lyttleton, and the double wedding was honoured with great rejoicings. In her long married life she was the devoted companion of her illustrious husband, aiding and assisting him in all manner of ways, and carrying out many charitable designs mutually projected. One of the first of these was the New Port Market Refuge, suggested by Mr. Gladstone, who saw how very many homeless wanderers were out of a night on his road to the House. It is designed to give temporary shelter and help to men out of work, and so enable them to get employment again. In 1866 the East End of London suffered a terrible epidemic of cholera, and Mrs. Gladstone, visiting the London Hospital, saw much of the distress caused by it, and took a great interest in the many orphans left by its ravages. She took a house at Clapton and installed them there, and wrote an appeal to the Times on their behalf. It was amply responded to, and £5000 were raised for them. Seeing the need of helping those who had struggled through so terrible an illness, she organised a Convalescent Home at Woodford, in Essex. This establishment she visited for twenty-five years, when in town, going down to the London Hospital every Monday morning to examine into the claims of would-be patients. There is another Orphanage Home under her auspices at Hawarden: it was set on foot after the American War and the Lancashire Cotton Famine. The young girls there are trained for domestic service at Notting Hill. Indeed, Mrs. Gladstone's kindly help and influence have been called forth in a thousand ways. The touching and heroic part played by her at the death-bed and funeral of her late husband is fresh in the recollection of all. That she was present at the solemn ceremony in the Abbey, on which occasion the Prince of Wales kissed her hand, is only an additional proof of her fortitude and of her life-long devotion to her hero.

GLADSTONE, Helen G., fourth daughter of the late Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, by his wife Catherine, daughter and heiress of Sir Stephen and the Hon. Lady Glynne, was born on Aug. 29, 1849, at Hawarden Castle, Flintshire. She was educated at home and at Newnham College, Cambridge, of which she eventually was appointed Vice-Principal, holding that position from October 1882 to Christmas 1896. She was during the closing period of his life constantly with her father, and acted as his secretary. After his death she managed the immense mass of correspondence which that sad event naturally entailed upon his family. Address: Hawarden Castle, Chester.

GLADSTONE, The Right Hon. Herbert John, M.A., M.P., is the youngest son of the late Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone and Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir Stephen Glynne, Bart. He was born at 12 Downing Street, London, on Jan. 7, 1854, when his illustrious father was Chancellor of the Exchequer for the first time. He was educated at Eton and at University College, Oxford, where he obtained a third-class in Classical Moderations in 1874, and a first-class in the Modern History School in 1876 (M.A. 1879). From 1877 to 1880 he was History Lecturer at Keble College. In the latter year he contested Middlesex County, and entered Parliament. He was Private Secretary to his father in 1880-81; a Lord of the Treasury, 1881-85; Financial Secretary at the War Office in 1886; Under-Secretary at the Home Office, 1892-94; and First Commissioner of Works, 1894-95. Since 1880 he has represented Leeds in Parliament. He has (April, 1899) succeeded the late Mr. Thomas Ellis as Chief Whip to the Liberal party in the House of Commons. Addresses: 4 Cleveland Square, St. James's, S.W.; and Hawarden Castle, Chester.

GLADSTONE, Professor John Hall, Ph.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., was born March 7, 1827, and educated at home. He studied chemistry at University College, London, under Professor Graham; and at Giessen, under Professor Liebig. He took the degree of Ph.D. in 1848; lectured on Chemistry at St. Thomas's Hospital from 1850 to 1852; was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1853; was a member of the Royal Commission on Lighthouses, Buoys, and Beacons, from 1859 to 1862; a member of the Gun Cotton Committee (appointed by the War Office) from 1864 to 1868; Fullerian Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Institution from 1874 to 1877; President of the Physical Society from its formation in 1874 to 1876; and President of the Chemical Society from 1877 to 1879. He was made Honorary Doctor of Science at the Centenary of Trinity College, Dublin, in 1892. Since 1846 Dr. Gladstone has been constantly engaged in scientific research, principally in chemistry, electricity, and optics, and the points of contact between these sciences. The results have been published by the Royal, Chemical, and other Societies, and by the British Association. For many years he has been engaged also in various philanthropic and religious movements; and from 1873 to 1894 he was one of the representatives of the Chelsea Division on the School Board for London. He was for three years Vice-Chairman of the Board, and for eighteen years Chairman of the Books and Apparatus Sub-Committee, where he paid special attention to methods of instruction. He is the author of: "The Biography of Michael Faraday," 1872; "Points of Supposed Collision between the Scriptures and Natural Science: a lecture delivered in connection with the Christian Evidence Society," 1872; "Miracles as Credentials of a Revelation: a lecture delivered in the new Hall of Science, Old Street, City Road, under the auspices of the Christian Evidence Society," 1873; "Spelling Reform, from an Educational Point of View," 1878; "The Chemistry of Secondary Batteries," 1883; and upwards of fifty memoirs in the Philosophical Transactions and other Proceedings of the learned societies. For these investigations, and especially for the application of optical methods to chemical research, he has lately received the Davy medal of the Royal Society. He married (1) May, daughter of the late Charles Tilt; and (2) Margaret, daughter of the late Rev. D. King and niece of Lord Kelvin. He is now a widower. Addresses: 17 Pembridge Square, W.; and Athenæum.

GLAISHER, James, F.R.S., was born in London on April 7, 1809. In 1829 he was appointed Assistant on the Principal Triangulation of the Ordnance Survey of Ireland, and in that capacity was charged with the meteorological observations on the mountains Bencorr in Galway, and the Keeper mountains near Limerick. These observations were published by Sir Henry James in 1856. From 1833 to 1836 Mr. Glaisher was Assistant at the Cambridge Observatory. In 1836 he was appointed Assistant in the Astronomical Department of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and in 1840, on the establishment of the Magnetical and Meteorological Department, he was appointed its Superintendent, and continued to hold that office until his retirement from the public service at the end of 1874. In 1841 he began the series of quarterly and annual meteorological reports which have been published by the Registrar-General in his Quarterly and Annual Reports, without any interruption from that time to the present. These meteorological reports are the result of the reduction and discussion of the observations of about sixty voluntary observers scattered over England. Mr. Glaisher was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1849, and was the founder of the Royal Meteorological Society, of which he was Secretary for nearly twenty years, and President in 1867-68. He is also a past President of the Royal Microscopical Society. On the death of the late Lord Chief-Baron Sir F. Pollock, he succeeded him as third President of the Photographic Society of Great Britain, an office which he still holds. He has also since 1880 been the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund. He was a Juror in the Class of Scientific and Philosophical Instruments at the Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862, and was the Reporter of this Class in 1851. He is the author of a "Report on the Meteorology of London in relation to the Cholera Epidemic of 1853-54," published by the Board of Health in 1855, and of a "Report on the Meteorology of India in relation to the Health of the Troops," 1863, which formed an Appendix to a Report of a Royal Commission on the Army in India. He was a Member of the Royal Commission on the Warming and Ventilation of Dwellings (1857), for which he conducted most of the experiments, and wrote the report. He is the author of more than a hundred books and papers relating to astronomy, meteorology, and the theory of numbers. In 1845 he published his "Hygrometrical Tables," which has passed through seven editions, and is regarded as a fundamental work in connection with meteorology. "A Memoir on the Radiation of Heat from various Substances," published in the Philosophical Transactions for 1848, and certain papers on the forms of snow crystals, published in 1855, are also noticeable. Between 1863 and 1866 he made twenty-nine balloon ascents for scientific purposes, in one of which (Sept. 5, 1863) he attained the greatest height yet reached (nearly seven miles). He was insensible for more than ten minutes, and Mr. Coxwell, the aeronaut, only just succeeded in opening the valve by pulling it with his teeth. The results are printed in the Reports of the British Association. The observations made were very numerous and varied, and still form a unique series. Some of the results have been published in a popular form in "Travels in the Air." Mr. Glaisher is also President of the Aeronautical Society. He translated and edited "The Atmosphere" (by Flammarion), and "The World of Comets" (by Guillemin). After his retirement from the Royal Observatory he devoted himself to the completion of the Factor Tables begun by Burckhardt in 1814, and continued by Dase in 1862-65. Burckhardt published the first three millions, and Dase the seventh, eighth, and ninth. The three intervening millions have been calculated by Mr. Glaisher, and published, with a full enumeration relating to the whole nine millions, in 3 vols., 4to, 1879-83. In 1885 he published "Hygrometric Tables," which in 1893 attained an eighth edition. On April 8, 1898, the Executive Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund presented Mr. Glaisher with a eulogistic address of congratulation, containing a survey of his arduous labours in the cause of Palestine Exploration, on his entering his 70th year. Address: The Shola, Heathfield Road, Croydon.

GLAISHER, James Whitbread Lee, Sc.D., F.R.S., is the eldest and only surviving son of James Glaisher, F.R.S., and was born at Lewisham, Kent, on Nov. 5, 1848. He was educated at St. Paul's School, 1858-67, and was senior Campden Exhibitioner in 1867. He proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge; was elected scholar in 1868; and graduated as second wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos of 1871. In that year he was elected Fellow of Trinity, and was appointed assistant-tutor at the same time; tutor in 1883; and senior tutor in 1886, retaining this position until 1893. In 1887 he received the degree of Sc.D. from his own University. He was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875; was President of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, 1882-84, of the London Mathematical Society, 1884-86, and of the Royal Astronomical Society, 1886-88. He was Moderator in 1877, and examiner for the Mathematical Tripos in 1878, and (second post only) in 1886, 1887, and 1888. Dr. Glaisher's writings, all of which are mathematical, relate principally to the subjects of "Elliptic Functions," "Definite Integrals," "Theory of Numbers," mathematical tables, and mathematical bibliography. In 1894 he edited the "Collected Mathematical Papers" of H. J. S. Smith. He has been editor of The Messenger of Mathematics since 1871, and of the Quarterly Journal of Pure and Applied Mathematics since 1878. Addresses: Trinity College, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

GLANUSK, Lord. See BAILEY, SIR JOSEPH RUSSELL.

GLASGOW AND GALLOWAY, Bishop of. See HARRISON, THE RIGHT REV. WILLIAM THOMAS.

GLAZEBROOK, The Rev. Michael George, Head-master of Clifton College, is the son of M. G. Glazebrook, a merchant, and was born on Aug. 4, 1853. He was educated at Dulwich College, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took firsts in Classical and Mathematical Moderations; in 1876, a second in the Final School of Mathematics; and in 1877 a first in Lit. Hum. In 1878 he was appointed an Assistant-Master at Harrow, in 1888 High Master of Manchester Grammar School, and in 1891 Head-master of Clifton College. He has published editions of the classics, "Lessons from the Old Testament," and has written on the subject of education. Address: School House, Clifton College.

GLAZEBROOK, Richard Tetley, M.A., F.R.S., son of N. S. Glazebrook, surgeon, of West Derby, near Liverpool, was born Sept. 18, 1854, educated at Liverpool College, and entered at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1872; became scholar and prizeman of the College, and took his degree of B.A. in 1876 as fifth wrangler; and was elected Fellow in 1877. He became Demonstrator of Physics at the Cavendish Laboratory in 1880, and from 1890 to the present date has been Assistant-Director of the Laboratory. He has also held the posts of Lecturer and Assistant-Tutor of Trinity College, and since 1895 has been Senior Bursar. This last post he resigned in 1898, on his appointment as Principal of University College, Liverpool. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1882, and has served on the Council. At present he is Chairman of the Physics and Chemistry Committee. He was President of Section A of the British Association at Nottingham, and is at present Secretary of the Electrical Standards Committee of the Association. He has acted as Examiner in the University of London, the Victoria University, and the University of Wales, as well as for the Mathematical and Natural Science Tripos at Cambridge. He was Hopkins Prizeman, 1888; is the author of various papers on Mathematical and Experimental Physics published in the Transactions of the Royal Society and elsewhere; and of a Text-book of Physical Optics; and (jointly with Mr. W. N. Shaw) a Text-book of Practical Physics. He has also written a Life of Maxwell for the Century of Science Series, and the article on Newton in the "National Dictionary of Biography." He is the author of Text-books on Physics published by the Pitt Press. His writings treat chiefly of optical and electrical questions. One of the most important contains a verification of Fresnel's theory of double refraction for a bi-axial crystal; while others deal with the absolute resistance of the B.A. Unit, and the specific resistance of mercury. In some papers published in the Philosophical Magazine, the theory of double refraction is treated from a dynamical standpoint, suggested by some work of Sir William Thomson's. He was elected a member of the Athenæum under Rule 2 in February 1898. Mr. Glazebrook married Frances Gertrude, daughter of the late T. W. Atkinson, of Leeds. Address: 7 Harvey Road, Cambridge.

GLENESEK, Lord, Sir Algernon Borthwick, Bart., son of the late Mr. P. Borthwick, formerly member for Evesham, and Margaret, daughter of John Colville, of Ewart, Northumberland, was born at Cambridge on Dec. 27, 1830. He was educated at King's College School, London, and is a Fellow of King's College, London. When a young man he went to Paris as correspondent to the Morning Post (with which his father was connected), and was present at the coup d'état in December 1851. On the death of his father in 1853 he came to London and undertook the management of the Morning Post, subsequently becoming owner of the property. Sir Algernon was the chief promoter of the Owl, a paper which appeared during the Parliamentary session of 1864, and created a great sensation on account of the bold way in which State secrets were revealed and discussed. The authorship was kept a secret for many years, and the paper itself came to an end in 1870. In 1880 Mr. Borthwick offered himself as a Conservative candidate for the borough of Evesham, formerly represented by his father; he was, however, defeated by a small majority, and did not enter Parliament till 1885, when he was returned for South Kensington. At the general elections of 1886 and 1892, Sir Algernon was returned for South Kensington, and represented that constituency until 1895. From 1886-95 he was Chairman of the London Conservative M.P.'s. He is President of the Press Fund, and also of the Newspaper Society; Vice-President of the Institute of Journalists; Vice-Grand Master and Trustee of the Primrose League. He was knighted in 1880, and created a baronet in 1887. He was raised to the peerage in 1895 by the title of Lord Glenesk, of Glenesk, in Midlothian. He married, in 1870, Alice Beatrice, youngest daughter of the late Lady Theresa Lewis, and sister of the fourth Earl of Clarendon. Addresses: 139 Piccadilly; and Heath House, Hampstead Heath, N.W.

GLENN, Robert George, LL.B., J.P., Recorder of Croydon, was born June 5, 1844, in London, and is the son of the late R. Glenn, by his wife Rosalind, granddaughter of the Rev. Charles Wesley. He was educated at Christ's Hospital, where he became a "Grecian," and obtained an open exhibition at the University. He proceeded to Magdalene College, Cambridge, where he gained an open scholarship in classics and mathematics, and was classical prizeman in his first year; and was head of the second class in the Law Tripos, 1864, and took the degree of LL.B. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1867, and has continued to practise since. He supported the petitions for incorporation presented by Croydon, Tunbridge Wells, Bournemouth, and Lowestoft; was appointed by the Charter to revise the first Burgess's Roll at Croydon, and sat there for some years as Revising Assessor. He established the Norwood Post, which was contributed to by the late Professor Palmer and other writers of eminence; was appointed first Recorder of Croydon in 1889, and is, by virtue of his office, a J.P. for the borough; is the author of "A Manual of the Laws affecting Medical Men," and is Standing Counsel to the Hospital Saturday Fund. He married, in 1871, Eleanor, daughter of Harry Hayward, Esq., of Wilsford, Wilts, and has issue two sons, Cecil Hayward and Hugh Wesley, and one daughter, Elsie Glenn. Addresses: Coombe Hill House, South Croydon, Surrey; Chambers, 1 Harcourt Buildings, Temple, E.C.

GLOUCESTER AND BRISTOL, Bishop of. See ELLICOTT, THE RIGHT REV. CHARLES JOHN.

GLOUVET, Jules de. See QUESNAY DE BEAUREPAIRE, JULES.

GLOVER, James Grey, M.D. Edin. (1854), is the sixth son of the late Alderman Glover, J.P., of South Shields, and was born in that town on May 11, 1832. He studied in the University of Edinburgh; has been on the active staff of the Lancet since 1862, first under the late Dr. James G. Wakley, and now under the joint editorship of Mr. Thomas H. Wakley and Mr. Thomas Wakley. Dr. Glover is a member of the General Medical Council of Education and Registration of the United Kingdom. He was elected to that body in November 1886, under the provisions of the Medical Act of that year, as direct representative of the medical profession in England and Wales, together with Mr. Wheelhouse, of Leeds, and Sir Walter B. Foster, M.D., M.P., of Birmingham. Since then Dr. Glover has been twice re-elected, in 1891 and 1896 respectively. In 1897 he was made a Justice of the Peace for the county of London. In politics Dr. Glover is a Liberal Unionist, and is chairman of the Liberal Unionist Association for East Islington. Dr. Glover has been a member of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund since its formation in 1873. He married, in 1869, Mary, daughter of the late William Muller, Esq., of Clapton. Address: 25 Highway Place, W.

GLYN, The Right Rev. the Hon. Edward Carr, Bishop of Peterborough, was born in London on Nov. 21, 1843, and is the eighth son of the first Lord Wolverton, and Marion, daughter of Pascoe Grenfell, M.P., of Taplow Court. He was educated at Harrow and at University College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1866; M.A., 1870. In 1868 he was ordained, became curate of Doncaster, under the late Dean Vaughan, at that time Vicar of Doncaster, and in 1872 was preferred to the vicarage of Beverley. When, in 1875, Dr. Pigou, then Vicar of Doncaster, resigned, he returned there as Vicar, and, on the appointment of the present Archbishop of York to the Bishopric of Lichfield in 1878, he became Vicar of Kensington, in which cultured centre of the metropolis he ministered with the greatest social and philanthropic success among highly appreciative and sympathetic parishioners until his appointment, in 1897, to the Bishopric of Peterborough. He was chaplain to the Archbishop of York, 1877-93, and, since 1881, has been a chaplain to the Queen, having been appointed Chaplain-in-Ordinary in 1884. He was appointed Proctor for the clergy of London in the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury in 1891. Theologically he is described as a Neo-Evangelical, although he is no partisan. He married, in 1882, Lady Mary Campbell, daughter of the Duke of Argyll. Addresses: The Palace, Peterborough; and Athenæum.

GOBLET, René, French statesman, was born at Aire-sur-la-Lys, Sept. 26, 1828. He was called to the Bar at Amiens, and under the Empire took an active part in the establishment of a Liberal newspaper. He resigned his legal appointments in 1871, in order to enter political life, and was elected to the National Assembly. He identified himself with the Republican Left, and in the important debates in which he took part soon made his mark as an orator. At the General Election of 1876 he failed in his candidature for the representation of Amiens, but in the following year was successful, and in 1879 was appointed Under-Secretary of State for Justice. At the same time he took a prominent part in the affairs of his own town, and was Mayor of Amiens, and representative for its north-east division at the Council of the Somme. In August 1881 he was re-elected for Amiens, and in M. de Freycinet's Cabinet of 1892 was appointed Minister of the Interior. He resigned with his colleagues on the Egyptian question on July 29 of the same year. After the fall of M. Ferry, M. Goblet was appointed Minister of Education and Public Worship in the cabinet of M. Brisson, in which capacity he introduced many important reforms. He resigned office with the Brisson Ministry in 1885, but was appointed to the same post under the new Prime Minister, M. de Freycinet (January 1886). In the long and important debate before the Senate on the subject of lay organisation and primary education,

M. Goblet made several striking speeches, that of February 4 in particular being pronounced so admirable that it was ordered by the Senate to be published throughout the whole of France. On the fall of the Freycinet Cabinet in December 1886, M. Goblet became Prime Minister, taking upon himself the additional offices of Minister of the Interior and, ad interim, Minister of Foreign Affairs. In February 1889 the Ministry fell, and at the general elections in the September of the same year he was beaten by M. Millevoye, the Boulangist candidate. He then came to Paris, and inscribed his name as a member of the Bar. In May 1891 he was elected to the Senate by the Department of the Seine, and joined the Extreme Left in that body. As Senator he has warmly supported several severely anti-Clerical measures, and, in conjunction with MM. Lockroy, Sarrien, and Peytral, he has drawn up a political programme of action, of which the Petite République Française is the organ.

GODDARD, Arabella. See DAVISON, MRS.

GODIN, Jules, French Minister of Public Works, was born at Versailles in 1844. He qualified for the legal profession, and, from 1870 to 1876, practised at the Paris Bar. In the latter year he was elected a Deputy, and sat till 1881. In 1883 he was appointed a Judge in the Paris Courts, but resigned his judgeship in 1891 on his election as a Senator for French India. M. Jules Godin accepted, on Sept. 17, 1898, the portfolio of Minister of Public Works in the Briesson Cabinet, the late Minister, M. Tillaye, having resigned on account of the Cabinet's decision to revise the Dreyfus trial.

GODKIN, Edwin Laurence, American journalist, was born at Moyne, County Wicklow, Ireland, Oct. 2, 1831, graduated from Queen's College, Belfast, in 1851, was correspondent of the Illustrated London News in Turkey and Russia during the Crimean War, 1854-56. In the autumn of 1856 he went to the United States, and in the ensuing winter rode on horseback through the Southern States, recording his impressions in letters to the News. He studied law in New York, and was admitted to the Bar in 1859; after practising a short time he went to Europe, but returned to New York in 1862, and was a correspondent of the Illustrated London News, and an editorial writer on the New York Times, until July 1865, when he established and became editor of the Nation, which in 1866 passed into the hands of Mr. Godkin and two other gentlemen as proprietors. In 1881

the Nation was made the weekly issue of the Evening Post, and Mr. Godkin became one of the editors and proprietors of the joint publication. He is the author of a "History of Hungary," London, 1856, and of the work on "Government" in the American Science Series, New York, 1871.

GODLEE, Rickman John, B.A. Lond., M.B., Fellow, Member of Council, and Member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, received his medical education at University College, Gower Street, and graduated at London University as B.A. in 1867, M.B. in 1872, B.S. with Gold Medal in the same year, M.S. with Gold Medal in 1873. He obtained his membership at the Royal College of Surgeons, England, in 1872, and became a Fellow in 1876. He is Fellow of University College, Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, Surgeon to Her Majesty's Household, Professor of Clinical Surgery at University College Hospital, and Surgeon to that institution and to others of importance. He is English author of an "Atlas of Human Anatomy," and has contributed papers on Empyema and other medical and surgical subjects to the leading medical journals. Address: 19 Wimpole Street, W.

GODLEY, Sir Arthur, K.C.B., Under-Secretary of State for India, was born in London on June 17, 1847, and is the only son of the late John Robert Godley, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for War. He was educated at Rugby and at Balliol College, Oxford, where his career was very distinguished. At Oxford he gained the Hertford, Ireland, and Eldon Scholarships. In 1874 he was elected a Fellow of Hertford College, and in 1876 was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. He was Private Secretary to the late Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone from 1872 to 1874, and from 1880 to 1882, and to the late Earl Granville from 1874 to 1880. From 1882-83 he was a Commissioner of Inland Revenue, and in 1883 was appointed permanent Under-Secretary of State for India. He was made C.B. in 1882, K.C.B. in 1893. He married in 1871 a daughter of Lord Northbourne. Addresses: 13 Ennismore Gardens, S.W., &c.; and Athenæum.

GODSON, Clement, M.D., was born at Barnet, Herts, June 4, 1845, and is the son of Charles Godson, F.R.C.S., England, the leading medical practitioner of that town. He was educated at King's College School, London, and entered as a medical student at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in October 1863. He passed as M.R.C.S. England, and L.M. in 1868, and was appointed in that year Resident Midwifery-Assistant to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. Having determined to take up this branch of the profession as a speciality, he entered Aberdeen University in 1871, and graduated M.B. and C.M. in 1872 and M.D. 1874, in the same year becoming a Member of the Royal College of Physicians of London. He was elected the following year, 1875, Assistant Physician-Accoucheur to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, the first appointment to that newly-made office, which he held till 1891. He was for many years Physician to the Samaritan Free Hospital for Women and Children, and Examiner in Midwifery in the University of Aberdeen. In 1870 he was appointed Surgeon-Accoucheur to the City of London Lying-in Hospital, and in 1881 Physician, which office he still holds. His presidential address on Antiseptic Midwifery delivered before the British Gynecological Society on Jan. 14, 1897, gives an account of his work there, and of the extraordinary diminution in the rate of mortality since the introduction of antiseptics, properly carried out (from 5 per cent. to 5 in 4000). In 1882 he was the first to perform successfully in Great Britain the new operation known as "Porro's," a modification of the old Cæsarian operation, and in 1884 he published a paper in the British Medical Journal on the subject, an introduction to a discussion in the section of Obstetric Medicine at the previous annual meeting of the Association, giving a table containing all the details of every operation of the kind in every country that had been performed up to that date. After another successful operation, Dr. Godson published an addition to these tables up to a later date. Another important subject on which Dr. Godson has written is "Cancer of the Cervix Uteri," Medical Press and Circular, 1891. Dr. Godson was President of the Obstetric Branch of the British Medical Association at its meeting at Belfast in 1884; was President of the British Gynecological Society in 1895, and re-elected for another year in 1896; and was Hon. President of the International Congress of Obstetrics and Gynecology at Geneva in 1896. He is the author of "Puerperal Diseases" and other articles in "Quain's Dictionary of Medicine." Addresses: 9 Grosvenor Street, London, W.; and Sharsted, Westgate-on-sea.

GODWIN, Parke, American author, was born at Paterson, New Jersey, Feb. 25, 1816. He graduated from Princeton College in 1834, studied law and was admitted to practise, but preferred literary pursuits; and from 1837 until within the last few years was connected with the New York Evening Post. He edited in 1843-44 The Pathfinder, a literary journal, and was for some years a contributor to the Democratic Review. Of Putnam's Magazine he was for a considerable time one of the principal editors, and always a contributor. Two volumes of critical and miscellaneous essays in that magazine have been collected under the titles, "Political Essays" and "Out of the Past," 1870. Besides his almost continuous journalistic labours, he has translated and edited Goethe's "Autobiography" and Zschokke's "Tales"; and compiled a "Handbook of Universal Biography," 1851; a new edit. entitled "Cyclopædia of Biography," 1878; and has written, among other works, "A Popular View of the Doctrines of Fourier," 1844; "Constructive Democracy"; and "Vala, a Mythological Tale," 1851. Many years ago he began an elaborate "History of France," of which only the first volume has been published. During the administration of President Polk he was Deputy Collector of New York, and subsequently took an active part in the formation of the Republican party. In 1883 he published a "Biography of William Cullen Bryant," in 2 vols., and superintended a new edition of his poems and prose writings in 4 vols. He married a daughter of William Cullen Bryant.

GODWIN-AUSTEN, Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Haversham, F.R.S., is the eldest son of Robert A. Godwin-Austen, F.R.S., geologist, and was born at Teignmouth on July 6, 1834. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and obtained a commission in the 24th Regiment of Foot in 1851. Going to India in the following year, he served in the second Burmese war, and was then appointed Topographical Assistant in the Trigonometrical Survey of India. He joined the Kashmir survey party in 1857, and surveyed large portions of Kashmir and Baltistan, discovering an important glacier at the head of the Shigar River. In 1862 he was engaged in surveying the higher regions of Rupshu and Lazkar in Ladakh, making many important ascents, the highest of which was that of Mata, 20,607 feet. Colonel Godwin-Austen served in 1874 with the Bhutan Field Force, and was present at the taking of the Dalingkote and Chamurchi Forts; on the occasion of the expedition against the Daffa tribe at the base of the Eastern Himalayas, he helped to survey a large portion of new country. He retired from the army in 1877, is the author of "On the Land and Fresh-Water Mollusca of India," 1882-87, and has contributed numerous papers connected with geology, and kindred subjects, to the various scientific journals. Address: Shalford Park, Guildford.

GOE, The Rt. Rev. Field Flowers, D.D., Bishop of Melbourne, son of the late Mr. Field Flowers Goe, solicitor, was born at Louth, Lincolnshire, in 1832. He was educated at King Edward's Grammar School, Louth; and, after studying law for a time, went to Oxford in 1854, graduating at Magdalen Hall (now Hertford College) in 1857. He was ordained in 1858 by the Archbishop of York to the Curacy of Christ Church, Hull, and in the same year was ordained priest, and succeeded the Rev. John King as Incumbent of that church. He held this post until 1873, when he was appointed to the Rectory of Sunderland. Four years later he was appointed by the Lord Chancellor to the Rectory of St. George's, Bloomsbury. In 1884 he was Select Preacher to the University of Cambridge. Mr. Goe took an active part in the meetings of the Church Congress and in parochial missions, and was one of the representatives of the Rural Deanery of St. George's, Bloomsbury, in the London Diocesan Conference. In Oct. 1886, he was selected by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Bishops of Durham and Manchester, and Bishop Perry, by delegation from the Melbourne Board of Electors, to fill the Bishopric of Melbourne, vacant by the translation of Dr. Moorhouse to the See of Manchester. He was consecrated in Westminster Abbey on St. Matthias' Day, 1887, by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson). He married, in 1861, Emma, daughter of William Hurst. Address: Bishop's Court, Melbourne.

GOLDIE, The Right Hon. Sir George Dashwood Taubman, K.C.M.G., D.C.L. Oxford, LL.D. Cambridge, was born at the Nunnery, Isle of Man, on May 20, 1846, and is the youngest son of Colonel Goldie-Taubman, Speaker of the House of Keys. His half-brother was the late Sir John Senhouse Goldie-Taubman, Speaker of the House of Keys, who died in November 1898. Sir George Taubman Goldie was educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and entered the army as a lieutenant in the Royal Engineers. He gained his great experience of African affairs by extensive travels in all parts of the Dark Continent. In 1884-85 he was present at the Berlin Conference as an expert in all questions concerning the Niger, and is now well known as the founder of the Niger Territories and Governor of the Royal Niger Company. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1898. He married, in 1870, Matilda, daughter of John Elliot, of Wakefield. His son, Captain Charles Francis Goldie-Taubman, died of fever in June 1898, while on service with the West African Frontier Force. Address: 11 Queen's Gate Gardens, S.W.

GOLDING-BIRD, Cuthbert Hilton, M.B., F.R.C.S., was educated at Guy's Hospital and Paris. He graduated B.A. at the University of London in 1867, and M.B. in 1873, at the same time obtaining Honours, and the Gold Medal in Forensic Medicine. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1874. Mr. Golding-Bird is a Surgeon at Guy's Hospital, and is an Examiner in Surgery at the Royal College of Surgeons, and at the University of Cambridge. He is a Fellow of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society, and a Member of the Pathological and Clinical Societies of London. He has contributed numerous articles on matters connected with surgery to the Lancet, the British Medical Journal, and other scientific journals. GOLDSMID, Major-General Sir Frederic John, C.B., K.C.S.I., only son of the late Lionel P. Goldsmid, born at Milan, Aug. 19, 1818, was educated at the private English school of the Rev. Mr. Maturin in Paris, at King's College School, and at King's College, London. He was appointed ensign in the Madras army in 1839; lieutenant in 1840; captain in 1851; brevet major in 1856; major in 1861; brevet lieutenant-colonel in 1863; lieutenant-colonel in 1865; brevet-colonel in 1870; and retired with rank of major-general from Jan. 1, 1875. From 1839 to 1856 he held several military staff appointments, general and regimental; but from 1852 to 1873 he was chiefly in civil and political employ. From 1865 to 1870 he was chief director of the Government Indo-European Telegraph; from 1870 to 1873, Boundary Commissioner and Arbitrator for the Eastern Frontiers of Persia, with the rank of major-general. He served in the Chinese campaign of 1840-42; and with the Turkish troops in the Eastern Crimea in 1855-56; was afterwards employed on several official missions, to Makran in 1856, 1863, and 1869; through Turkish Arabia and Asia Minor to Constantinople in 1864; to Eastern Persia and Baluchistan in 1866-70-71; and Western Afghanistan in 1872. He laid down the Perso-Baluch frontier in 1871; and arbitrated on the Perso-Afghan frontier in 1872. In 1877 he was appointed British Commissioner on the International Commission for Immigration of Indian Coolies in the French Island of Bourbon, and was employed on a later commission assembled in Paris on the same question in 1880.

He was English Controller of the Daira Sanieh, in Egypt, from 1880 to 1883; and in 1882 he organised a Local Intelligence Department at Alexandria, which had existence throughout the war. For this last-named service, at the close of operations, he, and those employed under him, received the thanks of the General commanding the expeditionary force, and of the War Office. In 1883 he proceeded to the Congo for H.M. the King of the Belgians; but returned at the close of the year to Europe on account of ill health. Besides contributions to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," ed. 9, and pamphlets or miscellaneous writings of a minor character, he brought out, in 1874, a volume entitled "Telegraph and Travel"; edited "Eastern Persia" in 1876; and published the "Life of Sir James Outram," 2 vols., in 1880. He was created a C.B. in 1866; K.C.S.I. in 1870; has the second-class Order of the Osmanieh, fourth-class Order of the Medjidieh, the China Medal, Turkish War Medal, Egyptian War Medal, and Khedive's Bronze Star. He is a Vice-President of the Royal Asiatic, and was for many years on the Council of the Royal Geographical Society. He is Lecturer in Colloquial Persian to the School of Modern Oriental Studies established by the Imperial Institute in 1888. He married, in 1849, a daughter of the late Lieutenant-General Sir G. M. Stuart. Address: Godfrey House, Hollingbourne, Kent.

GOLLANCZ, Israel, M.A., University Lecturer in English, Cambridge, was born in London in 1864, and is the youngest son of the Rev. S. M. Gollancz. He was educated at the City of London School, at University College, London, and at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he became a Scholar in 1883. From 1892 to 1895 he was Quain English Student and Lecturer in English at University College. He is Examiner in English to the University of London; has examined for the Cambridge Mediæval and Modern Tripos, 1895-96; was Lecturer at Cambridge under the Special Board in 1888-96; and became University Extension Lecturer in 1888. In 1891 he became known by his edition of "Pearl," an old English poem, since which date he has edited various early English works. In 1895 he brought out "The Exeter Book of Anglo-Saxon Poetry" for the Early English Text Society, and has edited volumes in the Temple Shakespeare for the Roxburghe Club, &c. Address: 54 Sidney Street, Cambridge.

GOLUCHOWSKI, Count Agenor, Austro-Hungarian Premier, was born in 1849. He entered the Austrian Foreign Office, and in 1872 was appointed Attaché at Berlin. He went to Paris as Secretary of Embassy, and married a daughter of Prince Joachim Murat. From 1887 to 1893 he was Minister at Bucharest, and on Count Kalnoky's retirement in May 1895 he succeeded him as Foreign Minister. In 1898 he succeeded Count Badeni as Premier, after the unsuccessful attempt of the latter to pacify the many discordant groups in the Chamber.

GOMEZ, Maximo, Cuban Commander-in-Chief, is a native of San Domingo, and was born in 1823. In one of the revolutions there, he entered the Spanish army as a lieutenant and rose to be captain. His family emigrated to Cuba and settled near Santiago. He joined the patriot army in 1868 and soon obtained promotion, obtaining victories at Jiguana and Holguin in 1869. In 1872 General Agramonte, then Commander-in-Chief, promoted him to the rank of Brigadier-General and sent him to Puerto Principe, where he was known as "The Terror," the enemy always flying before him. He captured Nuovitas, Santa Cruz, and Cascorra, and fought the battle of Las Guasimas. In 1874 he invaded the province of Santa Clara, defeated General Jovellar, and was made a Major-General. When the revolution died out in 1878, by the Treaty of Zanjón, he escaped to Jamaica and lived a farmer's life there and in San Domingo until the recrudescence of the rebellion in 1895 under Jose Martí. He landed in Cuba on April 14, and was made Commander-in-Chief of all the insurgent forces. His energy and ability were soon manifested, and the insurrection spread until the whole of the island was involved; he moved about incessantly, choosing suitable time and place for small attacks, and with small forces he achieved great results without fighting any pitched battles.

GOMME, G. Laurence, F.S.A., author and folklorist, was born in London in 1853, and educated at the City of London School. He founded and was at one time secretary to the Folklore Society, which has done much valuable work in the way of preserving the record of English rural customs, &c. He is now Statistical Officer to the London County Council. He has edited the Antiquary, Folklore Journal, and Archæological Review, and has published a number of valuable works on Folklore. Mrs. Gomme is also an accomplished folklore scholar, and is chiefly known for her book on "Children's Singing Games," &c. Address: 24 Dorset Square, N.W.

GOODALE, George Lincoln, M.D., LL.D., American botanist, was born at Saco, Maine, Aug. 3, 1839. He graduated at Amherst College in 1860, and received his degree of M.D. at Bowdoin College and at Harvard in 1863. He began the practice of his profession at Portland, Maine, and was soon appointed Instructor in Anatomy at the medical school located there. In 1867 he became Professor of Natural Science and Applied Chemistry in Bowdoin; and in 1868 was given the chair of Materia Medica in the Maine Medical School, and was also made a Member of the Board of Agriculture. These positions he resigned in 1872, to accept the Instructorship in Botany, and the University Lectureship on Vegetable Physiology at Harvard. In 1873 he was made Assistant-Professor of Vegetable Physiology; in 1878 Professor of Botany; in 1879 Director of the Botanic Garden; and in 1888 Fisher Professor of Natural History. He was elected a Member of the Council of Harvard College Library in 1875; and a Member of the Faculty of the Museum of Comparative Anatomy in 1881. Professor Goodale was President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1890. He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, of the National Academy of Sciences at Washington, and of many other scientific bodies. He has published numerous works on Physiological and Economic Botany, and critical reviews in the American Journal of Science, of which he is an associate editor.

GOODALL, Frederick, R.A., son of the late Mr. Edward Goodall, the eminent engraver (who died April 11, 1870), was born in London, Sept. 17, 1822. Before he was fifteen he had won the "Isis," and the large silver medal of the Society of Arts. In 1838 he went on a sketching tour through Normandy. In 1839, when but seventeen, he exhibited his first picture at the Academy—"Card Players." Subsequent visits to Normandy, Brittany, and Ireland supplied him with materials for a long series of popular pictures. One of these early pictures, "The Return from Christening," received a prize of £50 from the British Institution. Two others, "The Tired Soldier," 1842, and "The Village Holiday," 1847, are now in the National Gallery. Other important pictures drawn from old English life were "Hunt the Slipper" and "Raising the Maypole," 1851. A charming scene from Milton's "L'Allegro" was in a walk he had seldom trod. In 1853 he was elected an Associate of the Academy. Two years later he exhibited "An Episode of the Happier Days of Charles I.," representing a water party in the royal barge at Hampton Court; and after this came

"The Swing," 1855, and "Cranmer at the Traitor's Gate," 1856, engraved in line by his father. In 1857 Mr. Goodall visited Venice and Chioggia, where he made studies for "Felice Ballarin reciting Tasso," which was not completed for the following Exhibition, but exhibited in 1859. The winter of 1858 and the spring of 1859 he spent in Egypt, and several pictures have been the result of that journey. In 1863 he was elected a Royal Academician. Since then he has exhibited "The Song of the Nubian Slave," his diploma work, and "The Messenger from Sinai at the Wells of Moses," in 1864; "Rising of the Nile," in 1865; "Hagar and Ishmael," in 1866; "Mater Purissima" and "Mater Dolorosa," in 1868; "Jochabed," in 1870; "The Head of the House at Prayer," in 1872; "An Arab Improvisatore," and "Subsiding of the Nile," in 1873; "Rachel and her Flock," "Agriculture in the Valley of the Nile," "A Fruit Woman of Cairo," "A Seller of Doves," and "The Day of Palm Offering," in 1875; "An Intruder on the Bedouin's Pasture," "The Holy Mother," and "Sheep-washing near the Pyramids of Ghizeh," in 1876; "Glencoe," "The Time of Roses," and "The Water-carriers: Egypt," in 1877; "Oxhey Place, Herts," "The Daughters of Laban," and "Palm Sunday," in 1868; "Water for the Camp," "Sarah and Isaac," and "Hagar and Ishmael," in 1879; "Moving to Fresh Pastures," "Time of the Overflow, Egypt," "Hannah's Vow," "An Egyptian Pastoral," and "Holy Childhood," in 1880; "The Road to Mecca," "The Return from Mecca," "Artist and Model," and "Rebecca," in 1881; "Memphis," and "The Arrival at the Well," in 1882; "Crossing the Desert," "Returning from the Pasture, Ghizeh," "A Coffee-Shop, Cairo," "Outside the Tent," and "Water for the Camp," 1883; "A New Light in the Harem," "The Flight into Egypt," "Sword of the Faithful," 1884; "Finding of Moses," "The Holy Child," "Gordon's Last Messenger," 1885; "Misery and Mercy," 1887; "Leading the Flock," 1889; and "The Thames from Windsor Castle," 1890; "Isles of Loch Lomond," 1891; "Spinners and Weavers," 1892; "Sheep Shearers in Egypt," 1892; "The Waters of the Nile," 1893; "The Palm Grove," 1894; "Laban's Pasture," 1895. Mr. Goodall has painted many portraits, of which the following is a list: "Alice," "Thomas Tarry, Esq.," "Sir John McNeill," "Sir Henry Havelock," "Lady Grantley," "Sir Moses Montefiore," "The late Thomas Blackwell, Esq.," "The late Robt. Blackwell, Esq.," "Mrs. Phipps Eyre," "Mrs. Goodall," "Charles Randall, Esq.," "J. Barrow, Esq.," "Mrs. J. Barrow," "Mrs.

Oates," "Miss Beatrice Shaw," "The Hon. Mrs. R. Devereux," "Beatty Kingston, Esq.," "W. K. D'Arcy, Esq.," "Miss Lena D'Arcy," "Sir Oscar Clayton," "Lady Dorothy Nevill," "Miss Rica Goodall," 1871-1894; "Mary Caroline, Duchess of Sutherland," 1897; "Anderson Crichtett," "Henry A. Blyth," 1898. His recent paintings are: "The Way from the Village," 1896; "The Ploughman and Shepherdess" (now in the National Gallery), 1897; and "A Gilded Cage," "The Ancient Causeway, Egypt," and "An Egyptian Village," 1898. Address: Rosenstead, Avenue Road, N.W.

GOODHART, James Frederick, M.D., F.R.C.P., M.R.C.S., received his medical education at Guy's Hospital, and at Aberdeen University, where he graduated M.D. in 1873. In 1871 he obtained his C.M. with highest honours, and special honours for his Graduation Thesis on "Artificial Tuberculosis." This was written while Dr. Goodhart was Assistant in the Pathological Department of the Hunterian Museum at the Royal College of Surgeons (England), where he also largely contributed to the formation of the Museum Catalogue. In 1867 he obtained the Gold Medal in Clinical Medicine at Guy's Hospital. He was at one time Lecturer on Pathology at Guy's, and is now Physician there. He is consulting Physician to the Evelina Hospital, Fellow of the Royal Med. and Chir. Society, and has examined in Medicine at the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons, and delivered, at the former, the Bradshawe Lectures in 1876, his subject being "Morbid Arterial Tension." He is known for his diagnoses, and has published a number of important articles in the "Guy's Hospital Reports" (1869-90), in Allbutt's "System of Medicine," the New Sydenham Society's "Atlas of Pathology," &c. In 1891 he delivered the Harveian lectures, his subject being "Common Neuroses." His "Students' Guide to the Diseases of Children" has passed through many editions. Address: 25 Portland Place, W.

GORDON, John B., born in Upson County, Georgia, Feb. 6, 1832, was educated at the University of Georgia, and admitted to the Bar. At the beginning of the Civil War he entered the Confederate army as captain, and rose to the rank of lieutenant-general. He became prominent towards the end of the war, especially during the protracted siege of Petersburg by General Grant. He commanded at the close of the war one wing of Lee's army, and led the last assault at Appomattox Court House. The State of Georgia having been "reconstructed" as a member of the Union, he was, in 1868, the Democratic candidate for Governor, but his Republican opponent was declared to be elected. In 1873 he was chosen Senator from Georgia, and re-elected in 1879, but resigned his seat in 1880. He took a leading part in the Senate, and although a Democrat, gave a moderate support to the policy of President Hayes. On his retirement from the Senate he became interested in various railroad enterprises, but in 1886 was elected Governor of Georgia, an office to which he was re-elected in 1888. He has been succeeded therein by Governor Northen. In 1890 he was again elected United States Senator, and served till 1897.

GORDON-CUMMING, Miss Constance Frederica, sixth daughter of Sir William Gordon-Cumming, of Altyre and Gordonstoun, Morayshire, was born at Altyre, May 26, 1837. Homes so beautifully inspired in her a deep love of nature, but for the first thirty years of her life, her wanderings were entirely confined to Great Britain. Then an invitation to join a married sister in the Himalayas resulted in her penetrating to the boundaries of Chinese Tartary, and, the taste for travel being now fairly awakened, the next twelve years were spent in various Oriental countries and Pacific Isles. Miss Gordon-Cumming has published accounts of her travels in the following volumes: "In the Hebrides"; "Via Cornwall to Egypt"; "In the Himalayas"; "At Home in Fiji"; "A Lady's Cruise in a French Man-of-War"; "Fire Fountains of Hawaii"; "Granite Crags of California"; "Wanderings in China"; "Two Happy Years in Ceylon"; and, "Work for the Blind in China." The latter is now incorporated in "The Inventor of the Numeral Type for China" (published at 1s. nett by Messrs Downay & Co., London), which is an account of the life and work of the Rev. W. H. Murray, of Peking, telling how he adapted Braille's system of dots to represent numerals, and then numbered the sounds in Mandarin Chinese. Consequently books prepared in this type mark numbers only, and thirty of the simplest symbols ever devised, suffice for printing any book in Mandarin dialects, instead of a minimum of 4000 intricate Chinese characters. Books for both blind and sighted persons are printed by the blind students in the School for the Blind at Peking, and by this system the most ignorant peasants, either blind or sighted, can easily acquire the arts of reading and writing fluently in less than three months, whereas six years is the average time required by Chinamen to learn to read books in their own ideograph. There is every reason to believe that this system will prove an invaluable handmaid to common knowledge and civilisation, if not also to Christian missions, throughout the vast provinces in which Mandarin dialects are spoken. Its development is now Miss C. F. Gordon-Cumming's chief interest. Address: Crieff, Perthshire.

GORDON-LENNOX, The Right Hon. Lord Walter Charles, was born in London on July 29, 1865, and is the youngest son of the first Duke of Richmond and Gordon. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and was appointed private secretary to the Marquis of Salisbury in 1886. He represented South-West Sussex in Parliament from 1888 to 1894, and was Treasurer to the Household in 1891-92. He is married to Alice, a daughter of the late Hon. G. Grant. Address: 28 Lower Sloane Street, S.W.

GORE, The Rev. Charles, M.A., D.D. Edin., is the son of the Hon. Charles Alexander Gore, by a daughter of the 4th Earl of Bessborough, who was widow of the Earl of Kerry, and the nephew of the 4th Earl of Arran, and was born in 1853. He was formerly a Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, and is now Canon of Westminster. He was the first Principal of the Pusey Memorial Library in Oxford, and was named as one of the literary executors by the will of the late Canon Liddon. He resigned his post at the Pusey House in May 1893. He is probably best known to the world as the editor of "Lux Mundi," and author of the essay on "The Holy Spirit and Inspiration" contained in that volume, 1890. Among his other works may be mentioned, "The Church and the Ministry," 1893; the Bampton Lectures for 1891 on "The Incarnation of the Son of God," "Roman Catholic Claims," an edition of Romanes' "Thoughts on Religion," 1894; "Dissertations" and "The Creed of the Christian," 1895; and expositions of "The Sermon on the Mount," 1896, and "The Epistle to the Ephesians," 1898; all of which have run through several editions. Address: Little Cloisters, Westminster.

GORE, George, LL.D., F.R.S., was born Jan. 22, 1826, at Bristol, and attended a private school until of the age of twelve years; but has otherwise been entirely self-educated and self-trained, without the aid of scientific teachers, lectures, or lessons, or the advantage of working with scientific persons. Yet so well did he educate himself, and so important were his scientific discoveries, that he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, 1865, and received the honorary degree of LL.D. of Edinburgh University, 1877. He was Lecturer on Physics and Chemistry during many years at the Grammar School of King Edward VI., Birmingham; and is the author of "Theory and Practice of Electro-deposition," 1856; "The Art of Electro-metallurgy," 1877; "The Art of Scientific Discovery," 1878; "The Scientific Basis of National Progress and Morality," 1882; "Electro-chemistry," 1885; and "The Art of Electrolytic Separation and Refining of Metals," 1890. He has made numerous scientific discoveries in physics and chemistry, which have been published in a series of papers in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, the Proceedings of that Society, the Proceedings of the Birmingham Philosophical Society, the Philosophical Magazine, &c. A list of most of his original electrical researches is given in "The Electrician's Directory," 1892, p. 37. He is chiefly distinguished by his discoveries in, and writings upon, the subjects of Electro-chemistry, Electro-metallurgy, and Chemistry; his experimental investigations of the highly dangerous substance anhydrous hydrofluoric acid and the fluorides; his discovery of "explosive antimony," and his recent invention of the "voltaic balance," by means of which he has been enabled to discover and investigate invisible molecular changes (and measure their rates) in a number of liquids, to measure the effect of light upon chlorine-water, and to detect the influence of one part by weight of chlorine in 500,000 million parts of water. He was the first to observe the remarkable molecular change which occurs in iron at a dull red heat. His original observation of the decolorising effect of chlorine-water on crude phosphorus gave rise to the present mode of bleaching that substance, and his solution for electro-depositing nickel, made known in the year 1856, was the first to be commercially employed in electro-plating articles with nickel. Of his writings on the subject of original scientific research an article entitled "The National Importance of Scientific Research," published in the Westminster Review, April 1873, excited public attention. In the year 1891 a Civil List Pension of £150 a year was granted to him in recognition of the national value of his numerous scientific discoveries, &c. In a laborious experimental research, published in the Proceedings of the Birmingham Philosophical Society, 1891-92, vol. vii., pp. 63-139, he discovered the general truth that the amount of voltaic electromotive force per molecular weight of dissolved substances in the exciting liquid of a voltaic cell is usually increased by dilution. More recently, in the Philosophical Magazine, June 1897, was published an experimental research on "The Influence of Proximity of Substances upon Volta-electromotive Force," commenced by him in the year 1849 and continued at intervals, in which he ultimately found, during the year 1894, that a cube of lead weighing 74 cwt., when brought near the positive zinc of a voltaic cell, increased the strength of the current. Address: Institute of Scientific Research, 20 Easy Row, Birmingham.

GORGEI, General Arthur, was born at Toporecz in Upper Hungary, on Jan. 30, 1818; and having received a military education at Tuln, entered the Hungarian Body-Guard; but subsequently relinquished the profession of arms, and studied chemistry in the University of Prague. However, on the outbreak of the Hungarian revolution in 1848, his military ardour revived, and he went to the aid of Kossuth, and by his genius for war soon rose to the rank of General. His retreat through the defiles of the Carpathians was one of the most brilliant feats of the war. In 1849 he won a succession of victories, and was made Minister of War, refusing at the same time the rank of Field-Marshal. Subsequently, through refusing to co-operate with his colleagues, he caused them to be defeated in detail; and, on August 13, he was completely surrounded at Valargos, and surrendered to the Russian General, Rudiger. "His treason," wrote Kossuth, "has inflicted on me, and through me on the Republic, a death-blow." Ultimately he was pardoned; and he published in 1851 a narrative of his connection with the insurrection, under the title of "My Life and Acts in Hungary." From that time he has lived in retirement, keeping completely aloof from politics. In 1885 a proposal was made formally to reinstate him in public favour, but it was not well received in Hungary.

GORMAN, Arthur Pue, United States Senator, was born in Haward County, Maryland, March 11, 1839, and attended the public schools of his native county for a brief period. In 1852 he was appointed a page in the Senate of the United States, and continued in that service until 1866; was appointed collector of internal revenue for the Fifth District of Maryland in September 1866, and held the position until 1869; was appointed a director in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company in June 1869, and was elected to the lower house of the State Legislature in November of the same year. He was re-elected in 1871, and at the ensuing session was elected Speaker of the House. In June 1872 he was elected President of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company; was elected to the State Senate in 1875, and was re-elected in 1879, but in January 1880 was elected to the United States Senate, and took his seat March 4, 1881. He was re-elected in 1886 and in 1892, but was defeated in 1898. He was an active and prominent leader among the Democratic Senators.

GORMANSTON, Viscount Jenico William Joseph Preston, G.C.M.G., D.L., was born at Gormanston Castle, on June 1, 1837, and succeeded his father, the 13th Viscount, in 1876. He is Premier Viscount in Ireland. Joining the 60th Rifles, he served through the Indian Mutiny, 1857-58; was Chamberlain to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, the Duke of Abercorn, K.G., in 1866-68; Commissioner of National Education in Ireland, 1874-85; Governor of the Leeward Islands, 1885-87; Governor of British Guiana, 1887-93. In 1893 he was appointed to his present position as Governor of Tasmania. He was promoted to G.C.M.G. in 1897. In 1865 he was High Sheriff of Dublin, and in 1871 of County Meath. He married (1), in 1861, the Hon. Ismay Bellew, daughter of the 1st Baron Bellew, and (2), in 1878, Georgina, daughter of Peter Connellan, Esq. of Coolmore, County Kilkenny. Addresses: Government House, Hobart; and Gormanston Castle, Balbriggan, County Dublin.

GORST, The Right Hon. Sir John Eldon, Q.C., M.P., LL.D., F.R.S., late Under-Secretary of State for India, and Financial Secretary to the Treasury, is a son of the late Mr. Edward Chadcock Lowndes (the last name assumed instead of Gorst), of Preston, Lancashire, and of Elizabeth, daughter of John D. Nesham, Houghton le Spring, Durham, and was born in May 1835. He was educated at Preston Grammar School and St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was sometime a Fellow, and was third Wrangler in 1857. From 1861-63 he was Civil Commissioner of Waikato, New Zealand, and in 1865 was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, becoming a Q.C. in 1875. In 1866 he entered Parliament as Conservative member for Cambridge, but was defeated in 1868. In 1875 he was returned for Chatham, which he continued to represent till 1892, when he was elected member for the University of Cambridge. Mr. Gorst was from 1880 to 1885 one of the small group of members known as the Fourth Party. In Lord Salisbury's first administration (1885) he was Solicitor-General; and in his second Government he held the post of Under-Secretary for India, and was created a Privy Councillor in 1890. Sir John Gorst is greatly interested in all questions concerning education. He was one of the English delegates at the Berlin Labour Conference (1890), and in 1891 he was conspicuous for his advanced attitude with regard to the Labour Question. After a visit to Ireland, he was appointed Financial Secretary to the Treasury in November 1891, and held that office until the following July. In 1892 he was elected Conservative member for Cambridge University, which he now represents in Parliament. He married Mary, daughter of Rev. Lorenzo Moore, Christ Church, New Zealand. Addresses: Queen Anne's Mansions, S.W.; and Howes Close, Cambridge.

GOSCHEN, The Right Hon. George Joachim, M.P., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., son of the late William Henry Goschen, a London merchant, of German extraction, was born Aug. 10, 1831. He received his education at Rugby, under Drs. Tait and Goulburn, and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A., taking a first-class in Lit. Hum. in 1853. Soon after he became a merchant in partnership with Messrs. Fröhling and Goschen, of Austinfrs, and a Director of the Bank of England; but he retired from the partnership on taking office in the Russell-Gladstone ministry. He was returned in the Liberal interest for the City of London in May 1863, on the death of Mr. W. Wood; and he took an active part in the movement for throwing open the universities to dissenters, and the abolition of religious tests. Mr. Goschen, who was re-elected for the City of London, at the head of the poll, at the general election in July 1865, was made Vice-President of the Board of Trade, Nov. 20, 1865, when he was sworn of the Privy Council, and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and a Cabinet Minister, Jan. 26, 1866, retiring with the Russell ministry in June of that year. On the accession of Mr. Gladstone to power, in December 1868, he was appointed President of the Poor-Law Board, which office he held to March 1871, when he succeeded Mr. Childers as First Lord of the Admiralty. He went out of office with his party in February 1874. At the general election which was held in that year he was the only Liberal candidate returned for the City. In 1876 Mr. Goschen and M. Joubert were chosen as delegates of the British and French holders of the Egyptian debts to concert measures for the conversion of the debts. They proceeded to Egypt, where they were received by the Khedive (August 14), and eventually an agreement was signed at Cairo (November 18) for a reorganisation of the finances and public debt of Egypt. On July 17, 1878, Mr. Goschen issued an address to the Liberal electors of the City of London, declining to come forward again at the next general election, on the ground that his votes on the County Franchise question had not been in accord with the views generally entertained by the party. Mr. Goschen attended the International Monetary Conference held at the Foreign Office, Paris, in August 1878. In May 1880, immediately after Mr. Gladstone's accession to power, Mr. Goschen consented to undertake the special duties of Ambassador Extraordinary at Constantinople, in the place of Sir Henry Layard, who retired, nominally on leave of absence, but in fact finally. Before proceeding to Constantinople Mr. Goschen visited the most important political centres in Europe, and this was the first step towards the formation of a European concert for the execution of the unperformed parts of the Treaty of Berlin. In 1881 the ambassadors of the Great Powers in the Conference of Constantinople, after long and patient negotiations, joined in a note to the Greek Government recommending the acceptance of the utmost that Turkey could be brought to yield. The new frontier line left the greater part of Epirus, with Janina and Metzovo, to Turkey, giving Greece possession of almost all Thessaly, and the command of the Gulf of Arta. The Cabinet of Athens was forced, under pressure, to agree to this frontier line, which deprived Greece of nearly one-third of the territory promised to her at Berlin.* It was admitted by all the Powers that the assent of Turkey to these terms was obtained chiefly through the persistence and firmness of Mr. Goschen. His mission came to an end in April 1881. Mr. Goschen was appointed an Ecclesiastical Commissioner for England in November 1882. He has written largely on financial questions, and his treatise on "The Theory of the Foreign Exchanges," 5th edit., 1864, has been translated into French by M. Léon Say. He has published various speeches in pamphlet form, amongst them his "Speech on Oxford University Tests Abolition Bill," 1865, and his "Speech on Bankruptcy Legislation and other Commercial Subjects," 1868, and "Addresses on Education and Economic Subjects," 1885. At the general election of 1885, Mr. Goschen, who had sat for Ripon since his retirement from the representation of the City of London in 1880, was elected, after a severe contest (in which he was opposed by a Radical, but obtained a great majority), to represent the Eastern Division of Edinburgh. In 1886, however, he was defeated by a large Gladstone-Liberal majority. From 1887 to the present time he has represented the St. George's Hanover Square Division. Mr. Goschen had taken a foremost place in the campaign against the Home Rule Bill. On the resignation of Lord Randolph Churchill in December 1886, and when Lord Salisbury had failed to induce Lord Hartington to join his Government, Mr. Goschen was prevailed upon to accept the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, though he declined the leadership of the House. Mr. Goschen's scheme for the reduction of the interest on the National Debt was cordially accepted by all parties, and successfully brought to a conclusion in July 1889. Mr. Gladstone, however, vigorously attacked his proposals with reference to the Death Duties. In 1895 he was appointed first Lord of the Admiralty. He was elected Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen in 1874 and 1888, and of the University of Edinburgh in 1890. He married, in 1857, Lucy, a daughter of John Dalley. This lady died in February 1898. Addresses: Admiralty House, Whitehall; Seacox Heath, Hawkhurst, Kent; and Athenæum.

GOSCHEN, William Edward, Minister at Belgrade, was born in 1849, and entered the Diplomatic Service in 1869. Having served at Madrid, Buenos Ayres, and Paris, he was promoted to a second Secretaryship at Rio de Janeiro in 1877. In 1880 he was attached to the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen's embassy to Constantinople, where he became Secretary in 1881. In 1885 he went to Peking, to Copenhagen in 1888, and to Lisbon in 1890. In 1893 he was promoted to be Secretary of Embassy at Washington, and was transferred to St. Petersburg in 1894. There he was granted the rank of Minister Plenipotentiary during the absence of the Ambassador in 1897. In July 1898 he was promoted from St. Petersburg to succeed Sir Edmund Fane at Belgrade.

GOSFORD, Earl of, Sir Archibald Brabazon Sparrow Acheson, Bart., K.P., was born on Aug. 19, 1841, and is the son of the 3rd Earl and the only daughter of the 10th Earl of Meath. He succeeded his father in 1864. He was educated at Harrow. He is married to a daughter of the 7th Duke of Manchester. Addresses: 22 Mansfield Street, W.; and Gosford Castle, co. Armagh.

GOSLING, Audley Charles, Minister in Chili, was born in 1836, and having passed through Sandhurst, served for a short time, 1855-57, in the army, but entered the Diplomatic Service in 1859. He was promoted to be second Secretary in 1870, and in 1873 went to Athens, afterwards to Madrid, Copenhagen, and Stuttgart. He became Consul-General to Hungary in 1879, Secretary at Madrid in 1885, and at St. Petersburg in 1888. He was promoted to be Minister to the Central American Republic in 1890, a post which he exchanged for his present post in 1897.

GOSSE, Edmund William, M.A., only son of the late distinguished zoologist, Philip Henry Gosse, F.R.S., was born in London, Sept. 21, 1849, and educated in Devonshire. He was appointed Assistant-Librarian at the British Museum in 1867, but has held since 1875 the post of Translator to the Board of Trade. In 1872 and 1874 he visited Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, for the purpose of studying the literature of these countries; and in 1877 he visited Holland with a similar purpose. His poetical writings consist of "Madrigals, Songs, and Sonnets" (in conjunction with a friend), 1870; "On Viol and Flute," lyrical poems, 1873; "King Erik," a tragedy, 1876; "The Unknown Lover," a drama, 1878; "New Poems," 1879; "Firdausi in Exile, and other Poems," 1886; and "In Russet and Silver," 1894. Mr. Gosse wrote "The Masque of Painters," which was performed by the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, on May 19, 1885, and on subsequent evenings, with great success. A collected edition of Mr. Gosse's poems, in three volumes, appeared in 1897. His chief prose writings are a volume of "Northern Studies," 1879, consisting of critical essays in Scandinavian, Dutch, and German literature; a life of Gray, 1882 (English Men of Letters Series); about thirty essays contributed to Ward's "English Poets," in 1880-81; "Seventeenth Century Studies, a contribution to the history of English Poetry," 1883; "From Shakespeare to Pope, an inquiry into the causes of the rise of classical poetry in England," 1885; a "Life of Philip Henry Gosse, the naturalist," 1890; "Gossip in a Library," 1891; "The Secret of Narcisse," a romance, 1892; "Questions at Issue," a volume of essays, 1893; and "The Jacobean Poets," 1894; "Critical Kit-Kats," 1896; and "A Short History of English Literature," 1897. He has also edited a volume of "English Odes," 1881; the works of Thomas Lodge, in 4 vols., 1882; a complete edition of the works of Gray, in 4 vols., 1884; the writings of Beddoes, in verse (1890) and prose (1891); and a series of translated foreign novels, "The International Library." He introduced Ibsen to the English public in 1872, and he has published the authorised translations of "Hedda Gabler," 1891, and (with Mr. Archer) of the "Master Builder," 1893. In the spring of 1884, Mr. Gosse was elected Clark Lecturer in English Literature at Trinity College, Cambridge, in the place of Mr. Leslie Stephen, who retired; and in 1885 he received the honorary degree of M.A. from the University of Cambridge. He was re-elected Clark Lecturer in 1886, and retired in 1889. In the winter of 1884–85, Mr. Gosse, who had been invited to deliver the Lowell Lectures that season, visited America, and lectured not only in Boston, but before Harvard and Yale Colleges, before the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, and in New York. He is now engaged in editing a series of Short Histories of Literature, of which Ancient Greek, French, English, Italian, and Spanish have already appeared. In 1875 Mr. Gosse married Ellen, daughter of the late Dr. G. R. Epps, a lady who is well known as an artist, and as a contributor to the principal exhibitions. Address: 29 Delamere Terrace, W.

GOT, François Jules Edmond, an eminent French comedian, born at Lignerolles, Orne, Oct. 1, 1822, received his education at the Collège Charlemagne, and after being employed for a short time at the Prefecture of the Seine, entered M. Provost's class at the Conservatoire, where, in 1842, he carried off the second, and in 1843 the first, prize for comedy. After a year's compulsory service in the army, he made his first bow to a Parisian audience in 1844 at the Comédie Française, of which Society he became a member in 1850. M. Got's reputation steadily increased, and he is now most deservedly regarded as one of the greatest actors on the French stage. He excels in the representation of the leading comic parts in the old classical dramas, and has created scores of original characters in modern pieces. M. Got's name has been frequently before the public in connection with the internal dissensions of the Comédie Française. When M. Got and his colleagues of the Théâtre Français visited London in 1871, they were entertained at a public dinner at the Crystal Palace. On Aug. 4, 1881, M. Turquet, the Under-Secretary of State for Fine Arts, publicly conferred the Cross of the Legion of Honour on M. Got at the Conservatoire. It was, however, as Professor of the Conservatoire and Maître de Conférences at the Ecole Normale Supérieure, that M. Got received this high recompense for his services to art. M. Got again visited London with his colleagues of the French Theatre in the summer of 1893, and appeared in "Les Plaideurs" and other parts. On Jan. 12, 1895, he married Mdlle. Tréville, one of his pupils, and soon after retired from the stage, and lives at 11 Rue Hameau, Boullainvilliers, Paris.

GOTCH, Francis, M.A. Oxon, B.A. and B.Sc. Lond., M.R.C.S. and F.R.S., born at Bristol in 1853, is the son of the late Rev. F. W. Gotch, LL.D., one of the Old Testament Revision Committee. Receiving his early education at Amersham Hall School, he proceeded to University College, London, being appointed Gilchrist Scholar at University Hall in 1871. In 1873 he became a Graduate in Arts of the University of London, and was appointed University Scholar in Logic and Moral Philosophy. Having turned to the study of science, he graduated in that subject in 1875, and subsequently became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1881. From this time he devoted himself to Physiology, and studied in Berlin in the laboratory of Du Bois-Raymond. In 1882 he was elected Sharpey Physiological Scholar in the laboratory of University College, London, under Professor Burdon-Sanderson. In 1883 he proceeded to Oxford as Demonstrator in the Physiological Laboratory of the University, receiving the honorary degree of Master of Arts in 1885. He was appointed Holt Professor of Physiology in University College, Liverpool, in 1891, and was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in the following year. In 1895 he was elected Waynflete Professor of Physiology at the University of Oxford, and a Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Professor Gotch's researches have been chiefly directed to the elucidation of fundamental questions as to the functions of various excitable structures, muscles, nerves, electrical organs, spinal cord, and brain. In conjunction with Professor Victor Horsley he carried out a prolonged experimental investigation into the functions of the central nervous system by the use of a new method, that of observing and contrasting the electrical changes in nerve-fibres and nerve-centres when these are in a state of activity and repose respectively. These researches were made the subject of the Croonian Lecture at the Royal Society in 1891. Besides several communications to various physiological and medical journals, Professor Gotch has published the following papers: "Changes in the Mammalian Spinal Cord, following Excitation of the Cortex Cerebri" (Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1888), in conjunction with Prof. Horsley; "The Electrical Organ of the Skate" (Journal of Physiology, Part II., 1889), in conjunction with Prof. Sanderson; "Communication and Demonstration to the Physiological Congress at Bale" (Centralblatt für Physiologie, 1889);

"The Electrical Relations of the Brain and Spinal Cord" (Proceedings of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, 1890); "The Mammalian Nervous System" (Croonian Lecture, Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1891, Phil. Trans., 1891), in conjunction with Prof. Horsley; and "Temperature and Excitability," communicated to the Physiological Congress at Liège, 1892, and published in the Journal of Physiology, 1896. Other recent publications are: "The Electromotive Properties of Malapterurus" (Phil. Trans., 1896); "The Electrical Changes in Nerve" (Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1898), &c. Address: The Lawn, Banbury Road, Oxford.

GOTT, The Right Rev. John, D.D., Bishop of Truro, was born on Christmas Day 1830, and is the youngest son of William Gott, Wyther Grange, Yorkshire, and Margaret Ewart, Mosley Hall, Liverpool. He was educated at Winchester and Brasenose College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1853, and in 1873, when he became Vicar of Leeds, was made D.D. Ordained in 1857, he was for four years Curate at St. Nicholas, Great Yarmouth, and afterwards held the incumbency of the church of St. Andrew in the same town. He was appointed Perpetual Curate of Bramley, Leeds, in 1866, and became Vicar of Leeds in 1873 in succession to Dr. Woodford, who was raised to the See of Ely. He was Vicar and Rural Dean of Leeds until 1886, when, on Lord Alwyne Compton becoming Bishop of Ely, he succeeded his lordship as Dean of Worcester. The vicarage of Leeds has long been a stepping-stone to high preferment in the Church, having been held at different times by Dean Hook and Drs. Atlay and Jayne, in addition to the foregoing. Dr. Gott is a High Churchman, and is the author of "The Parish Priest of the Town," 1877; "The Ideals of a Parish," 1897. He became Bishop of Truro in June 1891. He married in 1858 Harriet, daughter of Whitaker Maitland, Loughton Hall, Essex. Addresses: Trenytown, Par Station, Cornwall; and Athenæum.

GOUGH, General Sir Charles John Stanley, G.C.B., B.C., brother of Sir Hugh Gough, entered the army (Bengal Cavalry) on March 20, 1848; Lieutenant, Sept. 1, 1849; Captain, June 9, 1857; Major, July 20, 1858; Lieut.-Colonel, Jan. 24, 1867; Colonel, Nov. 28, 1875; Major-General, July 2, 1885; Lieut.-General, June 5, 1889. Sir Charles Gough served throughout the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, including the action of Ramnugur, passage of the Chenab, and battles of Sadoolapore, Chillianwalla, and Gojjerat (Medal with two clasps); served in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857-58; was with the Guide Corps at the siege and capture of Delhi; was Commander of the Guide Cavalry in the affairs at Kurkonda on the 15th, and Rhotuck on the 17th and 18th of August 1857, engaged in the cavalry affair in rear of the camp on Sept. 11. He served with Brigadier Showers' column in the Delhi and Jhujur districts; was engaged in the action of Narnole on Nov. 16; served with Hodson's Horse in the actions of Gungeeree, Putteallee, Mynpoorie, and Shumshabad (wounded); commanded a squadron of Hodson's Horse in the action of Meangunge; was present throughout the siege and capture of Lucknow (Medal with two clasps, Victoria Cross, and Brevet of Major). He was awarded the B.C., 1st, For gallantry in an affair of Khurkoddah, near Rhotuck, on Aug. 15, 1857, in which he saved his brother, who was wounded, and killed two of the enemy; 2nd, For gallantry on Aug. 18, when he led a troop of the Guide Cavalry in a charge, and cut down two of the enemy's sowars, with one of whom he had a desperate hand-to-hand combat; 3rd, For gallantry, on Jan. 27, 1858, at Shumshabad, where in a charge he attacked one of the enemy's leaders, and pierced him with his sword, which was carried out of his hand in the mêlée; he defended himself with his revolver, and shot two of the enemy; 4th, For gallantry, on Feb. 23, 1858, at Meangunge, where he came to the assistance of Brevet-Major O. H. St. George Anson, and killed his opponent, immediately afterwards cutting down another of the enemy in the same gallant manner. Sir Charles Gough served with the Bhootan Expedition in 1864-65, and was present at the capture of Dalingkote and Bala stockades (mentioned in Despatches). He served in command of the Cavalry Brigade in Afghanistan, 1878-80; was present at the capture of Ali Musjid (Despatches); commanded the force at the action of Futtehabad on April 2, 1879, completely defeating the Afghans (Despatches); and in December 1879 he commanded the force at the defence of the Jagdalak Pass and subsequent advance on and relief of Kabul (Despatches). He commanded a brigade at the action of Saidabad (Despatches), and was subsequently made K.C.B. (Medal and two clasps). On the withdrawal of the army from Afghanistan, he was selected to command the force left to hold the Khaibar Pass. Subsequently he served in command of the Hyderabad contingent from 1881 to 1885, and of the Oudh Division, Bengal army, from 1885 to 1890. He was created G.C.B. in 1895. He published in 1897 a work on "The Sikhs and the Sikh War." He married Harriette, daughter of the late

J. W. Power, M.P., in 1859. Address: Innislonagh, Clonmel, Ireland.

GOUGH, General Sir Hugh Henry, G.C.B., U.C., was born Nov. 14, 1833, and is the third son of George Gough, of Rathronan House, Clonmel. He was educated by a private tutor, and entered the Bengal army on Sept. 4, 1853; Lieutenant, Aug. 9, 1855; Captain, Jan. 4, 1861; Brevet Major, Jan. 5, 1861; Major, Sept. 4, 1873; Brevet Lieut.-Col., March 30, 1869; Lieut.-Col., Sept. 4, 1879; Brevet Col., Oct. 1, 1877; Major-General, Feb. 6, 1887. Sir Hugh Gough served as Adjutant of Hodson's Horse throughout the siege of Delhi (wounded); commanding a wing of the regiment in the actions of Bolundshur, Allyghur, and Agra, relief of Lucknow by Lord Clyde, battle of Cawnpore, affairs at Seraihat and Khodagunge, siege and capture of Lucknow (severely wounded and two horses killed), and action of Ranode (mentioned in Despatches on several occasions for "distinguished bravery," and thanked by the Governor-General of India, Brevet Major, Victoria Cross, and Medal with three clasps). He received the U.C. for the following circumstances: "Lieutenant Gough, when in command of a party of Hodson's Horse near Alumbagh on Nov. 12, 1857, particularly distinguished himself by his forward bearing in charging across a swamp and capturing two guns, although they were defended by a vastly superior body of the enemy. On this occasion he had his horse wounded in two places, and his turban cut through by a sword, whilst engaged in a combat with three sepoys. Lieutenant Gough particularly distinguished himself also near Jellalabad, Lucknow, on Feb. 25, 1858, by showing a brilliant example to his regiment, when ordered to charge the enemy's guns; and, by his gallant and forward conduct he enabled his men to effect their object. On this occasion he engaged himself in a series of single combats, until at last he was disabled by a musket-ball through the leg while charging two sepoys with fixed bayonets. Lieutenant Gough on this day had two horses killed under him, a shot through his helmet, and another through his scabbard, besides being severely wounded." He commanded the 12th Bengal Cavalry in the Abyssinian campaign in 1868, and was present at the capture of Magdala (mentioned in Despatches, C.B., and Medal); served throughout the Afghan War of 1878-80; commanded the cavalry of the Koorum Force in 1878-79; and was present at the capture of the Peiwar Kotal, in the pursuit of the Afghans over the Shutargardan, in the affair of the Maugior Pass, and during the operations in Khost. He served with the Kabul

Field Force in 1879-80 as Brigadier-General of Communications, and was present in the engagement at Charasiab, and in the various operations around Kabul in December 1879 (wounded); accompanied Sir Frederick Roberts in the march to Kandahar in command of the Cavalry Brigade, and was present at the reconnaissance of August 31 in command of the troops engaged, and in the cavalry pursuit of the following day (frequently mentioned in Despatches, K.C.B., Medal with four clasps, and bronze decoration). He became a Lieutenant-General in 1891, and was on the staff of the Bengal army from 1887 to March 1892. He was appointed Keeper of the Crown Jewels in the Tower of London in 1898. In 1897 he published "Old Memories." Address: Tower of London.

GOULD, Francis Carruthers, assistant-editor of the Westminster Gazette, was born at Barnstaple on Dec. 2, 1844, and is the second son of R. D. Gould, architect. He was educated privately, and was for many years on the London Stock Exchange, which he was glad eventually to forsake. He is famous as a caricaturist, and for many years the Christmas number of Truth was illustrated by him. He was at one time on the Pall Mall Gazette, and, since its foundation, has drawn the notable cartoons in the Westminster. He is also caricaturist to the Sketch. Address: 3 Endsleigh Street, Tavistock Square, W.C.

GOULD, Nathaniel, novelist and journalist, was born on Dec. 21, 1857, at Manchester. He is the son of the late Nathaniel Gould, of Manchester and Pilsbury Grange, Derbyshire, and of Mary, daughter of the late William Wright, of Bradbourn, Derbyshire. He was educated at Strathmore House School, Southport. His publications are: "The Double Event," 1891; "Running it Off" and "Jockey Jack," 1892; "Harry Dale's Jockey," "Banker and Broker," 1893; "Thrown Away," "Stuck Up," 1894; "Only a Commoner," "The Miner's Cup," 1895; "The Maggie Jacket," "Who Did It?" "The Doctor's Double," "On and Off the Turf in Australia," "Town and Bush, 1896; "Horse or Blacksmith," "Not so Bad after all," "Seeing him Through," "A Lad of Mettle," 1897; "A Gentleman Rider," "The Famous Match," "War at Last," "Golden Ruin," 1898. He has travelled extensively in different parts of the world and in Australasia, where he held several important engagements on the press. Address: Wotton Grange, Bedford, Middlesex.

GOURAUD, Captain, French officer, was born in 1865, and became conspicuous during the "Marchand" incident. He left the Military School of St. Cyr in 1890. From 1894 to 1897 he served in the French Soudan, seeing considerable active service with the natives. After a short rest, he returned to Gourounsi in November of the same year (1897), and, early in 1898, was twice wounded in conflicts with the Soudanese. On the conclusion of the Anglo-French Convention for the settlement of the Niger region, Captain Gouraud was appointed Resident at his old station, Gourounsi. While acting in this official capacity, he captured Samory, an act which has brought him some distinction.

GOURKO, Count Joseph Vassil-yévich, one of the most distinguished generals of the Russo-Turkish war, is of Lithuanian origin, and was born in 1828, and educated in the imperial "Corps de Pages." He was created ensign of the regiment of Hussars of the Imperial Body Guard in 1846. In 1857 he was already captain, and commanded a squadron in the same regiment, and was made in 1860 adjutant to the Emperor. In 1861 he received his colonel's commission. In 1866 Gourko was appointed commander of the 4th Hussar regiment of Maripol. In 1867 the Emperor named him Major-General, and ordered him to be of his suite. Then he commanded the Grenadier regiment of the Imperial Guards, and in 1873 the first brigade of the second division of the Cavallerie de la Garde. We may add that Count Gourko took part, although in inferior rank, in the Crimean war, being stationed at Belbeck. His heroic deeds are almost too well known to be minutely recorded; we will mention only some of the principal feats of this valiant general, who commanded the vanguard of the Imperial army. On June 25, 1877, with a detachment of cavalry and a single battery, he attacked and took by assault the strong and powerfully occupied town of Tyrnovo (Tirnovo). On July 5 he occupied Kazanlyk and the village of Shipka, and after occupying and defending the passes of Shipka, Hanko, and others, he, together with General Radetzky, traversed the Balkans in the middle of the winter snow-storms and frosts, with but few losses, and led the victorious Russian troops into the fertile valleys beyond, thus occupying Sofia, Philippopolis, and Adrianople. The hazardous and almost impossible feat of traversing the Balkans in the middle of winter will for ever remain one of the greatest deeds performed by the soldiers of Russia. Count Gourko has been elevated to the rank of Adjutant-General, is a Knight of St. George of the second class, and of several other high orders. He was made a Count in April 1878, and was appointed Governor-

General of St. Petersburg (1879) after the attempts on Alexander's life, and then, after a period of enforced retirement, Governor-General of Poland. His rule in Poland has been strongly Muscovite in tendency. In 1884 the Czar visited Poland, and General Gourko took extraordinary precautions for his safety. In 1891, during the Russian famine, he made an optimistic report on the food supply in Poland. Events proved him to have been mistaken, and his position was in danger, but he exculpated himself, and in April 1892 returned to Warsaw as Commander-in-Chief of all troops in Poland and Lithuania. Count Gourko is married to a French lady.

GOURLEY, Sir Edward Temperley, M.P., is the eldest son of the late T. Y. Gourley, shipowner, of Sunderland, and was born at the latter place on June 8, 1828. He was educated at a private school in Scotland, and at Sunderland. He is a Sunderland merchant and shipowner, and has represented that borough in the House of Commons, as a Liberal member, since 1868. He is a Justice of the Peace and an Alderman for Sunderland, and has been thrice its Mayor. He was for ten years Hon. Secretary of the Sunday School Union, and was, for twenty years, Commandant of the Sunderland Rifles, a corps of which he is now Hon. Colonel. He received the honour of knighthood in 1895. Address: Roker-on-Sea, Sunderland.

GOW, Andrew Carrick, R.A., was born in London, June 15, 1848. He became a student of Heatherley's School of Art, Newman Street. In 1868 he was elected a Member of the Institute (now Royal Institute), and since 1870 has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy. Amongst his chief works may be mentioned "A Suspicious Guest," 1870; "Introduction of Lady Mary Wortley to the Kit Kat Club," 1873; "Sophy Baddeley at the Pantheon," 1875; "The Relief of Leyden," 1876, now in the National Gallery of Sydney; "The Tumult in the House of Commons in 1640," 1877; "No Surrender," 1878, now in the National Gallery at Melbourne; "The Last Days of Edward VI.," 1880; "Bothwell," 1884; "Absolution for the Lost at Sea," 1885; "Cromwell at Dunbar," 1886, purchased by the Trustees of the Chantrey Fund; "The Garrison Marching out with the Honours of War," 1887; "A Lost Cause," Flight of King James II. after the battle of the Boyne, now in the Tate collection, 1888; "Charles I. at Hull"; "After Waterloo: Sauve qui peut," 1890; "Queen Mary's Farewell to Scotland," 1892; "The Flag Maidens of Taunton"; "God save King James"; "On the Sands at Boulogne"; "Wellington crossing the Bidas-soa," 1896; "On the Way to Exile," 1897, Napoleon's arrival at Rochefort, purchased by the Emperor of Russia; "A Gentleman of the Road," and "The Signal," 1898. Mr. Gow's works have been mostly historical. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1881, and R.A. in 1891. Addresses: 15 Grove End Road, N.W.; and Athenæum.

GOWER, Lord Ronald Sutherland Gower, F.S.A., is the youngest son of the 2nd Duke of Sutherland, and uncle of the present Duke of Sutherland, and was educated at home, at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He is known as a sculptor and a writer, and is first President of the Society of Miniaturists. Amongst his works of art there may be mentioned: statues of Marie Antoinette on her way to Execution; "The Old Guard at Waterloo"; and the Shakespeare Monument at Stratford-on-Avon. He is the author of: "My Reminiscences"; "Life of Joan of Arc"; "Rupert of the Rhine"; "Stafford House Letters"; "Bric-a-Brac"; "Last Days of Marie Antoinette"; "De Brosse's Letters from Italy." Lord Ronald Gower was formerly member of Parliament for the county of Sutherland. He has dropped the name of Leveson, his father having first assumed that of Sutherland in 1841. Address: 27 Trebovir Road, S.W.

GOWERS, Sir William Richard, K.B., M.D., F.R.S., son of William Gowers and Ann Venables, was born in London in 1845, and educated chiefly at Christ Church College School, Oxford. He commenced the study of medicine in 1861 as pupil to a surgeon at Coggeshall, Essex, and continued it at University College and Hospital, graduating at the University of London in 1869 and 1870. In 1873 he was appointed Assistant-Physician to University College Hospital, and to the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, and subsequently became Physician to each institution, and a Professor of Clinical Medicine in University College. He was elected F.R.C.P. in 1879, F.R.S. in 1887, and created Knight in 1897. His contributions to medical science have embraced many subjects, but he is chiefly known to the profession on account of his work on the structure and diseases of the nervous system. A special tract of fibres in the spinal cord, which he first described, is generally named after him. The extent to which his work upon this subject has been based on original observation and research, and the manner in which facts thus ascertained have been applied to the elucidation of the practical problems of disease, their diagnosis and treatment, have secured for his works a wide circulation, not only in this country but also in America, and in most European countries, and have made them popular alike with students and practitioners. He was one of the early investigators of the changes that occur within the eye in diseases of the brain, kidneys, &c., and his "Manual and Atlas of Medical Ophthalmoscopy" (of which a third edition was published in 1890) is the chief authority on the subject. It is also of interest as containing the first systematic use of the Autotype process for illustrating the processes of disease, most of the plates having been thus reproduced from the author's own drawings. A course of lectures delivered before the College of Physicians in 1880 formed the basis of a work on "Epilepsy and the Convulsive Diseases." A small book on the "Diagnosis of Diseases of the Spinal Cord" has been described as marking a turning-point in professional knowledge of the subject, and was followed by a similar work dealing with the Diseases of the Brain. His chief work, however, is a general "Manual of Diseases of the Nervous System," in 2 vols., of which a second edition appeared in 1892, and a third is now (1898) in preparation. Besides these subjects he is known in connection with diseases of the blood, and has improved or invented apparatus for counting the number of the blood corpuscles, and ascertaining their quality. Like many members of the medical profession, he has found a recreative occupation in etching, and his work has been seen at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions. He is, indeed, apparently the first F.R.S. whose etching has been seen at the Academy, although many Fellows have exhibited work in oil and water-colour. He received the honour of knighthood in 1897. Sir William Gowers has employed phonetic shorthand most extensively throughout his life to promote his scientific work, making exclusive use of it for personal writing, and strongly advocating its employment as a means of saving time and improving the quality of intellectual work. He has earnestly advocated its use in medicine and other branches of scientific work, and was the founder and first President of a Society of Medical Phonographers which now (1898) contains 300 members. This movement appears likely to attain considerable ultimate importance. In 1875 he married Mary, daughter of Frederick Baines, of Leeds. Addresses: 50 Queen Anne Street, W., and Athenæum.

GRACE, Dr. William Gilbert, the famous cricketer, was born at Downend, near Bristol, July 18, 1848, and is the fourth son of the late Henry Mills Grace, himself a keen cricketer and sportsman. He early evinced a great aptitude for cricket, being trained in the sport by his uncle, Mr. Alfred Pocock, and in 1864 played with the South Wales team at Brighton against the Gentlemen of Sussex, scoring 170 and 56 not out. The next year he was eagerly sought for, and his reputation established. Between 1864 and 1890 Dr. Grace completed 814 innings in first-class matches, and obtained in all 35,466 runs, being an average of $43\frac{1}{2}$ per innings, the most extraordinary record of batting performances ever chronicled. He captured 2230 wickets in first-class matches, between the same years, at a cost of 36,170 runs; average per wicket, 16. In July 1879 he was presented with a costly testimonial, subscribed for by all classes of players, in recognition of his merits as an all-round cricketer. He is said to be the best bat in England, a good bowler, an excellent field, and a first-rate captain. In 1884 he played three innings of over 100 against the Australians, and repeated the feat in 1886. Like his father and brother (Dr. E. M. Grace) he is a member of the medical profession, and took his degree in 1879, having studied at Bristol Medical School, St. Bartholomew's and Westminster Hospitals. He has been in practice in Bristol since 1879. He published a book upon Cricket in 1891. In 1895 he made nine "centuries" in first-class cricket, and thereby completed his one hundredth "century." He had the second of the year's batting averages, his average being 48 innings, three not out, total runs, 2346; highest score, 288; and average, 51. The Daily Telegraph handed him £5000, the result of a great national subscription made up of his admirers' shillings. On his attaining his fifty-first birthday, or "jubilee," in July 1898, he was the object of an immense demonstration of enthusiasm. Address: Ashley Grange, Ashley Down, Bristol.

GRAFTON, Duke of, Augustus Charles Lennox Fitzroy, K.G., C.B., J.P., was born on June 22, 1821, and succeeded his brother as 7th Duke in 1882. He was educated at Harrow, and obtained a commission in the 60th Rifles in 1837, subsequently entering the Coldstream Guards in 1839. He served through the Crimean campaign, being severely wounded at the battle of Inkermann; eventually rose to the rank of General, and retired from the army in 1881. He acted as Equerry to the Queen from 1849 to 1882, and in the latter year was appointed Honorary Equerry. His Grace is Hereditary Ranger of Whittlebury Forest, Northamptonshire, and he was married, in 1847, to Anna, daughter of the late James Balfour of Whittinghame, Haddingtonshire (she died in 1857). Addresses: 17 Carlton House Terrace, S.W.; and Euston Hall, Thetford, &c.

GRAHAM, Sir Gerald, G.C.M.G., G.C.B., J.C., Lieut.-General on the Reserve List, only son of the late Robert Hay Graham, M.D., of Eden Brows, Cumberland, was born June 27, 1831, and educated at private schools, three years being spent at a school in Dresden, Saxony. He entered the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, in 1847, and received his commission as Second Lieutenant in the Corps of Royal Engineers in 1850. He became Captain in 1858, Major in 1859, Lieut.-Colonel in 1861, Colonel in 1869, Major-General in 1881, and Lieut.-General in 1884. He served throughout the Crimean campaign, landing with the first troops at Old Fort on Sept. 14, 1854, and leaving when the Russian guard took over Balaklava in May 1856. He was present at the battles of Alma and Inkermann, did nearly 100 turns of duty in the trenches, and led a ladder-party at the assault of the Redan on June 18, 1855. He took part in the demolition of the docks and "White Buildings" during the winter of 1855-56, and was twice wounded. For the Crimean campaign he received the medal with three clasps, fifth-class Medjidieh, Turkish medal, Victoria Cross, and was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour. He was twice mentioned in despatches, and obtained the brevet rank of Major. He took part in the China war of 1860, and was severely wounded at the assault of the Taku Forts; was present at the capture of Peking, mentioned in despatches, obtained brevet rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, C.B., and medal with two clasps. In the Egyptian campaign of 1882 Major-General Graham commanded the second brigade of the first division throughout the campaign. He took part in the action of El Magfar, commanded at Kassassin on Aug. 28, took part in the subsequent action of Sept. 9, and in the battle of Tel-el-Kebir; he was mentioned in despatches, thanked by both Houses of Parliament, received K.C.B., second-class Medjidieh, medal with clasp, and bronze star. Major-General Sir Gerald Graham was put in command of the expedition for the relief of Tokar in February 1884, after the destruction of an Egyptian force under Baker Pasha. The British force fought a severely-contested action with the rebel Hadendowas at El Teh, on Feb. 29, 1884, and relieved Tokar on the following day. On March 13 Sir Gerald Graham again defeated a large force of Arabs, with great slaughter, at Tamai. The road to Berber was then open, but the British troops were withdrawn. For these services Major-General Sir Gerald Graham was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General. In 1885, after receiving news of the fall of Khartoum, another expedition was sent under the command of Lieut.-General Sir Gerald Graham to Suakim to open the road to Berber and to lay down a railway. This expedition arrived at Suakim about March 13, and on the 20th fought the battle of Hasheen. Sir Gerald received the V.C. for "determined gallantry at the head of a ladder-party at the assault of the Redan (Sebastopol), on June 18, 1855; and for devoted heroism in sallying out of the trenches on numerous occasions, and bringing in wounded officers and men." For his services Lieut.-General Sir Gerald Graham was thanked by both Houses of Parliament, and was decorated with the Grand Cross of SS. Michael and George by her Majesty. He has contributed some articles to the Royal Engineers' Professional Corps papers, and translated Von Goetze's "Account of the German Engineers' operations during the campaign 1870-71." In January 1886, he contributed a paper to the Fortnightly called "Last Words with General Gordon." He married Jane, daughter of G. Durrant, of Elmhall, Suffolk, widow of the Rev. G. B. Blocker, Rector of Rudham Norfolk. Club: United Service.

GRAHAM, Peter, R.A., was born, in 1836, in Edinburgh, where he received his artistic training at the School of Design. He is famous as a painter of the Highlands, one of his first well-known pictures being "A Spate in the Highlands," 1866. He has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy's Exhibitions, and of late years has shown "The Sea with Ebb and Flow," 1895; "The Close of Day" and "From Beetling Sea-craggs where the Gannet Builds," 1896; "Crossing the Stream" and a sea-piece, 1897; "The Road across the Moor," "Moorland Quietude," "The Grass-crowned Headland of a Rocky Shore," and "Lashed by the Wild and Wasteful Ocean," 1898. He was elected R.A. in 1881. Address: 93 Ladbroke Road, W.

GRANBY, Marquis of, Henry John Brinsley Manners, J.P., is the eldest son and heir to the Duke of Rutland, and was born in 1852, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was principal private secretary to Lord Salisbury in 1885-86 and in 1886-88. In 1888 he was returned as Conservative member for the Melton Division of Leicestershire, and sat until 1895. In 1896 he was summoned to the House of Peers in his father's Barony of Manners of Haddon. He has been Captain in the third battalion of the Leicestershire Militia, and is a J.P. for Leicestershire. He has written many articles on sport, and is an ornithologist. The Marchioness of Granby, whom he married in 1882, is a talented artist in portraiture. She is the daughter of Colonel C. H. Lindsay, C.B., son of the late Earl of Balcarres and Crawford. Address: 16 Arlington Street, Piccadilly, W.

GRAND, Sarah (née Frances Elizabeth Clarke), was born at Donaghadee, in the north of Ireland, where her father, a naval Lieutenant, held a Coastguard appointment at the time. Though born in Ireland, Sarah Grand is of English parentage, and has no Irish blood. Her father was Edward John Bellenden Clarke, Lieutenant R.N., and his family belonged to Hertfordshire; her mother (née Margaret Bell) was daughter of the late George Henry Sherwood, of Rysome Garth, Yorkshire, and granddaughter of Robert Bell, Humbleton House, Yorkshire. Her father died when she was a child, and her mother then settled down among her own people in Yorkshire, where Sarah Grand's girlhood was passed. She was the youngest but one of five children, two boys and three girls. At fourteen she was sent to the Royal Naval School, Twickenham, but the discipline of this large establishment did not suit her, and she was accordingly removed to a school in Holland Road, Kensington. This part of her education, however, terminated at sixteen, when she married. She accompanied her husband, an officer in the army, to the East—Ceylon, Singapore, China, and Japan. She also saw something of Egypt. She wrote much poetry in those days, and several novels, which she burnt, her whole life, from her marriage, being devoted steadily to literary expression. Sarah Grand first appeared in print in the columns of Aunt Judy, a girls' magazine, for which she wrote a few small pieces. In July 1888 she published her first book "Ideala." Written five or six years before it eventually appeared, it went from publisher to publisher, until at last it was printed at her own cost, and published by Mr. Allen, of Ave Maria Lane, from whom it was eventually taken over by Mr. Bentley. Two years after the appearance of "Ideala" Sarah Grand completed her novel of "The Heavenly Twins"; but again her work travelled from publisher to publisher, and was rejected by one after another. In the meantime she looked up some of her early work for publication. "Singularity Deluded," one of the novels written on more commonplace lines when she was little more than a girl—long before she began “Ideala”—was accepted and published by Mr. Blackwood in December 1892. And whilst “The Heavenly Twins” were being written and were still on their travels, she wrote several short stories for Temple Bar and other magazines. At last, in the spring of 1892, she determined to publish “The Heavenly Twins” also at her own expense. When it was printed, however, it was shown to Mr William Heinemann, who took over the whole risks of the work and published it in January 1893, when it became an immediate literary success. A collection of short stories was published in March 1894, under the title of “Our Manifold Nature,” and in November 1897 appeared the novel, “The Beth Book.” Address: 60 Wynn-stay Gardens, Kensington, W.

GRANIER DE CASSAGNAC, Paul de. See DE CASSAGNAC.

GRANT, Frederick Dent, American soldier, a son of General U. S. Grant, was born in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, May 30, 1850. He was educated at the public schools and at the Military Academy at West Point, where he graduated in 1871. After travelling in Europe, he returned home in 1873, and joined the army, soon receiving an appointment on the staff of Lieut.-General Philip H. Sheridan, with rank of Lieut.-Colonel. In January 1879 he joined his father in Paris, and went with him on his journey around the world. He resigned from the army in 1881; was Minister to Austria under President Harrison; was a Police Commissioner in the city of New York in 1895, and on the outbreak of the war with Spain in 1898 he entered the army again and was made Brigadier-General.

GRANT, The Very Rev. George Monro, D.D., LL.D., Principal of Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, who is of Scottish parentage, was born at Stellarton, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, Dec. 22, 1835. He received his education at Pictou Academy and at the West River Seminary of the Presbyterian Church in his native province. At the latter, at the age of eighteen, he won a bursary which entitled him to a collegiate course in the University of Glasgow, the bursary being awarded by the Synod of the Old Kirk in Nova Scotia. During his university course at Glasgow he won academic distinction, taking the highest honours in philosophy at his examination for M.A., the Lord Rector's Prize for the best Essay on Hindoo Literature and Philosophy, and other prizes and scholarships. On his return to Nova Scotia, he spent some time as a missionary in the Maritime Provinces, and became pastor of St. Matthew's Church, Halifax, a position which he held until his acceptance, in 1877, of the Principalship of Queen's University. In 1872 he published “Ocean to Ocean,” an interesting diary of a tour across the American Continent, in connection with Sandford Fleming's surveying expedition, to locate the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and, in 1884, “Picturesque Canada,” an elaborate work illustrative of the scenery, the industries, and the social life of the Canadian Dominion. He is a frequent contributor to British, American, and Canadian periodicals, and writes, not only on theological, but on educational, social, and political subjects. Address: Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario.

GRANT, Lieut.-General Sir Robert, R.E., K.C.B., son of Sir Robert Grant, K.C.H., was born in August 1837. He was educated at Harrow and at Woolwich, and entered the army as lieutenant of Royal Engineers in October 1854. He was promoted captain in August 1860, major in July 1872, and lieut.-colonel in July 1876. He was for several years Aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief in British North America. From 1871 to 1876 he was Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General of Royal Engineers at Head-quarters. Sir Robert Grant was appointed Colonel on the Staff of the Scottish District in 1884, and the following year went to Egypt to take part in the Soudan war. He was employed in the Nile Expedition, and during the latter portion of the operations was the Commanding Royal Engineer. He was mentioned in despatches. He was appointed Deputy Adjutant-General of Royal Engineers in 1886, and succeeded to his present appointment of Inspector-General of Fortifications in 1891. Sir Robert Grant was created a K.C.B. in 1896. He married in 1875 Victoria, widow of T. Owen, Esq., and daughter of John Cotes, Esq., of Woodcote Hall, Shropshire. Address: 14 Granville Place, W.

GRANT, Robert, American writer, was born at Boston, Mass., Jan. 24, 1852. He was graduated from Harvard University in 1873, and from its Law School in 1879. In 1888 he was appointed a member of the Board of Water Commissioners of Boston, of which in the following year he became Chairman. This position he resigned in July 1893 to accept his present office, that of Judge of Probate and Insolvency for the county of Suffolk, Mass. Besides his contributions to magazines he has published “The Little Tin Gods on Wheels,” 1879; “The Confessions of a Frivolous Girl,” 1880; “The Lambs," 1882; "An Average Man," 1883; "The King's Men," with others, 1884; "The Knave of Hearts," 1885; "A Romantic Young Lady," 1886; "Face to Face," 1886; "Jack Hall," 1887; "Jack in the Bush," 1888; "The Reflections of a Married Man," 1892; "The Opinions of a Philosopher," 1893; "The Art of Living," and "The Bachelor's Christmas," 1895.

GRANT-DUFF. See DUFF, THE RIGHT HON. SIR MOUNTSTUART GRANT.

GRANTHAM, Sir William, J.P., Judge of the High Court of Justice, Queen's Bench Division, son of George Grantham, of Barcombe Place, Sussex, was born at Lewes, Oct. 23, 1835, and educated at King's College School. He was called to the Bar in 1863, after obtaining the studentship given by the four Inns of Court to the most distinguished student of the term; was made Q.C. 1877, and became a Benchler of the Inner Temple in 1878; is J.P. and has been Deputy-Chairman of Sussex. In 1871 he was largely instrumental in securing the return of Mr. Watney for East Surrey, this being the first Conservative victory in the constituency for 27 years. At the general election of 1874 he himself contested the county against the Hon. Locke King, whom he defeated by the large majority of 1107; and in 1880 he was again returned with a majority of 2006. On the passing of the Redistribution Bill of 1885 he was asked to give up his seat for the county, to contest the new borough of Croydon, as no Conservative candidate could be found to contest it owing to the then popularity of the Liberal candidate, Mr. J. S. Balfour, who had been instrumental in getting Croydon made a corporation a few years before, and who had been twice mayor. Mr. Grantham, however, defeated him by a majority of 1157. In January 1886 Mr. Grantham was made a judge of the Queen's Bench Division, and consequently retired from Parliament. He married, in 1865, Emma, daughter of R. Wilson. Addresses: Barcombe Place, Lewes; and Athenæum.

GRAVES, The Right Rev. Charles, D.D., D.C.L. Oxon., F.R.S., Bishop of Limerick, Ardfer, and Aghadoe, youngest son of John Crosbie Graves and Helena, daughter of the Rev. Charles Perceval, was born in Dublin Nov. 6, 1812, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took high honours, and became a Fellow, and Professor of Mathematics. He was President of the Royal Irish Academy from 1860 to 1865; and was for some time Dean of the Chapel Royal in Ireland, and Chaplain to the Lord Lieutenant. He was consecrated Bishop of Limerick, June 29, 1866. He was elected to the Athenæum under Rule 2 in 1863. He married Selina, eldest daughter of the late John Cheyne, M.D., Physician-General to the Forces in Ireland, in 1840. She died in 1873. Addresses: The Palace, Henry Street, Limerick; and Athenæum.

GRAY, Professor Andrew, LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Lochgelly, Fifeshire, in 1847, and is the eldest son of John Gray of that place. His elementary education was obtained at the Subscription School of his native town. After a beginning of scientific study he entered at the University of Glasgow, where he obtained on graduation the Eglinton Fellowship in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy. While an undergraduate he was nominated by Sir William Thomson (Lord Kelvin) to an experimental scholarship in Electricity and Magnetism given by Mr. Heugh of Tunbridge Wells, to the Andersonian University, Glasgow. Afterwards Mr. Gray became Sir William Thomson's private secretary and experimental assistant, and in 1880 was invited by Sir William to become his official assistant in connection with the Chair of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow. In 1884, on the foundation of the Institution, he was appointed to his present post, the Professorship of Physics in the University College of North Wales. During the fourteen years of his tenure of this office Professor Gray has taken some part in the organisation of Welsh education, and has served for several years in the Court and Executive Committee of the University of Wales, besides assisting in the more academic work of the University as a Member of Senate. Besides various scientific papers chiefly on electrical subjects, Professor Gray has written "Absolute Measurements in Electricity and Magnetism" (a sketch of certain methods of measurement of importance in connection with practical electrical work); a general treatise entitled "The Theory and Practice of Electrical Measurements" (Macmillan and Co., 1892), the first volume of a treatise on "Magnetism and Electricity" (Macmillan & Co., 1898), and in conjunction with Professor G. B. Matthews, F.R.S., "A Treatise on Bessel Functions and their Applications to Physics" (Macmillan and Co., 1895). Professor Gray is a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, and a Member of Council of the Physical Society of London. He has for several years been Examiner in Physics for Degrees in the University of Glasgow, and for the last four years has been Examiner in Physical Science to the University of

New Zealand. In 1896 the degree of LL.D. (honoris causa) was conferred on him by the University of Glasgow. Addresses: Penybryn, Bangor, North Wales; and the University College of North Wales, Bangor.

GRAY, Miss Frances Helena, LL.D., was educated at the Methodist College, Belfast, and took first place in Ireland at the Intermediate Examinations, gaining at the same time two gold medals. In 1884 she matriculated with Honours in the Royal University, Dublin, gaining third place in the ensuing scholarship examination in Modern Literature. She took the degree of B.A. in 1888, with Honours in Geology and Biology. In the following year she turned her attention to Law, and succeeded in taking the degree of LL.B.; while in 1890 she gained the high distinction of LL.D.

GRAY, George, United States senator, was born at New Castle, Delaware, May 4, 1840. He graduated at Princeton College in 1859, receiving the degree of A.B.; in 1862 he received the degree of A.M., and in 1889 the degree of LL.D. from his alma mater. He was admitted to the Bar in 1863; was appointed Attorney-General of the State of Delaware in 1879, and re-appointed in 1884; was elected to the United States Senate in 1885 to fill a vacancy, and re-elected in 1887 and in 1893. He exercises much influence among his colleagues, and is a member of several important committees, among which are those on Foreign Relations, Civil Service, and Judiciary.

GRAY, Herbert Branston, D.D. Oxon., Warden and Head-master, and Chairman of the Governing Body of Bradfield College, Berks, from 1881 onwards, was born on April 22, 1851, at Layton House, Putney, S.W., and is the son of Thomas Gray, Esq., of a Kentish family, which for several generations had settled at St. Peter's in the Isle of Thanet. He was educated from 1865 to 1869 at Winchester College, of which Foundation he was an Exhibitioner, and proceeded in 1870 to Queen's College, Oxford, of which Society he was appointed Classical Scholar. He gained a first class in Classical Moderations in 1872, and a second class in Litteræ Humaniores in 1874, and proceeded B.A. and M.A. in due course. The degree of B.D. and D.D. was conferred on him (by accumulation) in 1893. In 1875 he was appointed to a Mastership at Westminster School, which office he held till 1878, when he was elected to the Head-mastership of Louth Grammar School, Lincolnshire. In 1880

he was offered the Head-mastership of Bradfield College, Berks, and in 1881, on the resignation of the First Warden and Founder of the College, the Rev. Thomas Stevens, he was appointed Warden. At that time the College had fallen to a low numerical level, owing to many difficulties, and the numbers were hardly more than 50. Since that period the institution has grown enormously, and now numbers more than 260, while the buildings have increased to double their original size. The history of the College under Dr. Gray has been an uninterrupted success. Besides winning numerous scholarships and some Fellowships at both universities, it has sent a large number of its sons to Woolwich and Sandhurst. It owns the distinction of holding the Ashburton Shield for shooting, open to all public schools, for the year 1897-98, a distinction which it gained once before, in 1893-94. One of the distinguishing features of the College is the reproduction of Greek plays, which are performed in the only Greek theatre which has been built since the decay of the Attic drama four centuries B.C., the theatre being constructed by Dr. Gray on the model of that of Epidaurus in the Peloponnese, and the most perfect of all the Greek theatres. These unique representations have been performed four times in a cycle of three, the "Antigone" of Sophocles being played in 1890, the "Agamemnon" of Æschylus in 1892, the "Alcestis" of Euripides in 1895, and the "Antigone," for the second time, in 1898. Thither all the learned scholars flock from Oxford, Cambridge, Berlin, Edinburgh, and even from Athens. Dr. Gray is the author of two books of sermons, chiefly preached to Bradfield boys, "Modern Laodiceans" having been published in 1885, and "Men of Like Passions" in 1894. He is also the joint editor of a classical work, "The Westminster Ovid." He holds the Chairmanship of the Council of the College, by virtue of his office as Warden. Address: Bradfield College, Berks.

GRAY, Maxwell. See TUTTIETT, M.G.

GRÉARD, Valléry Clément Octave, Rector of the University of France, was born at Vire in the Calvados, April 18, 1828. He entered the Ecole Normale in 1849, and is a Doctor of Letters. He became a professor at the Lycées of Metz, Versailles, and Paris. In 1865 he was appointed an inspector of the Academy of Paris, and in 1872 Inspector-General. In 1874 he gained the Halphen Prize of the Academy of Sciences, given to the person who has most improved primary education. In 1877, M. Jules Ferry (q.v.) advisedly proclaimed him the best teacher in France.

In 1879 he became Vice-Rector of the Academy of Paris, and devoted himself to questions of organisation and method in secondary education. In 1883 he refused a senatorship in order to give himself up to extending the Paris Lycées, both for boys and girls, and to restoring the Sorbonne. In 1875 he was elected to the Academy of Moral Sciences, and in 1886 to the French Academy itself in place of Comte de Falloux. He is a Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, and has been a Member of its Council since 1880. His principal works are: "De la Morale de Plutarque," 1866; "L'Éducation de Femmes par les Femmes," 1886; "L'Enseignement Secondaire des Filles," 1883; "Précis de Littérature," 1875. His Paris address is 30 Rue du Luxembourg.

GREECE, King of. See GEORGE I., KING OF THE HELLENES.

GREELY, Brigadier-General Adolphus W., was born at Newburyport, Mass., March 27, 1841. Entering the volunteer service as a private soldier, he was thrice wounded and attained the rank of Captain during the Civil War, and at its close was transferred to the regular army with the rank of Lieutenant. In 1868 he was placed in the Signal Service; and in 1881 was assigned to the command of the International Polar Expedition to Lady Franklin Bay. In addition to completing his scientific work, his expedition made extensive geographical discoveries and attained 83° 24' N. latitude,—the farthest north of all previous time. Visiting ships having failed to reach Greely in 1882 or 1883, he retreated to Cape Sabine, where hardships and starvation spared but seven, who were rescued in 1884 by a squadron under Captain Schley. In the winter of 1896-97 Lieutenant Peary discovered a case of medical instruments and other relics in the deserted camp, but he failed to find the records of the expedition, as expected. General Greely wrote the "Report of the Expedition to Lady Franklin Bay" (2 vols.), 1886, and published a private account of the expedition in 1885, under the title of "Three Years of Arctic Service," which has been translated into French and German. He was awarded the Founder's Medal by the Royal Geographical Society, the Roquette Medal by the Société de Géographie, Paris, and given the formal thanks of Massachusetts. In 1887 he was raised to the rank of Brigadier-General and Chief Signal Officer, being appointed head of the corps in which he had served for twenty years. Other works of General Greely are "American Weather," N.Y., 1888, and "American Explorers and Travellers," N.Y., 1893.

GREEN, Alice Sophia Amelia (Mrs. J. R. Green), was born at Kells in Ireland in 1848, and is the daughter of the well-known canon lawyer, Edward Adderley Stopford, Archdeacon of Meath, and granddaughter of the Bishop of that diocese. She was privately educated, and taught herself Greek, and was married in 1877 to the famous historian of the English people, the late John Richard Green. While he was writing his last two books, she greatly assisted her husband in the work of historical research, and acted as his amanuensis, and is herself the author of "Henry II." in the English Statesmen Series, and of "Town Life in the Fifteenth Century," published in 1894. She has edited her husband's work on "The Conquest of England," and in 1888, five years after his death, issued a revised edition of the well-known "Short History of the English People," and in 1892 was editor of the illustrated edition of the same. She has lectured in London on "English Town Life in the Middle Ages," and on "Guilds." Address: 14 Kensington Square, W.

GREEN, Anna Katharine. See ROHLFS, MRS. CHARLES.

GREEN, Professor Joseph Reynolds, F.R.S., D.Sc., F.L.S., was born at Stowmarket, Suffolk, on Dec. 3, 1848, and was educated at private schools, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was a scholar of his College. He was Demonstrator of Physiology at Cambridge from 1885 to 1886, and in the following year was appointed Professor of Botany at the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. Professor Green is an Examiner in Botany at the University of London, and at the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons. He is the author of "A Manual of Botany," 1895. Address: 17 Bloomsbury Square, W.C.; and Amcliffe, Grange Road, Cambridge.

GREEN, Mrs. Mary Anne Everett, whose maiden name was Wood, was born at Sheffield in 1818, and, in early life, resided in several parts of Lancashire and Yorkshire. She received an excellent education. Her intellectual tastes were fostered by the late James Montgomery, the "bard of Sheffield," an intimate friend of her father's. In 1841 her parents removed to London, and having now freer access to libraries and MS. collections, she conceived the idea of compiling the "Lives of the Princesses of England," the first volume of which appeared in 1849, and the sixth and last in 1855. Mrs. Green edited "Letters of Royal and Illustrious Ladies," published in 1846; "The Diary of John Rous," printed for the Camden Society, in 1856; "The Letters of Queen Henrietta Maria" in 1857; and has contributed occasionally to periodical literature, chiefly on antiquarian subjects. She has been entrusted by the Master of the Rolls with the duty of calendaring the State Papers in the Record Office. The papers of the reign of James I., 4 vols., were published in 1857-59, and those of Charles II., 7 vols., appeared 1860-68. Mrs. Green was then requested to complete the calendar of the State Papers of Queen Elizabeth, left unfinished by the late Mr. Lemon, which, with addenda from Edward VI. to James I., forms 6 vols., published 1869-74. She is now occupied upon the papers of the Interregnum, of which 13 vols. were published, 1875-86. These complete the general historical portion of the work from 1649-60. She has since calendared the proceedings of the Committee for Advance of Money from 1642 to 1656, in 3 vols., published in 1888. She is now at work upon the papers of the Committee for Compositions with Royalists, 1643-60, of which one volume of general proceedings appeared in 1889, and one volume of the cases of the compounders from 1643 to 1646, in 1890. In 1845 she was married to Mr. G. P. Green, artist, of Cottingham, near Hull, and of London.

GREENAWAY, Kate, R.I., artist, received her artistic education at the Kensington Art School, the life classes at Heatherley's, and the Slade School. She early studied Reynolds and Romney, and designed from old plates and sketches in books of costumes, until she evolved those delightful child types which are now of world-wide repute. Her first tiny picture, earliest in a long series of exquisitely delicate paintings of child life and child costume, was exhibited in the Dudley Gallery. Those who are unfamiliar with the originals of Miss Kate Greenaway's small pictures can form no adequate conception of the value and beauty of her work. The original, for instance, of her "Sweet Slug-a-bed" is not at all the same thing as its reproductions in our necessarily rather crude colour-printing. Miss Greenaway is the best kind of social reformer. It has been her proud mission to transform our overdressed tight-waisted babies, clad in the absurd and orthodox French fashion, dictated, it is supposed, by Worth, into the quaint old-world pictures that are one of the few delights of the London landscape. Miss Kate Greenaway is famous as a book illustrator. The following illustrated works and illustrations may be mentioned: Cover to Every Girl's Magazine, edited by Miss A. A. Leith, and published by Messrs. Routledge, also coloured illustrations in the same, the "Pied Piper of Hamelin," "Marigold Garden," "The Language of Flowers," "A Day in a Child's Life," "Mother Goose," "A Painting Book for Boys and Girls," "Kate Greenaway's Alphabet," and last, but not least, "Mavor's Spelling Book," which to many children has rendered the labour of spelling our unphonetic old language almost tolerable. Many of Miss Greenaway's most exquisite paintings are, or were, in the possession of Mr. Ruskin, who showed them to his audience when delivering the Slade lectures at Oxford, and for a time placed them in the cabinets in the Taylorian Art School. Address: 39 Frognal, Hampstead, N.W.

GREENE, William Conynghame, C.B., British Agent and Chargé d'Affaires in the Transvaal, was born in Dublin on Oct. 29, 1854, and is the eldest son of R. J. Greene, and through his mother the great-grandson of the first Lord Plunket. His mother, the Hon. Mrs. Greene, was a writer of verses for children, and his brother is the well-known singer, Mr. Plunket Greene. He was educated at Harrow and Pembroke College, Oxford, where he held an open classical scholarship and graduated B.A. in 1877, M.A. in 1880. He entered the Diplomatic Service in 1877. He was appointed Acting third Secretary at Athens in 1880. He then held offices at Stuttgart, The Hague, Brussels, and in 1893 was promoted to Teheran. On Aug. 25, 1896, he was appointed to his present post, with the personal rank of Chargé d'Affaires. He was created a C.B. in 1897. He married in 1884 Lily, fifth daughter of the 5th Earl of Courtown. Address: British Agency, Pretoria.

GREENWELL, The Rev. William, M.A., D.C.L., F.R.S., F.S.A., J.P., is the eldest son of the late William Thomas Greenwell, Esq., J.P., D.L., of Greenwell Ford, co. Durham. He was born there, March 23, 1820, and educated at Durham School and the University of Durham, where he graduated in 1839, and ultimately became Fellow of University College, and afterwards Principal of Neville Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne. In 1847 he was preferred to the vicarage of Ovingham, Northumberland, and is now Minor Canon and Librarian of Durham Cathedral, and Rector of St. Mary, in the South Bailey, in the city of Durham. Dr. Greenwell is well known as an archaeologist, principally in connection with the sepulchral remains of the early inhabitants of Britain. His investigations with regard to the territorial possessions of the bishopric of Durham, as well as those of the Prior and Convent of the same place, are familiar to all interested in these and cognate subjects. He has written also on Greek numismatics, and other branches of Greek archæology. His large series of skulls, many of which were derived from the barrows of England, was given by him some years ago to the University of Oxford. In 1879 he presented to the nation a collection, second to none in Britain, of urns and other sepulchral pottery, weapons and implements of stone and bronze, and ornaments, the result of above twenty years' researches in the burial mounds of many counties of England. These are now lodged in the British Museum. His principal works are: "Bolden Buke, a Survey of the Possessions of the See of Durham in 1183," 1852; "Bishop Hatfield's Survey," a record of the possessions of the See of Durham, 1857; "Wills and Inventories from the Registry at Durham," 1860; "Feodarium Prioratus Dunelmensis," a survey of the possessions of the Prior and Convent of Durham in the fifteenth century, 1872, being publications of the Surtees Society; "British Barrows," a record of the examination of sepulchral mounds in various parts of England, 1877; "Durham Cathedral," an address illustrative of the building and its history, 1881; "Electrum Coinage of Cyzius," 1887, &c. Dr. Greenwell is a Justice of the Peace for the county of Durham. Address: 27 North Bailey, Durham.

GREENWOOD, Frederick, publicist, was born many years ago, and throughout his long and honourable career has been identified with all that is best in the traditions of English journalism. He was editor of the Pall Mall Gazette from its start in 1865, but when Mr. Yates Thompson bought the paper in 1880, and inaugurated its brief and brilliant career as a Liberal Journal, he and several of the other members of his staff remained honourably true to their principles and founded the St. James's Gazette. This important journal he edited for some ten years. In 1890, or thereabouts, he started the Anti-Jacobin, which proved unfortunately little more than a witty and entertaining venture in letters. It was too literary to live. An old-fashioned generation of newspapers readers remember with pleasure his brother's (Mr. James Greenwood) articles on workhouse life, signed by "An Amateur Casual." Mr. Frederick Greenwood still occasionally contributes weighty articles, on subjects chiefly political, to the magazines and journals of the day. In 1853 he published "Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, Emperor of the French"; and in 1855, "Life of Napoleon the Third." He is also the author of a work on "Imagination in Dreams and their Study." Address: 19 Argyll Road, Campden Hill, W.

GREENWOOD, Grace. See LIPPINCOTT, SARA JANE.

GREENWOOD, Thomas, has been justly described as the apostle of the Public Library Movement. He was born on May 9, 1851, at Woodley, near Stockport, and comes of old yeoman parentage. His father was one of the earliest of the Cheshire temperance reformers, and took an active part in the Chartist movement during the first half of the century. He died a few months after the birth of the son now named. The early education of Thomas was in the village day school, and this was supplemented by private tuition from the Rev. W. Urwick, M.A. While serving as a boy clerk in Manchester he was accustomed to make constant use of the Campfield Library in that city. This was the first municipal library under the William Ewart Act of 1850. It was Greenwood's use of this library which formed the groundwork of all that he has since sought to do in the extension of these institutions. His range of reading and study during this period, although only a youth of fifteen, covered a large field of high-class literature. At a later date he was appointed librarian of one of the branch public libraries in Sheffield. After this he became connected with trade journalism, and is at the present time proprietor of four trade journals, and carries on an extensive publishing business. The hobby of his life, and one to which he has given many years of thought and unwearied activity, has been the promotion of public libraries. In 1886 the first edition of his "Public Libraries, their Organisation, Uses, and Management," was published. The second edition was issued in the following year, a third edition in 1890, and a fourth edition, consisting of nearly 600 pages, in 1891. For each of these editions the work was practically a new one, so rapid was the extension of the movement. The Prince of Wales, Mr. Gladstone, Lord Rosebery, and many other public men, have made constant reference to this book when opening new libraries. The book has in fact been the quarry from which many public speakers, magazine and newspaper writers, have drawn their particulars of these institutions. In thirty-six years the number of adoptions of the Public Libraries Acts stood at 133. During the succeeding eleven years the adoptions were considerably over 200, a result owing largely to an awakened interest in these institutions caused by the wide circulation of "Public Libraries," and the propaganda work of its author. By means of letters in the press, circulars, leaflets, pamphlets, and platform efforts, Thomas Greenwood has, with unstinted outlay, carried on the work of an association. The Public Library Movement differs from almost every other organisation, in the fact that no single individual has, so far as is known, benefited to the extent of a shilling in the promotion of the movement. Other books by him bearing upon library and kindred matters have been "Museums and Art Galleries," issued in 1888; "Sunday-School and Village Libraries," published in 1892; and "Greenwood's Library Year Book," in 1897. Books upon other subjects have been "Tour in the States and Canada," issued in 1883; "Eminent Naturalists," in 1886; and "Grace Montrose, an Unfashionable Novel," in the same year. Contributions on a variety of subjects, signed and unsigned, have appeared from his pen in magazines and newspapers. His own journals have for over twenty years contained articles written by him, and covering a wide range of commercial subjects and topics dealing with art and technical instruction. Mr. Greenwood has several times been asked to stand for Parliament, for the London County Council, and the London School Board, but has refused to enter public life. He has travelled extensively in most of the leading countries of the world, and visited many foreign libraries. Address: Frith Knowl, Elstree, Herts.

GREGORY, Edward John, R.A., son of an engineer in the Peninsular and Oriental Company's service, was born at Southampton, April 19, 1850. He was educated in the Middle Class School there under Mr. David Cruickshank, who did much to encourage his artistic proclivities. He was then placed in the Engineers' drawing office of the Peninsular and Oriental Company at Southampton, where he remained till 1869. During this time he attended the Southampton School of Art. He also became acquainted with Mr. Herkomer, and took part in the formation of a Life Class, chiefly under his direction. He then came to London, studied at South Kensington for a few months; and eventually took up some more or less mechanical decorative work for the "department"; succeeding Herkomer in this employment. He exhibited his first picture (in water-colour) at the Dudley Gallery, and was then for a number of years a regular member of the Graphic artistic staff. In 1873 he was elected a member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, and has since that time exhibited many admirable drawings in the rooms of that body. His first considerable success dates from 1876, when he exhibited, at Mr. Deschamps' Gallery in New Bond Street, a powerful picture of morning light streaming through the blinds of a ball-room and on to a pair of lingering guests and a wearied and yawning pianist. Among the pictures exhibited by him at the Institute are "Norwegian Pirates"; "Pet of the Crew"; "Sir Galahad" (which gained the Watts Prize at Manchester); "St. George"; and "Last Touches." At the Grosvenor Gallery he has exhibited portraits of the Chairman of Lloyd's Register, Mr. W. T. Eley, and Miss Galloway; and "The Rehearsal" and other pictures; and at the Royal Academy, his own portrait, and portraits of Mr. H. R. Robertson, and the Rev. Thos. Stevens, Warden of Bradford College. His last considerable work exhibited at the Academy was entitled "Sunday Afternoon at Boulter's Lock." Mr. Gregory was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, Jan. 30, 1883, and R.A. in 1898. He has received a gold and a silver medal from the Paris International Exhibition of 1889, a gold medal from Munich in 1893, and a medal of the first class at the Brussels International Exhibition of 1897. Permanent address: 8 Greville Place, Maida Vale, N.W.

GREGORY, The Very Rev. Robert, D.D., Dean of St. Paul's, son of Robert Gregory, Esq., of Nottingham, and Anne Sophia, his wife, born Feb. 9, 1819, was educated at private schools and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford (B.A. 1843, M.A. 1846). In 1850 he gained the Denyer Theological Prize at Oxford. He was ordained deacon at Christmas, 1843, and priest in 1844 as curate of Bisley in Gloucestershire; and became curate of Panton and Wragby, in Lincolnshire, in 1847; curate of the parish church of Lambeth in 1851; and in 1853 perpetual curate of St. Mary-the-Less, Lambeth, which living he resigned in 1873. In 1868 he was appointed Canon of St. Paul's; and in 1882 he was appointed by the Bishop of London Treasurer of the Cathedral. He became Treasurer of the National Society for the Education of the Children of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church in 1868, and has taken a decided line of action on the question of religious education. He was a member of the Ritual Commission and also of the Royal Commission upon the Administration and Operation of the Contagious Diseases Act. Canon Gregory was elected in 1868 Proctor for the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Surrey, which post he held till he was elected for the Chapter of St. Paul's in 1874. He was re-elected for the Chapter in 1880 and 1885. Canon Gregory has taken an energetic share in the action of the Chapter since his appointment to the Canonry, and, in conjunction with Dean Church, did much to popularise the services of the Cathedral. In 1870 he was appointed Rural Dean of Camberwell, which post he resigned in 1873; in which year he was elected a member of the London School Board for the City Division, and he sat on the Board till 1876, when he did not seek re-election. On Aug. 9, 1878, he was appointed a Royal Commissioner to inquire into the Parochial Charities of the City of London; and in January 1886 a Commissioner to inquire into the working of the Education Acts. Dean Gregory is the author of "Plea for Small Parishes," 1849; "The Difficulties and Organisation of a Small Metropolitan Parish," 1866; "Sermons," 1869; "Lectures at St. Paul's," 1871-72; "The Cost of Voluntary Schools and of Board Schools," 1875; "Is the Canadian System of Education Rates possible in England?" 1875; "Position of the Celebrant Aspect in Convocation," 1875; "The Position of the Priest ordered by the Rubric in the Communion Service," 1876; "The Rise and Progress of Elementary Education in England," 1895. In December 1890 the Rev. Canon Gregory was appointed Dean of St. Paul's in succession to the late Dean Church. He has for long been actively engaged in the promotion of the scheme for the interior decoration of the Cathedral. He married first, in 1844, Mary Frances, younger daughter of William Stewart, Esq., of Frescati, near Dublin (she died in 1851); secondly, in 1861, Charlotte Anne, youngest daughter of Admiral the Hon. Sir Robert Stopford, G.C.B. Address: The Deanery, St. Paul's, E.C.

GREIN, J. T., was born in Amsterdam on October 11, 1862, and is, on the mother's side, of English extraction. He was educated in Holland, Germany, and Belgium, and has been occupied in the East India and banking trades since 1879. He came to London in 1885, and is at present attorney in an important City firm. Since the early age of sixteen he has been connected with the press. He was in 1883 dramatic critic of one of the leading dailies in Amsterdam, and is the London editor of three of the most important daily papers of Holland, besides being dramatic critic of Life and of the Westminster Review. He is also correspondent of several German and French papers, and is accustomed to write four languages. The following works have been published by Mr. Grein: (in Dutch) "Dramatic Essays," 1884; "Silhouettes" (short novels), 1885; "London: Wealth and Poverty," 1890; (in English) "Twixt Light and Dark" (short stories); a play, "A Man's Love," in collaboration with C. W. Jarvis, in 1889, besides several small dramas which have been produced at various London theatres, and a collection of dramatic studies, 1894. In 1891 Mr. Grein founded the Independent Theatre Society, with a view to producing plays which have an artistic and literary, rather than a commercial value. During three seasons this society produced works by Ibsen, Zola, De Banville, Coppée, and ten original plays, notably "Widowers' Houses," by G. B. Shaw; "The Strike at Arlingford," by George Moore; "Alan's Wife" (anonymous); "A Question of Memory," by Michael Field; and "The Black Cat," by John Todhunter. In 1893 Mr. J. T. Grein founded the Sunday Popular Debates Club. He is Consul of the Congo Free State, and in 1897 started and edited Hollandia. He is also dramatic critic of the Sunday Special. From 1895 till 1897 he edited To-Morrow, a monthly magazine. Address: 35 Haymarket. Club: Constitutional.

GRENFELL, Bernard Pyne, M.A., born at Birmingham, Dec. 16, 1869, eldest son of the late John Granville Grenfell, B.A., Assistant-Master at Clifton College, was educated at Clifton College (1878-88) and Queen's College, Oxford (first-class Classical Mods., 1890; first-class Lit. Hum., 1892; B.A. 1892; Craven Travelling Fellow, 1894-95). He was elected to a research Fellowship at Queen's College, Oxford, in 1894 (M.A. 1895). Since 1894 he has been engaged in explorations in Egypt, especially in connection with the discovery of Greek papyri. He worked for two seasons with Professor Flinders Petrie at his excavations in Upper Egypt (1894-95). In 1895 he joined the Egypt Exploration Fund, and excavated for that society in the Fayûm from 1895 to 1896, and at Behnesa, the ancient Oxyrhynchus, from 1896 to 1897, where a very large discovery of papyri was made in the ruins of the old town, including the so-called "Logia" or "Sayings of our Lord." In 1896 he was joined by Mr. A. S. Hunt, with whom he has since worked in collaboration. His publications are: "The Revenue Laws of Ptolemy Philadelphus," 1896; "An Alexandrian Erotic Fragment, and other Greek Papyri," 1896; and, in collaboration with Mr. A. S. Hunt: "New Classical Fragments, and other Greek and Latin Papyri," 1897; "Sayings of our Lord, from an early Greek Papyrus," 1897; "A Revised Edition of the Geneva Fragment of Menander," 1898; "The Oxyrhynchus Papyri I.," 1898. Addressee:

GRENFELL, Lieut.-General Sir Francis Wallace, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., late Sirdar of the Egyptian armies, was born in London on April 29, 1841, and is the son of the late P. St. L. Grenfell, J.P., and Madelena Du Pré. He entered the army, Aug. 5, 1859; became Lieut., July 16, 1863; Captain, Oct. 28, 1871; Major, Nov. 11, 1878; Lieut.-Colonel, Nov. 29, 1879; Colonel, Nov. 18, 1882; Major-General, Aug. 3, 1889; served as Aide-de-Camp to Sir Arthur Conynghame, also as Staff Officer to Colonel Glyn, commanding a field force in the Transkei in 1887-88, and was present in the engagement with the Galekas and Gaikas at Quintana Mountain on Feb. 7, 1878 (mentioned in despatches, brevet of Major); was Deputy-Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at head-quarters in the Kaffir war of 1878; and was Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General at head-quarters in the Zulu war of 1879, where he was present in the engagement at Ulundi (mentioned in despatches) brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, Medal with Clasp; was Assistant-Quartermaster-General, under Sir Evelyn Wood, in the Boer war of 1881; was Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General on the Headquarters Staff in the Egyptian war of 1882; and was present at the engagements of Tel-el-Mahuta and Kassassin, and in the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (mentioned in despatches, Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, Medal with Clasp, third class of Medjidieh, and Khedive's Star); was with the Nile Expedition in 1884-85 on the lines of communication (mentioned in despatches, C.B. and Clasp); was with the Egyptian Field Force in 1885-86, and was present in the engagement at Giniss in command of a Division (mentioned in despatches, K.C.B., and promoted to first class of the Medjidieh, and third class of the Osmanieh). Sir Francis Grenfell also commanded the troops during the operations near Suakim in Dec. 1888, including the engagement at Gemaizah, and headed the combined English and Egyptian forces at the battle of Toski (Aug. 3, 1889). On the day previous to General Grenfell's departure from Egypt on leave of absence, his Highness the Khedive presented him with a sword of honour "In souvenir of the victories of Giniss, Gamaiza, and Toski." Major-General Grenfell returned from Egypt in April 1892, and in May was appointed Deputy Adjutant-General for Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers. In 1894 he was appointed Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, War Office. He was in command of the forces in Egypt in 1897-98. In 1887 he married Evelyn, daughter of General R.

Wood, C.B. He is now (1899) Commander-in-Chief and Governor-General, Malta.

GRENFELL, Lieut.-Colonel Henry Riversdale, J.P., born April 5, 1824, is second son of Charles Pascoe Grenfell, at one time M.P. for Preston, and of Lady Georgina, eldest daughter of Wm. Philip, 2nd Earl of Sefton. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford; was private Secretary to Lord Panmure at the close of the Crimean War, and to Sir Charles Wood during the period of the reconstruction of the Indian administration from 1859 to 1861; was elected M.P. for Stoke-upon-Trent on the death of John Lewis Ricardo in 1862, and sat for that place till 1868, when he stood with Mr. Gladstone for South-West Lancashire, since which date he has not sat in Parliament. He was elected a Director of the Bank of England in 1865, Deputy-Governor in 1879, and Governor in 1881. He is at present a Director of the Bank, and Chairman of the General Council of the Bimetallic League. He was Captain of 2nd Middlesex Militia in 1851, and was made Lieut.-Colonel of that regiment in 1870. He is also a Commissioner of Lieutenancy for the City of London, and sat as Royal Commissioner to inquire into the Metropolitan Board of Works in 1888. Colonel Grenfell is the author of several political pamphlets and magazine articles, principally on economical subjects, banking legislation, and the standard of value. In 1886 he joined with Lord Aldenham in the publication of "The Bimetallic Controversy," a collection of papers on the Bimetallic question. In 1867 he married Alethea Louisa, daughter of H. T. Adeane, M.P. for Cambridgeshire, 1830-32. He is a Liberal-Unionist in politics. Address: Baeres, Henley-on-Thames.

GREVILLE, George, C.M.G., Minister in Siam, eldest son of Algernon William Bellingham Greville, of Brussels, was born in 1851, and, having been educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, entered the Diplomatic Service in 1875. Having held several minor appointments at Lisbon, Buenos Ayres, and Peking, he was appointed Secretary at Rio de Janeiro, 1892. In 1896 he was for a short period Consul-General at Buda-Pesth, before taking up his present appointment. He was made a C.M.G. on May 25, 1895.

GREVILLE, Henry. See DURAND, ALICE MARIE CÉLESTE.

GREY, Earl, Albert Henry George Grey, LL.M., J.P., Administrator of Rhodesia, was born November 28, 1851, and is the son of General Hon. Charles

Grey and Caroline, daughter of Sir Harvie Farquhar, Bart. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1878 he was elected M.P. for Northumberland, but was unseated on petition. He was M.P. for South Northumberland, 1880-85, and for the Tyneside Division, 1885-86. He was travelling in South Africa when he succeeded his uncle, the 3rd Earl, in the peerage, 1894. After the Jameson Raid, 1896, he succeeded Mr. Rhodes as representative of the British South Africa Company, and quelled the rebellion of the Matabele in 1896 and 1897. In 1877 he married Alice, third daughter of Robert Stayner Holford, M.P. Address: Howick House, Northumberland.

GREY, Sir Edward, Bart., M.P., eldest son of George Henry Grey, was born in London on April 25, 1862, and succeeded his grandfather in the baronetcy in 1882. He was educated at Winchester and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a second class in Classical Moderations, and a third class in Law. Since 1885 he has represented Berwick-on-Tweed in the Liberal interest, and from 1892 to 1895 was Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs. As the representative of Lord Rosebery, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who was, of course, in the Upper House, Sir Edward Grey occupied a very delicate and responsible position, and his duties became even more onerous when his chief became Premier. In the House he is regarded as a man of infinite possibilities in the future, and is a recognised authority on foreign affairs. It may be mentioned that in 1896 he was the winner of the Marylebone Cricket Club and Queen's Club Tennis Prize. In 1885 he married Dorothy, daughter of S. F. Widdrington, Newton Hall, Northumberland. Address: Falloden, Chathill.

GREY-WILSON, William, C.M.G., Governor of the Falkland Islands, born at Tunbridge Wells on April 7, 1852, is the youngest son of Andrew Wilson, Inspector-General of Hospitals, H.E.I.C.S., and, through his mother, great-grandson of the first Earl Grey. He was educated at Cheltenham College and in France, and became Private Secretary to Sir William Grey, K.C.S.I., Governor of Jamaica, 1874, also to Lieut.-Governor Edward E. Rushworth, General J. R. Mann, R.E., Sir Frederick Barber, and the Earl of Northesk, and clerk of the Executive and Legislative Councils of British Honduras, 1878; Magistrate on the Mexican Frontier and in command of the Frontier scouts, 1879; assistant Colonial Secretary and Treasurer, Sierra Leone, 1883; special commissioner to take over the Sulymah country, West Africa; and subsequently sent on several special missions to native states in West Africa; fourth assistant Colonial Secretary to the Gold Coast Colony, 1884; Colonial Secretary, St. Helena, 1886; administered Government, 1887 to 1890; Governor and Commander-in-Chief of St. Helena, May 1890-97. In 1897 he was appointed Governor of the Falkland Islands. Address: Government House, Stanley, Falkland Islands. Club: Junior Carlton.

GRIEG, Edvard Hagerup, musician, was born at Bergen, in Norway, June 15, 1843. At an early age he received his first musical instruction from his mother, who was a highly gifted musician and an accomplished pianist. In 1858, on the advice of Ole Bull, the violinist, he went to continue his musical training at the Conservatorium of Leipzig, where he became a pupil of Moscheles, Hauptmann, Richter, Reinecke, and Wenzel. In 1863 he went to prosecute his studies at Copenhagen under the late Niels Wilhelm Gade, who, with E. Hartmann, greatly contributed to develop his talent for composition. The turning-point in his career, however, was his coming in contact, for a short period, with Richard Nordraak, a young Norwegian composer of brilliant genius, who shortly afterwards died. With regard to this meeting Grieg himself relates that "The scales fell from my eyes. It was from him that I first learned to appreciate the popular melodies of the North, and to be conscious of my own nature. We became determined adversaries of the effeminate Scandinavianism which was an admixture of Gade and Mendelssohn, and with enthusiasm we struck out the new path now trodden by the Northern school." In 1867 he founded at Christiania a musical society, which he conducted until 1880. In 1865 and 1870 he paid visits to Italy, and became intimate in Rome with Liszt. He also repeatedly visited Germany, especially Leipzig, for lengthened periods. There he brought out his compositions in public, and he himself performed in 1879, at a concert in the Gewandhaus, his concerto for the piano. Madame Grieg is a singer of considerable repute. On the occasion of her husband's visit to England in the autumn of 1897, Madame Grieg came over to England for a time in order to nurse him, when he fell a temporary victim to our island breezes. While here, Madame Grieg sang in London, and charmed metropolitan music lovers with the purity and sweetness of her rich Norwegian voice. At about the same time Grieg himself gave several pianoforte recitals in London and in provincial towns, naturally achieving great success, the music performed consisting entirely of his own compositions. His orchestral suite, "Peer Gynt" (op. 46), is probably the most popular of his compositions. On Nov. 4, 1897, the Philharmonic Society of London gave a grand concert in honour of Grieg, who came over specially to conduct his compositions, with which the programme was almost filled. Unfortunately, at the last moment, an acute attack of bronchitis prevented Grieg from attending the Queen's Hall, and his place was taken by Sir A. C. Mackenzie. Among his best-known works may be mentioned: "Tableaux Poétiques," "Humoresques Pièces Lyriques," "Morceaux Symphoniques," besides choruses for female voices, sonatas, songs, and two operas, "Sigur Jorsalfar" and "Peer Gynt." M. Grieg is regarded by his fellow-countrymen as chief, with Svendsen, of the Scandinavian school. In June 1891 he was elected correspondent of the Institut de France. M. Grieg prides himself on his cosmopolitanism, which he attributes to his European travels. His personality is described as "most charming," and pretty pictures of the simplicity and sweetness of his home-life are to be found in contemporary journals. He lives in a beautiful house—whose building he himself superintended, on the shore of a typical Norwegian fjord—an ideal spot for a composer so susceptible of the mystic influence of the poetry of nature. On the confines of the grounds of his house he has had built a little sanctum sanctorum, where he works alone. This interesting place, the birthplace of much of the finest of contemporary music, is fitted up with everything dear to the heart of M. Grieg: the scores of Wagner, Grieg's favourite books, his small piano, and many other treasures which the eye of the guest would never see. Grieg spends ten months of the year in the warm cities of mid-Europe, as he suffers a great deal from chills. During the two months of Norwegian summer M. Grieg buries himself in his retreat on the Hardanger Fjord for holiday-making and composition. He has long given up teaching, and lives a quiet country life when in Central Europe.

GRIFFITH, The Hon. Sir Samuel Walker, G.C.M.G., Chief-Justice of Queensland, was born June 21, 1845, at Merthyr-Tydfil, Wales, and is of Welsh descent. He is the second son of Rev. Edward Griffith. He arrived in Australia in 1854, and was educated at Mr. Robert Horniman's School, Sydney; at the High School (Presbyterian), West Maitland, N.S.W.; and at the University of Sydney, where he took the degree of B.A., 1863

(first class in classics and mathematics); M.A., 1870; Mort Travelling Fellow, 1865. He was called to the Queensland Bar in October 1867; was made Q.C. in 1876, and was also member of the Bars of New South Wales and Victoria. He was elected to the Legislative Assembly of Queensland in March 1872, and continued a member until his appointment to the Bench. He was Attorney-General of Queensland from August 1874 to December 1878; Secretary for Public Instruction, January 1876 to January 1879; Secretary for Public Works, September 1878 to January 1879; Leader of the Opposition, 1879 to 1883; and refused a seat on the Bench of the Supreme Court of Queensland, 1879. He was Premier of Queensland, November 1883 to June 1888, holding from time to time the offices of Colonial Secretary and Secretary of Public Instruction, Colonial Secretary only, Chief Secretary, and Chief Secretary and Treasurer. He was the leader of the Opposition, 1888-90. He attended the Sydney Convention of November-December 1883, at which the Constitution of the Federal Council of Australasia was framed, and he took considerable part in framing it. He was a member of the Federal Council from its inception in 1885; re-appointed in 1888 and 1891; Chairman of Standing Committee of F.C., 1887-88; President, 1888, 1891, and 1893. He attended the Colonial Conference of 1887 in London, as a representative of Queensland; attended the Federation Conference in Melbourne, February 1890, as a delegate from Queensland; was a delegate to represent Queensland at the Federation Convention to frame a Federal Constitution for Australasia, and was appointed Vice-President of the Convention. He was also Chairman of the Constitutional Committee, and a principal framer of the Constitution adopted by the Convention. He has presided over the Federal Council in 1888, 1891, 1893. He was for many years the leader of the anti-servile labour party in Queensland, and of the Liberal party in Parliament. In 1890 he formed, with Sir Thomas McIlwraith, a coalition Government, accepting the offices of Chief Secretary, Attorney-General, and Premier. He remained in office till March 1893, when he was appointed Chief-Justice, the Legislature having, with a view to his appointment, raised the salary of that office to £3500 at the instance of the leader of the Opposition. In 1892, at his instance, the Legislature removed the prohibition then existing against the introduction of Polynesian labour, the sugar industry in Queensland then being in a very critical condition, and white labour not being available to carry on the work. The result was an immediate revival of the industry, which has since been in a prosperous condition. He has written articles in the Centennial Magazine (Sydney), and other papers on social questions relating to the unequal distribution of the products of labour. Throughout his career he was engaged in active practice at the Queensland Bar, of which he was for many years the recognised leader. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1886-87; G.C.M.G., 1895. Sir Samuel W. Griffith married, in 1870, Julia Janet, daughter of James Thomson, Esq. (formerly Commissioner of Crown Lands, Maitland, N.S.W.), and has issue. Address: Merthyr, Brisbane.

GRIFFITHS, Major Arthur George Frederick, second son of Lieut.-Col. John Griffiths, formerly of the 6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment, was born at Poona, in India, on Dec. 9, 1838. He was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man, and entered the army in February 1855. He served in the Crimea with the 63rd (now the Manchester) Regiment, was present at the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and gained the Crimean medal. After performing the duties of Brigade-Major at Gibraltar from 1864 to 1870, he retired from the army in the latter year, and obtained an appointment in the Prison Service. After filling the office of Deputy-Governor of Chatham, Millbank, and Wormwood Scrubs Prisons, he was, in 1878, made one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Prisons, a post which he still holds. He is the author of: "Memorials of Millbank," 1875; "Chronicles of Newgate," 1883; "Secrets of the Prison House," 1894; "The Wellington Memorial," and "Wellington and Waterloo," 1898; and the following novels: "Lola," 1876; "Fast and Loose," 1886; "The Wrong Road," 1888; "The Rome Express," 1897. Major Griffiths gained the Czar's gold medal in the international competition for an essay on John Howard, and he was the representative of England at the last Congress of Criminal Anthropology at Geneva in 1896. He married the daughter of Richard Reilly. Addresses: 12 Onslow Square, W.; and the Athenæum.

GRIGGS, John William, United States Attorney-General, was born at Newton, New Jersey, July 10, 1849. He was educated in his native town, and at Lafayette College, where he graduated in 1868; was admitted to the Bar in 1871, and began the practice of the law at Paterson the same year. He was a member of the Lower House of the New Jersey Legislature, 1876-77; was elected a State Senator in 1882, and re-elected in 1885; was President of the State Senate in 1886; was elected Governor of New Jersey in 1895, and resigned that office in January 1898, to become Attorney-General of the United States, under President McKinley, and as successor to Hon. Joseph McKenna.

GRILLO, Marquise del, née Adelaide Ristori, tragic actress, born at Cividale, in Friuli, in 1821, being the child of a poor actor, was trained at a very early age for the stage. She appears to have risen through a long series of struggles to the eminence she ultimately attained. Having accepted in 1855 an engagement in Paris, she sought the favour of a French audience as an interpreter of the tragic muse at the very time Rachel was in the zenith of her fame. Her appearance at such a period was regarded by the French as an open challenge to contest the supremacy of their tragic queen, and they assembled much more disposed to criticise than to applaud. The genius of Ristori, however, triumphed, and from that moment her position has been unassailed. Her reception in England was equally enthusiastic, and she appeared in Spain in 1857, in Holland in 1860, in Russia in 1861, at Constantinople in 1864, in the United States and other parts of the world, with success. William I. of Prussia gave her the medal in sciences and in arts in 1862. Amongst her most famous characters are those of Medea, Lady Macbeth, Fazio, Phædra, Deborah, Judith, Francesca da Riviera, and Camilla. After an absence of fifteen years, Madame Ristori again appeared in London, June 11, 1873, and on November 8 in that year she took her farewell of the English stage at the Queen's Theatre, Manchester. She appeared again, however, on a few occasions in the year 1882, and acted Lady Macbeth with all her old distinction, if with some lack of fire. In 1887 she published "Études et Souvenirs." She is married to the Marquis Capranica del Grillo.

GRIMTHORPE, Lord, Edmund Beckett Denison (afterwards Sir Edmund Beckett, Bart.), Q.C., LL.D., J.P., son of Sir Edmund Beckett, Bart., and Maria, daughter of William Beverley of Beverley, was born at Carlton Hall, near Newark, May 12, 1816, and was educated at Doncaster, Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was scholar. He graduated B.A. and 30th Wrangler in 1838; was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, 1841, and became Q.C. 1854. In 1863 he received the degree of LL.D., and in 1877 was appointed Chancellor and Vicar-General of York Province and diocese. He was for many years leader of the Parliamentary Bar, and retired in 1881. In 1886 he was created a peer. He has always interested himself greatly in architecture, and has designed, built, or restored no small number of churches and houses, including all the new works at St. Alban's Cathedral since 1878, and those at Lincoln's Inn, of which he is a Bencher, and the great Westminster clock and bells. He is President of the British Horological Institute, and until lately of the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance, and is the author of the following works: "Lectures on Church Building," 1856; "Life of Bishop Lonsdale" (his father-in-law), 2nd edit., 1869; "A Book on Building," 2nd edit., 1880; "Should the Revised New Testament be authorised?" (meaning that it should not, S.P.C.K.), 1882; "Astronomy without Mathematics," 7th edit., 1883; "Treatise on Clocks, Watches, and Bells," 7th edit., 1883; "St. Alban's Cathedral and its Restoration," 2nd edit., 1890; "Origin of the Laws of Nature," 2nd edit., 1880, of which the Times wrote, "It is long since we have met with a book which contains so much clear and vigorous reasoning on this subject in so short a compass"; and a "Review of Hume and Huxley on Miracles," S.P.C.K., 2nd edit., 1884; besides numerous pamphlets and reviews chiefly on questions of ecclesiastical law and a multitude of controversial letters in the Times on various subjects, legal, social, scientific, architectural, and theological. Lord Grimthorpe was for long practically senior Q.C. and Bencher of all the Inns of Court. On the death of Mr. Spencer Horatio Walpole in May 1898 he became so in fact. He married, in 1845, Fanny, daughter of the Bishop of Lichfield (Dr. Lonsdale). Addresses: Batch Wood, St. Albans; 35 Queen Anne Street, W.; and Athenæum.

GROSSMITH, George, actor, was born on Dec. 9, 1847, and is the eldest son of the late George Grossmith, a journalist and well-known lecturer. He was educated at the North London Collegiate School, and in 1866 joined his father as a reporter for the Times at Bow Street Police Court. Here, as Charles Dickens before him, he doubtless had abundant opportunities for studying humour and eccentricity in their most pronounced forms. He had himself a great natural talent for mimicry, and in 1870 appeared as an entertainer after the manner of John Parry, whose performance used mainly to consist of burlesques, monologues, singing in different voices, and rapid changes of costume. In 1877 began his famous career as an actor of Gilbert and Sullivan opera, for in that year he appeared in "The Sorcerer" at the Opera Comique. At this theatre and at the Savoy he afterwards played eight principal parts in Gilbert and Sullivan's pieces, making his greatest creations as the Admiral in "Pinafore," and as "Bunthorne" in "Patience." In 1889 he began a series of tours as an entertainer, and gave single-handed humorous and musical recitals both here and in America. He has published "A Society Clown," which is autobiographical, and "The Diary of a Nobody," written in conjunction with Weedon Grossmith. He has composed and written more than a hundred humorous and satirical songs and sketches, as well as "Cups and Saucers." The music for "Haste to the Wedding" (libretto by Gilbert) is from his pen, as also that for "Uncle Samuel." Address: 28 Dorset Square, N.W.

GROSSMITH, Weedon, actor and artist, brother of George Grossmith, began life as an art student at the Royal Academy Schools, and has exhibited frequently at the Royal Academy and Grosvenor. He is part-author with George Grossmith of "The Diary of a Nobody," and has contributed to Punch and the Art Journal. He wrote the play "Commission," and has taken the leading part in it, and in "The Pantomime Rehearsal" and "The New Boy." He has also played as Jacques Strop to Sir Henry Irving's Robert Macaire, and in "The Money Lender" and "Cabinet Minister." From 1894-96 he was lessee and manager of the Vaudeville Theatre. He married, in 1895, May, daughter of Dr. Palfrey, Brook Street, and granddaughter of J. Lever of Guy's Hospital. Address: Old House, Canonbury.

GROVE, Major-General Sir Coleridge, K.C.B., was born at Wandsworth on Sept. 26, 1839, and is the second son of the late Right Hon. Sir W. R. Grove, who died in 1896, and Emma, daughter of the late John Powles. He was educated at a private school, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he was Exhibitioner, and was in the first class, Mathematical Mods., and in the Final School of Mathematics (B.A.). He entered the army, in 1863, as Ensign of the 15th Foot, now known as the East York Regiment. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1866, Captain in 1871, Major in 1881, and Colonel in 1888. General Grove has held many staff appointments, and is now Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief at Head-quarters. In the Egyptian campaign of 1882 he was Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General of the Headquarters Staff, and was mentioned in despatches, receiving the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel and the Osmanieh of the Fourth Class. He was employed on special service in the Soudan expedition of 1884, and held various appointments, among them that of Assistant Adjutant-General for boat service on the Nile. He was also commandant at Gemai. In October 1885 he went to Gibraltar as Assistant Quarter-master-General, but vacated that appointment in February 1886, when he became Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for War. He was created a C.B. in 1887, K.C.B. in 1898, and attained the rank of Major-General in July 1896. Address: Wellington Court, Albert Gate, S.W.

GROVE, Sir George, C.B., D.C.L., LL.D., second son of Thomas Grove, born at Clapham, Surrey, on Aug. 13, 1820, was educated as a civil engineer. In 1841 he erected the first cast-iron lighthouse constructed, on Morant Point, Jamaica; and in 1844 a similar tower on Gibbs Hill, Bermuda. On his return to England he joined the staff of the late Mr. Robert Stephenson, by whom he was employed on the works of the Chester and Holyhead Railway and the Britannia Bridge. In 1850 he succeeded Mr. Scott Russell as Secretary to the Society of Arts, and on the formation of the Crystal Palace Company in 1852 was appointed its secretary, a position he occupied till the end of 1873. After this he became a member of the Board of Direction of the Company, and retained his seat until 1878. He was at one time associated with the house of Macmillan & Co., publishers, and edited Macmillan's Magazine for several years. On the suggestion of Dr. Stanley, the then Dean of Westminster, he became one of the principal contributors to the "Dictionary of the Bible," edited by Dr. William Smith, and took an active part in the formation of the Palestine Exploration Fund, under the patronage of her Majesty. He is also editor of "The Dictionary of Music and Musicians (A.D. 1450-1886)." Some of the principal biographies—amongst them Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Schubert—are from his pen. The University of Durham conferred on Mr. Grove (June 26, 1875) the honorary degree of D.C.L., in recognition of his services to literature. His analyses of classical orchestral music for the Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace, and his zeal as a propagandist of good music, are well known. Early in 1882 he was appointed by the Prince of Wales to be Director of the Royal College of Music at Kensington, but resigned this post in November 1894, and was succeeded by Dr. Hubert Parry. Sir George Grove is one of the literary executors of the late Dean of Westminster, with whom he visited the United States in 1878. He was knighted by the Queen at Windsor, May 24, 1883, and received the Companionship of the Bath in 1895. He is married to Harriet, daughter of the late Rev. Charles Bradley. Addresses: Lower Sydenham, S.E.; and Athenæum.

GROVE, Thomas Newcomen Archibald, J.P., founder, proprietor, and late editor of the New Review, is the second son of the late Captain Edward Grove and Elizabeth, daughter of Colonel Ponsonby Watts. He was educated privately and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he took double honours, 1879-80, and studied for the Bar, passing all his examinations at the Inner Temple. He founded the New Review, and edited it from its commencement till 1894. After unsuccessfully contesting Winchester in 1886, he was elected for West Ham (North) in 1892, and sat for that constituency until 1895. Mr. Grove has travelled extensively on the Continent, in Asia, and in Africa. He was married, in 1889, to Kate Sara, daughter of Henry James Sibley. Addresses: 11 Hans Road, Hans Place, S.W.; and Berry Down Court, Overton, Hants.

GROVES, Charles Edward, F.R.S., the son of Charles Groves, of Highgate, was born there on March 4, 1841, and was educated at the College, Brixton Hill, under the late Dr. Wilson, and at the Royal College of Chemistry (Royal School of Mines) under Dr. A. W. Hofmann, to whom he was afterwards private assistant, and then assistant in the Laboratory of the College. In 1862 he went as assistant to Dr. Stenhouse, with whom he remained until his death in 1880. In 1882 he was appointed Lecturer in Practical Chemistry at Guy's Hospital, where he subsequently became Senior Lecturer in Chemistry and also Lecturer in Dental Metallurgy; and in 1885 consulting chemist to the Hon. the Conservators of the River Thames. In 1878 he became sub-editor of the Journal of the Chemical Society, and on the decease of Mr. H. Watts, in 1884, succeeded him as editor of the journal. He was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1871, and of the Royal Society in 1883, and is one of the founders of the Institute of Chemistry, of which he was for many years Registrar and Secretary. He is the editor of several important works: Dr. F. Crace-Calvert's "Dyeing and Calico Printing," 1876; "Miller's Chemistry; Part II., Inorganic Chemistry," 1878; and (in conjunction with Dr. Armstrong) of Part III., "Organic Chemistry," 1880; and "Fuel," in 1889, the first volume of Groves' and Thorp's "Chemical Technology," the second volume of which, "Lighting," was published in 1895. He is also the sole author, or joint author with his friend, the late Dr. Stenhouse, of numerous papers on "Organic Chemistry," being the discoverer of tetrabromide of carbon of Betanaphthaquinone, and of the corresponding diquinone, the last two belonging to classes of compounds hitherto unknown. Address: 352 Kennington Road, S.E.

GRUBB, Sir Howard, F.R.S., was educated privately, and at Trinity College, Dublin. He is the head of a Dublin manufactory of astronomical instruments, and he contracts for these instruments to the British and also to foreign governments. He received the Cunningham Gold Medal in 1881; was Hon. Secretary of the Royal Dublin Society from 1889 to 1893; and has been Vice-President of the Royal Dublin Society since 1893. Sir H. Grubb is the author of numerous papers on scientific subjects. Address: 51 Kenilworth Square, Dublin.

GRUNDY, Sydney, dramatist, was born at Manchester, March 23, 1848, and is the only son of the late Alderman Charles Sydney Grundy, ex-Mayor of Manchester. Educated at Owens College, now the Victoria University, he was called to the Bar at Michaelmas 1869. He is author and part author of the following and other plays and operettas: "A Little Change" (Haymarket), 1872; "Mammon" (Strand), 1877; "The Snowball" (Strand), 1879; "In Honour Bound" (Prince of Wales's), 1880; "The Vicar of Bray" (Globe), 1882; "The Glass of Fashion" (Globe), 1883; "The Queen's Favourite" (Olympic), 1883; "The Silver Shield" (Strand), 1885; "Clito" (Princess's), 1886; "The Bells of Haslemere" (Adelphi), 1887; "The Arabian Nights" (Globe), 1887; "The Pompadour" (Haymarket), 1888; "The Union Jack" (Adelphi), 1888; "Mamma" (Court), 1888; "A White Lie" (Court), 1889; "A Pair of Spectacles" (Garrick), 1890; "A Village Priest" (Haymarket), 1890; "A Fool's Paradise" (Garrick), 1892; "Haddon Hall" (Savoy), 1892; "Sowing the Wind" (Comedy), 1893; "An Old Jew" (Garrick), 1894; "A Bunch of Violets" (Haymarket), 1894; "The New Woman" (Comedy), 1894; "Slaves of the Ring" (Garrick), 1894; "The Greatest of These" (Garrick), 1896; "A Marriage of Convenience" (Haymarket), 1897; "The Silver Key" (Her Majesty's), 1897. Addresses: Winter Lodge, Addison Road, Kensington; and 5 Beach Houses, Margate.

GUBERNATIS, Count Angelo de, an Italian author, born at Turin, April 7, 1840, was educated in the University of Turin, where he received the degree of Doctor of Philology. He was appointed in 1860 Professor of Rhetoric in the Gymnasium of Chieri, near Turin; was sent in 1862, at the expense of the Government, to Berlin, where he studied under Professors Bopp and Weber; became Extraordinary Professor of Sanscrit in the University of Florence (Istituto di Studi Superiori) in 1863, and Ordinary Professor in 1869. Signor De Gubernatis has obtained celebrity as a dramatist, a lyric poet, a journalist, a critic, an Orientalist, and a mythologist. He made his début with his tragedy entitled "Pere delle Vigne." The principal character was sustained by the celebrated actor Ernesto Rossi, and the piece proved a great success. Afterwards he published the following dramas in verse: "La Morte di Catone," "Romolo," 1874; "Il Rè Nala," "Il Rè Dasarata," "Mâyâ," "Romolo Augustolo," and "Savitri: Idillio Drammatico Indiano," 1878. He has founded five journals: L'Italia Letteraria, 1862; La Civiltà Italiana, 1869; La Rivista Orientale, 1867; La Rivista Europea, 1869; and the Bollettino Italiano degli Studi Orientali, 1876. He is the Italian correspondent of the Athenæum and of the Contemporary Review of London, of the International Review of New York, of the Deutsche Rundschau of Berlin, and of the Wiensnák Europy of St. Petersburg. Among his scientific works the following deserve special mention: "Piccolo Enciclopedia Indiana," Florence, 1867; "Fonti vediche dell' Epopea," Florence, 1867; "Memoria sui Viaggiatori Italiani nelle Indie Orientali," Florence, 1867; "Storia comparata degli Usi Nuziali Indo-Europei," Milan, 1869; "Storia comparati degli Usi Funerari e Natalizii," Milan, 1877; "Zoological Mythology: or The Legends of Animals," 2 vols., London, 1872, translated into German, Leipzig, 1873, and into French, Paris, 1874; "Lecture sopra la Mitologia Vedica," Florence, 1874; "Ricordi biografici," Florence, 1873; "Storia dei Viaggiatori Italiani nelle Indie," Leghorn, 1875; "Matériaux pour servir à l'Histoire des Études Orientales en Italie," Paris and Florence, 1876; and "Mythologie des Plantes," 2 vols. Paris, 1878. He is General Secretary of the Italian Oriental Academy. In May 1878 he delivered in the Taylor Institute at Oxford a series of three lectures on the life and works of Manzoni. They were published at Florence in 1878.

under the title of "Alessandro Manzoni: Studio Biografico." He acted as General Secretary to the Congress of Orientalists held at Florence in September 1878. In the same year he began publishing a biographical dictionary of contemporary littérateurs, of which a revised edition was published in French between 1888 and 1891.

GUESDE, Jules Basile, French Socialist, was born in Paris, Nov. 11, 1845, and at first was a translator for the Ministry of the Interior. He then entered journalism, and advocated the most advanced views. During the war of 1870 he was at Marseilles, editing a paper called Les Droits de l'Homme, and was condemned to five years' imprisonment, which he evaded by escaping to Switzerland. He spent some years in that country and in Italy, only returning to France after the amnesty of 1890. He married one of the daughters of Karl Marx, and with him enunciated the doctrine of collectivism, whose aim is to do away with patriotism, replacing it by internationalism. In 1893 he was elected member for Roubaix, and in 1894 advocated a minimum wage for agricultural labourers. During the same session he took up much of the time of the House, laying down collectivist doctrines, which, however, were never adopted. His works consist of popular pamphlets on collectivism.

GUILBERT, Yvette. See SCHILLER, MADAME.

GILDFORD, Bishop of. See SUMNER, THE RIGHT REV. GEORGE HENRY.

GUILLAIN, M., French statesman, passed through the École Polytechnique and adopted engineering as his profession, in which he has attained some eminence. M. Guillain was formerly Inspector-General of Roads and Bridges, and afterwards was appointed to the headship of a Department at the Ministry of Public Works. He was returned, in 1896, at a by-election for Dunkirk. In October 1898 he attained ministerial rank as Minister for the Colonies in M. Dupuy's government.

GUILLAUME, Jean Baptiste Claude Eugène, Hon. R.A., a distinguished French sculptor, was born at Montbard, Côte d'Or, Feb. 3, 1822, and after passing through the usual course of studies in the College of Dijon, went to Paris to become a pupil of Pradier at the École des Beaux-Arts, where he obtained the Prix de Rome in 1845. On the reorganisation of the École des Beaux-Arts at the close of 1873, M. Guillaume was appointed to a Professorship; and a twelvemonth later was nominated Director of that Institution. He was elected a member of the Institute in 1862; promoted to the rank of Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1867; and elected an honorary member of the Royal Academy of London, December 15, 1869. This artist's name is familiar to those visitors at the London International Exhibition of 1862 who noticed "The Tomb of the Gracchi," which was suggested by the double busts of the great brethren placed as on a tomb, side by side. This is now in the Luxembourg, together with his "Anacreon." His statue of Napoleon I., which was at the French Universal Exhibition of 1867, attracted great attention. Among the other productions of his chisel are: "Theseus finding his Father's Sword on a Rock"; "Anacreon's Guests," a bas-relief; bust of M. Hittorff in the Universal Exposition of 1855; "The Lives of SS. Clotilde and Valérie," bas-reliefs, in the new church of St. Clotilde; the statue of L'Hôpital, in the new Louvre; the "Monument of Colbert," at Rheims; and a bust of Monseigneur Darboy. He was sent to Rome in 1891 as head of the French Art School, having in 1887 been appointed Professor of Drawing at the École Polytechnique. His Paris address is 3 Rue Jean Bart.

GUINNESS, The Rev. H. O. Grattan, D.D., born August 1835, near Dublin, is the son of Captain John Guinness, H.E.I.C.S., and grandson of Arthur Guinness, of Beaumont, co. Dublin. He was educated at private schools and at New College, London; ordained, in 1856, as an undenominational Evangelist, a preacher of the Gospel both in Great Britain and Ireland, in America, and on the Continent. He is the Founder and Director of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, Harley House, Bow, London, E., which has sent out over 500 missionaries into all parts of the world. Dr. Grattan Guinness is the author of "The Approaching End of the Age, viewed in the Light of History, Prophecy, and Science," a work which has passed through ten editions; "Light for the Last Days"; "Romanism and the Reformation"; "The Divine Programme of the World's History," and other works. Address: Harley House, Bow, E., &c.

GUINNESS, Mrs. H. Grattan, wife of the above, daughter of Ed. Marlborough FitzGerald, and granddaughter of Maurice FitzGerald, of Upper Merrion St., Dublin, born in April 1831, and married in 1860, is one of the earliest woman preachers of the Gospel (members of the Society of Friends excepted); Secretary of the above Missionary Institute; and Secretary of the first Christian Mission on the Congo, the Livingstone Inland Mission; and joint authoress of the above works, and authoress of "The Life of Mrs. Henry Denning," "The New World of Central Africa"; and editor of "The Regions Beyond," &c.

GUINON, Georges, M.D., was born in Paris, Aug. 6, 1859; commenced his medical studies in 1877; and has worked chiefly under the direction of Professors Charcot and Bouchard. He obtained his degree of M.D. in 1889; and soon after was appointed Chef de clinique des maladies du système nerveux, at the Salpêtrière. He has written many articles, chiefly on hysteria, has assisted the late Prof. Charcot in his "Leçons sur les maladies du système nerveux"; is secretary to the Editor of the "Archives de Neurologie," and Editor of the "Nouvelle Iconographie de la Salpêtrière." His Paris address is 35 Rue de l'Université.

GULLY, The Right Hon. William Court, M.A., Q.C., Speaker of the House of Commons, was born in London on Aug. 29, 1835, and is the second son of James Manby Gully, M.D., of Great Malvern. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1856 was senior in the Moral Science Tripos. During his University days he was President of the Union. Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1860, he went on the Northern Circuit; was made Q.C. in 1877 and Bencher of his Inn in 1879; and was Recorder of Wigan, 1886-95. He sat as Liberal for Carlisle from 1886 to 1895, when he was elected Speaker in April in succession to Lord Peel, and re-elected by the Conservative Government in August. In 1866 he married Elizabeth Ann Walford, eldest daughter of Thomas Selby. Addresses: Speaker's House, Westminster, S.W.; and Athenæum.

GUNTER, Archibald Clavering, Ph.B., was born in Liverpool, Oct. 25, 1847. When about five years of age he was taken to California by his parents, arriving there in February 1853. He was educated partly in England and partly in California, taking the degree of Ph.B. in the University College, San Francisco. From 1867 to 1874 he followed his profession of mining and civil engineer, in Nevada, Utah, and other western parts of the United States. He early showed a taste for literature; and, during his collegiate course, and while following his profession of engineer, wrote several plays, one of them being produced at the California Theatre under the name of "Cuba," and another at the Grand Opera House, San Francisco, under the title of "Our Reporter." In 1874 he became a stockbroker in San Francisco, operating until 1877, when he went to New York, intending to make literature his occupation. His first play, which was produced in New York at the Union Square Theatre, August 1889, was "Two Nights in Rome." In February 1890, "Fresh, the American," was played at the Park Theatre. Since then he has had a number of plays performed, among them "Courage," "After the Opera," "The Wall Street Bandit," "Prince Karl," "The Deacon's Daughter," and his own dramatisation of his first story, "Mr. Barnes of New York," published in 1887. This proved a great success as a novel, and has since been published in several different languages, and by four or five English publishing houses. His second novel, "Mr. Potter of Texas," was published in 1888, and has been as successful as its predecessor. Since then he has issued "That Frenchman," 1889; "Miss Nobody of Nowhere," 1890; "Small Boys in Big Boots," 1890; "Miss Dividends," 1892; "Baron Montez of Panama and Paris," 1893; "The King's Stockbroker," and "A Princess of Paris," 1894; "The First of the English," "The Ladies' Juggernaut," and "Her Senator," 1895; "The Love Adventures of Al-Mansur," 1896; and "Bob Covington," 1897. His dramatisation of his novel, "Mr. Potter of Texas," met with marked success in the United States. Mr. Gunter is perhaps the only author who has successfully carried on the business of publishing his own works.

GÜNTHER, Albert Charles Lewis Gotthilf, M.A., Ph.D., M.D., F.R.S., born at Esslingen, Württemberg, October 3, 1830, and educated at the Universities of Tübingen, Berlin, and Bonn, entered the service of the Trustees of the British Museum in 1857, and was appointed Keeper of the Department of Zoology in 1875; since that time he has devoted himself exclusively to the administration of the extensive collections under his charge. Dr. Günther, who is a member of many academies and learned societies at home and abroad, has published: "Die Fische des Neckars," Stuttgart, 1853; "Medicinische Zoologie," Stuttgart, 1858; "Catalogue of Colubrine Snakes in the Collection of the British Museum," London, 1858; "Catalogue of the Batrachia Salientia in the Collection of the British Museum," 1859; "The Reptiles of British India," 1864; "Catalogues of Fishes," vols. i.-viii., London, 1859-70; "The Fishes of the South Seas," Hamburg, 1873-78; "The Gigantic Land Tortoises, Living and Extinct," London, 1877; "An Introduction to the Study of Fishes," Edin., 1880; the Reports on the "Shore Fishes," "Deep-Sea Fishes," and "Pelagic Fishes," in the "Voyage of H.M.S. Challenger," 1887-88; and numerous papers in the Philosophical Transactions, the Proceedings of the Zoological and Linnean Societies, and other periodicals. He is the founder of the "Record of Zoological Literature," of which he has edited the first six volumes, 1864-70; and co-editor of the "Annals and Magazine of Natural History." The Royal Society awarded to him, in 1878, one of its Royal Medals for his merits in advancing zoological science, and especially for his herpetological and ichthyological researches. Dr. Günther retired from the Natural History Museum in 1895 under the age limit. He introduced into the galleries those groups, copied from life, illustrating the habits of animals, which have been such an attraction to visitors.

GUTHRIE, James Cargill, was born Aug. 27, 1814, at Airnefoul farm, in the parish of Glamis, Forfarshire. He was appointed in 1868 Principal Librarian to the Dundee Free Library, the first institution of the kind in Scotland established under the Free Libraries Act. He is the author of numerous poems and popular Scotch songs, and some anthems and hymns, which have been set to music by Dr. Spark and other composers.

GUTHRIE, Thomas Anstey (who publishes under the name of T. Anstey), was born Aug. 8, 1856, at Kensington, and is the eldest son of Thomas Austen Guthrie. He was educated at a private school, and at King's College School, Strand. He matriculated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, in 1875; took his degree in the Law Tripos, 1879; and was called to the Bar by the Benchers of the Middle Temple, 1880. He read in chambers with a conveyancer and equity draughtsman, but never practised as a barrister. He published short stories in various magazines between 1878-81. His first book, "Vice Versa," appeared in 1882, and achieved an immense success, running through many editions within the year of publication. It was also dramatised and performed on the London and provincial stage for many nights. It was followed in 1883 by "The Giant's Robe"; "The Black Poodle," and other stories, 1884; "The Tinted Venus," 1885; "The Fallen Idol," 1886; "The Pariah," 1889; "Voces Populi," reprinted from Punch; "The Travelling Companions"; "Under the Rose"; "Lyre and Lancet" (Punch); "The Statement of Stella Maberley"; and, in 1897, "Baboo Jabberjee, B.A." (Punch).

GUTHRIE, William, was born at Culhorn, Stranraer, N.B., 1835, being the son of the late George Guthrie, Esq., of Appleby and Ernambrie. He was educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities, and was admitted an advocate at the Scotch Bar in 1861. Mr. Guthrie was appointed one of the Commissioners under the Truck Commission Act, in December 1871; Registrar of Friendly Societies in Scotland from October 1869 to February 1874; and Sheriff-Substitute of Lanarkshire at Glasgow, January 1874. He edited the Journal of Jurisprudence (Edinburgh), from 1866 to 1874; and was one of the Reporters of Court of Session Cases, Scotland, from 1871 to 1874. He has published a translation of Savigny on "Private International Law" (System of Modern Roman Law, vol. viii.), 1869; and edition of Erskine's "Principles of Scots Law," 1870 (2nd edition, 1874); two editions of Bell's "Principles of the Law of Scotland," 1871 and 1876; "The Law of Trade Unions in England and Scotland," 1873; "Select Cases decided in the Sheriff Courts of Scotland," 1879.

GUYOT, Yves, French statesman and writer, was born at Dinan, Sept. 6, 1843, and was educated at Rennes. He came to Paris in 1867, took to journalism, and became one of the contributors of the Rappel at its foundation. During the Commune he was instrumental in saving from fire the Archives Nationales, and the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers. He was elected to the Municipal Council of Paris in 1874, and became one of its most active members. In 1876 he organised the fête in honour of the centenary of Voltaire, and was a member of the International Congress of Genoa to abolish the State regulation of prostitution. In the same year he started a campaign against the Préfet de Police in La Lanterne, and after being imprisoned for six months, he brought about the resignation of the Préfet, M. Gigot, and the Minister of the Interior, M. de Marcère (1879). In 1885 he was elected to the Chamber for the Department of the Seine, and in 1888 was rapporteur of the Budget. From 1889 to 1892 he was Minister of Public Works in the Tirard and Freycinet Cabinets; and he was noted for being present at every opening of any building or railway throughout France, which gained for him the nickname of the "Wandering Jew." He is one of the few Ministers who have never accepted the Legion of Honour. His chief works are: "La Vérité sur l'Empire," 1875; "L'Enfer Social," 1882; "La Prostitution," 1881; "La Traite des Vierges à Londres," 1885, and a novel, "Un Drôle," 1884.

GYE, Madame, née Marie Emma La-jeunesse, but popularly known as Madame Albani, American singer, was born of French-Canadian parentage, at Chambly, near Montreal, in 1851. She was educated in the Convent of the Sacred Heart at Montreal, but her first musical training came from her father, who was himself a skilful musician. In 1864 he removed to Albany, N.Y., where her singing in the cathedral attracted much attention. A little later she was sent to Europe for the more thorough instruction which she could not obtain in America, and under the care of Baroness Lafitte, was two years in Paris, where she studied with the famous Duprez. She then became a pupil of the old maestro Lamperti at Milan. Several years of hard study followed, till at last, in 1870, she made her début at Messina under the name of Albani, adopted out of compliment to the city where her musical promise was first recognised. Immediately afterwards she sang at Malta, and then, in the winter of 1871-72, at the theatre of La Pergola at Florence. Her crowning effort was in the "Mignon" of Ambroise Thomas, already condemned in four theatres in Italy, but which, in Madame Albani's hands, obtained the complete success which all the parts identified with her have met with. When her fame was established in Italy she appeared at the Royal Italian Opera, London, in 1872, and since then has been a great favourite both in this country and the United States. In St. Petersburg, Paris, Berlin, and most of the European capitals she has been received with equal enthusiasm, and she is to-day certainly one of the most popular singers in the world. In 1883 she made a tour of the United States, and in May 1886 sang the ode written by Tennyson for the opening of the Colonial Exhibition in London. Madame Albani, before leaving Scotland in October 1890, sang at Balmoral before the Queen and the Royal Family, on which occasion her Majesty was pleased to give Madame Albani a valuable picture containing portraits of the whole of the Royal Family at the time of her Jubilee. In May 1893 she sang at the opening of the Imperial Institute, and in the autumn of 1894 again sang at Balmoral. Besides singing in opera, Madame Albani has studied specially oratorio singing, and she is now acknowledged to be the first oratorio singer in England, and is engaged at all our principal festivals. In 1878 she was married to Mr. Ernest Gye, the theatrical manager. Addresses: 16 The Boltons, South Kensington; and Old Mar Lodge, Balmoral.

HAAG, Carl, R.W.S., F.R.I., Court Painter to H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, eldest son of Herr Christopher Wilhelm Haag, born at Erlangen, in Bavaria, on April 20, 1820, began his artistic education at the Academy of Nuremberg in 1837, afterwards continuing it at Munich and Rome. In 1847 he settled in this country, and his admiration for the perfection of English water-colour painting induced him to abandon oil, and adopt water-colour in preference. In 1850 he was elected member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours. He has been a constant contributor to the Exhibitions of that Society, the subjects of his earlier pictures being chiefly from the Tyrol, Dalmatia, and Montenegro. In 1858 the reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha conferred upon him the honorary title of Hofmaler; he was introduced at the Court of Queen Victoria by the late Prince of Leiningen, and her Majesty gave him many commissions for sketches of life in the Highlands of Scotland, and also for important pictures, such as "The Royal Family ascending Loch-na-Gar"; "Evening at Balmoral—the Stags brought Home"; "The Queen and Prince Consort fording Pool Tarf"; and others, which were exhibited, and have since been engraved. He then travelled in Greece, Egypt, Syria, and Palestine, painting important views of Athens, Baalbek, Palmyra, and many of the Holy Places in Jerusalem, among them "The Ancient Vestibule beneath the Temple Area"; "The Golden Gateway"; and "The Holy Rock in the so-called Mosque of Omar"; most of which were finished on the spot. His chief aim, however, was to study the life of the Bedaween tribes, and the scenes of different deserts, for which purpose he made long stays among these nomadic hordes, learning their mode of life, their manners and customs, and has since painted a series of pictures illustrative of Arab life, the best known of which are "Aghile Agha receiving the visit of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales and suite in his Encampment near Mount Tabor"; "The tribe of the Anazeh Bedaween departing from Palmyra"; "A Bivouac in the Desert"; "The Arrival at a Well in the Desert"; "Preparing the Evening Meal"; "Desert Hospitality"; "Happiness in the Desert"; "A Bedaween's Devotion"; "Danger in the Desert"; "On the Alert"; "Ready for Defence"; "A Caravan of Bedaween Encamping near the Sphinx of Ghizeh against an approaching Sandstorm"; and "La Illah il Allah," 1889. A special exhibition of Mr. C. Haag's works was held at the Goupil Galleries in Bond Street, 1885. He is an honorary member of the Royal Society of British Artists in London, and a Membre Honoraire de la Société Royale Belge des Aquarellistes of Brussels. He received the Royal Bavarian Cross of Merit in 1872. In 1874 he became an Officer of the Order of the Medjidieh; in 1878 a Knight of the Legion of Honour of France; in 1887 a Knight-Commander of the Saxe-Coburg-Gotha Family Order; in 1893 he was decorated with the Saxe-Coburg-Gotha Cross of Merit in Art and Science, and in 1897 the Jubilee Medal. In 1866 he married Ida, the only daughter of General Buettner of Laneburg, Hanover, by whom he has three sons and one daughter. Addresses: Ida Villa, Lyndhurst Road, Hampstead, N.W.; Roter Turm, Oberwesel.

HABBERTON, John, was born in Brooklyn, New York, in 1842. At the age of eight years he was taken to the West, where he was educated chiefly in the common schools of Southern Illinois. From 1859 until he entered the army in 1862 he was connected with the publishing house of Harper Brothers, New York. He was literary editor of the Christian Union from 1873 to 1876, and since then has been an editorial writer on the New York Herald. His first literary work was a series of sketches of Western life. This was followed, in 1877, by "Helen's Babies," of which nearly a quarter of a million copies have been sold in the United States, besides large editions in England and the colonies, and translations into French, German, Spanish, Italian, Danish, Swedish, and Bohemian. He has since written "The Barton Experiment," 1876; "The Jericho Road," "Other People's Children," "The Scripture Club of Valley Rest," and "Some Folks," 1877; "The Crew of the Sam Weller," "The Worst Boy in Town," 1879; "Just One Day," 1880; "Who was Paul Grayson?" 1883; "Bowsham Puzzle," and "George Washington," 1884; "Brue-ton's Bayou," 1887; "Country Luck," 1888; "All He Knew," "Well Out of It," and "Couldn't Say No," 1889; "Out at Twinnett's," 1890; "The Chautauquans," 1891; "A Lucky Lover," 1892; "Trif and Trixy," 1897. He also published in 1875 a series of selections from the "Spectator," comprising "The Roger de Coverley Papers"; and in 1878 "Selections from the Tatler, Guardian, and Freeholder"; and wrote, in conjunction with Charles L. Norton, "Canoeing in Kanuckia," 1878. His only dramatic work, "Cracon Crankett," has been played more than 500 times.

HABERSHON, Samuel Herbert, was educated at Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree in 1883, at Saint Bartholomew's and Vienna, M.B. 1885, M.D. 1887, M.R.C.S. Eng. 1884, F.R.C.P. Lond. 1891. His career at St. Bartholomew's was distinguished, he having been Bentley Prizeman in 1883, Lawrence Scholar and Gold Medallist and Kirkes Gold Medallist in 1884. He is a Fellow of the Royal Med. Chir. Society and of the Medical Society of London, and holds important appointments as physician to various hospitals. Outside the profession he has for some years been known as one of the oculists, and latterly as the constant medical attendant, of the late Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, at whose deathbed he was present. He has contributed papers, chiefly on phthisis, to the learned journals. Address: 70 Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

HACKER, Arthur, A.R.A., is the son of Mr. Edward Hacker, formerly a line engraver. He was born in London, Sept. 25, 1858, and educated at St. John's College, and afterwards in Paris. On his return to London he commenced the study of art, gaining admission to the Academy Schools with his first drawing from the antique. In 1878 he exhibited his first picture at the Royal Academy, and has since been a constant exhibitor. When he was twenty-one he went to Paris and entered the studio of M. Bonnat. In France he painted "Her Daughter's Legacy," which was exhibited in 1881, and a year later "The Relics of the Brave." This was the first of a series of cottage interiors, the most notable of which are "The Mother," "The Wonder Story," "The Fisherman's Wife," "The Cradle Song," and "The Children's Prayer." In 1881 he travelled through Spain, and spent some time in Morocco. His subject now changed, and he painted "Pelagia and Philammon," "The Waters of Babylon," "Persephone," "Væ Victis," "Christ and the Magdalen," "The Annunciation" (bought by the Chantrey Fund), "Syrinx," "Circe," and the "Sleep of the Gods." In February 1894 Mr. Hacker was elected an A.R.A. In 1895 Mr. Hacker exhibited at the Royal Academy "Daphne" and portraits of the Hon. Mrs. Newdigate and of John T. Brunner, Esq., M.P.; in 1896, "The Cloister or the World" and a portrait of F. A. Newdigate, Esq., M.P.; in 1897 "And there was a Great Cry in Egypt," "The Sea Maiden," and a portrait of Miss Beatrice Delmé Radcliffe. He has the distinction of having seven pictures in public galleries. Addresses: 74 Fellow's Road, South Hampstead, N.W.; 7 Cavendish Buildings, Old Cavendish Street, W.

HADEN, Sir Francis-Seymour, F.R.C.S., P.R.E., was born Sept. 16, 1818, at 62 Sloane Street, London, and educated at University College and at the Sorbonne, Paris. He is the son of Charles Thomas Haden, M.D., Edinburgh. He became in 1842 a Member, and in 1857 a Fellow, of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. The International Jury Report on Surgical Instruments, drawn up by Mr. Haden, was the first public document in which the operation of Ovariectomy (till then universally condemned) was recommended. Three remarkable letters, contributed by him to the Times, under the title of "Earth to Earth," in January, May, and June 1875, brought about considerable amelioration in the practices pursued by undertakers and cemetery companies, and, while condemning cremation, advocated a system of interment founded on reason and sanitary considerations, which has ever since been successfully carried out at Woking. Sir Seymour is also the author of certain art publications, having for their object to restore the art of the painter-engraver, and to protest against the usurpation of his place in the Royal Academy by the copyist-engraver; and failing in that object, to bring about the creation of a society, now become a Royal Society, for the independent cultivation of that art. Of this Society Sir Seymour Haden is naturally the President, while his own contributions in illustration of the art it represents have been considerable, and consist: (1) Of a large folio work (in French) entitled "Études à l'Eau Forte," published in Paris and in London in 1865 and 1866; (2) Of a large number of engraved plates (200 in all), which have been catalogued and described by Sir William R. Drake, F.S.A., under the title of "The Etched Work of Francis-Seymour Haden," together with some fifteen others catalogued after Sir William's death by M. Beraldi of Paris. He is a member of the Athenæum, and was of the Burlington Fine Arts Clubs, in the formation of which latter he had a large share. The most influential of his literary works, perhaps, after the three letters to the Times referred to, have been a paper entitled "Cremation an Incentive to Crime," read at the Church Congress at Birmingham in 1893, and a paper on "The Relative Claims of Etching and Engraving to rank as Fine Arts, and to be represented as such in the Royal Academy of Arts," read at the Society of Arts in May 1893. Sir Seymour Haden received the honour of knighthood in 1894. In 1847 he married Dasha Delano, daughter of Major Whistler, U.S.A. Addresses: Woodcote Manor, Alresford, Hants; and Athenæum.

HADING, Madame Jane, née Jeanette Hadingue, was born at Marseilles, Nov. 25, 1859. At the age of three she played Blanche de Caylus in "Le Bossu," her father at the same time playing the leading character. Some years later she was sent to the Marseilles Conservatoire, where she won considerable distinction. On leaving she entered upon an engagement at the Algiers Theatre, and when but fourteen played Zanetto in "Le Passant," Stefano in "Chef d'œuvre inconnu," the blind girl in "Les Deux Orphelines," and Pedro in "Giroflé Girofla." From Algiers she went to Cairo, to perform at the Khedival Theatre, where she performed in "La Fille de Madame Angot." She returned to Marseilles in 1876, and for a time devoted herself to drama and comedy, but the lyric stage again attracted her, and she went to Paris. At the Palais Royal she played "La Chaste Suzanne," and at the Renaissance, in 1879, she was the original Jolie Persane and Belle Lurette, and the heroine in "Héloïse and Abelard," and "L'Œil Crevé" (1881). At the Gymnase in 1883 she again appeared in comedy as Paulette in Gyp's "Autour du Mariage." The piece was a failure, but M^{me}. Hading made a great personal success. In December 1883 she was the original Claire de Beaulieu in "Le Maître de Forges," and her impersonation of this part confirmed her success. In January 1885 she appeared in this character in London, at the Royalty Theatre. In 1889, in company with M. Coquelin, Madame Hading made an American tour. On her return to Paris she appeared at the Vaudeville in the "Comtesse Romani," by Dumas filz, and in Lemaitre's "Député Leveau." She then fulfilled a short engagement at the Port-Saint-Martin, where she appeared as Faustine in the play of that name by Count Tziewuski. Returning to the Vaudeville she played in a brilliant revival of M. Sardou's "Nos Intimes" (1891), and contributed to the success of M. Lavedan's "Prince d'Aurec" in June 1892. She afterwards joined the Français, and in 1894 came to London and played in "Les Effrontés." In December 1895 she appeared at the Gymnase in Sardou's "Marcelle." Paris address: 9 Boulevard de la Saussaie, Neuilly.

HAECKEL, Ernst, a celebrated German naturalist and writer, was born at Potsdam, Feb. 16, 1834, and studied medicine and Science at Würzburg, Berlin, and Vienna. In 1859 he went to Italy, and studied zoology at Naples and Messina, returning in 1861 to Jena, where, after further studies, he was appointed Professor of Zoology. Between 1866 and 1875 he travelled over the greater part of Europe, besides visiting Asia Minor, Syria, and Egypt. In 1881 he visited India and Ceylon, and published an account of his travels. He is regarded in Germany as the foremost supporter of Darwin's theories. Amongst his works may be mentioned: "Natural History of Creation," translated into twelve languages, 8th edit., 1889; "Generelle Morphologie," 1866; "Gastræa-Theorie," 1873; "The Origin of the Human Race," 4th edit., 1868; "Life in the Deep Seas," 1870; "The History of Man's Development," 1874; "Anthropogenie," 3rd edit., 1877; "Popular Lectures on Evolution," 1878; "Origin and Development of the Tissues of Animals," 1884; "Souvenirs of Algeria," 1890. His Monographs on the "Radiolaria," 1862; "Calospongia," 1872; "Medusæ," 1881; and "Siphonophoræ," 1888, illustrated by 200 original plates, should also be mentioned. His contributions to the Zoology of the "Voyage of H.M.S. Challenger" comprehend four volumes of that work, with 230 plates. Notwithstanding splendid offers from the Universities of Würzburg, Vienna, Strasburg, and Bonn, Haeckel has decided to remain at the small University of Jena, the peaceful solitude of which gives him the best opportunity for continuous scientific work. At the meeting of the Zoological Congress at Cambridge in 1898, he was the president of his section, and gave an address on the progress of Darwinism up to that date. At a congregation subsequently held, the degree of Doctor of Science was conferred upon him, the Public Orator, Dr. Sandys, remarking of him that he had been a leading exponent in Germany of the theories of a great Cambridge man—Charles Darwin.

HAGARTY, The Hon. John Hawkins, D.C.L., Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario, was born in Dublin on Sept. 17, 1816. He entered Trinity College, Dublin, 1832; but two years afterwards emigrated to Canada, where he studied law, and in 1840 was admitted to the Bar of the Upper Province. His taste and love of letters for a time drew him to literature; but, continuing the practice of his profession, he was made a Queen's Counsel in 1850, and elevated to the Bench in 1856. In 1868 he was appointed Chief-Justice of the Common Pleas; was subsequently transferred to the Queen's Bench; and in 1878 received the appointment of Chief-Justice of Ontario, which he still holds.

HAGGARD, Henry Rider, J.P., of Ditchingham House, Norfolk, sixth son of the late William Meybohm Rider Haggard, J.P., D.L., of Bradenham Hall, Norfolk, was born June 22, 1856. He accompanied Sir Henry Bulwer, G.C.M.G., as secretary, to Natal in 1875, and served on the staff of Sir Theophilus Shepstone, K.C.M.G., the Special Commissioner to the Transvaal, 1876-77, and together with Colonel Brooke, R.E., formally hoisted the British flag over the Transvaal territory, on May 24, 1877. He was subsequently appointed to the post of Master of the High Court of the Transvaal. During the Zulu War he was elected Adjutant and Lieutenant of the Pretoria Horse, a gentleman volunteer corps, raised for service in Zululand, but which was prevented from proceeding there by the threatening action of the Boers. He retired from the Colonial service in 1879, and returned to England. Mr. Rider Haggard's first book, of a political character, published in 1882, is named "Cetywayo and his White Neighbours, or Remarks on Recent Events in South Africa." This work was favourably received here and in South Africa, but, owing to its author being unknown, it did not then attain a large circulation. Subsequently, he published "Dawn," a novel, 1884, and "The Witch's Head," a novel, 1885. Both these books were well received, especially the latter, but in 1886 he brought out "King Solomon's Mines," the work by which he established his reputation. Among other well-known works by the same writer we may mention "She," "Jess," "Allan Quatermain," "Colonel Quaritch, V.C.," "Cleopatra," "Beatrice," "Eric," "The World's Desire," in collaboration with Mr. A. Lang; "Montezuma's Daughter," "The People of the Mist" (the last two published in 1894), "Joan Haste," and "Heart of the World," 1895; "The Wizard," 1896; "Dr. Thorne," 1898. Mr. Rider Haggard is also a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, and a Justice of the Peace for Norfolk and Suffolk. He was Chairman of the Society of Authors from 1896 to 1898. He married, in 1880, Marianna Louisa, only child and heiress of the late Major Margitson, of Ditchingham House, Norfolk. Addresses: Ditchingham House, Norfolk; and Athenæum.

HAGGARD, William Henry Dove-ton, J.P., Minister at Caracas, was born in 1846, and is the eldest son of William Meybohm Haggard, of Bradenham Hall, Norfolk, and brother of the novelist. He was educated at Winchester and Magdalen College, Oxford, and entered the Diplomatic Service in 1868. He held posts at Rio de Janeiro and Athens, and was Minister to Ecuador, 1890. He became Consul-General in Tunis, 1894, and in 1897 was appointed to his present post. He married, in 1887, Emily, daughter of Joseph Hancock, Esq. Home address: Bradenham Hall, Thetford.

HAIG-BROWN, The Rev. William, LL.D., born at Bromley, Middlesex, in 1823, is the third son of Thomas and Amelia Haig-Brown. He was educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he graduated with high honours in 1846, proceeding M.A. in 1849, and LL.D. in 1864. Having held for some time a fellowship and tutorship in his college and a temporary mastership at Harrow, he became in 1857 Head-master of the Grammar-School at Kensington, in connection with King's College, London, and was elected Head-master of Charterhouse School in 1863, on the retirement of the Rev. R. Elwyn. Under Dr. Haig-Brown's mastership this famous school was moved from its old home in the heart of London to the hills above Godalming. In 1882 Dr. Haig-Brown was appointed Hon. Canon of Winchester, and in 1897 he succeeded Canon Elwyn, his predecessor at Charterhouse School, as Master of the Charterhouse. In May 1898 Dr. and Mrs. Haig-Brown were the recipients of a testimonial, which took the form of a cheque for £600, subscribed for by old and present Carthusians. The presentation was made at the Charterhouse by Sir Richard Webster. In 1869 Dr. Brown published "Sertum Carthusianum floribus trium seculorum contextum. Curâ Gulielmi Haig-Brown, Scholæ Carthusianæ Archididascali," and in 1879 a history of Charterhouse, called "Charterhouse Past and Present." He married in 1857 Annie Marion, daughter of the Rev. Evan E. Row Sell. Address : The Charterhouse, E.C.

HAINES, Field-Marshal Sir Frederick Paul, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., C.I.E., son of the late Mr. Gregory Haines, C.B., of Dublin, Commissary-General of the Forces, by Harriet, daughter of Mr. John Eldridge, of Kirdford, Sussex, was born in 1819. He entered the army as ensign in 1839, became Lieutenant, 1840; Captain, 1846; Brevet-Major, June 7, 1849; Brevet Lieut.-Colonel, Aug. 2, 1850; Colonel, 1854; Lieut.-Colonel, unattached, 1855; Major-General, 1864; Lieut.-General, 1873; General, 1877; and Field-Marshal, 1890. At the beginning of the war on the Sulej in 1845, he was appointed to act as Military Secretary to Sir Hugh Gough, then Commander-in-Chief in India. He was present at the battles of Moodkee and Ferozeshah, and upon the latter occasion was severely wounded by grape-shot, his horse being at the same moment killed under him. For his conduct in this campaign he was promoted on the recommendation of Lord Gough, and received a medal and one clasp. He served also in the same capacity throughout the Punjab campaign of 1848 and 1849, taking part in the affair of outposts at Ramnuggur, the passage of the Chenab, and the battles of Chillianwallah and Goojerat. He served with the 21st Fusiliers through the campaign of the Crimea in 1854-55, up to the siege of Sebastopol. K.C.B., 1871; G.C.B., 1877. He was Commander-in-Chief of the Madras army from May 1871 to end of 1875, appointed Colonel of the 104th Regiment (Bengal Fusiliers), May 16, 1874. In 1876 he received the local rank of General in India, and some time later was appointed Commander-in-Chief in India. He held this post the customary period of five years. General Haines received the thanks of Parliament "for the ability and judgment with which he directed operations" in Afghanistan in 1878-80, and was appointed Field-Marshal, May 20, 1890. In October of the same year he was appointed Colonel of the Royal Scots Fusiliers. Address : United Service Club, Pall Mall, W.

HALDANE, The Right Rev. J. R. A. See CHINNERY-HALDANE.

HALDANE, Richard Burdon, Q.C., M.P., LL.D., son of the late Robert Haldane, of Cloanden, W.S., and Mary Burdon Sanderson, was born on July 30, 1856, and educated at Edinburgh Academy and at the University of that city, where he obtained the Gray Scholarship and the Ferguson Scholarship of the four Scottish Universities, the Bruce of Grangebill Medal, and was finally placed in the first class in Philosophy. He subsequently proceeded to the University of Göttingen, where he studied metaphysics under Professor Lotze. Returning to England, he took up the study of law, and in 1879 was called to the Chancery Bar, where his rise has been rapid. In 1890 he was made a Q.C., and in 1893 Bencher of Lincoln's Inn. In 1885 Mr. Haldane entered Parliament in the Gladstonian Liberal interest as M.P. for Haddingtonshire, which he continues to represent. He was a member of the Featherstone Commission in 1893, and of the Prisons Commission of 1894. He edited, together with Professor Seth, "Essays in Philosophical Criticism" in 1882, and afterwards translated Schopenhauer's "World as Will and Idea," in conjunction with Mr. Kemp. In 1887 he published a "Life of Adam Smith." Addresses : 3 Whitehall Court; 10 Old Square, Lincoln's Inn; and Cloanden, Auchterarder, Perthshire.

HALÉVY, Ludovic, French novelist and dramatic author, the son of Léon

Halévy and nephew of the composer, was born at Paris, July 1, 1834, and received his education at the Lycée Louis le Grand. He entered the service of the Government, and from 1852 to 1858 was employed in the Secretary's office of the Minister of State. He was chief of the department for Algiers and the Colonies, and in 1861 he was appointed to edit the proceedings of the Corps Législatif. This position he resigned to devote himself to the drama. M. Halévy has, since 1855, written the librettos of a large number of the most popular operettas, many of them in collaboration with M. Henri Meilhac, at first under a pseudonym, and then under his own name after his resignation. The most famous of these, for which Jacques Offenbach wrote the music, were "La Belle Hélène" (Variétés) 1865; "Barbe Bleue" (1866); "La Grande-Duchesse de Gérolstein" (1867); "La Périhole" (1868); "Le Petit Duc" (1878), for which Lecocq wrote the music. His comedies include: "Les Brebis de Panurge" (1863); "Proufrou," written for Aimée Desclée at the Gymnase, and, since, one of Madame Bernhardt's successes, and played at the Comédie Française (1892). It is to these brilliant sketches, as well as to his dramas, that he owes his election to the French Academy, his reception at which (M. Pailleron pronouncing the speech of welcome, December 4, 1884), was one of the most memorable of recent times. As a novelist, M. Halévy is also eminent. We may mention "L'Abbé Constantin" (1882), which was dramatised after running through more than 150 editions; "L'Invasion," recollections of the war (1872); "La Famille Cardinal" (1883); "Criquelette" (1883); "Notes et Souvenirs," "Deux Mariages" (1883); "Princesse" (1886); and a collection of stories, "Kari-kari" (1892). He was made an officer of the Legion of Honour in July 1890. Paris address: 22 Rue de Douai.

HALIBURTON, Lord, Arthur Laurence Haliburton, G.C.B., J.P., D.L., was born at Windsor, Nova Scotia, on Sept. 26, 1832, and is the youngest son of Mr. Justice Haliburton and his wife Louisa, daughter of Captain Neville, of the Royal Horse Guards and 19th Light Dragoons. He was educated at King's College School, Windsor, Nova Scotia, and was called to the Bar, in his colony, in 1855. From 1855 to 1870 he served on the Commissariat Staff of the army, in the Crimean campaign, in Canada, and in London. In 1870 he became Assistant-Director of Supplies and Transport, and Director of the same in 1878. In 1888 he was appointed Assistant Under-Secretary of State for War, and was Permanent Under-Secretary from 1895 to 1897.

He was raised to the peerage in May 1898. He married Mariana, daughter of Leo Schusta, and widow of Sir William Dickenson Clay, Bart., 1877. Addresses: 57 Lowndes Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

HALIBURTON, Robert Grant, Q.C., Canadian littérateur and man of science, was born at Windsor, Nova Scotia, June 3, 1831; was educated at King's College, Windsor, graduating in 1852 with the degree of A.M., and in 1876 receiving the degree of D.C.L. from the same college. He was called to the Bar in 1853, and was made a Q.C. in 1876 in Nova Scotia, and in 1878 by the Dominion Government. He removed to Ottawa in 1877. He has written and lectured extensively in England and elsewhere on the general subject of "A United Empire," and his views have received much attention. Continued ill-health compelled him in 1881 to give up his law practice in Canada and to spend the winters in warmer climates. Since 1881 he has devoted his attention chiefly to scientific investigation. In 1887-88 he discovered a pigmy race in Northern Africa, and he has given much time to investigating the subject and to similar survivals in the Pyrenees and in America. In this field he is a pioneer, and advances the idea that the history of mankind begins with a "Dwarf Era." He has published many papers on this and other scientific subjects.

HALL, The Right Hon. Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., Q.C., M.P., Recorder of the City of London, was born in 1843, and is the son of the late Vice-Chancellor Sir C. Hall. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1865, M.A. 1868), was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1866, and became a Bencher of the Middle Temple in 1884. From 1877 to 1892 he was Attorney-General to the Prince of Wales. He represented West Cambridgeshire in Parliament from 1885 to 1892, when he was elected in the Conservative interest to represent the Holborn Division of Finsbury, for which he now sits. In 1892, also, he was appointed Recorder of the City of London. He was made K.C.M.G. in 1890, and P.C. at New Year, 1899. Addresses: 2 Mount Street, Berkeley Square, W.; and Recorder's Chambers, Guildhall, E.C.

HALL, Edwin Thomas, F.R.I.B.A., F.S.I., architect, was born in Suffolk in 1851, and is the second son of George Hall, architect and surveyor. He was educated at the South Kensington School of Art, and subsequently entered the office of J. Fogerty, F.R.I.B.A., M.Inst.C.E. He began to practise on his own account in 1876, and has built churches, mission halls, mansions, and public buildings, including fever hospitals and infirmaries. The head offices of the Metropolitan Asylums Board, on the Victoria Embankment, are from his designs. He has written many essays and papers, and has drafted a bill (1893) for codifying and amending the Buildings Acts of the metropolis. Mr. Hall is architect to the British Home for Incurables, to the Royal Naval School, &c. Addresses: 57 Moorgate Street, E.C.; and Hillcote, West Dulwich, S.E.

HALL, Granville Stanley, Ph.D., was born at Ashfield, Mass., May 6, 1846. He graduated at Williams College in 1867, and subsequently studied at Berlin, Bonn, Heidelberg, and Leipzig. From 1872 to 1876 he was Professor of Psychology in Antioch College (Ohio); in 1876 and again in 1881-82 he became Lecturer on Psychology at Harvard; and in 1882 he became Professor of that subject in the Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore. On the establishment of Clark University at Worcester, Mass., in 1888, Professor Hall was made its President. The degree of Ph.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard in 1876. In addition to extensive contributions to periodicals on psychological and educational topics, he edits the American Journal of Psychology, the Pedagogical Seminary, and is the author of "Aspects of German Culture," 1881; (with John M. Mansfield) of "Hints towards a Select and Descriptive Bibliography of Education," 1886; "The Contents of Children's Minds on entering School," 1894; and "The Story of a Sand Pile," 1897.

HALL, The Rev. Newman, D.D., LL.B., is fourth son of the late Mr. John Vine Hall, and brother of Captain J. V. Hall, who commanded the Great Eastern steamship on her first voyage across the Atlantic. Born at Maidstone, May 22, 1816, he was educated at Totteridge and at Highbury College, and graduated B.A. at the London University. In 1855 he took the degree of LL.B., and won the law scholarship. He was appointed minister of the Albion Congregational Church, Hull, in 1842, and remained at that post till 1854, when he succeeded the Rev. James Sherman as minister of Surrey Chapel, known as Rowland Hill's Chapel, in the Blackfriars Road, London. When the civil war in the United States broke out, he advocated the Northern cause in the interests of Union and Freedom. He afterwards made two extensive tours in the United States for the purpose of allaying the bitter feeling towards Great Britain, and of promoting international good-will. "Lincoln Tower," 220 feet high, adjoining "Christ Church" in Westminster Bridge Road, was built in commemoration of Abraham Lincoln, from funds subscribed by Americans and English. The church itself, erected chiefly by his congregation when the lease of the old chapel in the Blackfriars Road expired, is one of the chief ecclesiastical modern structures in London, in thirteenth-century Gothic; it is seated for 2000 persons. The total cost, including freehold site, was £63,000, mostly obtained by Mr. Newman Hall's efforts; in token of which the congregation have erected in the church an alabaster pulpit of great beauty. Mr. Newman Hall has written numerous devotional treatises, one of which, entitled "Come to Jesus," has reached a circulation of nearly three millions, in upwards of twenty languages. He has written also "It is I"; "Follow Jesus"; "Antidote to Fear"; "Short Memoir of Rev. Rowland Hill"; "Homeward Bound"; "The Land of the Forum and the Vatican, or Thoughts and Sketches during an Easter Pilgrimage to Rome" (1854, new edit., 1859); a small volume of devotional poetry, entitled "Pilgrim Songs in Cloud and Sunshine," 1871; also "Mountain Musings"; a tractate on "Prayer: its Reasonableness and Efficacy," 1875; and several small works on teetotalism, of which he has been an earnest advocate during forty years. He has also compiled from Scripture a volume of devotion, entitled "Prayer and Praise in Bible Words," and has edited an autobiography of his father, entitled "Conflict and Victory." A later work is an 8vo volume on the Lord's Prayer; others are "Gethsemane, or Leaves of Healing from the Garden of Grief," and "Lyrics of a Long Life." He married in 1880 Harriet, daughter of E. S. Knipe, of Water Newton, Hampshire. Address: Vine House, Hampstead Heath, N.W.

HALLÉ, Lady, née Wilhelmine Néruda, violinist, was born March 21, 1840, at Brünn, in Moravia, where her father was organist of the Cathedral. She was a pupil of Jansa, and made her first appearance at Vienna in 1846. She came to London in 1848 to play, at the Philharmonic, a concerto of De Bériot's. After this she returned to the Continent, and passed several years in travelling, chiefly in Russia. In 1864 she visited Paris, and played at the Padeloup concerts, the Conservatoire, and elsewhere. In the same year she married Ludwig Norman, a Swedish musician. On May 17, 1869, Madame Norman-Néruda again played at the Philharmonic in London, and in the winter took the first violin at the series of Monday Popular Concerts. From that time she has been in England for each winter and spring, playing at the Popular Concerts, the Philharmonic, Crystal Palace, and especially at the recitals of the late Sir Charles Hallé, to whom she was married in 1888. He died in 1895. Addresses: 19 Holland Park, W.; and Greenhayes Lane, Manchester.

HALLETT, Holt Samuel, M. Inst. C.E., F.R.G.S., is the son of the late Mr. Thomas Perham Luxmoore Hallett, Fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, an eminent member of the Chancery Bar, and representative of an ancient west-country family. Mr. Holt Hallett was born on July 16, 1841, and educated at the Charterhouse and at Kensington Grammar School, where he was a private pupil of the Rev. George Frost. He qualified for his profession under the late Mr. William Baker, the Engineer-in-Chief of the London and North-Western Railway. Having gained great experience, and carried out, as engineer, extensive works in Lancashire and Cheshire, in 1868 he was offered the appointment of Resident Engineer on the Garston Docks on the Mersey, then about to be constructed, but accepted in preference an appointment under the Government of India. During the eleven years that Mr. Hallett was in Government service he had charge of various large divisions in British Burmah, one of which, the Tenasserim Division, included the whole portion of the British frontier neighbouring Siam and the Shan States. For some time during his service in this Division he had as one of his assistants Mr. Archibald Colquhoun. The acquaintance and friendship of these gentlemen gave rise to the vast project, now before the public, for the connection of India and China by railway, and to the valuable explorations and surveys carried out by these intrepid travellers in China, Siam, and the Shan States, to prove the practicability of their scheme. They succeeded in tracing out the route for the railway; and one of the sections of their line, that between Toungoo and Mandalay, has been completed by the Government of India; and another section, that between Sagain and Mogoung, is now in hand. The construction of the whole system advocated by them, 1790 miles in length, is now generally allowed by the Governments concerned and the mercantile community to be merely a matter of time. The Siamese Government is having the portions of the line lying in its territory surveyed by Sir Andrew Clarke's syndicate, and the survey is approaching completion. The thanks of the Home and Eastern Chambers of Commerce have been accorded to Mr. Holt Hallett and his colleague. Mr. Hallett's work "A Thousand Miles on an Elephant in the Shan States," gives an account of his travels through Indo-China in search of the best route for the railway. In 1887 he received the silver medal of the Society of Arts for his paper on "New Markets and the Extension of Railways of India and Burmah."

HALLIBURTON, William Dobbinson, M.D., B.Sc., F.R.S., son of Thomas Halliburton, Esq., of Upper Norwood, was born in London on June 21, 1860. He received his education first privately and subsequently at University College School, under the head-mastership, first of T. Hewitt Key and then of H. W. Eve. He left school in July 1877, carrying with him the principal senior prizes, and in the following October entered University College, first as a science student and subsequently as a student of medicine. Here he obtained many class distinctions, and academical honours at London University examinations. He graduated as B.Sc. in 1879, as M.B. in 1883, and M.D. in 1884. At University College Hospital he filled several posts, including that of House Physician. He did not, however, become a practitioner of medicine, but devoted his attention to physiology, a subject to which he was originally attracted by the teachings of Professors Burdon Sanderson and Schäfer. In 1883 he was appointed Sharpey Physiological Scholar at University College, and two years later received from the Council of University College the Science Research Medal, and the title of Fellow of University College. In 1887 he became Assistant Professor of Physiology in the same institution, a post which he resigned when, in 1890, he was appointed to the chair of Physiology at King's College, London, in succession to Professor Gerald Yeo. This appointment he now holds. He was also for twelve years Lecturer on Physiology at the London School of Medicine for Women; this post he resigned in December 1897 on account of the pressure of his other duties. He either is or has been recently an examiner in Physiology for the Universities of London, Oxford, Cambridge, Victoria, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, and at the Royal Colleges of Surgeons and Physicians, England, and the Royal Veterinary College. Among other honours received by him may be mentioned the Fellowship of the Royal Society, to which he was elected, at the early age of thirty, in 1891, the Fellowship of the Royal College of Physicians (1892), and the post of Goulstonian lecturer at the same college (1893). He has published, in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, and in the Journal of Physiology, a large number of researches, especially in the realm of Chemical Physiology, where he is best known by his work on the proteids of blood, milk, and various organs of the body, on the coagulation of the blood, and on the chemistry of muscle. He has also written two books; one, a "Text-book of Chemical Physiology," was published by Messrs. Longmans in 1891, and the other, a students' handbook, entitled "Essentials of Chemical Physiology," was issued by the same firm in 1893 (a third edition of the latter was issued in 1899). Both these works have been translated into German. He is the editor of the fourteenth edition of Kirkes' "Physiology" (John Murray, 1896; 15th edition, 1899). This edition was practically entirely rewritten. He also wrote the articles on General Chemical Physiology in Professor Schäfer's Text-book of Physiology published by Pentland in 1898. In 1886 he married Anne, daughter of James Dawe. Address: 9 Ridgmount Gardens, W.C.

HALLIDAY, Sir Frederick James, K.C.B., son of Thomas Halliday, Esq., of Ewell, Surrey, was born in 1806, and having been educated at St. Paul's School and at Haileybury College, entered the civil service of the East India Company in 1825. He held several civil, political, and legislative posts; and in December 1853 was appointed one of the Supreme Council of India. In 1854 he was made, by Lord Dalhousie, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, which post he held through the trying period of the Indian Mutiny, when he was reported by Lord Canning to have been "the right hand of the Government." For the energy, resolution, and administrative ability which he displayed in that office he received the thanks of the Houses of Parliament, and was created in 1860 a K.C.B. (Civil Division). In 1868 he was elected a member of the Council of India, and retired at the close of 1886. Address: 21 Bolton Gardens, S.W.

HALSBURY, Earl of, The Right Hon. Hardinge Stanley Giffard, M.A., J.P., F.R.S., D.C.L., Lord High Chancellor of England, born in London, September 3, 1825, is the third son of the late Stanley Lees Giffard, Esq., LL.D., barrister-at-law, and Susanna, daughter of the late Frank Moran. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1852, and M.A. in 1855. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1850, and joined the North Wales and Chester Circuit. He also had a very large junior practice at the Central Criminal Court and the Middlesex Sessions, and he was for several years a junior prosecuting Counsel to the Treasury. He became Queen's Counsel in 1865, and a Bencher of the Inner Temple. In 1873 he was appointed Chairman of the Carmarthenshire Quarter Sessions. In Mr. Disraeli's administration in 1875 he was made Solicitor-General. He twice contested Cardiff in the Conservative interest, but did not succeed in getting a seat until 1877, when he was returned for Launceston, and sat in the House of Commons for that borough until his elevation to the peerage in 1885, when he was created Baron Halsbury, and appointed Lord High Chancellor. He was Lord Chancellor with a short interval (January to July 1886) from 1885 to August 1892, when he was succeeded by Lord Herschell, and was reappointed in 1895. He was one of the leading counsel in the Tichborne case, and before his elevation he was engaged in most of the important cases of his time. He is Constable of Launceston Castle, and in 1881 was treasurer of his Inn. His attainment to high judicial office is a remarkable exception to the axiom of the English Bar, that no criminal practitioner ever reaches the Woolsack. In July 1891, Oxford University bestowed upon Lord Halsbury the hon. degree of D.C.L. He was appointed High Steward of the University in 1896. He is Senior Grand Warden of English Freemasons. He married (1), in 1852, Caroline, daughter of C. O. Humphreys, and (2), in 1874, Wilhelmina, daughter of Henry Woodfall, of Stanmore, Middlesex. Addresses: 4 Ennismore Gardens, S.W.; Woodlands, Great Stanmore, Middlesex, &c.; and Athenæum.

HAMILTON and BRANDON, Duke of, Alfred Douglas Douglas-Hamilton, Premier Peer of Scotland, Hereditary Keeper of Holyrood Palace, sitting in the House of Peers as Duke of Brandon, was born on March 6, 1862, and succeeded to the title in 1895. He has been a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy. The 12th Duke, whom he succeeded, appointed trustees to the estates, which amount to 157,400 acres. His heir is Percy S. D. Hamilton, a cousin. Addresses: 23 Princes Gate, S.W.; Hamilton Palace, Lanarkshire, &c.

HAMILTON, Lord Claud John, was born in Middlesex on Feb. 20, 1843, and is the second son of the 1st Duke of Abercorn and Lady Louisa Russell, second daughter of the Duke of Bedford. He was educated at Harrow, entered the Grenadier Guards in 1862, and retired in 1867, in which year he was appointed Colonel of the 5th Battalion of the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers. In 1892 he was appointed Hon. Colonel to the same. He was aide-de-camp to the Queen in 1887. He has been thrice M.P., having represented Londonderry from 1865 to 1868, King's Lynn from 1869 to 1880, and Liverpool from 1880 to 1888. He was Lord of the Treasury in 1868. Lord Claud Hamilton is Chairman of the Great Eastern Railway. In 1878 he married Carolina, daughter of the late Edward Chandos Pole, Radbourne Hall, Derby, and Lady Anna, his wife. Address: 55 St. Ermine's Mansions, Westminster, S.W.

HAMILTON, Gail. See DODGE, MARY ABIGAIL.

HAMILTON, The Right Hon. Lord George Francis, M.P., Secretary of State for India, is the third son of the Duke of Abercorn, by Lady Louisa, second daughter of John, 6th Duke of Bedford. He was born at Brighton in December 1845, and received his education at Harrow. In 1864 he was appointed an Ensign in the Rifle Brigade, and in 1868 was promoted Lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards. At the general election of December 1868 he contested the county of Middlesex in the Conservative interest, and was returned at the head of the poll. This decisive Conservative victory occasioned great surprise in political circles, as Middlesex had previously been regarded as one of the most impregnable strongholds of the Liberal party. At the general election of February 1874 Lord George Hamilton again came in at the head of the poll. Since 1885 he has sat in the House of Commons as Conservative member for the Ealing Division of Middlesex. On the formation of Mr. Disraeli's administration in February 1874 his lordship was nominated to the post of Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for India; and he was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, April 4, 1878, in succession to Viscount Sandon. On the latter occasion he was sworn of the Privy Council. He went out of office with his party in April 1880. On the defeat of the Gladstone Government he was made First Lord of the Admiralty from June 1885 to February 1886, under Lord Salisbury's first administration, and filled the same post in the second Salisbury cabinet, 1886 till August 1892. In October 1888 he made a speech in Glasgow, in which he gave a very favourable account of the state of the navy, but during 1889 the country witnessed the adoption and practical commencement of the largest and most comprehensive scheme of new naval construction that has ever been put forward by a British First Lord of the Admiralty. Lord George Hamilton's resolutions were adopted by the Commons in April, and in May the Naval Defence Act was passed. Various newspaper articles and statements in the House by Lord Charles Beresford and others had created a sort of panic in the public mind, and consequently Lord G. Hamilton's programme met with little opposition. £21,500,000 were voted for the navy, £10,000,000 to be taken from the Consolidated Fund in seven years, and the remainder from five years' navy estimates. The scheme provided for the construction and equipment of 10 first-class battleships, 9 first-class cruisers, 33 smaller cruisers, and 18 torpedo gunboats, the whole programme to be completed in four and a half years. In Lord Salisbury's third administration, which came into power in 1895, Lord George Hamilton was selected as the Secretary of State for India. Since his appointment to that office India has passed through very troublous times, and great credit is due to Lord George for the ability and judgment he displayed in the performance of his duties. He encountered a good deal of opposition in the House to his resolution of July 2, 1896, that the costs of the Indian troops sent to Egypt for the Nile expedition should be charged to India. Towards the end of 1896, owing chiefly to a great scarcity of grain, a terrible famine raged throughout India. The Lord Mayor at once opened a fund for the relief of the natives, and in a very few weeks Lord George Hamilton was enabled to send over half a million to relieve the distress. The famine was succeeded by a frontier war of exceptional length and bitterness, in which the Afridis, a very warlike tribe, figured prominently. In 1894 Lord George Hamilton was elected Chairman of the London School Board, and held the appointment for a year. He is also an Elder Brother of Trinity House, and was appointed Captain of Deal Castle in March 1899, in succession to the late Lord Herschell. He married in 1871 Lady Maud Caroline, youngest daughter of the 3rd Earl of Harewood. Addresses: 17 Montagu Street, Portman Square, W.; and Athenæum.

HAMMOND, William Alexander, M.D., born at Annapolis, Maryland, Aug. 28, 1828, graduated M.D. in the University of New York in 1848, and in June 1849 entered the Medical Service of the United States Army as Assistant-Surgeon, in which he remained till 1860, having attained the Staff rank of Captain. In 1860 he was appointed Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the University of Maryland. At the commencement of the civil war he resigned his professorship, and re-entered the army almost at the bottom of the list of Assistant-Surgeons, having, of course, lost his previous rank by his resignation. But on the reorganisation of the Medical Bureau in April 1862, he was, at the earnest solicitation of the Sanitary Commission and the General-in-Chief of the army, appointed Surgeon-General of the army, with the rank of Brigadier-General. He retained this position until 1864, when he was dismissed from the service on the ground of irregularities in the award of contracts. This sentence was reversed by the President and Congress in 1878, after full investigation, and he was restored to his full rank and, at his own request, placed on the retired list. On his dismissal from the army in 1864 he was appointed Professor in the College of Physicians and Surgeons; shortly afterwards in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York, and Physician-in-Chief to the New York State Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System; and subsequently was connected with the medical department of the University of New York. In 1882 he became Professor of Mental and Nervous Diseases in the New York Post Graduate Medical School. He was also the editor of the Journal of Psychological Medicine, and has published "Military Hygiene," 1863; "Physiological Memoirs," 1863; "Venereal Diseases," 1864; "Wakefulness," 1865; "Insanity in its Medico-Legal Relations," 1866; "Sleep, and its Nervous Derangements," 1869; "The Physics and Physiology of Spiritualism," 1870; "Medico-Legal Study of the Case of Daniel M'Farland," 1870; "A Treatise on Diseases of the Nervous System," 1871; "Insanity in its Relations to Crime," 1873; "Spinal Irritation," 1877; "Over Mental Work, and Emotional Disturbances," and "Cerebral Hyperæmia," 1878; "Fasting Girls," 1879; "Certain Forms of Nervous Derangement," 1881; "Insanity in its Medical Relations," 1883; and "Sexual Impotence in the Male," 1886. He has also published the following novels: "Lal," and "Dr. Grattan," 1884; "Mr. Oldmixon," and "A Strong-Minded Woman," 1885; "On the Susquehanna," 1886. In 1889 he removed to Washington, where he now resides.

HAMPDEN, Viscount, Henry Robert Brand, G.C.M.G., D.L., J.P., late Governor and Commander-in-Chief of New South Wales, is the son of the first Viscount, who was the Speaker of the House of Commons from 1872 to 1884. He was born on May 2, 1841, and was educated at Rugby. He entered the Coldstream Guards, and retired with the rank of Captain. From 1865 to 1873 he was M.P. for Herts, and sat for Stroud in 1874, and from 1880 to 1885 and 1885 to 1886. From 1883 to 1885 he was Surveyor-General of Ordnance. He succeeded his father in 1892, is a J.P. for Herts and Sussex, and was appointed Governor-General of New South Wales in 1895. He retired from the Governorship in January 1899, and was succeeded by Earl Beauchamp. He married, in 1868, Susan, daughter of Lord George Cavendish. Addresses: Government House, Sydney, New South Wales; The Hoo, Welwyn, Herts; and The Priory, Royston.

HAMPTON, Hon. Wade, was born at Charleston, S.C., March 28, 1818. He was graduated from the University of South Carolina, and subsequently became a member of the State Legislature. Though opposed to secession, he entered the Confederate army at the outbreak of the Civil War as a private, and before its close had risen to the rank of Lieutenant-General. From 1877 to 1879 he was Governor of South Carolina, and from 1879 to 1891 he was U.S. Senator from that State. In March 1893 he was appointed by President Cleveland U.S. Commissioner of Railroads, and held the office till 1897.

HAMUD BIN MAHOMED, Said, Sultan of Zanzibar, was placed on the throne by Great Britain in 1896. On the sudden death of the late Sultan Hamed bin Thwain, in August 1896, Said Khaled, a member of the reigning family, seized the Palace and held it with a number of armed followers. He proclaimed himself Sultan, but was not recognised as such, and having refused to quit the Palace it was found necessary to resort to force to compel his submission. After a bombardment of half-an-hour from British warships in the harbour, Khaled fled to the German Consulate, whence he was eventually deported to German East Africa, where he remained. Hamud bin Mahomed, in April 1897, issued a decree, which had for its object the abolition of slavery, and the compensation of slave-owners. By the end of the year, however, the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society discovered this law to be a dead letter.

HANBURY, Sir James Arthur, K.C.B., F.R.C.S., son of the late Mr. Samuel Hanbury, was born in 1832, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Medicine in 1853. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1859. Immediately after graduating at Dublin, he entered the medical department of the army. He became Surgeon in 1863, Surgeon-Major in 1873, Brigadier-Surgeon in 1879, and Deputy-Surgeon-General in 1881. He served with distinction in China, India, and America; was principal medical officer of a division during the Afghan campaigns of 1878-79 and 1879-80; and served as principal medical officer under Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Roberts on the occasion of his celebrated march from Kabul to Kandahar. For these services he was created a Companion of the Bath, and received the war medal and bronze star. In August 1882 he was specially selected to accompany Sir Garnet Wolseley as principal medical officer of the Egyptian expedition, with the local rank of Surgeon-General. At the close of the campaign he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, and Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland (honoris causa), in 1883. He was principal medical officer at Gibraltar from 1887 to 1888, and Surgeon-General of the Forces in the Madras Presidency from 1888 to 1892. He has retired. In 1886 he married Emily, daughter of the late J. Anderson of Coxlodge Hall, Northumberland, and widow of Colonel Carter, C.B. Address: Army and Navy Club.

HANBURY, The Rt. Hon. Robert William, M.P., is the only son of Robert Hanbury, of Bodehall House, Tamworth, and was born on Feb. 24, 1845. He was educated at Rugby and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he was in the second class Lit. Hum. in 1868. In 1872 he was elected Conservative member for Tamworth, and represented that constituency until 1878, when he became member for North Staffordshire. From 1880 till 1885 he was out of Parliament, but in the latter year he was returned to the House of Commons as Conservative member for Preston, a borough which he has continuously represented since. He was appointed Financial Secretary to the Treasury in 1895, and in the same year was sworn a member of the Privy Council. Mr. Hanbury is a Deputy Lieutenant, and a Justice of the Peace, for the counties of Derby, Stafford, and Warwick, and is Hon. Colonel of the 5th Lincs. Artillery Volunteers. He was married in 1884 to Ellen, daughter of Lieut.-Col. Knott Hamilton. Address: Ilam Hall, Ashbourne, Derbyshire.

HANNAY, James Lennox, M.A., J.P., Metropolitan Police Magistrate, is the eldest son of John Hannay, and was born on Sept. 20, 1826. He was educated privately, and at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1851. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1852, and was formerly Counsel to the Magistrates of the West Riding of Yorkshire, and also Recorder of Pontefract. In 1871 Mr. Hannay was appointed a Metropolitan Police Magistrate at the Worship Street Court, and in 1888 he was transferred to Marlborough Street Court. Address: 113 St. George's Square, S.W.

HANOTAUX, Gabriel, French statesman and man of letters, was born on Nov. 19, 1853, at a small village on the outskirts of St. Quentin, at Beaurevoir. His father was a solicitor, and Gabriel was, from the first, destined to enter his father's profession. He was duly articled to a Paris solicitor, but the fascinations of the study of politics and of history, and the allurements of the beaux arts, killed whatever of the lawyer he might have inherited from his father. However, out of respect to his father, he commenced the study of civil law. He followed, on his own account, the "Cours de l'École des Chartes," and, soon afterwards, was appointed Keeper of the Ancient Manuscripts. Thence he went to the École des Hautes Études, no longer as a pupil, but as Maître de Conférences. About this time he secured, through his friend and relation, Henri Martin, the historian, an introduction to the conductors of La République Française, a journal then inspired by Gambetta, at that time President of the Chamber. This first essay in journalism, as in the case of many another, opened up the road to fame. It happened one day, we are told, that Gambetta chanced to read, in the "Variétés" column of the paper, an article on the sixteenth century, written by young Gabriel Hanotaux. Immensely struck by the style and verve, Gambetta sought out the writer, and after a conversation which will be remembered by M. Hanotaux to his dying hour, offered the scribe an appointment in the Affaires Étrangères. Thus entered on his native sphere the most distinguished French Ministre d'Affaires Étrangères of modern times. The ambitious young man chose the Ancient Record Office, where he was put in charge of the historic portion, and, later on, Gambetta made his protégé a member of his Cabinet. On M. Challemeil-Lacour succeeding to the Ministry, M. Hanotaux occupied the same position, and again under M. Jules Ferry, who appointed him his Chef de Cabinet. When the Ferry Ministry fell, he was sent as Conseiller d'Ambassade to Constantinople, but returned the following year on being elected Deputy for the Département de l'Aisne. During this Parliament he occupied himself with certain diplomatic and military questions, and became a declared enemy of Boulangism. Defeated in the 1889 elections by Count Caffarelli, a Royalist, on the second ballot for Vervins, M. Hanotaux re-entered upon his connection with the Quai d'Orsay, becoming Director of the Consulats and the Affaires Commerciales. In May 1894, on the formation of the Dupuy Cabinet, he was offered and accepted the post which he filled with such distinction, the Secretaryship of State for Foreign Affairs. With the exception of a short break which occurred during the administration of the Bourgeois Ministry, M. Hanotaux retained his post until June 1898, when the Méline combination fell. Since his defeat in 1889 (supra) he has not submitted himself to the popular vote, principally, it is thought, that he may render more acceptable his permanent occupation of the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, an arrangement which he considers should be made in the true interests of his country, with the object of avoiding that discontinuity in foreign relationships which has, in his view, so materially affected her position in the past. His term of office at the Quai d'Orsay was most distinguished. He consummated, if he did not actually conceive, that Franco-Russian alliance which, at one time, seemed to shift the European point of view. His negotiations with this country have been as friendly as circumstances allowed, and he has long ago earned the good-will of English statesmen. Leaving the political aspect of this distinguished Minister, we find in M. Hanotaux a loyal Frenchman who upholds the highest traditions of his country. His reputation as a man of letters is, of itself, sufficient to ensure that memory of him which will remain hereafter. He might, perhaps, be called the John Morley of France, uniting, as he does, high literary excellence with capable government of men and affairs. His chef-d'œuvre, "Histoire du Cardinal de Richelieu," has become a classic. On March 24, 1898, M. Hanotaux was received as a Membre de l'Académie, and his address on his predecessor, M. Challemeil-Lacour, takes high rank in contemporary literature. An eminent English newspaper, commenting on the occasion, said: "As a statesman no less than as a man of letters he does honour to the choice of the Academy. At a time when public life across the Channel is not so rich as at some former periods in men with the gifts and the training of statesmen, France has the good fortune to possess at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs a politician not unworthy to sit in the place of Thiers and of Guizot. . . . He has been, as all Europe recognises, the most successful Foreign Minister at the Quai d'Orsay for many years. He has known how to reconcile the firm and dignified assertion of the claims of France with fairness and consideration for those of other people. Above all, he has shown that he can distinguish between the great permanent factors which determine the European situation and the transient and erratic forces which occasionally tend to divert them for a time from their destined path." His Paris address is 258 Boulevard St. Germain.

HANSLICK, Dr. Eduard, musical critic, born at Prague, Sept. 11, 1825, is the son of a well-known bibliographer. He studied law and philosophy in Prague and in Vienna, where he took the degree of Doctor. In 1856 he was appointed tutor of aesthetics and musical history; in 1861, Professor extraordinary; and in 1870, regular Professor. He was juror for the musical department of the Exhibition of Paris, 1867; Vienna, 1873; and Paris, 1878; and used every effort to further the interests of the musical instrument makers of Austria. In 1876 he was appointed a member of the Imperial Council, having some time before received the Order of the Iron Crown. During the years 1859-63 he gave public lectures in Vienna, and occasionally in Prague and at Cologne, on the history of music. He has been musical critic successively to the Wiener Zeitung, the Presse, and the Neue Freie Presse. His resistance to the Liszt-Wagner movement is well known. Dr. Hanslick has published "Vom musikalisch-Schönen," 1854; "Geschichte des Concertwesens in Wien," 1869; "Aus dem Concertsaal," 1870; "Die moderne Oper," 1875; "Aus dem Opernleben der Gegenwart," 1854.

HANSON, Sir Reginald, Bart., M.P., LL.D., J.P., D.L., who was born on May 31, 1840, is the son of the late Mr. Samuel Hanson, and head of the firm of Messrs. Samuel Hanson, Son, and Barter, wholesale grocers, in Botolph Lane, City. His family have been connected with the Ward of Billingsgate for 144 years, and he himself was born in the same house in Botolph Lane as his grandfather and father were. He was educated at Rugby, during Dean Goulburn's and Bishop Temple's headmasterships, and proceeded thence to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the usual degrees of B.A. and M.A. In 1887 the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University. After a visit to Australia he entered his father's business, and, with twenty-five of his clerks, joined the London Rifle Brigade at the beginning of the Volunteer movement. In 1873 he was elected a member of the Common Council for Billingsgate Ward, and he was successively the Chairman of the Library and of the Local Government and Taxation Committees. In 1880, on the retirement of Mr. Alderman Sidney, he was elected Alderman of the Ward, and in 1881-82 he served the office of Sheriff in conjunction with Sir W. A. Ogg in the Mayoralty of Sir J. Whittaker Ellis, M.P.

He was knighted with his colleague, on the occasion of the visit of the Queen to Epping Forest. Subsequently he was a member of the London School Board for three years; and in 1889 was elected a member of the London County Council. He is a Past Master of the Shipwrights' Company; Master of the Merchant Taylors' Company; a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries; and was sometime Chairman of the Council of the London Chamber of Commerce. He is the Honorary Colonel of the 4th Battalion Royal Fusiliers (City of London Militia), and is also a Commander of the Crown of Oak of the Netherlands. He is in politics a Conservative. In September 1886 Sir Reginald was elected Lord Mayor of London for the civic year 1886-87, the Jubilee year, and was created a Baronet on the occasion of the Queen's visit to the Mansion House in May 1887. The last old Rugby scholar who was Lord Mayor was Sir W. Plomer, who filled the office in 1781. Sir Reginald married, in 1866, a daughter of the late Mr. C. B. Bingley, of Stanhope Park, Middlesex. Addresses: 4 Bryanston Square, W.; and 47 Bolton Lane, E.C.

HARCOURT, A. G. V. See VERNON-HARCOURT, A. G.

HARCOURT, The Right Hon. Sir William George Granville Venables Vernon, M.P., LL.D., F.R.S., second son of the Rev. William Vernon Harcourt, and grandson of a former Archbishop of York, born Oct. 14, 1827, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was a Scholar, and graduated in high honours in 1851 (first-class honours in Classical Tripos and Senior Optime). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1854, and went the Home Circuit. He unsuccessfully contested the Kirkcaldy Burghs in 1858. Mr. Harcourt was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1866; and was returned to the House of Commons for the city of Oxford, in the Liberal interest, in 1868. He was elected Whewell Professor of International Law in the University of Cambridge, March 2, 1869; and he was a member of the Royal Commission for amending the Neutrality Laws; and of the Royal Commission for amending the Naturalisation Laws. He was appointed Solicitor-General in November 1873, on which occasion he was knighted, and he held that office until the resignation of Mr. Gladstone's administration in the following February. When Mr. Gladstone returned to power in May 1880, Sir W. Harcourt was nominated Secretary of State for the Home Department. On his going down to Oxford for re-election on that occasion he was defeated, polling only 2681 votes against 2735 recorded in favour of his Conservative antagonist, Mr. A. W. Hall. At this juncture, the late Mr. Plimsoll, M.P. for Derby, very generously accepted the Chiltern Hundreds, whereupon Sir W. Harcourt was elected one of the representatives of that borough in his stead. Sir W. Harcourt was presented with the freedom of the city of Glasgow, Oct. 25, 1881. He went out of office with his party in June 1885; but on the return of the Liberals to power in January 1886, he was made Chancellor of the Exchequer, and reappointed to this post in 1892. He was re-elected for Derby at both the general elections (1885 and 1886), and again in 1892. In 1895 he was defeated at Derby, greatly to the surprise of all parties. His poll on this occasion amounted to 6785, while of his two successful opponents, Mr. H. H. Bemrose polled 7907, and Mr. Geoffrey Drage, 7076. A seat was now found for him in Monmouthshire West, a mining constituency, which he now represents. Sir William has identified himself with the affairs of the Principality, and in August 1897 presided over one of the sessions of the National Eisteddfod at Newport, when he made a noteworthy speech upon Wales and the Welsh as represented by this their best-known institution. He was an active member of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the Jameson Raid, and has recently (July to October 1898) been engaged in controversy, both in Parliament and in the press, on the subject of the Ritualistic pretensions of a certain section of the clergy, his protests being chiefly made to the Archbishop of Canterbury. His speech in the House of Commons on the occasion of the death of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone was one of the most impressive orations delivered at the time. He was one of the pall-bearers at that statesman's funeral. In December 1898, in a letter to Mr. John Morley, Sir William Harcourt made the announcement that he, perhaps, intended retiring from the leadership of the Liberal party of the House of Commons. "The hypothetical form of certain sentences in the Harcourt-Morley correspondence," to quote the Times' leading article of Dec. 15, 1898, "led some to suppose that the great tactician had merely made a tactical move, and that a vote of confidence would replace matters on their old footing." But subsequent correspondence between Sir William and his supporters showed plainly enough that his retirement from the leadership had been decided upon irrevocably. He now sits as a private member. He is famous among Parliamentary debaters, and was much spoken of as the future leader of his party when Mr. Gladstone retired. His Budget, brought forward in 1894, created a sensation, since it equalised the death duties on real and personal property, and exempted large sections of the poorer business and professional classes from payment of Income Tax. His friends regard this Budget, which has been copied in some particulars by his successor, as his greatest achievement. He was one of the original contributors to the Saturday Review, and has written various political pamphlets and letters on international law in the Times, published under the pseudonym of "Historicus." The latter were reprinted in a volume, with considerable additions (1863). Sir William Harcourt married, (1) in 1859, Thérèse, daughter of Lady Theresa Lewis—aunt to the Earl of Clarendon and widow of the late Sir George Cornwall Lewis, Bart.—by her first husband, T. Lister, Esq.; and (2) in 1876, Mrs. Ives, daughter of the late John Lothrop Motley, the historian, and sometime United States Minister in London. Address: Malwood, Lyndhurst, Hampshire.

HARDIE, J. Keir, son of working-class parents, was born in Scotland on Aug. 15, 1856, and was for many years a miner at Lochnorris, Cumnock, Ayrshire, Scotland. He early became well known as a speaker in the temperance movement, but eventually became prominent in the Labour and other advanced Democratic and Socialistic circles. He is President of the Ayrshire Miners' Union, and of the Independent Labour Party, a political body which seeks to exist independently of the recognised political parties, only supporting one or other of them when the cause of the workman can derive benefit from so doing. At the elections of 1892 Mr. Keir Hardie was returned to Parliament for the Southern Division of West Ham, and sat in the House as the representative of Independent Labour, but was defeated at the general election of 1895. Since then he has unsuccessfully contested East Bradford as an Independent Labour candidate. He frequently speaks in public on labour questions, and is the editor and proprietor of the Labour Leader, which is the recognised organ of the Independent Labour movement. Address: 53 Fleet Street, E.C.

HARDING, Sir Robert Palmer, late Chief Official Receiver in the Bankruptcy Department of the Board of Trade, was born in 1821, and after practising as a solicitor for some years, was appointed in 1864 a Commissioner to inquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act; and, when the new Act was passed in 1883, he undertook the reorganisation of this department in conformity with it. He was knighted in January 1890, and resigned his post as Chief Official Receiver three months later.

HARDINGE, Sir Arthur Henry, K.C.M.G., Commissioner and Consul-General in British East Africa, was born Oct. 12, 1859, and is the only son of General the Hon. Sir A. E. Hardinge, K.C.B. He was educated at Eton and at Oxford, where he was elected to a Fellowship at All Souls' in 1881. He entered the Foreign Office in 1880; accompanied the present Czar, when Czarevitch, to India in 1890; was Consul-General at Cairo in 1891, and appointed to Zanzibar in 1895. He was created C.B. in 1895, K.C.M.G. in 1897. Address: British Agency, Zanzibar. Clubs: Travellers', Marlborough.

HARDWICKE, Earl of, Albert Edward Yorke, L.C.C., D.L., J.P., was born at the British Embassy, Paris, on March 14, 1867, and is the only son of the late 5th Earl of Hardwicke, a descendant of the great lawyer of that name. He succeeded his father in 1897. He was educated at Eton, and from 1886 to 1889 was Hon. Attaché at H.M. Embassy in Vienna. He was Captain of the 3rd Battalion of the Wiltshire Regiment from 1888 to 1894. Since March 1898 he has represented West Marylebone in the London County Council as a Moderate. He is D.L. and J.P. for Cambs. Addresses: Wimpole Hall, Royston; and 9 Cavendish Square, W.

HARDWICKE, Herbert Junius, M.D., F.R.C.S., M.R.C.P., of St. Leonards, third son of Junius Hardwicke, M.D., F.R.C.S., for twenty years physician to Sheffield Special Hospital, which he founded, is also proprietor and editor of the Specialist, London; was surgeon in Egyptian Teufikiyeh Egyptian Service, Upper Nile; and is Honorary Fellow of London, Paris, Athens, and Madrid Medical Societies, and Liverpool Anthropological Society; and author of "Medical Education," "Health Resorts and Spas," "Popular Faith Unveiled," "Evolution and Creation," "Alps to Orient," "Rambles Abroad," &c. Address: 13 Magdalen Terrace, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

HARDY, Dudley, artist, was born at Sheffield on Jan. 15, 1867, and is the eldest son of T. B. Hardy, a painter of sea-pieces. He was educated at Boulogne, and University College School, London, and studied art in Germany, Antwerp, and Paris. His subjects and methods are intensely modern, and are familiar to all readers of the leading illustrated papers and magazines, both here and abroad. Mr. Dudley Hardy has also illustrated books, and designed several well-known posters. Address : Oakhurst, Ravenscourt Park, W.

HARDY, Iza Duffus, only daughter of Lady Mary Duffus Hardy, and of the late Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy, was educated chiefly at home, and began writing stories at a very early age. Sketches and tales of hers have appeared in Tinsley's Magazine, London Society, Belgravia, and the Gentlemen's Magazine. Amongst the many novels she has published are: "A New Othello," 1890 (2nd edit., 1894); "Glencairn," "Only a Love Story," "A Broken Faith," "Love, Honour, and Obey," "Hearts or Diamonds?" "The Love that He Passed By," "and "Love in Idleness"; the last three being stories of American life. She accompanied her mother to America, and has produced two volumes of Transatlantic Reminiscences, "Between Two Oceans," and "Oranges and Alligators," the latter being an account of life amongst the orange-groves of South Florida. "A Woman's Loyalty" was published in 1893, and "In the Springtime of Love," 1895.

HARDY, Thomas, J. P., novelist, was born June 2, 1840, at a secluded homestead in Dorsetshire, and educated in the same county. He was destined for the architectural profession, and in his seventeenth year was articled as pupil to an ecclesiastical architect practising in the county town. He devoted the greater part of his time, however, during the ensuing four years, to classical and theological literature, which he continued to read with two friends of like tastes. On taking up his residence in London, Mr. Hardy allied himself with the modern school of Gothic artists, and acquired additional experience in design under Sir Arthur Blomfield, A.R.A., F.S.A., son of the late Bishop Blomfield — meanwhile entering as a student of modern languages at King's College. His first literary performance was an essay on "Coloured Brick and Terra-cotta Architecture," which received the prize and medal of the Institute of British Architects in 1863; he also was awarded in the same year Sir W. Tite's prize for architectural design. He then returned to literature, confining his attention to poetry, and writing his lately published verse; but at last tried his hand on a work of fiction called "Desperate Remedies," which was published in 1871, and was equally praised and condemned. In 1872 he published the rural tale entitled "Under the Greenwood Tree," and in 1873 "A Pair of Blue Eyes," both of which were well received. These were followed, in the Cornhill Magazine for 1874, by his first widely-known novel, "Far from the Madding Crowd," dramatised and acted in a modified form at the Globe Theatre in 1882. He has written also "The Hand of Ethelberta, a Comedy in Chapters," 1876; "The Return of the Native," 1878; "The Trumpet-Major," 1880; "A Laodicean," 1881; "Two on a Tower," 1882; "The Mayor of Casterbridge," 1886; "The Woodlanders," 1886-7; "Wessex Tales," 1888; "A Group of Noble Dames," 1891; "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," the same year (one of the most extensively read and keenly discussed of recent novels); "Life's Little Ironies," 1894; and "Jude the Obscure," 1894-5, a story which drew upon the author a violent personal attack from some quarters; but it did not hinder the general recognition of "Jude" by the best critics and readers as a sincere and unbiassed exhibition of some new phases of human life, and by many as a novel of distinctly sound teaching. In 1897 was reprinted his imaginative story published serially in 1892, entitled "The Well-Beloved, a Sketch of a Temperament," in which love is shown as a subjective phenomenon, the Platonic idea of typical beauty, exemplified in no real personality, being the supposed object of affection. A short play, based on one of his Wessex tales, and entitled "The Three Wayfarers," was written and produced by him in 1893, and a dramatic version of "Tess" has been performed with great success in America. Many of these novels have been published simultaneously in England, America, Australia, and India, and have been translated into Continental languages. The majority have a picturesque country district, spoken of as "Wessex," as their common scene, this being an application peculiar to the author of the ancient name to the modern life and conditions of the West of England. In the autumn of 1894 Messrs. Elkin Matthews and John Lane published "The Art of Thomas Hardy" by Lionel Johnson, which contains some hitherto unpublished pieces by the novelist. Mr. Hardy's "Poems" were published in 1898. Mr. Hardy married, in 1874, Emma Lavinia, daughter of J. Attersoll Gifford, Esq., and niece of the late Archdeacon of London. Address: Athenæum.

HARDY, William John, F.S.A., is the second son of Sir William Hardy, formerly Deputy Keeper of the Public Records, and was born in London on Sept. 29, 1857. He was educated privately, and received a training from his father as a record searcher and translator. He is an Inspector under the Historical MSS. Commission, and has edited the "Calendar of State Papers, William and Mary" (Rolls Series). He is the author of; "Hand-writings of the Kings and Queens of England," 1893; "Book Plates," 1893 (and 2nd edit., 1897); "Lighthouses, their History and Romance," 1895, &c. Mr. Hardy has been the editor, since its foundation in 1895, of Middlesex and Hertfordshire Notes and Queries, an archaeological journal which has met with great success, and is shortly to be merged into the Home Counties Magazine, under the same editorship, and with the same objects. He has been a Member of the Council of the Society of Antiquaries on three separate occasions, viz., 1887-89, 1891-93, and 1895-97. Address: Milton Cottage, St. Albans, Herts.

HARE, Augustus John Cuthbert, the youngest and now the only surviving son of Francis George Hare and Anne Frances Paul, his wife, was born at the Villa Strozzi, in Rome, March 13, 1834, and was adopted, as an infant, by the widow of his uncle, Augustus William Hare. He was educated at Harrow, and at University College, Oxford. He has published "Epitaphs for Country Churchyards," 1856; "Murray's Handbook for Berks, Bucks, and Oxfordshire," 1860; "A Winter at Mentone," 1861; "Murray's Handbook for Durham and Northumberland," 1863; "Walks in Rome," 1870; "Wanderings in Spain," 1872; "Memorials of a Quiet Life," 1872; "Days near Rome," 1874; "Cities of Northern and Central Italy," 1875; "Walks in London," 1877; "Life and Letters of Baroness Bunsen," 1879; and "Cities of Southern Italy and Sicily," 1882; "Sketches of Holland and Scandinavia," 1885; "Studies in Russia," 1885; "Paris," and "Days near Paris," 1887; "South-Eastern France," and "South-Western France," 1890; "The Story of Two Noble Lives," 1893; "Sussex," 1894; "Life and Letters of Maria Edgeworth," 1894; "North-Western France," 1895; "The Gurneys of Earham," 1895; "The Story of My Life" (vols. i., ii., and iii.), 1896; "The Rivas," 1897. Mr. Hare resided formerly at his family home of Hurstmonceaux, but now lives on his small property of Holmhurst, near Hastings. He has received the Order of St. Olaf from the King of Sweden and Norway. Permanent addresses: Holmhurst, St. Leonard's-on-Sea; and Athenæum.

HARE, John, was born in London on May 16, 1844, and was educated at Giggleswick Grammar School, Yorkshire. His first appearance on the stage took place at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, Liverpool, and in 1875 he became manager of the Court Theatre, remaining in that position for four years. During that period he produced "Olivia," "The House of Darnley," "The Scrap of Paper," "The Ladies'

Battle," "The Queen's Shilling," and "New Men and Old Acres." From 1879 to 1888 he was engaged in a managerial partnership with Mr. Kendal at St. James' Theatre, and amongst his productions of those nine years mention should be made of "The Falcon," "Still Waters Run Deep," "The Money-Spinner," "The Squire," "The Hobby-Horse," "The Ironmaster." In 1889 Mr. Hare undertook the management of the Garrick Theatre, and between that date and 1895 there appeared on the stage of this recently built house "The Profligate"; a translation and adaptation of the well-known French play "La Tosca," in which the title part was taken by Mrs. Bernard Beere, and that of Scarpia by Mr. Forbes Robertson; "A Pair of Spectacles," "A Fool's Paradise," revivals of "Diplomacy," and "Money"; "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith," and "Lady Bountiful." From 1897 up to the present time, the Globe Theatre, of which he is lessee and manager, has been the scene of Mr. Hare's triumphs, and he has there produced "A Bachelor's Romance," "The Master," and "The Gay Lord Quex" (1899). Mr. Hare has toured in America, and has there met with the same unqualified success which has always crowned his efforts in this country. His acting is quiet and natural, but extremely forcible, and he may perhaps be regarded as the first of living English actors judged from the polished and moderate standpoint of the Theatre Français. His son, Mr. Gilbert Hare, is also a young actor of great promise, and has played in several of his father's productions. Address: 3 Park Crescent, Portland Place, W.

HARLEY, Rev. Robert, Hon. M.A. Oxford, F.R.S., F.R.A.S., a mathematician, was born at Liverpool on Jan. 23, 1828. He is the third son of the late Rev. Robert Harley. In his fourteenth year he developed a taste for mathematics. His progress in the study was such that before he was sixteen he was appointed mathematical master in a good school at Scacombe, near Liverpool, and within twelve months he returned to be head-assistant in the school at Blackburn where he had received the chief part of his education. He then became a regular contributor to various mathematical journals. In 1846 he answered a question relating to the general quintic equation which had been proposed in the Lady's and Gentleman's Diary by the late Sir James Cockle, M.A., F.R.S., late Chief-Justice of Queensland. Through this answer he was brought into correspondence with the proposer, and the friendship which originated led to joint labours which have not been without their influence on the subsequent course of algebraic investigations in this country. Mr. Harley received his theological training in Airedale College, Bradford, and in 1854 was ordained Pastor of the Congregational Church at Brighouse, in the West Riding of Yorkshire. This position he held for fourteen years, during the last four of which he also occupied the Chairs of Mathematics and Logic in the College where he had been trained for the ministry. In 1868 he was elected Pastor of an important Congregational Church at Leicester. Here he devoted much of his time to public work. He was elected a member of the first School Board of Leicester, and turned his thoughts and energies to the determination of statistical and other questions connected with the public elementary education of the town. He was also a member of the Executive Committee of the National Education League, until that body, soon after the establishment of School Boards, having accomplished its main objects, was dissolved. In 1872 he was appointed Vice-Master of Mill Hill School, and Minister of the Chapel. Three years later he built a large boarding-house in connection with the school, which was full almost from the first. He also erected, for the use of the village, an iron hall for lectures, &c., which was opened by his friend, the Earl Stanhope. In 1882 he became Principal of Huddersfield College; and in 1886 he undertook charge of the leading Congregational Church at Oxford, which he resigned in 1890. Shortly afterwards he accepted the temporary pastorate of Pitt Street Congregational Church, Sydney. He preached and lectured in most of the principal towns and cities in Australia, and read scientific papers before the Union of the University of Sydney and the Royal Societies of New South Wales and Queensland. On returning home he became Pastor of a new Church (Heath Congregational) at Halifax; and finally retired from the stated ministry in 1895, removing to London, where he has resumed his mathematical researches. Mr. Harley is one of the very few Nonconformist Ministers who have been admitted to the Royal Society. He was elected a Fellow when only thirty-five; he is also a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society; a Member of the London Mathematical Society (on the Council of which he sat for some years); a Corresponding Member of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester; an Honorary Member of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Leicester; and an Honorary and Corresponding Member of the Philosophical Society of Queensland. At the meetings of the British Association at Norwich and at Edinburgh he acted as Secretary of Section A; and at the meetings at Bradford and at Bath he was appointed a Vice-President of the same Section. In November 1886 the University of Oxford conferred upon him the degree of M.A., honoris causa. He is the author of numerous papers, chiefly on questions in pure Mathematics or Symbolic Logic, published in the transactions of learned bodies and in journals devoted to mathematics or philosophy, inter alia, "On the Method of Symmetric Products," "On Circular Functions," "The Theory of Quintics," "The Theory of the Transcendental Solution of Algebraic Equations," "Differential Resolvents," "George Boole, F.R.S., a Biography and an Exposition," "Boole's Laws of Thought," "The Stanhope Demonstrator; an Instrument for performing Logical Operations," "Sir James Cockle's Criticoids," "The Explicit Form of the Complete Cubic Differential Resolvent," and "The Umbral Notation." Addresses: Rosslyn, Westbourne Road, Forest Hill, S.E.; and Athenæum.

HARMSWORTH, Alfred Charles W., principal proprietor of the Daily Mail, Evening News, and other journals, was born July 15, 1865, at Chapelizod, co. Dublin, being the eldest son of the late Alfred Harmsworth, barrister-at-law, Middle Temple. He was educated at Stamford Grammar School, Lincolnshire, and in 1882 he began work in the office of the Illustrated London News, as editor of one of Sir W. Ingram's journals. Amongst his journalistic ventures may be mentioned the originating of Answers in 1888, the purchase of the Evening News in 1894, the founding of the Daily Mail in 1896, and the publication in July 1898 of Harmsworth's Magazine, issued at the unprecedentedly low price of 3d. He contested Portsmouth in the Unionist interest in 1895. Mr. Harmsworth's name is well known in connection with the Arctic Expedition of 1894, which he equipped, and which sailed under the command of Mr. F. G. Jackson. He is married to Mary Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Robert Milner, of Kidlington, Oxon. Addresses: 36 Berkeley Square, W.; Elmwood, St. Peter's, Kent.

HARPER, William Rainey, Ph.D., D.D., American educator, was born at New Concord, Ohio, July 26, 1856, and was graduated from Muskingum College, Ohio, in 1870. From 1875 to 1876 he was Principal of Masonic College, Macon, Tenn.; 1876-80, instructor in Denison University; 1879-86, Professor of Hebrew in the (Chicago) Baptist Theol. Seminary;

1886-91, Professor of the Semitic Languages in Yale University (also 1889-91 Woolsey Professor of Biblical Literature in Yale); and since 1891 has been President and Head Professor of the Semitic Languages and Literatures in the recently established Chicago University. He received the degree of Ph.D. from Yale University in 1875, and that of D.D. from Colby University in 1891. He is editor of the Biblical World and of Hebraica, and has published several Hebrew text-books.

HARPIGNIES, Henri Joseph, French landscape painter, was born at Valenciennes in July 1819, became the pupil of Achard, and exhibited first at the Salon in 1853 with his "Chemin creux aux Environs de Valenciennes." In 1858 he began the study of children, that of trees in 1859, and in 1860 he visited Italy with Corot, whose influence on his work is easily discernible. In 1861 he exhibited his first important work, "Lisière de Bois sur les Bords de l'Allier"; in 1863 "Les Corbeaux"; in 1866 "Le Soir dans la Campagne de Rome," for which he received his first medal, and for several years was in the Luxembourg. In 1869 he discovered the Valley of Hérisson in the Bourbonnais, much as Millet discovered Barbizon. He visited it year after year until 1879, when he purchased the estate of Saint-Privé in the Yonne. His chief works during this period are: "Soir sur les Bords de la Loire," 1861; "Le Soir," 1866; "Le Saut du Loup," by many regarded as his masterpiece, 1873; "La Loire," 1882; and "Saint-Privé," 1883. He has also painted many water-colours of Paris, such as "Le Pont Neuf" and "Place St. Germain des Prés" where the church is only revealed by its shadow. In 1897 he exhibited, at the Salon des Champs Elysées, "Les Bords du Rhône" and "Solitude." He is represented in the Luxembourg by three landscapes, but he is little known in England. An appreciative article was written in the Studio (April 1898), and two of his works were seen in the Guildhall Loan Exhibition of 1898, which may serve to render the successor of Corot more appreciated. He was made an Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1883.

HARRADEN, Beatrice, novelist, was born at Hampstead on Jan. 24, 1864, and is the youngest daughter of Samuel Harraden and Rosalie, his wife. She was educated at Dresden, at Cheltenham College for Ladies, and at Queen's and Bedford Colleges, London. She is a B.A. of London University, and has travelled and pursued her studies on the Continent and in the United States. She came into notice with her first book of stories, "Ships that Pass in the Night" (Lane), 1893; and has since published "In Varying Moods," 1894; "Hilda Stafford," and "Untold Tales of the Past," 1897. Address: 5 Cannon Place, Hampstead, N.W.

HARRINGTON, John Lane, was Agent at the Court of the Emperor Menelek of Ethiopia, February 1898. After serving three years as a non-commissioned officer, he obtained a commission in the Middlesex Regiment in 1888. In the next year he exchanged into the Indian Staff Corps, and in 1895 was appointed Vice-Consul at Zeyla.

HARRINGTON, Timothy Charles, M.P. for Dublin City (Harbour Division), son of Denis Harrington, was born at Castle-town Bere, in the county of Cork, in 1851. He studied at Trinity College, Dublin, and at the Catholic University. He is a member of the Irish Bar, and was engaged as counsel in most of the recent Irish political trials, including the Times Special Commission, where he appeared as one of the Junior Counsel for the defence of Mr. Parnell and his Parliamentary colleagues. He has had considerable experience as a journalist, having founded and edited the Kerry Sentinel, and in more recent years he was connected with the Irish Daily Independent and United Ireland. He was Secretary and Chief Organiser of the Irish National League from its establishment in 1882 until after Mr. Parnell's death, and had been always closely associated with the great Irish leader. In 1883, while imprisoned in Mullingar Jail for a speech delivered in support of the claims of the agricultural labourers, he was returned to Parliament as junior representative of county Westmeath, and at the general election of 1885 he was returned for the Harbour Division of the City of Dublin, which constituency he has since represented. He is the author of several pamphlets connected with the Irish movement, including "A Diary of Coercion," "Impeachment of the Maamtrasna Trials," &c. When the division occurred in the ranks of the Irish Parliamentary Party, he, in company with Messrs. John Dillon, William O'Brien, T. P. O'Connor, T. D. Sullivan, and T. P. Gill, were on a delegation in America. Five of the delegates declared against Mr. Parnell, whilst Mr. Harrington supported the Irish leader, and remained a supporter of his to the end. He was married in 1892, at Dublin, to Elizabeth, second daughter of the late Dr. Edward O'Neill of that city. Address: 6 Cavendish Row, Dublin; and Artane Lodge, co. Dublin.

HARRIS, Frank, was born on Feb. 14, 1856, in Galway, Ireland. He is of Welsh blood, his father and mother both coming from Pembrokeshire. His father had worked himself up from cabin-boy to the command of a revenue cutter, and is thought by his son to have been a man of extraordinary energy and ability. Thanks to his father's self-sacrifice and economy (his mother died when Frank was a mere child), Frank Harris was taught in comparatively good schools—at the Royal Institution, Belfast, and afterwards in the Grammar School, Ruabon. In his fifteenth year, however, he took the bit in his teeth and emigrated to Canada. Doing odd jobs of work he made his way westwards from Quebec to Chicago (he was in Chicago during the great fire), and afterwards came to anchor in Lawrence, Kansas. He attended the State University for a couple of years, and profited greatly by the teachings of B. C. Smith, at that time the professor of Greek, whose memory he still cherishes as that of the noblest man it has ever been his good fortune to meet, as well as one of the wisest and most learned. It was Smith who taught Harris "what literature and art mean, and the value in life of what endures." In Lawrence, too, young Harris studied law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1876. In the same year he resolved to continue his education, and with that purpose returned to Europe and went first to the University of Paris. There he learned nothing except some modern French literature. In 1878 he entered the University of Heidelberg, and went from there to Göttingen and afterwards to Berlin. In 1880 he went to Greece and studied in Athens for nearly a year. In 1881 he came to London and got work immediately on the Spectator. A year later he accepted the editorship of the Evening News, then on its last legs. In less than three years he increased the circulation of the Evening News from about 7000 a day to 70,000, and was then offered the editorship of the Fortnightly Review. He edited the Fortnightly from 1888 to 1893, and then bought the Saturday Review, which he edited till November 1898. He left the Saturday in order to devote himself to literature. In 1893 he had published with Messrs. Heinemann a volume of western stories, entitled "Elder Conklin, and other Tales," and we understand that a volume of his criticism, under the title "The True Shakespeare," will be published in the spring of 1899, as well as a second volume of stories. Address: Limehurst, Roehampton Vale, S.W.

HARRIS, Sir George David, was born in 1827. He was at one time in the Diplomatic Service, was a member of Parliament in and member of the Executive Council of the Bahamas (1861), and

Captain of the Nassau Marine Artillery. He has represented South Paddington as Moderate member of the London County Council since 1895. In 1888 he received the honour of knighthood. He married, in 1854, Eliza Harriet, daughter of the Hon. Hy. Adderley, Bahamas. Address: 32 Inverness Terrace, Kensington Gardens, W.

HARRIS, Lord George Robert Canning Harris, G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., D.L., J.P., was born at St. Ann's, Trinidad, Feb. 3, 1851, and is the son of the third Baron and of a daughter of the Ven. George Cummins, Archdeacon of Trinidad. He was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1874. He is J.P. and D.L. for Kent, and Deputy-Chairman of the East Kent Quarter Sessions. In Lord Salisbury's Government of 1885 he was Under-Secretary for India, and from 1886-89 he held the post of Under-Secretary for War. He is a celebrated cricketer; has long been captain of the Kent County Club; and has taken an eleven to Australia. He was Governor of Bombay from February 1890 to 1895, when he was appointed Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen. Addresses: 6 Oxford Square, W.; and Belmont, Faversham, Kent.

HARRIS, Henry Percy, L.C.C., was born Sept. 8, 1856, being the only son of Sir George David Harris, J.P. He was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, graduating B.A. in 1880, and became a barrister at Lincoln's Inn in 1881. He has been London County Councillor for North Paddington from 1892, and was elected Deputy-Chairman of the London County Council in March 1898. Addresses: 13 Old Square, Lincoln's Inn; 32 Inverness Terrace, Paddington.

HARRIS, Joel Chandler, American writer, was born at Eatonton, Ga., Dec. 8, 1848. His early education was limited to a brief attendance at a local school, and, at the age of 12, he was apprenticed to a printer. His fondness for books enabled him to overcome the deficiencies of his schooling, and he soon rose from the printer's case to an editorial desk. He was employed on various papers in Macon, New Orleans, Forsyth, and Savannah until 1876, when he went to Atlanta (Ga.), and secured an engagement on the Constitution, of which he was in 1890 and still is in 1899 the principal editor. It was his negro dialect stories, contributed to the Constitution, that first drew public attention to him, and that have won for him his literary reputation. In addition to his editorial labours, he has been a frequent writer for American magazines, and has also published "Uncle Remus, his Songs and his Sayings," 1880; "Nights with Uncle Remus," 1883; "Mingo and Other Sketches," 1884; "Free Joe," 1887; "Daddy Jake the Runaway," 1889; "Balaam and his Master, and other Stories," 1892; "Little Mr. Thimblefinger and his Queer Country," 1894; "Sister Jane," 1896; and "Aaron in the Wild-woods," 1897. A "Life of Henry W. Grady," his predecessor as editor of the Constitution, and a popular Southern speaker, was published by him in 1890.

HARRIS, Rear-Admiral Sir Robert Hastings, K.C.M.G., eldest son of the late Captain Robert Harris, R.N., and Friscilla, daughter of the late Captain Thomas Pewmddicke of the Scots Guards, was born at Portsmouth on Oct. 12, 1843. He was educated at the Royal Naval School, Newcross, and entered the navy in January 1856. He was promoted Lieutenant in March 1863, and obtained Commander's rank in June 1870 by a haul-down vacancy. He became a Captain in December 1879, and for three years was Aide-de-camp to the Queen. He was appointed Inspector of Boys' Training Ships in September 1889, and in June 1893 he hoisted a broad pennant in H.M.S. Active as Commodore of the Training Squadron, and was promoted Rear-Admiral in January 1895. In May of the following year he became second in command of the Mediterranean Fleet, with his flag in H.M.S. Revenge. Sir Robert Harris was appointed in charge of the British Squadron which was despatched to Crete during the crisis of 1897. Most of the conferences between the Admirals of the International Fleet which had assembled in Cretan waters were held on board his flagship, and in consideration of his services throughout the crisis Sir Robert was created a K.C.M.G. In May 1898 he was chosen to succeed Admiral Sir Harry Rawson in the command of the South African Squadron. Sir Robert issued a revised edition of Captain Alston's Seamanship in 1871, and he is also the author of "Maritime Power and its Probable Application in War."

HARRISON, The Hon. Benjamin, LL.D., twenty-third President of the United States, grandson of the ninth President, was born at North Bend, Ohio, Aug. 20, 1833. He graduated from Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, in 1852, studied law and began its practice in Indianapolis, Ind. (1854), where he has since resided. The first official position held by him was that of orier in the Federal Court at Indianapolis, to which he was appointed shortly after his removal to that city. In 1860 he was elected, by the Republican party, reporter of the Indiana Supreme Court, but resigned the office in 1862 to enter the Union Army in the Civil War. He assisted in raising the 70th Indiana Regiment, of which he was made Colonel when it went to the field. During the war his regiment was chiefly engaged in the West, guarding railways and in guerilla warfare. In January 1864 Col. Harrison was placed in command of a brigade, and made the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta with Gen. Hooker's corps. His first engagement of importance was that of Resaca, May 14, 1864. Subsequently he took part in the capture of Cassville, the actions at New Hope Church and at Golgotha Church, and in the battles of Kennesaw Mountain and Peach Tree Creek. "For ability and manifest energy and gallantry in command of the brigade," the brevet of brigadier-general of volunteers was subsequently conferred upon him, to date from Jan. 23, 1865. When mustered out (June 1865) at the close of the war, he returned to Indianapolis and resumed the duties of the office of reporter, to which he had been re-elected in 1864. At the expiration of his term (1868) he declined another renomination, and took up again the practice of his profession. Though actively interested in the presidential canvasses of 1868 and 1872, he did not hold any official position, nor was he a candidate for any office, until in 1876 he accepted the Republican nomination for governor of his State, but that year was unfavourable to his party, and he was not elected. In 1879 President Hayes appointed him a member of the Mississippi River Commission, and in the following year he was made chairman of the Indiana Delegation to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Garfield for the Presidency. He was a prominent speaker in the campaign of Mr. Garfield, and on the election of the latter was offered a portfolio in the cabinet, but he declined it. On March 4, 1881, he took his seat in the United States Senate, to which the legislature of Indiana had previously elected him for a full term of six years. While a member of that body he spoke frequently, and was known as an advocate of protective duties on imports, of a reform in the civil service, and of a restoration of the American navy. He was again a delegate of his party to the National Convention in 1884, and his name was there mentioned in connection with the Presidency, as indeed it had been at the preceding Convention. At the next Convention (1888) he was among the leading candidates from the start, and on the eighth ballot was tendered the nomination, which he accepted on a platform of a maintenance of the protective tariff. This became the controlling issue in the ensuing contest between Mr. Cleveland (renominated by the Democratic party) and himself, and the result was a Republican victory and the election of Mr. Harrison, who was accordingly inaugurated President on March 4, 1889, for a term of four years. In 1892 he was nominated by his party for re-election, and was again opposed by Mr. Cleveland, who, for the third time, was the Democratic party's choice for President. The campaign, as in 1888, was conducted mainly on the tariff question, which was till 1896 (when the silver question came uppermost) the principal political issue before the American people. Owing to the unpopularity of what is known as the M'Kinley Bill (a protective tariff measure passed by Congress and approved by Mr. Harrison in 1890), the Republican party was defeated, and at the end of his term of office in March 1893 Mr. Harrison left Washington, and returned to his home in Indianapolis and resumed his practice of the law. In 1897 he published "This Country of Ours." The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Miami University and the College of New Jersey in June 1889.

HARRISON, Clifford, reciter, was born in London in 1857. His father, William Harrison, was a celebrated tenor singer, and lost a large fortune in endeavouring to establish English opera in London. Mr. Clifford Harrison entered the theatrical profession when quite young, and resigned it to go to College (St. John's, Cambridge). He, however, relinquished the University career, and returned to the stage. He gave his first public recital at St. George's Hall in 1877, and since then he has held his position in London as a most popular entertainer. His series of recitals (Steinway Hall) are the longest by far on record, lasting as a rule for thirty weeks out of each year, and his repertory consists of some 400 pieces. Ill health has unfortunately forced him to resign provincial and colonial tours. He is a draughtsman in black and white, and held an exhibition of his drawings in 1898. He has published the following works in verse and prose: "In Hours of Leisure," "On the Common Chords," "Stray Records," "The Lute of Apollo," "Notes on the Margins," and "Lines in Pleasant Places." Address: 29 St. George's Square, S.W.

HARRISON, Frederic, M.A., was born in London, Oct. 18, 1831, being the eldest son of Frederic Harrison, Esq., of London, by Jane, only daughter of the late Alexander Brice, Esq., of Belfast.

He was educated at King's College School, London; was elected Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, 1848; and took the degree of B.A., 1853 (when he was in the first class in Lit. Hum.). After residing for some time as Fellow and Tutor of his College at Oxford, he was called to the Bar in 1858. He has since practised as a Conveyancer, and in the Courts of Equity. Mr. Harrison was a member of the Royal Commission upon Trade Unions, 1867-69; Secretary to the Royal Commission for the Digest of the Law, 1869-70; and in 1877 was appointed by the Council of Legal Education, Professor of Jurisprudence and International Law, which office he held until 1889. He has given much attention to the questions and institutions relating to working-men. He was one of the founders of the Positivist School in 1870, and also of Newton Hall in 1881. He is the author of some articles in the Westminster Review between 1860 and 1864, of numerous essays in the Fortnightly Review from 1865, in the Nineteenth Century from its commencement, the Contemporary Review from 1875, in Cosmopolis and in the Forum of New York, 1890-94. He has published "The Meaning of History," 1862; "Order and Progress," 1875; an English translation of "Social Statics, or the Abstract Theory of Human Order," being vol. ii. of Comte's "Positive Polity," 1875; "The Choice of Books, and other Literary Pieces," 1886; "Oliver Cromwell," 1888; "Annals of an Old Manor House," 1893; "Historical Pieces," 1894; "Early Victorian Literature," 1896; and "William the Silent," 1897. Mr. Harrison was the editor, and in part the author, of "The New Calendar of Great Men," 1892, a collection of 558 biographies of worthies of all nations and ages. He is a follower of Auguste Comte, whose philosophical, social, and religious doctrines he has presented in various articles, lectures, and published addresses. Mr. Harrison has been since 1880 President of the English Positivist Committee, and has given continuous courses of Lectures in Newton Hall, many of which have been published separately. He has also been a constant writer in the Positivist Review, edited by Professor Beesly, from January 1893. Mr. Harrison has declined to enter Parliament, except that at the general election of 1886 he stood for the University of London against Sir John Lubbock, and was defeated by 1314 votes against 516. In February 1889 he was elected an Alderman by the London County Council, and resigned that office in October 1893. Mr. Frederic Harrison is at present identified with the movement for erecting a fitting memorial to King Alfred on the occasion of that monarch's approaching millenary. He has written some notable articles and letters in the Times and other leading journals on this subject. In 1870 he married Ethel Bertha, only daughter of William Harrison, Esq., of Craven Hill Gardens. Addresses: 38 Westbourne Terrace, W.; and Athenæum.

HARRISON, Miss Jane Ellen, Hon. LL.D. Aberdeen, Hon. D.Litt. Durham, was born Sept. 9, 1850. Her father, of whom she is the third daughter, was Mr. Charles Harrison, of Cottingham, near Hull. She was for a time educated privately under a governess in a village near Scarborough, and at the age of thirteen began to learn Greek. Subsequently she passed the Cambridge Higher Local Examinations, and won their Language Scholarship. She continued her education at Cheltenham, where she studied mathematics and science, and, after passing most honourably several examinations at Newnham, where she spent three years, was informally examined in 1879 by the Examiners of the Classical Tripos and declared by them to have attained the honours standard. At Cambridge, and afterwards at the British Museum, Miss Harrison studied Greek vase-painting and marbles under Professor Colvin, and, during a tour through Europe, she visited and carefully inspected every important collection of Greek sculpture. On her return from her first residence abroad Miss Harrison, in 1882, was invited to form classes for the study of Greek sculpture and the minor classical antiquities at the British Museum, which were formed and continued until 1887. At the Museum some thirty auditors only could listen to her as she conducted her party round the Greek Galleries, but at South Kensington her audiences were large. She has lectured on Greek art, and especially on Greek vase-painting, at many public schools and ladies' colleges, at Toynbee Hall, at the Midland Institute, Birmingham, for the University Extension Society, and for the Association for the Higher Education of Women. She is Staff Lecturer on Classical Archæology to the Oxford University Extension, and a Corresponding Member of the K. K. Arch. Instit. of Berlin. In 1890 she was appointed member of the Committee of the British School of Archæology at Athens, and from 1889 to 1896 was a member of the Council of the Hellenic Society. Her works include: "Myths of the Odyssey in Art and Literature," 1882; "Introductory Studies in Greek Art," 1885; "Mythology and Monuments of Ancient Athens" (jointly with Mrs. A. W. Verrall), 1890; and "Greek Vase-Painting" (jointly with Mr. D. S. MacColl), 1894. Address: 37 Barkston Gardens, S.W.

HARRISON, Mary St. Ledger, who publishes as "Lucas Malet," was born at Eversley Rectory, on June 4, 1852, and is the youngest daughter of the late Charles Kingsley, and Frances, daughter of Pascoe Grenfell, of Taplow. The accomplished novelist was educated at home under her father's guidance, and afterwards at the Slade School and at University College, London. In 1876 she married William Harrison, Rector of Clovelly, who died in 1897. She has travelled much, especially in India and Ceylon. Her novels are: "Mrs. Lorimer, a Sketch in Black and White," 1882; "Colonel Enderby's Wife," 1885; "Little Peter," 1887; "A Council of Perfection," 1888; "The Wages of Sin," a very powerful book, the scene of which suggests her native Clovelly, 1891; "The Carissima, a Modern Grotesque," 1896. Address: 6 Ballingham Mansions, Kensington, W.

HARRISON, Reginald, F.R.C.S., the eldest son of the late Rev. Thomas Harrison, of Stafford, was educated at Rossall School and St. Bartholomew's Hospital. He became Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1859, and a Fellow of the College in 1866. He is Surgeon to St. Peter's Hospital, London; Member of Council of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, Vice-President of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, Hon. Member Medical Society, State of New York; Hon. Fellow American Surgical Association, and of Chicago Academy of Medicine, &c., and lately Vice-President and Hunterian Professor of Pathology and Surgery at the Royal College of Surgeons, President of the Medical Society of London, Surgeon to the Liverpool Royal Infirmary, Lecturer on Surgery in Victoria University, and Examiner in Surgery in University of Durham. He is author of "The Surgical Disorders of the Urinary Organs," four editions; the articles on Stone and Surgical Diseases of Bladder and Kidneys, vol. i.; "Twentieth-Century International Cyclopaedia" (New York), 1895; the Lettsoman Lectures before the Medical Society of London, 1888; the Presidential Address of Liverpool Medical Society, 1881, on "The Use of the Ambulance in Civil Practice"; and of various other contributions to surgical literature. Address: 6 Lower Berkeley Street, Portman Square, W.

HARRISON, General Sir Richard, K.C.B., C.M.G., son of the Rev. B. J. Harrison, rector of Beaumont, Essex, was born on May 26, 1837. He was educated at Harrow, and entered the army as a Lieutenant of Royal Engineers in 1855, promoted Captain 1862, Major 1864, and Lieut.-Colonel 1874. He first saw war service at Scutari in the Crimea. He went through the Indian Mutiny, and was present at many actions, including the siege and capture of Lucknow, and, as Staff Officer to the Commanding Royal Engineer, took part in the Trans-Gogra Campaign. In 1860 he went to China and was present at the siege and capture of the Taku Forts. He was attached to the Quartermaster-General's Staff at the advance on and surrender of Peking. He was mentioned in despatches, and received the Brevet of Major and a medal with two clasps. Sir Richard Harrison accompanied Sir W. Jervois on a special mission to Canada and the United States during the war of 1863-64, and upon returning to England was appointed Brigade-Major of Royal Engineers at Chatham. In 1879 he went to South Africa and took part in the Zulu War. He was appointed Senior Royal Engineer at Headquarters, and was also on the Staff at the battle of Ulundi. For his services he was created a C.B. During the Boer agitation he was in command of the flying column and also commanded the troops in the Transvaal during the operations against Sekukuni, and was several times mentioned in despatches. In 1881 he was employed at Aldershot, and the following year went to Egypt as Assistant Adjutant-General. He served as Chief Staff Officer on the lines of communication throughout the campaign and was present at the action of El Magfar and the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He was again mentioned in despatches, and was awarded a C.M.G. and the Osmanieh of the third class. Sir Richard Harrison also served in the Soudan Expedition of 1885, taking part in the Nile Expedition. He was Colonel of the Staff and had charge of the line of communication. He was promoted Major-General in July 1888, and the following year was appointed Governor of the Royal Military Academy. He received a K.C.B. shortly after. As Lieut.-General he commanded the Western District (the Devonport Command) from October 1893 to October 1895. In 1897 he was chosen to be temporary Quartermaster-General of the Forces pending the arrival from India of Sir George White. General Sir Richard Harrison married, in 1870, Amy Sophia, daughter of Colonel J. O'Brien. Address: Hawley Hill, Blackwater.

HARRISON, The Right Rev. William Thomas, D.D., Bishop of Glasgow and Galloway, is the youngest son of the Rev. T. T. Harrison, M.A., rector of Thorpe Morieux, Suffolk. He was born on September 22, 1837, and was educated at Marlborough College and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was curate at the Parish Church, Great Yarmouth, 1861-68 ; rector of Thorpe Morieux, 1868-75 ; vicar of Christ Church, Luton, 1875-83 ; vicar of St. James's, Bury St. Edmunds, 1883-88 ; and rural dean of Luton ; and subsequently (1886) rural dean of Thingoe. He was consecrated Bishop in 1888. He is an Hon. Canon of Ely. He married, in 1890, Elizabeth Colvin, daughter of Col. John Colvin, C.B. Address : 25 Burnbank Gardens, Glasgow.

HARROWBY, Earl of, The Right Hon. Dudley Francis Stuart Ryder, D.L., J.P., D.C.L., is the eldest son of the late Earl of Harrowby, K.G., by Lady Frances Stuart, fourth daughter of the late Marquis of Bute. He was born at Brighton, Jan. 16, 1831, and received his education at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1852. After leaving the University he accompanied the present Earl of Carnarvon on a journey to the East, visiting the sites of Nineveh and Babylon, and exploring the country between Mesopotamia, the Black Sea, and Persia. He served as Captain in the 2nd Staffordshire Militia when that regiment was called out for garrison duty at the time of the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. In 1856 he was elected M.P. for Lichfield, which city he represented as Viscount Sandon till 1859 ; and for some time he was Private Secretary to Mr. Labouchere at the Colonial Office, 1856-8. He unsuccessfully contested Stafford in 1860. Viscount Sandon was first elected for Liverpool in January 1868, and was elected three times for the borough. At the general election in February 1874, his lordship was returned for that borough at the head of the poll, no fewer than 20,206 votes having been recorded in his favour—the largest number given to any candidate in the United Kingdom. He came into Parliament as a supporter of Lord Palmerston, but gave up his connection with that party and his seat in the House of Commons on account of Lord John Russell becoming a member of Lord Palmerston's Government, and has been ever since a steady supporter of the Conservative party. At one time he took an active part in the private business of the House of Commons, and served on several select committees, including those on the Euphrates Valley, Hudson's Bay, and the Diplomatic and Consular Services ; and he was also a member of the secret committee appointed to inquire into the Westmeath Ribbon outrages. His name was associated with the Parochial Councils Bill, which he brought forward in two sessions, with the object of giving to the laity a larger share in the management of Church affairs. His lordship took a leading part, conjointly with Mr. W. H. Smith, in founding the "Bishop of London's Fund," and took an active share in all the details of its management for about nine years. To the first London School Board he was returned for Westminster (1873), and he presided over the statistical committee appointed by that body to investigate the educational wants of the metropolis. In February 1874 he was appointed Vice-President of the Council of Education, and for four years he represented that Department in the House of Commons. He brought in the Education Act of 1876 and various Revised Codes. In 1877, when the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland became vacant, and a second time in 1878, the Earl of Beaconsfield offered it, with a seat in the Cabinet, to Viscount Sandon, who, however, for family reasons refused it on both occasions; but shortly afterwards his lordship accepted the post of President of the Board of Trade, with a seat in the Cabinet, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Adderley, who was raised to the House of Peers, April 1878. Viscount Sandon went out of office with his colleagues in April 1880. He succeeded to the title of Earl of Harrowby on the death of his father (Nov. 19, 1882). He was appointed Lord Privy Seal in the Marquis of Salisbury's Government in 1886, and went out of office with his colleagues in February 1886. He was appointed a member of the Royal Commission on Education in 1886, and served on it for nearly three years of its existence. He became President of the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1886. In 1888 he was elected as one of the representatives of the Diocese of Lichfield in the first House of Laymen. He was elected a member of the first County Council for Staffordshire in 1888, and has been its chairman from the commencement. He has given special attention to colonial matters, and to questions affecting the empire generally, speaking frequently on these subjects in both the House of Commons and House of Lords, and also to subjects affecting the religious, social, and material progress of the working-classes. He married, in 1861, Lady Mary Frances Cecil, eldest daughter of the second Marquis of Exeter. Addresses: 44 Grosvenor Square, W.; Sandon Hall, Staffs., &c.; and Athenæum.

HART, Heber Leonidas, LL.D., barrister-at-law, was born March 31, 1865, at Clapham, and is the son of Mr. Percy Hart. He graduated in 1886 in the University of London as Bachelor of Laws, having been placed first in First-Class Honours in Jurisprudence and Roman Law, and also obtaining Honours in Common Law and Equity; he took the degree of Doctor of Laws in 1893, being the only successful candidate out of seven. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1887, and joined the South-Eastern Circuit. From 1887 to 1890 he was leader of the Liberal party in the Putney Parliament; for some years after 1889 he was Chairman of the Putney and Roehampton Liberal Association; and for several years he was a Vice-President of the Borough of Wandsworth Liberal and Radical Association. At the annual general meeting of the Bar in 1894 Mr. Hart seconded a motion, which led to the formation of the present General Council of the Bar. In 1894 and subsequent years he took a leading part in forming the London University Defence Committee, and is still one of the principal advocates of the maintenance of the existing work of the University as an Imperial and Impartial Examining Board; he is, moreover, a member of a select committee of 13 members of Convocation, upon the subject of the reconstitution of the University. He contested the Isle of Thanet at the general election of 1892, and South Islington at the general election of 1895; was in 1895 elected the first Honorary Fellow of the Auctioneers' Institute of the United Kingdom; and is a member of the Committee and Standing Sub-Committee of the Eighty Club. He is the author of "Women's Suffrage and National Danger," 1889; and "The Law relating to Auctioneers," 1895. Addresses: The Pines, Putney Hill, S.W.; and Goldsmith Building, Temple, E.C.

HART, James McDougal, landscape painter, was born at Kilmarnock, Scotland, in 1828. When a child he went with his family to America and lived at Albany, New York. In 1851 he went to Düsseldorf and studied painting for about a year. He returned to Albany in 1852, and in 1856 removed to New York City, where he has since resided. He was made an Academician in 1859. His pictures are admired for their harmony of colour and quiet peacefulness of tone. The best known among them are: "Moonrise in the Adirondacks," "A Summer's Memory of Berkshire," "The Drove at the Ford," "By the Brookside," "Peaceful Homes," "Coming out of the Shade," "On the March," "Among Friends," "Threatening Weather," "Indian Summer," and "A Misty Morning." Two of his pictures—"In the Autumn Woods" and "The Rain is Over," painted in 1881 and 1887 respectively—were exhibited at the Paris Exposition of 1889, for which he was awarded a bronze medal.

HARTE, Francis Bret, was born at Albany, New York, Aug. 25, 1839. He went to California in 1854, and was successively a miner, school-teacher, express messenger, printer, and finally editor of a newspaper. In 1864 he was appointed Secretary of the United States Branch Mint at San Francisco, holding the office until 1870. He contributed many poems and sketches to periodicals, and in 1868, upon the establishment of the Overland Monthly, he became its editor, and contributed to it several notable tales and sketches. In 1869 appeared in it his humorous poem "The Heathen Chinese," which suddenly made him famous. In 1871 he went to the Eastern States, and took up his residence first in New York, and subsequently in Boston. He was appointed United States Consul at Creffield in 1878, from which he was transferred to Glasgow in March 1880, where he remained until July 1885. Since then he has resided in London. His works, most of which originally appeared in periodicals, include "Condensed Novels," 1867; "Poems," and "Luck of Roaring Camp, and other Sketches," 1870; "East and West Poems," and "Poetical Works," illustrated, 1871; "Mrs. Skaggs's Husbands," 1872; "Echoes of the Foot Hills," 1874; "Tales of the Argonauts," 1875; "Gabriel Conroy," and "Two Men of Sandy Bar," 1876; "Thankful Blossom," 1877; "Story of a Mine," and "Drift from Two Shores," 1878; "The Twins of Table Mountain and other Stories," 1879; "Flip and Found at Blazing Star," 1882; "In the Carquinez Woods," 1883; "On the Frontier," 1884; "By Shore and Sedge," and "Maruja," 1885; "Snowbound at Eagle's," and "The Queen of the Pirate Isle," 1886; "A Millionaire of Rough and Ready," "Devil's Ford," and "The Crusade of the Excelsior," 1887; "A Phyllis of the Sierras," "Drift from Redwood Camp," and "The Argonauts of North Liberty," 1888; "Cressy," and "The Heritage of Dedlow Marsh," 1889; "A Waif of the Plains," and "A Ward of the Golden Gate," 1890; "A Sappho of Green Springs," and "Sally Dows," 1892; "Susy," 1893; "The Bellingrider of Angel's," and "A Protégé of Jack Hamlin's," 1894; "Clarence," and "In a Hollow of the Hills," 1895; "Barker's Luck and Other Stories," 1896; "Three Partners," 1897; and "Stories in Light and Shade," 1899. Address: 74 Lancaster Gate, W.

HARTING, James Edmund, F.L.S., F.Z.S., eldest son of the late James Vincent Harting, of Harting, in the county of Sussex, and Kingsbury, Middlesex, was born in London, April 29, 1841. He was educated at Downside College, near Bath, and at the University of London, where he matriculated in 1859, and the following year passed the first examination for the degree of B.A. He followed the profession of a solicitor until 1878, when he retired from practice. Being from youth devoted to the study of zoology, and more especially ornithology, he began in 1866 to publish the results of his observations, and since that date he has written several works, of which the titles and dates are given below, as well as numerous papers in the Proceedings and Transactions of scientific societies and in journals devoted to natural history. In January 1871 he began to edit the natural history columns of the Field, which he has continued to do ever since; he was editor of the Zoologist for about twenty years from 1877 to 1896. Elected a Fellow of the Zoological Society in 1864, and a Fellow of the Linnean Society in 1868, he has served on the Council of the latter, and on various committees of the former society and of the British Association for many years. He took an active part in procuring the passing of the Sea Birds Preservation Act, 1869, and drafted the Bill for the Protection of Wild Fowl, which was passed in 1872; and in 1873 he was examined before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, appointed to take evidence on this subject with a view to further legislation. Elected an hon. member of several county Natural History Societies, he was in 1882 awarded a first-class silver medal of the Société d'Acclimatation de France "for scientific publications." In January 1888 he was appointed Librarian to the Linnean Society, with an official residence at Burlington House. In 1889 he went to Paris as special correspondent of the Field to report on guns and rifles at the Paris Exhibition, and to Thessaly in 1893 for the Board of Agriculture to report on the vole plague. The titles of his works are: "The Birds of Middlesex: a Contribution towards the Natural History of the County," 1866; "The Ornithology of Shakespeare critically examined, explained, and illustrated," 1871; "A Handbook of British Birds," 1872; "Our Summer Migrants," 1875; a new edition of White's "Natural History of Selborne," 1875; another edition, with additional "Letters of White," 1876; "Rambles in Search of Shells," 1876; "Ostriches and Ostrich Farming," 1879; "Rodd's Birds of Cornwall, edited with an Introduction, Appendix, and Memoir of the Author," 1880; "British Animals Extinct within Historic Times," 1880; "Glimpses of Bird Life," 1880; "Essays on Sport and Natural History," 1883; "A Perfect Booke for Kepinges of Spar-hawkes or Goshawks: Printed for the first time from the Original MS. of 1575, with an Introduction and Glossary," 1886; "Bert's Treatise of Hawks: for the first time Reprinted from the Original of 1619, with an Introduction," 1891; "Bibliotheca Accipitraria: a Bibliography of Falconry, with Illustrations," 1891; "Walton's Angler," Tercentary edition, 1893; "Hints on the Management of Hawks," 2nd edit., 1898. In 1868 he married Elizabeth, daughter of James M. Lynch, of co. Kildare and co. Dublin. Address: Linnean Society, Burlington House, W.

HARTMANN, Alfred, a Swiss author, was born Jan. 1, 1814, in the castle of Thunstetten, near Langenthal, in the canton of Berne, and attended from 1827 to 1831 the schools of Solothurn. After the latter date he studied law in the universities of Munich, Heidelberg, and Berlin. During a prolonged visit to Paris, however, he lost all taste for jurisprudence, and devoted himself to literary pursuits. On returning to his native country he permanently fixed his residence at Solothurn, where he formed a close friendship with the well-known painter Disteli, and where (from 1845) he published a comic periodical called Postheiri. But Hartmann became best known through his Helvetic romance, "Meister Putsch und seine Gesellen," 1858; and, in the department of biography, by his sketch of his friend "Martin Disteli," 1861; "H. J. von Staal," 1861; "Gallerie berühmter Schweizer," 2 vols., 1863-71; and "Hory, Kanzler-Denkwürdigkeiten," 1876. Among his other works may be mentioned "Kiltabendsgeschichten, 1853-55; "Erzählungen aus der Schweiz," 1863; "Junker und Bürger," 1865; "Schweizer-novellen," 1877; "Neue Schweizer-novellen," and "Fortunat," 1879.

HARTMANN, Karl Robert Eduard von, philosopher, was born in Berlin, on Feb. 23, 1842. He entered the Prussian army in 1858; but lameness obliged him to leave the service in 1865, and he took to literature as a profession. His first work, "Philosophie des Unbewussten" (The Philosophy of the Unconscious) at once raised him to fame. It was published in 1869, and in thirteen years passed through nine editions. An English translation, in three volumes, is published in Trübner's English and Foreign Philosophical Library. This has been followed by "Phänomenologie des sittlichen Bewusstseins," 1878; "Zur Geschichte und Begründung des Pessimismus," 1880 (2nd edit., 1892); "Das religiöse Bewusstsein der Menschheit im Stufengange seiner Entwicklung," 1881; "Philosophie des Schönen," 1887; "Des Grund-problems der Erkenntnisstheorie," 1889; "Die Geisterhypothesen des Spiritismus," 1891; besides numerous less important works. In 1893 he published a criticism of Kant. He is a pessimist as regards the inevitable misery of existence, but an optimist in so far as he believes in evolutionary progress.

HASTINGS, Thomas Samuel, D.D., was born at Utica, N.Y., Aug. 28, 1827. He graduated at Hamilton College, Clinton, N.Y., in 1848, and at the Union Theological Seminary, N.Y. City, in 1851. He was pastor of Presbyterian churches in Mendham, N.J., in 1852-56, and in New York City in 1856-82. He then became Professor of Sacred Rhetoric in the Union Theological Seminary, of which, in 1888, he was made the President, succeeding the late Dr. R. D. Hitchcock, who died in 1887. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the University of the City of New York in 1865, and that of LL.D. by the College of New Jersey, 1888. In conjunction with his father he edited "Church Melodies," published in 1857. He retired from the Presidency of Union Theological Seminary in 1897.

HATTON, G. R., editor of the Biographer, is the brother of Joseph Hatton (q.v.), and was born at Chesterfield on June 8, 1850. He adopted journalism as a career, and was successively in the offices of the Lincolnshire Chronicle, the Dorset County Chronicle, and various other provincial newspapers, and at the age of twenty-two became connected with the Western Telegraph. He remained on this staff for a year, when he became editor of the Western Daily Mercury. He probably holds the record as the youngest editor of a daily paper. After a year he left this newspaper to become chief leader-writer of the Sheffield Independent, his colleagues presenting him with a diamond ring on his departure from Plymouth. In 1893 Mr. Hatton became connected with the London Star, Sun, and Morning Leader, for the columns of which he has written many biographies. He is indeed best known as a biographer. The paper of that name was started by him as long ago as 1874, under the slightly different title of the Biograph. It is a magazine entirely devoted to biography, and was one of the earliest to appear of its kind. The first number contained some important information obtained from Mr. Gladstone respecting his political career, which at once brought the magazine into public notice. Shortly afterwards Mr. Hatton bought Colburn's New Monthly from Dr. Ainsworth. Mr. Hatton has written poems, of which some have been set to music by such composers as Louis Diehl and Sir Frederic Gore-Ouseley, and novels, as well as a series of papers on "George Eliot in Derbyshire," published in book form by Ward, Lock, & Co. Address:

c/o Leonard Smithers, 4 & 5 Royal Arcade, Old Bond Street, W.

HATTON, Joseph, born at Andover, Feb. 3, 1839, is the eldest son of the late Francis Augustus Hatton, founder of the Derbyshire Times, one of the first penny newspapers, for which his son began to write at an early age. He first came to London in 1868 to edit and reconstruct the Gentleman's Magazine, which he conducted for some years with a staff that included Tom Taylor, Shirley Brooks, Mark Lemon, "The Druid," "Luke Limner," William Jordan, Blanchard Jerrold, and other well-known writers. For many years he was the special correspondent in Europe of the New York Times. He has filled similar positions for the Sydney Morning Herald, New South Wales, and the Kreitz Zeitung in Berlin; and has intimate relations with more than one great American newspaper. His "Cigarette Papers: for After-Dinner Smoking," appear in a selection of high-class journals at home and abroad. He has written for the leading magazines, has contributed special articles to the Illustrated London News, and has been professionally associated both with the Standard and the Daily Telegraph. His "Journalistic London" shows an intimate knowledge of Press life and methods. He has frequently crossed the Atlantic; once on a mission from the Standard, during which time he exploited the Irish question and described for that journal, in one of the longest messages ever despatched by cable, the assassination of President Garfield. He collaborated with the Rev. M. Harvey in the latest "History of Newfoundland," and his name is well known in the Eastern seas as the author of "The New Ceylon," the pioneer volume on North Borneo; since which time, through the death of his only son in those regions, he has given to the world the story and work of the young life, which is perpetuated in Borneo by the naming of a mountain near the scene of his death, Mount Hatton. Mr. Joseph Hatton is even better known as a novelist and miscellaneous writer than a journalist, though he has edited several leading papers in London and the country. His principal works in fiction are "Clytie," "Cruel London," "Three Recruits," "The Old House at Sandwich," "The Queen of Bohemia," "The Valley of Poppies," "By Order of the Czar," "The Princess Mazarov," "Under the Great Seal," "The Banishment of Jenop Blythe," "The Dagger and the Cross," and "The Vicar." "Clytie," which had already been translated into German, has appeared in Swedish, following the success of "By Order of the Czar" in that language. This latter work was prohibited by the Russian censor from circulation in Russia on account of its tragic exposition of the rising against the Jews in Southern Russia. Among his miscellaneous works are "Irving's Impressions of America," "Toole's Reminiscences," "To-day in America," "Captured by Cannibals," "Old Lamps and New," "Cigarette Papers," "In Jest and Earnest," "The Gay World," "The Abbey Murder," and "John Needham's Double." A dramatic version of the latter story, with Mr. E. S. Willard in the dual rôle of John Needham and Joseph Norbury, has been played in America, as also a version of "The Scarlet Letter," under the direction of Mr. Richard Mansfield. Mr. Hatton is also the author of two other plays, the first, "The Prince and the Pauper," written for his youngest daughter, Miss Bessie Hatton, who has made a great artistic success in the dual rôle; and the second, the newest version of "Jack Sheppard," commissioned by Mr. Weedon Grossmith, whose professional reputation has been greatly enhanced by his impersonation of Mr. Hatton's realistic young scamp, a courageous and successful protest against the exaggerated heroism hitherto associated with the Jack Sheppard of fiction. Distinction was given to a "record" first night at the Pavilion Theatre by the presence of Sir Henry Irving, when the play was received with the greatest enthusiasm. Address: 49 Grove End Road, N.W.

HATZFELDT - WILDENBURG, Count von, German Ambassador at the Court of St. James's, was born in 1831, and specially educated for diplomacy. In 1862 he was secretary to Prince Bismarck when Ambassador in Paris, and was always one of his favourites since. In 1874 he became Ambassador at Madrid, then at Constantinople, being recalled in 1883 to Berlin to act as Minister of Foreign Affairs. In 1888 he was appointed to his present post in succession to Count Münster. He married the daughter of Mr. Charles Moulton, of New York, was divorced from her in 1886, and re-married in 1888, in order that their daughter might marry Prince Maximilian of Hohenlohe. Address: 9 Carlton House Terrace, S.W.

HAUPTMANN, Gerhardt, German poet and dramatist, was born at Salzbrunn in Silesia, Nov. 15, 1862, where his father kept a railway inn. He made an early reputation among German authors by his mingled Wertherism and pessimism, interweaving the national traditions with those of the newer Scandinavian school. He acquired great notoriety in France by the efforts of a small society, called "L'Œuvre," directed by M. Lugné-Poë, whose aims were to popularise the Scandinavian drama, especially Ibsen and Strindberg. His first work, "Les Tisserands," did not attract much attention; but when "Le Théâtre de l'Œuvre" attempted to produce "Les Âmes Solitaires," translated by M. Alexandre Cohen, in December 1893, it was forbidden by the censor on account of its anarchist tendencies. In January 1894 a question in the House by M. Vigné d'Octon gave this play more advertisement than any representation could have given it. A few days later was given his dream-poem of "Hannele Mattern," translated by M. Jean Thorel. One of his last works is another pessimist dream-poem, "Die Versunkene Glocke," which was translated in the Contemporary Review in March 1898. In the same year he published "Fuhrman Henschel," a play in Silesian dialect, which has been evidently inspired by his surroundings in boyhood. His religious drama "Christus" was recently (1898) to be produced in Berlin. His very remarkable dramas still await a hearing in London.

HAUSSONVILLE, Comte d', Gabriel Paul Othenin de Cléron, French writer, was born at Gurcy-le-Châtel on Sept. 21, 1843, and is the son of Comte Joseph d'Haussonville, a French Academician. He studied law in Paris, and completed his political and economic studies by travels in Europe and America. Directly after the war of 1870 he became a candidate for the National Assembly, and was elected member for his native department of the Seine et Marne. He sat with the Right Centre, and, although calling himself a republican, always voted with the monarchists. He failed to be re-elected in 1876 and 1877, and did not again present himself. In 1891, when M. Bocher retired from his unofficial position of representative of the House of Orleans in France, the Comte d'Haussonville was chosen by the Comte de Paris as his successor. He went on a campaign throughout the provinces, and endeavoured by his speeches to infuse life into the despairing remnant of supporters of the monarchy. In 1888 he was elected the successor of M. Caro in the French Academy. His chief works are: "Sainte-Beuve, sa Vie et ses Œuvres," 1875; "Les Établissements pénitentiaires en France," 1875, a work crowned by the Academy; "Études Biographiques et Littéraires," 1879; "Le Salon de Madame Necker," 1882; "À travers les États Unis: Souvenirs de Voyage," 1883; and "Madame de La Fayette," 1891, in the Great Writers series. He is the mouthpiece by which his chief, the Duc d'Orleans, addresses the French people.

HAVELOCK, Sir Arthur Elibank, G.C.M.C., G.C.I.E., Governor of Madras, was born in 1844, and is the third son of the late Lieut.-Colonel W. Havelock, K.H. He entered the army in 1862 (32nd Regiment), and retired with the rank of Captain in 1877. He was Secretary to the Governor of Mauritius, 1873-74; Chief Civil Commissioner of the Seychelles, 1874-75 and 1879-80; Colonial Secretary and Receiver-General of Fiji, 1875-76; President of Nevis, 1877-78; Administrator of St. Lucia, 1878-79; Governor of the West African Settlements in 1881, in which year he was sent on a mission to Paris to negotiate the settlement of certain questions at issue between Great Britain and France with regard to territory in West Africa. In the same year he was appointed Her Majesty's Consul for Liberia, and negotiated a boundary treaty between Liberia and Sierra Leone. In December 1884 he was appointed Governor of Trinidad, which post he resigned for that of Natal in 1885. In 1890 he was Governor of Ceylon, and in 1895 he was promoted to his present post. He married in 1871 Anne, daughter of the late Sir W. Norris. Address: Government House, Madras.

HAWEIS, The Rev. Hugh Reginald, M.A., was born at Egham, Surrey, April 3, 1838, being the son of the Rev. J. O. W. Haweis, M.A., rector of Slaughham, Sussex, and Canon and Prebendary of Chichester Cathedral, and Mary Davis Haweis. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1859; M.A. 1864). He was first appointed curate of St. Peter's, Bethnal Green; next, in 1863, curate of St. James-the-Less, Westminster; then St. Peter's, Stepney; and, in 1866, incumbent of St. James's, Marylebone. He was at that time the youngest incumbent in London, and the prospect before him, at his new church, was far from cheering. The congregation was insignificant, and the church itself greatly in need of repair. It is owing to Mr. Haweis's indefatigable labours, both as a preacher and a man of business, that his church is now one of the most crowded in London. He took great interest in the Italian Revolution under Garibaldi, and was present at the siege of Capua, where he had several narrow escapes. He afterwards published in the Argosy an account of those events and a memoir of Garibaldi; and subsequently wrote, at his request, other memoirs of his life for Cassell's Magazine. He has done much important work as a journalist; was one of the earliest leaders on the Echo, has contributed at different times to the Quarterly Review, Times, Pall Mall Gazette, Contemporary

Review, and for a year he acted as editor of Cassell's Magazine. Mr. Haweis has always interested himself in the question of providing open-air spaces for the people, and he has had much to do with the planting out of disused London churchyards and waste spaces; he has, besides, been a strong advocate of the opening of museums and galleries on Sundays. When quite a boy he displayed a wonderful aptitude for violin playing, and was a pupil of the great violinist Oury, himself an old pupil of Paganini. He has lectured at the Royal Institution on violins and church-bells. He is the author of "Music and Morals," "Thoughts for the Times," "Speech in Season," "Current Coin," "Arrows in the Air," "Pet, or Pastimes and Penalties," a book for children; "Ashes to Ashes," a cremation prelude; "American Humorists," a series of lectures delivered at the Royal Institution; "Homeland," a hymn; "Unsectarian Family Prayers," and "Christ and Christianity," in 5 vols.; "The Broad Church; or What is coming?" and "The Dead Pulpit," 1897. In June 1893 he published his "Life of Sir Morell Mackenzie." During the Chicago Exposition he visited the Parliament of Religions, and lectured at many places in the U.S.A. on "Music and Morals." In 1894 he passed two months on the Pacific coast, drawing enormous congregations at Trinity Church, Francisco. He then passed through British Columbia and Canada, and visited the Sandwich and Fiji Islands. He accepted a lucrative engagement from R. S. Smythe, of Melbourne, and passed through Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania, preaching at nine Colonial Cathedrals to crowded congregations. In 1896 Mr. Haweis redelivered some of his American and Australian lectures to London audiences at the Steinway Hall, by request. In 1897 Mr. Haweis was called to Rome for the third time to re-deliver his lectures on Mazzini and Garibaldi. He married, on his appointment to St. James's, Marylebone, Mary E., daughter of the late T. M. Joy, the well-known painter. This lady, herself a well-known authoress, died in 1898. Address: 31 Devonshire Street, W.

HAWELL, John A., United States naval officer, is a native of New York, and graduated at the Naval Academy in 1858; served in the Mediterranean Sea for two years; was made Lieutenant in 1861, and joined the North Atlantic Squadron and served in the Gulf of Mexico, where he participated in the naval action in Mobile, Aug. 5, 1864. He was made Lieutenant-Commander, March 3, 1865; was in command of the De Soto in 1866-67; was Instructor at the Naval Academy 1868 to 1879, except a period of three years 1872 to 1875, when he was connected with the Coast Survey; was made a Commander in 1872, and Captain in 1884. In 1881 to 1884 he was at the Washington Navy Yard, and for four years following a member of the Naval Advisory Board. In May 1895 he became Commodore, and in June 1896 he took charge of the European station, returning home in 1898 on the outbreak of the war with Spain. He is the inventor of a marine auto-mobile torpedo which is favourably regarded by experts.

HAWKINS, Anthony Hope, M.A., the second son of the Rev. E. C. Hawkins, vicar of St. Bride's, Fleet Street, was born at Clapton on Feb. 9, 1863, and was educated at Marlborough, and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was elected a scholar. After taking first-class honours in both Classical Moderations and in the Final School of Lit. Hum., he was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1887, and practised on the London and Midland Circuit until 1894, when he ceased to pursue the legal profession. In 1892 he unsuccessfully contested South Bucks in the Liberal interest. His career as a novelist has, up to the present, been a brilliant one, and of his published works there may be mentioned: "A Man of Mark," 1890; "Father Stafford," 1891; "Mr. Witt's Widow," 1892; "Half a Hero," 1893; "The Prisoner of Zenda," 1894; "The Dolly Dialogues," and "The God in the Car," 1894; "The Chronicles of Count Antonio," 1895; "The Heart of Princess Osra," 1896; "Phroso," 1897; "Simon Dale," 1898. His novel, "The Prisoner of Zenda," was adapted for the stage in 1896, and had a most successful run at the St. James's Theatre under the management of Mr. George Alexander. The scene of this novel is laid in "Ruritania," an amalgam of the small Independent States of Southern Germany before 1870 and of the Danubian Principalities, which as a romantic invention may be paralleled with Mr. Thomas Hardy's "Wessex." He was elected a member of the Athenæum under Rule 2 in February 1899. Address: 16 Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.; and Athenæum.

HAWKINS, Frederick, son of the late William Hamilton Hawkins, of the Times, was born in 1849, and from an early age has been connected with literature and journalism. His first work was a biography in two volumes of Edmund Kean, brought out in 1869. He assisted in establishing the Theatre, one of the few periodicals exclusively devoted to the literature and art of the stage. Begun in 1877 as a weekly newspaper, it appeared in the following year as a monthly review and magazine, and at the end of 1879 was sold by its original proprietors to Mr. Clement Scott. Mr. Hawkins had edited it from the outset. His "Annals of the French Stage from its Origin to the Death of Racine," came out towards the close of 1884. In 1888 Mr. Hawkins produced a continuation of the history to the Revolution period, under the title of "The French Stage in the Eighteenth Century." Mr. Hawkins acted as dramatic critic for the Times during the last illness of Mr. Oxford, and has for some time been a member of the editorial staff of that journal.

HAWKINS, The Hon. Sir Henry (Baron Brampton), late Judge of the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division), son of John Hawkins, Esq., of Hitchin, Herts, by Susanah, daughter of Theed Pearse, Esq., of Bedford, was born at Hitchin, Sept. 14, 1817, and educated at Bedford School. Adopting the law as his profession, he entered the Middle Temple, and was a very diligent special pleader before his call to the Bar in 1843. After a year or two he rapidly acquired a very large practice as a junior. He attached himself to the Old Home Circuit, and after he obtained his silk gown in 1858, he was for many years one of its leaders. He also became a Bencher of the Middle Temple. As a junior, Mr. Hawkins was one of the counsel (with Serjeant Byles) for Sir John Dean Paul in 1855; and (with Mr. Edwin James) for Simon Bernard, who was tried as accessory to the conspiracy against the life of the Emperor Napoleon, in 1858. After he became a Queen's Counsel he was engaged in nearly every important case that came before the Superior Courts. He was associated with the late Lord Chief-Justice Bovill in the great Roupell cases against the claims advanced upon the evidence of Mr. Roupell. In the famous convent case, "Saurin v. Star," tried in 1869, Mr. Hawkins led for the defence; and he was leading counsel for Mr. W. H. Smith, whose seat for Westminster he successfully defended before Mr. Baron Martin. He was associated with the present Lord Coleridge in the first Tichborne trial, when he particularly distinguished himself by his exhaustive cross-examination of Mr. Baigent. In the prosecution of the Claimant for perjury, Mr. Hawkins led for the Crown, and the skill he displayed in this trial—one of the most protracted and the most remarkable in the annals of jurisprudence—greatly increased his reputation as an advocate. In the Probate Court Mr. Hawkins led the case in support of the will of the late Lord St. Leonards, which he established both before the Judge Ordinary and the Court of Appeal. The Gladstone and Von Reable cases were among his victories in the Divorce Court. Mr. Hawkins was counsel in numerous election petitions; was engaged for many years in every important compensation case; acted for the Crown in the purchase of lands for the National Defences, for the Royal Commissioners in the purchase of the site for the new Law Courts, for the City of London, and for the Metropolitan Board of Works in the purchase of property required for the Holborn Viaduct, the Thames Embankment, and various new streets; and was standing counsel for, and held the general retainer of, the Jockey Club, of which he is now a member. He was appointed a Judge of the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division), Nov. 3, 1876, and transferred to the Exchequer Division, when he received the honour of knighthood. He resigned his seat on the Bench in December 1898, after having been a Judge for upwards of twenty-two years. Early in 1899 he was raised to the peerage as Baron Brampton, of Brampton, in the county of Huntingdon. By his express desire no public reference was made to his retirement at the Central Criminal Court, where during the last twenty years he has presided over all the most important and celebrated cases with distinguished ability. His keen and now famous sense of humour showed no diminution to the moment of his retirement, and his last summing-up, in a protracted case, was delivered without notes and with his accustomed mastery of fact and detail. The elevation to the peerage of a pious judge at the time of his retirement has only been twice paralleled during the Queen's reign, viz., in the case of Baron Parke (Lord Wensleydale) and of Lord Field. On being made a peer, Sir Henry Hawkins became qualified to sit as a Lord of Appeal, and to take part in the labours of the Judicial Committee. He married Miss Jane Louisa Reynolds, daughter of the late Henry Francis Reynolds, Esq., of Hulme, Lancashire. Addresses: 5 Tiltney Street, Park Lane, W.; and Athenæum.

HAWLEY, Hon. Joseph Roswell, American journalist and statesman, was born at Stewartsville, North Carolina, Oct. 31, 1826. A.B. (Hamilton College), 1847. His parents were originally from Connecticut, and when he was eleven years of age they returned to that State, where he studied law and began to practise in Hartford (1850), but abandoned law in 1857 for journalism, connecting himself with the Evening Press, a newly established Republican paper. When the Civil War broke out he was the first citizen of his State to volunteer, and was appointed Lieutenant and afterwards Captain in the Conn. Infantry, rising before the end of the war to the rank of Brigadier-General and brevet Major-General. In 1866 he was elected Governor of Connecticut. He served one term, to 1867, and then resumed journalism. He was a Presidential Elector and President of the Republican National Convention at Chicago in 1868; and has been a Delegate to those held in 1872, 1876, and 1880; was Member of Congress in 1873-77 and in 1879-81; President of the Centennial Commission in 1876; and since 1881 has been U.S. Senator from Connecticut, his present term expiring in 1899. He is the owner and editor of the Hartford Courant, with which the Press was consolidated in 1867.

HAWTHORNE, Julian, son of the eminent novelist, Nathaniel Hawthorne, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, June 22, 1846. He was prepared for college at Concord, Massachusetts, and entered Harvard in 1863, where he remained until 1867, but he took no degree. He then entered the Scientific School to study civil engineering, but left it to go to Germany, in October 1868. He spent two years at a Real-schule in Dresden, still studying engineering. In the summer of 1870 he visited the United States, intending to resume his studies at Dresden in the autumn; but the Franco-German war interfered with his plans, and he joined the staff of hydrographic engineers in the New York Dock Department under Gen. McClellan, to which he remained attached until the summer of 1872. During 1871 he contributed a number of short stories and pieces to the American magazines, and they met with so much success that he determined to give up engineering for literature. He sailed for Europe in 1872, and after a short stay in England, proceeded to Dresden, where he remained two years, during which time he published in England and America his first two novels, "Bressant," 1873, and "Idolatry," 1874. In September 1874 he left Dresden and settled at Twickenham, where, in 1875, he published in the Contemporary Review, and afterwards in book form in England and America, "Saxon Studies." His novel of "Garth" was issued in 1877. From 1875 until October 1881 he remained in or near London, writing and publishing "The Laughing Mill," a collection of short stories previously contributed to English magazines; "Archibald Malmaison," a novelette; "Ellice Quentin," another collection of short pieces; "Prince Saroni's Wife," also a collection of tales; and "Yellow-Cap," fairy stories, none of which have appeared in America. His novel, "Sebastian Strome," was published both in England and in America in 1880; and two other novels appeared afterwards serially, "Fortune's Fool" and "Dust." In 1882 Mr. Hawthorne went to the United States, and is now residing at Sag Harbor, L.I. While in England he wrote considerably for the periodicals, and for two years was connected with the staff of the Spectator. Since 1882 have appeared "Nathaniel Hawthorne and his Wife, a Biography," and several novels and short stories. He was literary editor of the New York World in 1885. In the summer of 1889 he visited Europe in connection with a delegation of fifty American working-men, sent to examine the condition in Europe of the industries which they represented at home.

HAWTREY, Charles Henry, is the fourth son of the Rev. T. W. Hawtreys, of Slough, and grandson of the late Provost of Eton, and was born at Eton in 1858, where his father was an assistant-master. He was educated at Eton and Pembroke College, Oxford. On leaving the University, he adopted the dramatic profession, and at the age of twenty-three appeared in "The Colonel," and some years afterwards adapted from the German the comedy or farce which, under its title of "The Private Secretary," has been one of the great successes of the English stage, having been performed no fewer than 844 consecutive times. "Jane," another very successful piece, is among other plays from his pen. Mr. Hawtreys is lessee of the Comedy and Avenue Theatres. Address: 114 Victoria Street, S.W.

HAY, George, R.S.A., was born in Leith Walk, Edinburgh, and educated at the High Schools of Leith and Edinburgh. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1869; an Academician in 1876; and was unanimously elected to the Secretaryship of the Academy, Nov. 9, 1881, in the place of the late William Brodie, R.S.A. At an early age he showed indications of his future skill as an artist. He studied modelling in the School of Art, and drawing and painting from the antique in the Board of Trustees' Gallery of Casts. At the age of seventeen he was induced to enter the architectural profession; but after some years he abandoned it for the more congenial one of the artist. Among his pictures are: "A Barber's Shop in the Time of Elizabeth," 1863; "A Street Incident in the Sixteenth Century," 1864; "The Jacobite in Hiding," 1865; "Shopping in the Sixteenth Century," 1867; "Devotional Art," 1867; "Richie Monplies in Fleet Street," 1868; "Tea-tattle," 1871; "A Visit to the Spaewife," 1872; "Caleb Balderstone's Ruse," 1874, engraved; "The Haunted Room," 1875; "The Warrant," 1875; "In Days of Yore," 1877; "The Spinners," 1879; "Secret Aid in '45," 1881; "Morning Practice," 1882; "Prodigious!" 1883; "Here's to the King, sirs, ye ken wha I mean, sirs," 1884; "Escaped," 1884; "A Summer Stroll," 1886; "When Friends meet, Hearts warm," 1888; "Waiting at the Well," 1890; "Roland Græme exchanging the Keys: Lochleven Castle," 1895; "Allan Fairford and Father Buonaventure at Fairladies," 1896; and "The Presence Chamber," 1897. Address: 7 Ravelston Terrace, Edinburgh.

HAY, Sir James Shaw, K.C.M.G., Governor of Barbadoes, was born in 1838, and married (3) the grand-daughter of Lord Cockburn in 1894. After having served in the 89th Regiment he became Administrator of the Gambia in 1886, and Governor of Sierra Leone in 1888, while in 1892 he was appointed to his present post. In 1889 he was created a K.C.M.G. Club: Constitutional.

HAY, Hon. Colonel John, late American Ambassador to Great Britain, journalist and author, third son of Charles Hay and Helen Leonard, was born at Salem, Indiana, Oct. 8, 1838, and graduated at Brown University, 1858. He was admitted to the Bar in Springfield, Illinois, in 1861, but almost immediately went to Washington as Assistant Secretary to President Lincoln, and subsequently was his Adjutant and Aide-de-Camp. During the Civil War he served for a time under Generals Hunter and Gillmore, attaining the rank of Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General. From 1865 to 1867 he was Secretary of Legation in Paris, and from that time to 1868 was Chargé d'Affaires at Vienna. He was appointed Secretary of Legation in Madrid in 1869, where he remained until 1870, when he returned to the United States, and became one of the editors of the New York Tribune. This position he resigned in 1876, upon his removal to Cleveland, Ohio; but he has continued occasionally to contribute to its columns to the present time. During the absence of the editor, Mr. Whitelaw Reid, in Europe, from April to November 1881, Colonel Hay returned to New York to take entire editorial charge of the Tribune. While on the Tribune he obtained considerable celebrity by his dialect poems of "Jim Bludsoe," "Little Breeches," &c.; which were afterwards published in book form under the title of "Pike County Ballads," 1871. In the same year he also issued "Castilian Days," a series of sketches of Spanish life and character. From 1879 to 1881 he was Assistant-Secretary of State. He represented the United States at the International Sanitary Congress held in Washington in 1881, and was chosen President of that body. He was subsequently engaged (in collaboration with John G. Nicolay) in writing a Life of Abraham Lincoln, which was published as a serial in the Century, from 1886 to 1890, and was printed in 1890, with extensive additions, in 10 vols. 8vo, by the Century Co. In the same year he published his collected "Poems." He took an active part in the campaign of 1896 which resulted in the election of President McKinley, and was appointed in March 1897 American Ambassador to England. He retired from his Ambassadorship, after representing his country with conspicuous ability and popularity, in September 1898, and was subsequently appointed United States Secretary of State. Col. Hay married, in 1874, Miss Clara Stone, eldest daughter of Amasa Stone, Esq., of Cleveland, Ohio, the eminent railway constructor and philanthropist. His winter residence is at Washington, D.C., and his summer home at The Fells, Newbury, N.H. London address: 5 Carlton House Terrace, W.

HAY, The Right Hon. Sir John Charles Dalrymple, Bart., K.O.B., D.C.L., F.R.S., D.L., Admiral, Vice-President of the Institution of Naval Architects, eldest son of the late Sir James Dalrymple Hay, Bart., of Park Place, Wigtownshire, by his first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Heron Maxwell of Springkell, Dumfriesshire, was born Feb. 11, 1821, and educated at Rugby. Entering the navy in 1834, he served in 1835 and 1836 on the Cape of Good Hope station, where he was landed with the seamen and marines for the defence of Fort Elizabeth in the first Kaffir war, and was present at the capture of five slavers in the river Bonny, on the West Coast of Africa. He then served in the Channel Squadron on the North Coast of Spain, on the South American and Pacific station; and in 1840-41 in the operations on the Syrian coast. He was at the capture of Beyrout and of Acre, and was specially gazetted for gallantry in the boat attack on Tortosa. He then served in the East Indies and China, and was flag-lieutenant with Admiral Sir Thomas Cochrane in the operations in Borneo in 1845-46. He commanded the Wolverine and Columbine in China, and was senior officer in the operations against the pirate fleet of Chinapoo, which he destroyed with the squadron under his orders in Bias Bay, on Sept. 26, 27, 28, 1849; and with the same squadron he destroyed the fleet of Shap'ng'tzai in the Tonquin River on Oct. 20 and 21, 1849. He received the thanks of the Admiralty and his promotion for these services; and it was acknowledged by the merchants in China by thanks and a service of plate. He commanded H.M.S. Hannibal in the Black and Mediterranean Seas during the Russian war of 1854-56, and took part in the capture of Kertch and Kinburn, and in the bombardment and fall of Sebastopol. He commanded the Indus in North America and the West Indies from 1857 till 1859; was one of the Greenwich Hospital Commission in 1860-61; and Chairman of the Iron Plate Committee from 1861 till 1864. He succeeded his father as 3rd Baronet, March 19, 1861; was elected in 1862 for Wakefield in the Conservative interest; lost his seat at the general election in July 1865; was defeated at Tiverton the same year, and elected in May 1866 for Stamford, which constituency he represented till the general election of April 1880, when he was an unsuccessful candidate; but in July of that year he was returned for the Wigtown Burghs, which he represented till 1885. He was made a Rear-admiral, and was placed on the retired list of that rank in April 1870. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from June 1866 to Dec. 1868, has received three war medals and the Medjidieh fourth class. He is the author of "The Flag List and its Prospects"; "Our Naval Defences"; "The Reward of Loyalty," being suggestions in reference to our American Colonies, 1862; a "Memorandum on his compulsory retirement from the British Navy," 1870; "Remarks on the Loss of the Captain," 1871; "Ashanti and the Gold Coast, and what we know of it; a Sketch," 1874; "Suppression of Piracy in the China Sea," 1889; and "Lines from my Logbooks," 1898. Sir John married, in 1847, the Hon. Eliza Napier, third daughter of William John, 8th Lord Napier. Addresses: 108 St. George's Square, S.W.; and Craigenveoch, Glencue.

HAYMAN, The Rev. Henry, M.A., D.D., Rector of Aldingham, Lancashire, and Hon. Canon of Carlisle, was born in London, March 3, 1823, and entered Merchant Taylors' School in 1832, whence, after gaining the chief prizes in Greek verse and Latin prose, he proceeded as scholar to St. John's College, Oxford, in 1841. He became a Fellow of his College in 1844, and in the following year was placed in the second class both in classics and in mathematics. He then came to London, and was successively curate at St. Luke's, Old Street, and at St. James's, Piccadilly, when the late Bishop of London, Dr. Jackson, was rector, and in 1853-55 one of the Assistant-Masters at the Charterhouse. In 1854 he was appointed Assistant Preacher at the Temple Church, and in the following year head-master of St. Olave's Grammar School, Southwark. Subsequently he became head-master of Cheltenham Grammar School, and in 1868 of St. Andrew's College, Bradfield. When Dr. Temple was promoted to the See of Exeter, Dr. Hayman was elected his successor as head-master of Rugby School, Nov. 20, 1869, a post which he retained until 1874, when Mr. Disraeli appointed Dr. Hayman to the Crown Rectory of Aldingham, Lancashire, where he has since resided. Dr. Hayman's published works consist of occasional essays contributed to the Saturday Review; also to the Christian Remembrancer, and more lately to the Church Quarterly, Edinburgh, Dublin, National, Fortnightly, British Quarterly, Contemporary, and other Reviews, the Cornhill, St. James's, Temple Bar, and Clergyman's magazines, the Churchman, Antiquary, Bibliotheca Sacra (U. S. of America), and other serials; also of a volume of selections from the above, entitled "Why We Suffer and other Essays," 1889. He is a member of the Cambridge Philological Society, and has contributed several papers to its Journal and Transactions. He is the author of "Exercises in Greek and Latin Verse Composition"; numerous articles in the "Dictionary of the Bible" edited by Sir W. Smith, and has since published in three volumes an edition of Homer's Odyssey; and "Rugby School Sermons," with an introductory Essay "On the Indwelling of the Holy Spirit," 1875; also in poetry, "The Lay of the Seven Oars," and "A Fragment of the Iason Legend." In 1884 he became Hon. Canon of Carlisle, and in 1885 was one of the first elected Proctors for the new Archdeaconry of Furness, a post which he has since resigned. He is well known as a Lecturer on Church Defence, against Infidelity, and on a Mosaic Pentateuch, in most of the dioceses of the Northern Province. He married in 1855, Matilda Julia, daughter of George Westby, of Whitehall and Mowbreck Lane. Address: Rectory, Aldingham, Ulverston, Lancs.

HAYNE, The Right Hon. Charles Seale. See SEALE-HAYNE, THE RIGHT HON. CHARLES.

HAYTER, The Right Hon. Sir Arthur Divett, Bart., M.A., J.P., is the only son of the late Right Hon. Sir William Goodenough Hayter, Q.C., and Anne, daughter of William Pulsford, Linslade Manor, Bucks, and was born on Aug. 19, 1835. He was educated at Eton, and at Balliol and Brasenose Colleges, Oxford; he graduated with classical honours in 1857. In 1856 he obtained a commission in the Grenadier Guards, retiring in 1866 with the rank of captain. Sir Arthur Hayter was M.P. for Wells from 1865 till 1868, when he unsuccessfully contested East Somerset. In 1873 he was elected as member for Bath, in the Liberal interest. He succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his father in 1878. In 1880 he was appointed a Lord of the Treasury, and in May 1882 he succeeded Mr. Campbell-Bannerman as Financial Secretary at the War Office. In 1885, and again in 1886, he stood for Bath, but was both times defeated. He, however, returned to Parliament as member for Walsall in 1893. Sir Arthur was created a Privy Councillor in 1894. He is a member of the Executive Committee of the Royal Patriotic Fund, a Governor of the South-Western Polytechnic, and a Vestryman of St. George's, Hanover Square. Sir Arthur Hayter married, in 1866, Henrietta, daughter of the late Mr. Adrian John Hope, a lady who was for long one of the best known of London hostesses, her salon being the rendezvous of leading Liberal politicians. Permanent address: 9 Grosvenor Square, South Hill Park, Bracknell.

HAYTER, Harrison, civil engineer, Past President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Fellow and Associate of King's College, London, and Lieut.-Colonel Engineer and Railway Volunteer Staff Corps, was born near Falmouth on April 10, 1825, and is the son of the late Henry Hayter, Esq., of Eden Vale, Wiltshire, and nephew of the late Right Hon. Sir William Goodenough Hayter, Bart. After receiving a classical and mathematical education, he entered (in 1840) the Applied Science Department of King's College, London, and went through the prescribed three years' curriculum with distinction. Upon leaving King's College he commenced his professional training on the Stockton and Darlington Railway (now a part of the North-Eastern system), and was afterwards engaged in the construction of the Great Northern Railway. In 1857 he joined Sir John Hawkshaw, Past President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, as his Chief Assistant, and, in 1870, he became his partner—a long professional association which was severed only by the retirement of Sir John Hawkshaw from business at the end of 1888. During the time he was with Sir John Hawkshaw, he was engaged in the construction of the following works: Railways—Lancashire and Yorkshire; Charing Cross and Cannon Street Lines; the East London Railway; the completion of the Inner Circle of the Metropolitan and District Lines, and the Severn Tunnel Railway, in England; the Madras; the Eastern Bengal; and the West of India; Portuguese Railways in India; and the Jamaica and Mauritius Railways in the Colonies; the Riga and Dünaburg, and Dünaburg and Witepsk Railways in Russia; and the Madrid and Portugal Direct Railway in Spain. Harbours—Holyhead, Aldney; Ymuiden (Holland); and Mormugao (India). Docks—The South Dock of the West India Docks; and Docks at Hull, Penarth, Maryport, Fleetwood, and Dover. Bridges—The Charing Cross and Cannon Street Bridges; and a bridge nearly a mile long over the river Nerbudda, in India; the Londonderry Bridge; a bridge over the Tees at Stockton-on-Tees; and the Clifton Suspension Bridge. Other works—The Amsterdam Ship Canal; the Foundations of the Spithead Forts; the Middle Level, the River Witham, and the Thames Valley Drainages; and the drainage of Brighton. The principal work he is now carrying out, in conjunction with his present partner, Mr. J. C. Hawkshaw, is the large system of Docks at Buenos Ayres, with a dredged channel fourteen miles long, the works occupying a river frontage of three miles, involving an expenditure of about £5,000,000; this being the largest dock system that has ever been carried out at one time. Besides the above works he has acted as arbitrator in many cases; has had to report on, and prepare designs for, many undertakings; and is a frequent witness before Parliamentary and other tribunals. He is the author of an account of Holyhead Harbour, of the Charing Cross Bridge, and of the Amsterdam Ship Canal, presented to the Institution of Civil Engineers, and published in their Minutes of Proceedings. He married, in 1854, the eldest daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Walker, rector of Offord d'Aray, Hants. Addresses: 33 Great George Street, Westminster; 61 Addison Road, Kensington; and Athenæum.

HAYWARD, Charles Forster, F.S.A., architect, born at Colchester in January 1831, received his education at University College, London, and professionally studied in the offices of Mr. Lewis Cubitt, Mr. P. C. Hardwick, and the late Professor Cockerell. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1861, Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1867, and appointed District Surveyor by the Metropolitan Board of Works in 1871. Mr. Hayward was elected Honorary Secretary of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1862, and held the appointment for many years. He was also Honorary Secretary to the Institute's Architectural Committee for the Exhibition in Paris in 1867. Mr. Hayward is the architect of the Cathedral at Zanzibar, and has erected many buildings in London and the provinces—including the Duke of Cornwall Hotel at Plymouth, the Sanatorium, the Science Schools, and other buildings for Harrow, schoolhouses for Charterhouse, Mill Hill, &c. He is also a well-known furniture designer and art decorator. He is an occasional contributor to professional and archaeological journals, and was one of the founders of the Arts Club, Hanover Square, London.

HAZELL, Walter, M.P., the son of the late Mr. Jonathan Hazell, was born in London on Jan. 1, 1843, and was educated privately. He was elected to the House of Commons as an advanced Liberal for the borough of Leicester, at a bye-election in August 1894, being opposed by a Conservative and also by an Independent Labour Socialist. He was re-elected at the general election in the following year against the same opponents. He has been for many years an active worker on behalf of various social reforms. As the head of a large printing firm employing many people, he has been brought into close touch with many labour problems. These he has tried to solve by successful experiments, especially among his firm's workpeople. As a middle course between capitalistic monopoly and purely co-operative production, he has introduced with his partners many facilities for promoting thrift among their employees, with the result that some hundreds of them have saved and invested in the concern, of which he is the head, many thousands of pounds, under various systems which he has devised. In educational and recreative arrangements for them he seeks to sweeten factory life. He has helped to promote a large society for assisting emigration to the colonies, and personally conducts a farm in England upon which young men who are unemployed may be tested for their fitness for colonial life. In pursuance of inquiries into such subjects he has travelled extensively in Greater Britain. He is an active promoter of international arbitration, drastic land reforms, and many other social movements. He is treasurer of the Peace Society. He married, in 1866, Anna, eldest daughter of James Tomlin. Address: 9 Russell Square, W.C.

HAZLITT, William Carew, born Aug. 22, 1834; son of the late Mr. William Hazlitt, Registrar in Bankruptcy, and grandson of the famous critic, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, entered the Inner Temple as a student in 1859, and was called to the Bar in Nov. 1861. But he did not follow his profession, and has either written or edited a large body of literature both on archaeological and popular subjects. Mr. Hazlitt's literary work divides itself into original productions and editorial superintendence of a large variety of dramatic, poetical, and miscellaneous books, particularly "Dodsley's Old Plays," 15 vols. 8vo, 1874-6. His original publications are the "History of the Venetian Republic," 4 vols. 8vo, 1860; "Memoirs of William Hazlitt," 2 vols. 8vo, 1867; "Poems," 1877, second edit., greatly enlarged, 1897; "Offspring of Thought in Solitude," prose papers, 8vo, 1884; "Four Generations of a Literary Family," 2 vols., 8vo, 1897, and "Ourselves in Relation to a Deity and a Church," 8vo, 1897 (published anonymously). Mr. Hazlitt has also identified himself during many years with the writings of Charles Lamb, his grandfather's friend, and has largely contributed to place Lamb's correspondence on a better footing. But he is perhaps most generally known as a bibliographer, having since 1867 printed a "Handbook of Early English Literature," and several volumes of "Bibliographical Collections and Notes," to which the General Index alone forms an octavo volume of 800 pages, and he has also within the last few years associated his name with numismatics. His "Coins of the European Continent" appeared in 1893, followed by a supplement in 1897, and the "Coin Collector" in 1896. Address: Barnes Common, Surrey.

HEAD, Barclay Vincent, D.C.L., Ph.D., Keeper of the Department of Coins and Medals in the British Museum, was born at Ipswich on Jan. 2, 1844, and educated at Queen Elizabeth's School in that town. He entered the British Museum in 1864. In 1868 he accepted the Hon. Secretaryship of the Numismatic Society of London, and the joint-editorship (with Sir John Evans) of the Numismatic Chronicle. In 1871, on the resignation of Mr. W. S. W. Vaux, at that time the Keeper of Coins, he was appointed Assistant-Keeper of the Coin Department in the British Museum, and shortly after this was chosen a Corresponding Member of the Imperial German Archaeological Institute. In 1893, on the retirement of Prof. R. S. Poole, Dr. Head was appointed Keeper of Coins, simultaneously with the removal of the Coins and Medals into the new west wing of the Museum, and the reorganisation of the Department in its present quarters was then entrusted to him. Dr. Head has made a special study of the origin and development of the art of coinage among the ancient Greeks, and he was the first to methodise the science of Greek Numismatics by introducing a strict chronological system of classification throughout the various series of Greek coins in the National Collection, in place of the now obsolete system of arrangement according to metals. His first work on this subject, "History of the Coinage of Syracuse," 1874, was couronné by the French Institute, an honour which was on three subsequent occasions again conferred upon him for his "Coinage of Lydia and Persia," 1877; his "History of the Coinage of Boeotia," 1881; and his "Guide to the Principal Gold and Silver Coins of the Ancients," 1881. Dr. Head's most important work, entitled, "Historia Numorum," published by the Oxford University Press in 1887, is a complete illustrated historical manual of the whole science of Greek Numismatics, which will probably long remain the standard text-book on the subject. The publication of this work gained for the author the honorary degrees of D.C.L. Durham, and Ph.D. Heidelberg. Among Dr. Head's other works may be mentioned his volumes of the magnificently illustrated Catalogue of Greek Coins in the British Museum, which was begun in 1873, and which has now reached many volumes. The sections of this great work contributed by Dr. Head himself comprise the "Coinage of Macedonia," 1875; of "Central Greece," 1884; of "Attica, Megaris, and Aegina," 1888; "Corinth and the Corinthian Colonies," 1889; and "Ionia," 1892. Dr. Head's minor works are his article "Numismatics," in "Chambers's Encyclopedia"; his "Ancient Systems of Weight," 1879; his "Young Collector's Handbook of Greek and Roman Coins," 1883; and his numerous contributions to the pages of the Numismatic Chronicle. Dr. Head also took an active part in the organisation of the "Egypt Exploration Fund," of which he was one of the original founders, and to the publications of which he was a contributor. He married, in 1869, Mary Harley, daughter of John Fraser Corkram. Address: British Museum, W.C.

HEADLAM, Rev. Stewart Duckworth, was born on January 12, 1847, at Wavertree, near Liverpool, and was educated at Wadhurst, Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He read for ordination with the Rev. Herbert James, at Livermere, Bury St. Edmunds, and with Dr. Vaughan at the Temple. He was curate of St. John's, Drury Lane, from 1870 to 1873; St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, from 1873 to 1878; St. Thomas's, Charterhouse, 1880-81; St. Michael's, Shoreditch, 1881-84; and he is now Warden of the Guild of St. Matthew, and member of the London School Board for Hackney.

Mr. Headlam had to resign his Bethnal Green curacy on account of a lecture on theatres and music which he delivered in a working-man's club in the parish. The lecture gave grave offence to the Bishop of London, Dr. Jackson, whose successor, Dr. Temple, refused Mr. Headlam a license in the diocese on account of his support of stage dancing, which the latter considers a form of high art capable of the greatest development. This license has now (1898) been granted by the present Bishop of London, Dr. Creighton. Mr. Headlam is founder of the "Church and Stage Guild," and has published an essay on "The Function of the Stage," besides editing part of Carlo Blasis' work on dancing, under the title of "Theatrical Dancing." He is also author of some volumes of sermons and lectures, entitled "Priestcraft and Progress," "Lessons from the Cross," "Christian Socialism," &c. For ten years he edited and wrote for the Church Reformer, a monthly Christian Socialist paper. He lectures frequently for the Guild of St. Matthew, the English Land Restoration League, and the Fabian Society, and has worked hard on the London School Board in behalf of educational reform, especially with reference to the Evening Continuation Schools. Address: 31 Upper Bedford Place, W.C.

HEALY, Timothy Michael, M.P. for co. Louth, N., born May 17, 1855, at Bantry, co. Cork, was educated at the Christian Brothers' School, Fermoy. In October 1880 he was arrested for a speech at Bantry, and indicted under the Whiteboy Acts; and the following month was elected unopposed for Wexford Borough; and in December was tried and acquitted. During the passing of the Land Act in 1881 he carried several important amendments to that measure, the "Healy Clause" enacting that no rent shall be allowed to the landlord on the tenant's improvements. In November 1881 he attended, with Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., the Land League Convention of America, at Chicago, which voted £50,000 to assist the Irish movement. He returned to London in March 1882, having spoken for the League in all the principal American cities. In January 1883 he was cited before the Queen's Bench, Dublin, for a public speech, and having refused to give bail to be of good behaviour, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment, but released at the end of four months. In June 1883 he resigned his seat for Wexford, and was elected for co. Monaghan. In November 1884 he was called to the Irish Bar. Mr. Healy published in 1881 some works on the Land Act, and afterwards two pamphlets: "Loyalty plus Murder," an exposure of Orange methods, and "A Word for Ireland," being a history of the Irish Question. In November 1885 he was elected for North Monaghan and also for South Derry, and sat for the latter after the rejection of the Home Rule Bill. He was defeated in South Derry in July 1886, but in February 1887 was re-elected for North Longford. In 1895 he was elected for Louth, N. He was one of the "accused persons" charged before the Special Commission, 1888-90. In December 1890 he took a leading part against Mr. Parnell, and was one of the founders of the Dublin National Press newspaper (the organ of the Irish Party), which was amalgamated with the Freeman's Journal on that paper adopting the policy of the majority of Irish members in March 1892. He is one of the leaders of the Nationalist Irish party. He married in 1882, Erina Kate, daughter of T. D. Sullivan, M.P. Address: 1 Mountjoy Square, Dublin.

HEARD, The Rev. William Augustus, M.A., Head-master of Fettes College, was born in 1847, and is the second son of James Heard, of Manchester. He was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar from 1866 to 1871. He took a first class in Moderations, and a second class in Lit. Hum. in 1870, and graduated B.A. in 1871; M.A. in 1873. He took orders in 1885, and was ordained priest in 1886. From 1885 to 1889 he was assistant-master at Westminster School, and in 1890 was appointed to the head-mastership of Fettes College, the Scottish Public School on English lines. Address: Fettes College, Edinburgh.

HEATH, Christopher, F.R.C.S., Past President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, was born in London on March 13, 1835, and educated at King's College, London. He was appointed Assistant-Surgeon and Lecturer on Anatomy at the Westminster Hospital in 1862; Assistant-Surgeon and Teacher of Operative Surgery at University College Hospital in 1866; Holme Professor of Clinical Surgery, and Surgeon to University College Hospital in 1875; Fellow of King's College and Consulting Surgeon to the Dental Hospital; Member of Council of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1881, and of the Court of Examiners in 1883. He was Examiner in Anatomy at the Royal College of Surgeons in 1875-80; and Examiner for Surgical Degrees at the Universities of Cambridge, Durham, and London, and at the Royal College of Physicians, and President of the Clinical Society of London, 1889-91; was twice President of the Royal College of Surgeons, 1895-96. He was given

Hon. LL.D. Montreal, 1897. He is the author of "A Course of Operative Surgery," illustrated, 2nd edit., 1884; "Manual of Minor Surgery," 11th edit., 1897; "Practical Anatomy," 8th edit., 1893; "Injuries and Diseases of the Jaws" (Jacksonian Prize Essay), 4th edit., 1894; "Students' Guide to Surgical Diagnosis," 2nd edit., 1883; editor of "A Dictionary of Practical Surgery," by various British Hospital Surgeons, 1886, and various contributions to the Transactions of learned societies. Address: 36 Cavendish Square, W.

HEATH, Francis George, was born at Totnes, Devonshire, on Jan. 15, 1843, and was educated at Taunton. In 1862 he entered the Civil Service as a Higher Division clerk in the Customs Department, and he now occupies the position of Surveyor in the outdoor branch of the same service. For many years he has taken an active part in promoting, and supporting movements for the preservation and extension of open spaces, chiefly in and around the metropolis. In 1872 he secured the enlargement of Victoria Park, by the addition to it of 24½ acres at a cost of £24,500. He also laboured assiduously, from 1872 to 1878, in furtherance of the movement which resulted in the preservation of Epping Forest. The unique bit of woodland known as Burnham Beeches was, in 1879, rescued by the Corporation of London upon his suggestion. In 1880 he succeeded in defeating the attempt made jointly by the Corporation and the Great Eastern Railway Company to disfigure Epping Forest by the construction of a Chingford and High Beech Railway. In 1890 he commenced an active movement which resulted in the establishment in this country of the "Letter Express" system. In the same year he was returned at the head of the poll in a contest for a directorship of the Customs Fund. Towards the end of 1892 he commenced a movement to bring about an earlier opening to the public of the Botanical Gardens at Kew, and his efforts resulted last year (1898) in the earlier opening of these gardens. Mr. Heath is the founder of the "Imperial Press," which is designed to promote the unity and prosperity of the British race in all parts of the world, and is also the editor of the "Imperial Library," a collection of volumes following the same object. He is the author of: "The 'Romance' of Peasant Life," 1872; "The English Peasantry," 1874; "The Fern Paradise," 1875; "The Fern World," 1877; "Our Woodland Trees," 1878; "Burnham Beeches," 1879; new edition of Gilpin's "Forest Scenery," 1879; "Peasant Life in the West of England," 1880; "My Garden Wild," 1881; "Where to find Ferns," 1881; "Autumnal Leaves," 1881; "The Fern Portfolio," 1885; "Tree Gossip and Sylvan Winter," 1881; and he edited the Journal of Forestry from 1882 to 1884. In 1898 he produced an eighth, revised, edition of "The Fern World" (a volume that has been sold in every English-speaking country), with new coloured plates, showing the exact venation of each frond, and this year (1899) a new (fourth) edition of "Autumnal Leaves," and he is preparing (May 1899) an illustrated edition of "My Garden Wild." Address: Underwood, Kew Gardens, Surrey.

HEATH, Henry Frank, Ph.D., Assistant-Registrar and Librarian of the University of London, was born in London, Dec. 11, 1863, and is the eldest son of the late Henry Charles Heath, miniature painter to the Queen and Prince of Wales. He was educated at Westminster, at University College, London (B.A. Lond., 1886), and at Strassburg University (Ph.D. 1888). As a pupil of Henry Morley and Ten Brink, he specialised in English, in which subject he was Assistant-Examiner at the University of London, 1889-94. In 1890 he was appointed Professor of English at Bedford College, London, and the next year he became, in addition, Lecturer at King's College and at the Crystal Palace. These posts he resigned in 1895 on being appointed to his present position, in which he has been an ardent worker in the cause of the Teaching University for London. While at University College he was the leader of a band of young men, of whom the majority are now making names for themselves; with them he founded the University College Literary Society. In 1891 he wrote "Old English Alliterative Verse," which was published in the Proceedings of the Philological Society; he contributed "Literature until the Accession of Elizabeth" to Dr. Traill's "Social England," 1894; and in 1897, together with Mr. A. W. Pollard and others, he edited the Globe "Chaucer." He is a Member of the Councils of the Philological Society and the Modern Language Association, and for the latter he has edited their journal, the Modern Quarterly, since 1897. He is an Examiner under the Scotch Education Department, and a Fellow of University and Bedford Colleges. In 1898 he married Miss Elaine Sayer, a niece of Professor Morley. Address: University of London, Burlington Gardens, W.

HEATON, John Henniker, M.P., Postal Reformer, is the direct descendant of the Heaton family of Heaton, co. Lancaster, and the eldest son of Lieutenant-Colonel Heaton, R.E. He was born at Rochester on May 18, 1848, and educated at Kent House Grammar School and at King's College, London. At the age of sixteen he emigrated to Australia, where he took to pastoral pursuits with varying fortune, and also became connected with the press, and acquired an interest in the most successful newspapers in New South Wales. He has always been most prominent in all public and philanthropic works in the Australasian colonies; he represented the Government of New South Wales at the Amsterdam Exhibition in 1883; was appointed by the Government of Tasmania to represent that colony at the Berlin International Telegraphic Conference in 1885, and succeeded in getting a very large reduction made in the cost of cable messages to Australia. In 1884 he was appointed by Mauritius to negotiate its new constitution. He was elected M.P. for Canterbury, England, at the general election in November 1885, and was re-elected in the following year and in 1892 and 1895. He was appointed Commissioner for the Government of New South Wales to the Indian and Colonial Exhibition in London in 1886. Mr. Heaton is the author of the standard work of reference on Australia, called "The Australian Dictionary of Dates and Men of the Time"; of a work on "The Manners, Customs, Traditions, and Annihilation of the Aborigines of Australia"; also of "A Short Account of a Canonisation at Rome, from an Unsectarian Point of View." In Parliament he is a strong advocate, and first introduced a proposal, for a Universal International Penny Postal System and Cheap Imperial Telegraphs. In July 1898, he carried the Imperial Penny Postage Scheme, and has also introduced the system of Telegraph Money Orders in England, and the Parcel Post to France, &c. Owing to his indefatigable exertions the postage to India and to the principal colonies was, on Jan. 1, 1891, reduced to half the former rates, and the system of Telegraphic Money Orders was established throughout Great Britain and Ireland. He married in 1883 Mary, daughter of Samuel Bennett, of New South Wales. Address: 36 Eaton Square, S.W.

HEBERDEN, Charles Buller, M.A., Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford, was born at Broadhembury, Devon, on Dec. 14, 1849, and is the third son of the Rev. William Heberden, who was Vicar of Broadhembury from 1829 to 1874. He was educated at Harrow, and matriculated at Balliol in January 1868, and was an Exhibitioner of the College for four years. In 1869 he obtained a first class in Classical Moderations, and in 1869 a first in Lit. Hum. (B.A. 1872, M.A. 1874). He was elected a Fellow of Brasenose in 1872, was Tutor from 1881 to 1889, Proctor in 1881, Vice-Principal from 1883 to 1889. In October 1889 he was appointed Principal of his College. He was Classical Moderator in 1884, 1885, 1886, and 1891. He became a Member of the Hebdomadal Council in 1896. Address: Brasenose College, Oxford.

HECTOR, Annie Alexander, "Mrs. Alexander," novelist, was born in Dublin in 1825. In 1858 she married Mr. Alexander Hector, of Bagdad and London. She was educated in Dublin and in France. Her best-known novels are: "The Wooing O't," "Her Dearest Foe," "Which Shall It Be?" and in 1897 "Barbara: Lady's Maid and Peeress," "By Woman's Wit," and numerous other novels. Address: 10 Warrington Gardens, W.

HECTOR, Sir James, K.C.M.G., F.R.S., was born in 1834. He was educated at Edinburgh University, where he studied medicine, and took the M.D. degree in 1856. From 1857 to 1860 he was attached as Dr. Hector to the Palliser Expedition to the Rocky Mountains. He owed his appointment to Sir Roderick Murchison, and in 1860 contributed to the section of Geography and Ethnology of the British Association a report "On the Capabilities for Settlement of the Central Parts of British North America." He has long resided in New Zealand, and is Director of the Geological Survey and Chancellor of the University of that colony. His contributions to scientific journals both in New Zealand and in Europe are numerous, and deal chiefly with the Geology and Marine Zoology of the colony. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1887, and married Maria, daughter of Sir D. Munro, M.D., in 1868. Address: Wellington, New Zealand.

HEDIN, Sven Anders, Norwegian geographer and explorer, was born at Stockholm, Feb. 19, 1865, and is the son of the chief architect of that city. He was educated at the universities of Upsala, Berlin, and Halle; and made a journey through Persia and Mesopotamia in 1885-86. In 1890 he was a member of the Embassy to the Shah from the King of Sweden, and then journeyed through Khorassan and Turkestan. From 1893 to 1897 he journeyed right through Asia from Orenburg to Peking over the Pamir plateau. He has published an account of his travels, which has appeared in an English translation, "Through Asia," and is an honorary member of the Royal Societies Club.

HEDLEY, Right Rev. John Cuthbert, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Newport, was born at Morpeth, April 15, 1837, being the son of Edward Anthony

Hedley, M.D., and of Mary Ann (née Davison) his wife. He was educated at Morpeth Grammar School, and St. Lawrence's College, Ampleforth, near York. He entered the congregation of English Benedictines, at the same College, in 1854, was ordained in 1862, and held the Professorship of Divinity at the central Benedictine Home of Studies, St. Michael's Priory, Hereford, from 1862 to 1873. Consecrated on Sept. 29, 1873, Bishop of Cæsaropolis, and appointed coadjutor to Bishop Thomas Brown, he succeeded the latter in 1881 as Bishop of Newport. He has published two volumes of sermons, viz., "Our Divine Saviour," and "The Christian Inheritance," and a "Retreat." Address: Bishop's House, Llanishen, Cardiff.

HEFNER - ALTENECK, Jacob Heinrich von, a German writer on art, was born at Aschaffenburg, May 20, 1811; went through a complete course of artistic education, and then devoted himself to the diligent study of the history of art, particularly during the Mediæval period. In 1853 he became Conservator of the Royal Vereinigten Sammlungen at Munich; Member of the Royal Bavarian Academy of Sciences (1855); Honourable Member of the Royal Bavarian Academy of Arts; and in 1863 he was appointed Conservator of the royal collection of prints and drawings. In 1868 he was nominated Conservator-General of the artistic monuments of Bavaria, and Director of the Bavarian National Museum. Among his publications may be mentioned: "Trachten des Christlichen Mittelalters nach gleichzeitigen Kunstdenkmälern," 1840-54; "Kunstwerke und Geräthschaften des Mittelalters und der Renaissance," 1848-55; "Hans Burgkmaiers Turnierbuch. Nach Maximilian I. Anordnung," 1853; "Die Burg Tannenberg und ihre Ausgrabungen," 1850; "Eisenwerke oder Ornamentik der Schmiedekunst des Mittelalters und der Renaissance," 1861-86; "Serrurerie, ou les Ouvrages en Fer forgé du moyenâge et de la Renaissance, 1870; "Die Kunstkammer Seiner Königlichen Hoheit des Fürsten Carl Anton von Hohenzollern," 1866-68; "Trachten, Kunstwerke und Geräthschaften," 1879-90; "Werke deutscher Goldschmiedekunst des 16 Jahrhunderts," 1890; "Entwürfe deutscher Meister für Prachtrüstungen der Könige von Frankreich," 1865; "Original-Zeichnungen deutscher Meister des sechzehnten Jahrhunderts," 1889; "Ornamente der Holzsculptur von 1450-1820, aus dem Bayerischen National-Museum," 1881; "Kunstschätze aus dem Bayerischen National-Museum," "Werke Deutscher Goldschmiedekunst des 16en Jahrh.," 1890, &c.

HELLMUTH, The Right Rev. Isaac, D.D., D.C.L., was born at Warsaw in 1819, and is of Jewish extraction. Having been converted to Christianity, and ordained in the Anglican Church, he settled in Canada about 1856. By his energy Huron College was established for the education of the future clergy of the diocese. A few months afterwards the London Collegiate School, since named Hellmuth College, was erected. Meanwhile Dr. Hellmuth had been appointed successively Archdeacon and Dean of Huron. Finding that the boys' college (Hellmuth College) was a perfect success, he proceeded to establish a similar college for ladies, which was opened in 1869. On Aug. 24, 1870, he was consecrated Coadjutor Bishop of Huron, with the title of Bishop of Norfolk, in the Cathedral of St. Paul, London, Canada West. In 1871, on the death of Bishop Cronyn, Dr. Hellmuth succeeded him in the See of Huron. He resigned that See and came to England in 1883, on being appointed Assistant-Bishop in the diocese of Ripon. He was Rector of Bridlington from 1885 to 1891. In 1891 he was appointed Chaplain at Holy Trinity, Pau. He has published "The Divine Dispensations and their Gradual Development," 1866; "Genuineness and Authenticity of the Pentateuch," 1867; and a "Biblical Thesaurus," 1884. He is married to Mary, daughter of Admiral the Hon. A. Duncombe, widow of the Hon. Ashley Carr-Glyn. Address: Pau.

HELY-HUTCHINSON, The Hon. Sir Walter Francis, G.C.M.G., Governor of Natal and Zululand, and Special Commissioner for Amatongaland since 1895, second son of Richard John, 4th Earl of Donoughmore, and Thomasine Jocelyn, his wife, daughter of Walter Steele, of Mognalty, was born in Dublin, Aug. 22, 1849, and educated at Cheam School, Surrey, Harrow, and Cambridge; B.A. Cambridge; Barrister of the Inner Temple, 1877. He was private secretary to Sir Hercules Robinson, Governor of New South Wales; for Fiji affairs, 1874; for New South Wales, 1875; and was Colonial Secretary of Barbadoes, 1877; Chief Secretary to the Government of Malta, 1883; Lieut.-Governor of Malta, 1884; and Governor of the Windward Islands, 1889; C.M.G., 1883; K.C.M.G., 1888; G.C.M.G., 1897; and Governor of Natal and Zululand, 1893. In the latter years he inaugurated the system of responsible government in Natal, and in 1895, when he was appointed Special Commissioner of Amatongaland, he completed the annexation of the Trans-Pongola Territories, which are now an integral part of Zululand. In 1881 he married May, eldest daughter of Major-General William Clive Justice, C.M.G., commanding the troops in Ceylon. Addresses: Government House, Pietermaritzburg; and Rosslyn, Sutton, Surrey.

HEMMING, Sir Augustus William Lawson, K.C.M.G., Captain-General and Governor of Jamaica, was born in 1841, and educated at Epsom College. He entered the Colonial Office in 1860, and became Principal Clerk in 1879. After serving on several special missions, he became Governor of British Guiana in 1890, and gained much popularity by his enthusiasm for cricket. In 1897 he was promoted to his present post. In 1873 he married Gertrude, daughter of R. Mason, Esq. Addresses: King's House, Jamaica; and 33 Emperor's Gate, S.W.

HEMPHILL, The Right Hon. Charles Hare, Q.C., M.P., J.P. for North Tyrone, was born in the city of Cashel, co. Tipperary, and is the youngest son of the late John Hemphill of that place, and of Rathkenny in that county, and of Barbara, youngest daughter of the late Rev. Patrick Hare, sometime rector of Golden, and Vicar-General of Cashel. (This lady was an authoress of whom there is a notice in the "Dictionary of National Biography," vol. xxv.) Mr. Hemphill was educated in Dublin, and at an early age entered Trinity College, where he obtained first honours in Mathematics and Classics, and a Scholarship of the House. He graduated as the first Classical Moderator of his year, obtaining the large gold medal, was also a prominent member of the famous College Historical Society, when he obtained the gold medal for Oratory, and was elected auditor, as its president is termed, an office at various times filled by such men as Magee, Archbishop of York, and William Ewart Lecky. Having entered as a law student at the King's Inns, Dublin, and the Middle Temple, he was called to the Irish Bar in Michaelmas Term, 1845, and joined the Leinster Circuit, of which he was for many years a leader, having been called to the Inner Bar in 1860. He was appointed Chairman of Quarter Sessions for the county of Louth, and afterwards for the counties of Leitrim and Kerry in succession. In 1878, in consequence of the County Courts of Ireland Act, which, by the extension of the jurisdiction of the County Courts, rendered the retention of the chairmanship perilous to his position as a leader at the Bar, he resigned office. In 1882 he was appointed one of Her Majesty's Serjeants at Law in Ireland, and ultimately became First Serjeant. He is an advanced Liberal in politics, and was invited to contest the West Derby division of Liverpool at the general election of 1886 as a supporter of Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule policy, but was defeated by the Conservative candidate, Lord Claud Hamilton. Again, at the general election of 1892, he was selected by the Liberals of Hastings and St. Leonards to contest that borough with Mr. Wilson Noble, but with a like result. On the formation of the Liberal administration in 1892, Mr. Hemphill was appointed Solicitor-General for Ireland, which office he held until the change of Ministry in 1895, and on his accession to office he was sworn in as a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council in Ireland. At the general election of 1895 he again entered the lists, and was returned to Parliament as member for North Tyrone, as a Gladstonian Home Ruler. Since his entry into Parliament he has taken an active part in supporting Liberal measures, especially those more directly connected with Ireland, such as the Land Bill, the Local Government Bill (Ireland), &c. He and the late Sir Frank Lockwood occupied for some time the peculiar position of sitting on the front opposition Bench as actual Solicitors-General for England and Ireland respectively, in consequence of the delay in appointing their successors in office. Mr. Hemphill married Augusta, daughter of the late Hon. Sir Francis Stanhope, son of the 3rd Earl of Harrington. This lady died in April 1899. His addresses are: 65 Merrion Square, Dublin; and Clifton House, Shankill, co. Dublin.

HEMSLEY, William Botting, F.R.S., F.L.S., botanist, was born Dec. 29, 1843, at East Hoathley, Sussex. His father was a gardener and nurseryman, and he was called upon at the early age of ten years to begin his training for the same walk in life. Having a taste for botany, he came under the notice of Mrs. Eardley Hall, a daughter of William Borrer, a well-known botanist in his day; and through her influence with Sir William Hooker he entered the Kew Herbarium in 1860. In 1863 he received a regular appointment in that establishment, which he was compelled to resign in 1867 in consequence of his health breaking down; but after many vicissitudes he returned to Kew again in 1874. For some time he gained a living by writing popular articles for horticultural and botanical publications; his first independent work being an adaptation of a French treatise on plants suitable for outdoor culture. But through the assistance of the authorities at Kew, he soon obtained congenial employment, and he has been actively engaged in botanical work ever since. He is the author of numerous contributions to botanical science, including translations and summaries from various languages; but his principal works are the botany of the Challenger Expedition, dealing with Insular Floras, the Botany of Salvin, and Godman's magnificent "Biologia Centralis-Americana"; the Botany of Afghanistan, in conjunction with Dr. Aitchison; and the "Index Floræ Sinensis," which is still in progress. In 1875 Mr. Hemsley was elected an Associate of the Linnean Society of London, and in the same year he was appointed Lindley Librarian to the Royal Horticultural Society. In 1876 he was appointed Lecturer on Botany at St. Mary's Hospital, a post he soon resigned. In 1883 he was appointed Assistant for India in the Kew Herbarium, and in 1890 he was promoted to the post of Principal Assistant and Acting Librarian, a position which he still occupies. His later published work chiefly relates to insular floras, including Lord Howe Island, the Tonga Islands, the Solomon Islands, Christmas Island, and a general review of the literature bearing on the subject. He has also worked out the botanical collections made by most of the recent British and American explorers in Tibet. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1889, and of the Linnean Society in 1896, and is at the present time a member of the Council of the latter Society. Address: Herbarium, Kew Gardens.

HEMY, Charles Napier, A.R.A., R.S.W., born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, May 24, 1841, is the eldest son of the late Henri Frederick Hemy, a well-known musician and composer. Educated at Dr. Bruce's Academy, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Ushaw College, Durham, he developed an early taste for drawing and painting, and as a boy studied at the Newcastle-on-Tyne School of Art. After leaving Ushaw College he went to sea, but speedily abandoned that career. He went to France, intending to become a "religious," but discovered his true vocation to be painting. Ultimately settling in London, he at the age of twenty-four made a reputation by pictures of Clovelly, and began to be known at R.A. and other exhibitions. At twenty-six he went to study at Antwerp Academy of Painting, remaining three years there under Baron Henri Leys. Here he was selected to do some paintings for Antwerp Cathedral, and his drawings made at the Academy were retained as models for the students. Baron Leys dying, Mr. Hemy refused to remain in Antwerp, and abandoned the Cathedral commission. He returned to London, which remained his place of residence until 1881, when he removed to Falmouth and built Churchfield, where he still resides. In Falmouth Harbour he keeps the Van der Meer, a sea-going house-boat and studio, on board of which many of his most important pictures have been painted direct from nature. At twenty-eight he painted his first picture in the manner of Baron Leys, and continued to paint in this style for some time. Gradually abandoning his Antwerp manner, and devoting himself almost entirely to marine subjects, he developed a style of so marked an individuality that it has placed him at the head of a school of painters. The following are his most important pictures: "Evening Grey," 1866 (this early attempt made Baron Leys his friend); "Girl decorating an altar of Our Lady on a Feast day, sixteenth century"; "The Limehouse Barge Builders"; "Shields Harbour"; "Blackwall"; "Saved," 1880; "Vespers, Oporto"; "Grey Venice"; "Homeward"; "Smelt Net"; "Silent Adieu"; "Trammel Net"; "Our Boat"; "Pilchards" (bought for Chantry Bequest, 1897); "Lost," 1897; and "Wreckage." The following pictures have been reproduced as etchings: "Saved" (photogravure); "Silent Adieu"; "Trammel Net"; "Homeward." He was elected A.R.A. in February 1898, having previously, in June 1897, become R.S.W. Address: Churchfield, Falmouth.

HENDERSON, The Very Rev. William George, D.D., D.C.L., was born in 1819, and is the son of Admiral George Henderson, of Harbridge, Hants. He entered Wadham College, Oxford, in 1836, but was elected a demy of Magdalen in the same year, and retained that post for ten years, when he became Fellow of his College (1846-52). During his College career he gained the following distinctions: The Latin Verse Prize in 1839, The Latin Essay in 1842, the Ellerton Prize in 1843. In 1840 he took a second class in the Final School of Mathematics. He took his B.A. in 1840, M.A. in 1843, became D.C.L. in 1853, and D.D. in 1882. He was Proctor of the University in 1850. From 1852 to 1862 he was Head-master of the Victoria College, Jersey, and from 1862 to 1884 he was Head-master of Leeds Grammar School. In 1884 he became Dean of Carlisle. He married the daughter of J. Dalzell, of Lingo, Fifeshire. Address: The Deanery, Carlisle.

HENEAGE, Admiral Sir Algernon Charles Fieschi, K.C.B., is the son of Charles F. Heneage, Esq., of the 1st Life Guards, and Gentleman Usher of the Privy Chamber, by the Honourable Louise, daughter of the 3rd Lord Graves. He was born in March 1833, entering the navy in 1845. He served in H.M.S. Hastings during the operations in Burmah, and was awarded the Burmese medal. In 1854, as a Lieutenant of H.M.S. St. Jean d'Acre, Sir Algernon took part in the Russian War in the Baltic, and was present at the capture of Bomarsund. In the following year he proceeded to the Black Sea, and at the close of the war he received the Baltic, Crimean (with Sebastopol clasp), and Turkish medals. In 1861 he was promoted Commander, and Captain in 1866, and while holding the latter rank was the recipient of a Good Service Pension. He became a Rear-Admiral in 1884, and the following year was appointed second-in-command of the Channel Squadron. Sir Algernon proceeded to the Pacific as Commander-in-Chief on that station in 1887, and in 1892 he hoisted his flag as Vice-Admiral at the Nore. He was created a K.C.B. on the Queen's birthday in 1894. The Royal Humane Society conferred upon him their silver medal for saving the life of a boy at Sierra Leone in 1861. Admiral Heneage is married to Louise, daughter of Sir Edmund Antrobus, Bart. Address: 22 South Eaton Place, S.W.

HENEAGE, Lord, The Right Hon. Edward Henry, eldest son of the late George Fieschi Heneage, Esq., of an ancient Lincolnshire family, was born in London, March 29, 1840, and educated at Eton. He accepted a commission in the 1st Life Guards in 1857, but left after six years' service, and succeeded in 1864 to the family estates. In 1865 he was returned as a Liberal for Lincoln; he unsuccessfully contested Great Grimsby in 1874, but gained the seat in 1880, and was again returned in 1885, 1886, and 1893. He has always been conspicuous among Liberal members for his great interest in agricultural and sea-fishery questions; and it was probably for this reason that, on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Government in 1885, he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, with the Vice-Presidency of the Committee of Agriculture, posts which he resigned in April 1886, on account of disagreement with Mr. Gladstone's Irish Bill. Lord Heneage is High Steward of the Borough of Grimsby, and a Board of Trade Commissioner of the Humber Conservancy. He was created Baron Heneage in 1896. He married, in 1864, Lady Eleanor Cecilia, daughter of the late Lord Listowel. Address: Hainton Hall, Lincoln.

HENLEY, William Ernest, poet, critic, dramatist, and editor, was born at Gloucester on Aug. 23, 1849, and educated at the same city. In his early years he suffered much from ill-health, and his first book, "In Hospital: Rhymes and Rhythms," 1888, was a record of experiences in the Old Infirmary, Edinburgh, from 1873 to 1875. This was the opening section of his "Book of Verses," which attained to a fourth edition in 1893. In 1875 he began writing for the London magazines, and in 1877 was one of the founders as well as the editor of London. In this journal much of his early verse appeared. He was afterwards appointed editor of the Magazine of Art, and in 1889 of the Scots Observer, which, under the new title of the National Observer, he directed until 1894. To these journals, as well as to the Athenæum and Saturday Review, he has contributed many critical articles, a selection of which was published in 1890 under the title of "Views and Reviews" (2nd edit., 1892). In collaboration with the late R. L. Stevenson he published a volume of plays (1893), of which "Beau Austin" was previously acted at the Haymarket Theatre. In 1892 appeared his second volume of poems, "The Song of the Sword," of which a second edition appeared in 1893. To the same date belongs "London Volunteers." These verses mark a new departure in Mr. Henley's style. Both volumes are incorporated in the "Poems" of 1898, which set forth the author's verse as he wishes it to be known. Mr. Henley was at one time interested in old French poetical forms, and many of his lighter early pieces are in triolet and other metres. We have also from his pen "A Catalogue of French and Dutch Pictures at the Edinburgh Exhibition" (1887). He is editing a series of "Tudor Translations"—North, Florio, Underdowne, Holland, and others; and he produced a collection of "Verses for Englishmen," entitled "Lyra Heroica"; with Mr. Charles Whibley, an anthology of English prose; and by himself, an anthology of "English Lyrics" (1897). In collaboration with Mr. T. F. Henderson he edited "The Centenary Burns" (4 vols., 1896-97), with a terminal essay on the Life, Genius, and Achievement of Burns, for which the Academy awarded him one of its prizes in 1898, and is at present engaged on an edition (12 vols.; vol. i. 1896) of the prose and verse of Byron. In 1893 Mr. Henley received the honour of the LL.D. degree at the St. Andrews University. He was editor of the New Review from the beginning of 1885 till its extinction at the end of 1897.

HENNER, Jean Jacques, a French painter, noted for his Rembrandt-like effects, born at Bernwiller, Alsace, March 5, 1829, was a pupil of Drölling and Picot, and in 1848 entered the École des Beaux-Arts. At the end of two years ill-health compelled him to return home; but he was readmitted in 1858, and gained a prize for his "Adam et Eve retrouvant le corps d'Abel." After this he went to Rome, studied under Hipp, and painted four pictures for the Musée de Colmar, one of which, "Jeune Baigneur endormi," was exhibited at the Salon of 1863, together with a fine portrait of Victor Schnetz. "La Chaste Suzanne," 1865, was purchased by the Government, and is now in the Luxembourg. "Alsacienne," 1870, one of his best-known pictures, was presented, in 1872, to M. Gambetta by a committee of Alsatian ladies. His later works are: "Madeleine dans le Désert," and "Le bon Samaritain," 1874; "Le Christ Mort," 1878; "Eglogue" and "Jésus au Tombeau," 1879; "Saint Jérôme," 1881; "Herodiade," 1887; "Saint Sébastien," 1888; "Prière" and "Martyre," 1889; "Mélancolie," 1890; "Piété" and "Pleureuses," 1891, &c. M. Henner has obtained numerous medals at the Salon; was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1873, and was made an Officer in 1878. He was elected a member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts in succession to Cabanel in 1889.

HENNESSY, Professor Henry, F.R.S., M.R.I.A., second son of John Hennessy, of Ballyhennessy, was born on March 19, 1826, in Cork, where he received an excellent school training in mathematics and languages; but the disabilities regarding higher education for those who were not members of the lately disestablished Church of Ireland prevented him from entering the University. He had thus to pursue the study of the higher parts of mathematics unaided, and at such intervals as his professional work as an assistant engineer permitted. Before attaining to any position of a public nature he had commenced his career as a labourer in scientific investigation. The total amount of published matter which he has achieved amounts to more than eighty original papers, which have appeared in British and foreign scientific journals, the Reports of the British Association, the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy and the Royal Society, and the Comptes Rendus of the Paris Academy of Sciences. In 1851 his "Researches on Terrestrial Physics" appeared in the Transactions of the Royal Society, and in this memoir, as well as others communicated to the Institute of France and to the Royal Irish Academy during subsequent years, he has investigated several questions regarding the figure and structure of the earth and planets. From the first he held to the view of the fluid origin of these bodies, and he has always maintained that all the facts regarding the earth which come under our notice are best explained by the existence of fluid matter at a high temperature enclosed within its crust. He has also written papers on Climatology, which have appeared in various publications, including those of the bodies above mentioned. He claims to have proved laws of temperature distribution in islands, and to have deduced consequences of general application from the physical properties of water. Long before the present tendency to develop inland navigation, Mr. Hennessy published essays in some of the engineering journals, in which he advocated improvements and extensions in canal and river navigation. Besides his scientific papers, Mr. Hennessy is author of pamphlets relating to education, and, among others, of one relating to the study of science, a considerable portion of which has been reprinted in an Appendix to the Duke of Devonshire's Commission on Scientific Instruction. He has contributed to the discussion on international weights and measures by some publications, and by the proposal of a new standard derived from the earth's polar axis, which was soon afterwards advocated by Sir John Herschel. A series of weights and measures constructed from this standard were made under Prof. Hennessy's superintendence. These are now in the College of Science, Dublin, together with a number of instruments and models of machinery, executed by metal-workers in Ireland. Some of these were designed by Prof. Hennessy, and they were intended to promote technical education and skilled industries. With reference to other industries, Prof. Hennessy prepared a report in 1870 on the temperature of the waters surrounding the British Isles, for a Commission of Inquiry into Irish Fisheries, and he afterwards applied some of his meteorological deductions to questions relating to Agriculture. In 1855, on the invitation of Cardinal Newman, he became Professor of Physics in the Roman Catholic University of Ireland; and in 1874 he was appointed by the Duke of Richmond to the Professorship of Applied Mathematics in the Royal College of Science. In this office he occupied himself with inquiries in Hydraulics and Mechanism, some of which have appeared in the publications of the Royal Society. He was Dean of the Royal College of Science in 1880 and 1888. He was elected an F.R.S. in 1858, and has been Vice-President of the Royal Irish Society. He is married to Rosa, the youngest daughter of Hayden Corri. Address: Maison Schlageter, Clarens, Vaud, Switzerland.

HENNIKER, Lord, Sir John Major Henniker-Major, Bart., D.L., J.P., F.S.A., Knight of Justice of St. John of Jerusalem, Lieut.-Governor of the Isle of Man, was born on Nov. 7, 1842, and is the son of the fourth baron, and Anne, eldest daughter of Sir Edward Kerrison, Bart. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A. 1866). He was Conservative M.P. for East Suffolk from 1866 to 1870, and has been Lord-in-Waiting at various times between 1877 and 1893, and was re-appointed in 1895. He was appointed Lieut.-Governor of the Isle of Man in 1896. He married Lady Alice Mary Cuffe, only daughter of the late Earl of Desart, in 1864; she died in 1893. Address: Government House, Isle of Man, &c.

HENNIQUE, Léon, French novelist and dramatist, was born in the island of Guadeloupe, November 4, 1851, and started his literary career as a disciple of Émile Zola. His first works "La Dévouée," 1878, and "Elisabeth Couronneau," 1879, exaggerated the style of his master. He also contributed to the famous "Soirées de Médan," and was conspicuous for his naturalistic depiction of most repellent details. His other novels are: "L'Accident de M. Hébert," 1883; "Pœuf," 1887; and "Un Caractère," 1889. He has written for the theatre "Pierrot sceptique," a pantomime, in collaboration with Huysmans; "Esther Brantès," played at the Théâtre Libre in 1887, as was "La Mort du Duc d'Enghien," 1888. "Jacques Damour" was a dramatised version of one of Zola's tales, and was played at the Odéon in 1887. M. Hennique was connected for some years with the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal, and was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1895. His Paris address is 22 Rue d'Artois.

HENRY OF BATTENBERG, Princess. See BEATRICE, PRINCESS.

HENSCHEL, George, musician, was born at Breslau on Feb. 18, 1850, and is of Polish descent. He was educated at the Magdalen College in his native town, and at the Royal Conservatorium in Leipzig. In 1862, as a child of twelve, he made his first appearance as a pianist. Four years later he sang in public for the first time. In 1877 he came to England and took part in the Monday popular concerts. Settling in England the following year, he was appointed Professor at the Royal College in succession to Jenny Lind. He was appointed, in America, first conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and in 1885 started the well-known London Symphony Concerts which are closely associated with his name and work. In 1893 he set on foot the Henschel Choir. His marriage with Lillian Jane Bailey, the well-known singer, in 1881, marks the beginning of a famous musical partnership. Together Mr. and Mrs. Henschel gave vocal recitals in the United States and in most European capitals till 1884, since which year they have constantly appeared on the concert platform. Mr. Henschel has composed some hundreds of songs, besides pieces for the piano, vocal studies, a comic opera, &c. He has also composed a "Stabat Mater" which was performed at the Birmingham Festival in 1894, and the incidental music for Mr. Tree's revival of "Hamlet" at the Haymarket in 1891. Address: 45 Bedford Gardens, N. Kensington, W.

HENTY, George Alfred, was born at Trumpington, Cambridgeshire, Dec. 8, 1832, and educated at Westminster School and at Caius College, Cambridge. He left Cambridge to go out to the Crimea in the Purveyor's Department. Returning invalided, he was promoted to the rank of Purveyor to the Forces, and was sent out to Italy to organise the hospitals of the Italian legion. At the end of the war he returned home, and had charge first of the Belfast, and afterwards of the Portsmouth, districts. He resigned his commission, and for several years was occupied in mining operations in Wales, Italy, &c. Then he went upon the staff of the Standard newspaper. As a special correspondent of that journal he witnessed the Italo-Austrian war; was with Garibaldi in his campaigns in the Tyrol; at the opening of the Suez Canal; with the Abyssinian Expedition to Magdala, and the Ashanti Expedition to Coomassie. He also went through the Franco-German war, and the Communal siege of Paris, and was likewise out in the Carlist insurrection. He went to Russia for the Standard at the time of the Khiva Expedition, and on his return visited the mining regions of the United States, in California, Nevada, Utah, and on Lake Superior. He accompanied the Prince of Wales in his tour through India, and was with the Turkish army in the Turko-Servian war. Mr. Henty is the author of "A Search for a Secret," "All But Lost," and other novels; "The March to Magdala," "The March to Coomassie," "Out on the Pampas," "The Young Franc-Tireurs," "The Young Colonist," and a large number of other books for boys, chiefly of an historical character. Among his most recent works may be mentioned "Dorothy's Double," "A Woman of the Commune," "The Queen's Cup," "Colonel Thorndyke's Secret," 1898. Address: Savage Club, W.C.

HERBERT, Hon. Hilary A., American statesman, was born at Lawrenceville,

South Carolina; removed with his father at the age of twelve years to Greenville, Ala.; was educated at the Universities of Alabama and Virginia; studied law and was admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Court of Alabama. During the Civil War he served in the Confederate army as Captain and Colonel, and was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness, May 1864. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of his profession at Greenville till 1872, and since then at Montgomery, which is now his home. From 1877 to 1893 he was a representative in Congress. On the accession of Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency for the second time (March 1893), Mr. Herbert became Secretary of the Navy, a position which he retained until the close of Mr. Cleveland's term.

HERBERT, Hon. Michael Henry, C.B., Secretary to H.M. Embassy at Paris, was born June 25, 1857, and is the fourth son of the Right Hon. Sydney Herbert, and is brother of the Earl of Pembroke. He entered the Diplomatic Service in June 1877, and was appointed to Paris in 1879 as Attaché. In 1883 he became a Second Secretary, and was transferred to Washington in 1888, where he acted as Chargé d'Affaires from October 1888 to February 1889. He was promoted to be Secretary of Legation at Washington in 1892, and in the next year was transferred to the Hague. In 1894 he was promoted to be Secretary of Legation at Constantinople, and in August of that year he was acting as Chargé d'Affaires during Sir Philip Currie's absence at the time of the Armenian massacres. In acknowledgment of his energy and judgment he was created a C.B. In 1897 he was appointed Secretary at Rome, and transferred to his present post in August 1898, when he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary in the Diplomatic Service, this promotion being merely one in rank.

HERBETTE, Jules Gabriel, French diplomatist, was born in Paris, Aug. 5, 1839, and, having studied law, entered the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in 1860. In 1867 he became Consul at Naples, and two years after at Stettin. During the war he aided the Government of National Defence in its foreign relations. He was secretary to Jules Favre in March 1871, during the preliminaries of peace with Germany. Remaining at the Foreign Office, he was a delegate to the European Commission on the Danube in 1876, and to the Treaty of Berlin in 1878. He was the chief adviser of M. de Freycinet (q.v.) at the Foreign Office in 1880 and 1882. In 1886 he was appointed to the most difficult of all posts, that of Ambassador to Berlin, which he held under three Emperors, William I., Frederick III., and William II., and in which he succeeded beyond all expectations in keeping the peace under very delicate circumstances, such as the Schnaebele affair. He held his post until 1896, when he was succeeded by the Marquis de Noailles. He is a Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, and one of the 40. His Paris address is 2 Rue Pigalle.

HERDMAN, William Abbott, D.Sc., F.R.S., eldest son of the late Robert Herdman, Scotch historical and portrait painter, was born on Sept. 8, 1858, at Edinburgh. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, and at the University of that city, where he took the degree of B.Sc. in 1879, and that of D.Sc. at a later time. In 1879 he was appointed Secretary to the Challenger Expedition Commission, and assisted the late Sir Wyville Thomson in bringing out the reports on the scientific results of the Expedition. After occupying the post of Demonstrator of Zoology in the University of Edinburgh, from 1880 to 1882, he was in the latter year elected Professor of Natural History in University College, Liverpool, a post which he still holds. He has published a "Report upon the Tunicata collected during the voyage of the Challenger," 3 vols., 1882-89, and in 1884 he received the Neill Gold Medal from the Royal Society of Edinburgh for his researches in connection with these marine animals. Since going to Liverpool he has occupied himself with marine biology, and latterly with sea fishery questions. The Liverpool Biological Society, started some nine years ago, owes its origin mainly to Prof. Herdman, and he has also founded the Marine Biological Station at Port Erin, in the Isle of Man, of which he is the Hon. Director. For some years he was engaged, together with friends and assistants, in a dredging exploration of the Irish Sea, and the different volumes of reports on this subject were produced under his editorship, in the years 1886 to 1895. Prof. Herdman was in 1892 elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, has published many papers on zoological subjects, and has established, conjointly with the County Council, a Sea Fisheries Laboratory in Liverpool. In 1895 he was President of the Zoological Section of the British Association. Address: Croxteth Lodge, Liverpool.

HÉREDIA, José-Maria de, French poet, was born in the island of Cuba, at La Fortune-Lafeyère, near Santiago, on Nov. 22, 1842. He was sent to France, and studied history in the École des Chartes, and subsequently wrote for the Revue des Deux Mondes, the Temps, and other leading French periodicals and newspapers, being one of the group called "Parnassiens." His fame as a poet is chiefly based on his volume of sonnets, which attracted great attention at the time of their publication, their classical polish being particularly admired in literary circles. On Feb. 22, 1894, M. de Hérédia was elected a member of the Academy, in succession to the late M. de Mazade. His first collection of poems was issued in 1893 under the title of "Trophées": it was at once crowned by the Academy, and was the chief reason of his election. In the same year he was created an officer of the Legion of Honour. He has translated "L'Histoire véridique de la Conquête de la Nouvelle Espagne" from the Spanish of Bernal Diaz del Castillo. His eldest daughter, Marie, is married to the poet Henri de Regnier. His Paris address is: 11 Rue de Balzac.

HEREFORD, Bishop of. See PERCIVAL, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN.

HERKOMER, Hubert, R.A., M.A., Hon. Fellow of All Souls', &c., was born in 1849, at Waal, in Bavaria. His father, Lorenz Herkomer, who was a skilful wood-carver, emigrated with his family, in 1851, to the United States, but in 1857 sought to improve his fortunes in England, and settled in Southampton. As a boy, Hubert was hindered much in his education by ill-health and poverty; but at thirteen he entered the Art School at Southampton. In 1865 he went to Munich with his father (who had been commissioned to carve copies of figures by Peter Vischer), and while there the young artist was aided in his studies by Professor Echter. In 1866 he entered the schools at South Kensington, but after five months was obliged to return to Southampton, where he was instrumental in establishing a drawing-school for the study of the living model; and at Christmas in that year he and the young artists associated with him held an exhibition of their works, in which he sold his first picture. In 1867 he again went to South Kensington for a few months, and in the following year he established himself in the village of Hythe, and there painted two pictures, which he exhibited at the Dudley Gallery (1868). He then came to London, and occupied himself successfully with water-colour painting and designing for the wood-engravers. In 1871 Mr. Herkomer was invited to join the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours; and to the gallery of this Society, and subsequently to the Grosvenor, he contributed many drawings, chiefly of Bavarian subjects. The oil picture, "After the Toil of the Day," in the Academy Exhibition of 1873, extended his reputation and prepared the way for "The Last Muster," 1875, the memorable picture of Chelsea pensioners, which, after appearing in the Lecture Room at Burlington House in 1875, figured at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, and was there awarded one of the two Grand Medals of Honour carried off by the English school. Subsequently the artist turned his attention to etching and pure mezzotint engraving, being chiefly instrumental in causing the revival of the latter art in this country. Some earlier pictures exhibited by him at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions in London were: "At Death's Door," 1876; "God's Shrine," a large Bavarian landscape; "Wind-swept," 1880; "Homeward," 1882; "Castle Gardens," and "Natural Enemies," 1883. Since 1880 he has painted a very large number of portraits, including many of notable persons. In 1883, and again in 1885, he paid visits of some months' duration to America, where he also painted many portraits. One of his most notable successes in portraiture was that of Miss Catharine Grant—"The Lady in White"—which gained him a gold medal at Berlin, Vienna, and elsewhere. This portrait was followed by a companion, in a black scheme of colour, entitled "Entranced," painted during his second visit to America, which had also a great success. In 1885 his landscape "Found," a scene on a Welsh mountain, was purchased under the terms of the Chantry Bequest, and in 1889, a second picture—"The Chapel of the Charterhouse"—was purchased in the same manner. Besides these two pictures, his later important works have been "Our Village," "The Foster-Mother," "The Bürgermeister and Town Council of Landsberg, Bavaria," a large picture which he presented to that town; "Hard Times," purchased by the Manchester Art Gallery; "On Strike," 1891, his diploma work to the Royal Academy; "Back to Life," 1896; and "The Guards' Cheer," 1898, representing Crimean veterans of the Guards cheering her Majesty the Queen during the Jubilee Procession in 1897. Besides these, he has produced a large number of smaller subject pictures, both in oil and water-colours. In the Academy of 1899 he exhibited as many as eight subjects, six of them portraits, including one of the Duke of Sutherland, and another of Prince Luitpold of Bavaria. He founded and superintends an important art school at Bushey, in connection with which a theatre was opened in 1888, where a romantic fragment, "The Sorceress," by Prof. Herkomer himself, was first performed, followed in 1889 by a musical and pictorial play, entitled "An Idyl." Since this date several less important plays have been produced. Mr. Herkomer's house at Bushey, which has been in progress for many years, contains much wood-carving, weaving, and other art-work, designed by the artist, and carried out principally by his father and his two brothers, whose portraits as "The Makers of my House" hang in one of the rooms. At Landsberg-am-Lech, where his mother died, stands the "Mutterthurm," a habitable tower built by him to her memory. Mr. Herkomer was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1879, and a full Member in 1890. Having for some years resigned his position as Member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, he was in 1893 elected an Associate of the Old Water-Colour Society, and in 1894 a full Member. In 1896-97 he acted as Deputy-President of the Society. For nine years, 1885-95, Mr. Herkomer held the position of Slade Professor of Fine Art at Oxford, where he also received the degree of M.A., and an Honorary Fellowship of All Souls' College. He holds the Maximilian Order pour le Mérite, and a Life Professorship at Munich. He had the honour of being elected a Member of the Institute of France in place of Lord Leighton; and is also an Officer of the Legion of Honour. He is a Member of the Academy at Berlin, Vienna, Antwerp, and Stockholm, and is an Honorary Member of many Art Societies, both in the United Kingdom and abroad. His interest in Celtic tradition was manifested in 1896, when he presented to the Arch-Druid of Wales, Hwfa Mon, a complete official Druidic costume, with jewelled insignia, designed in accordance with ancient tradition. Permanent addresses: Lululaund, Bushey, Herts; and Athenæum.

HIBBERT, The Right Hon. Sir John Tomlinson, K.C.B., J.P., D.L., eldest son of Elijah Hibbert, of Oldham, by Elizabeth, daughter of A. Hilton, Esq., was born at Oldham in 1824, and educated at Shrewsbury School, and at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1847; M.A. 1851). He was called to the bar at the Middle Temple in 1849. Mr. Hibbert, who is a Liberal in politics, unsuccessfully contested Oldham in 1859, and Blackburn in September 1875. He succeeded in his candidature for Oldham in May 1862, when he was returned unopposed, and he continued to represent that burgh till the general election of January 1874, when he was an unsuccessful candidate, but on the death of Mr. Corbett in 1877 he regained his seat, and he was again returned at the general election of April 1880. Mr. Hibbert was Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board from 1872 to February 1874, and on the formation of the Gladstone Ministry in May 1880. He was re-appointed to his former office, which he held till June 1883, when he was nominated Under-Secretary at the Home Office, in succession to the Earl of Rosebery. In 1885 he was appointed Secretary to the Treasury, and he was again returned for Oldham, and was appointed Secretary to the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's Government in 1886. At the general election of 1886 he stood as a Gladstonian Liberal, and was defeated by a large majority. In July 1892 he was again returned for Oldham, and on the formation of the Gladstone Ministry, was appointed Secretary to the Treasury, and went out of office in 1895, when he again contested his seat at Oldham, but was beaten by Messrs. Ascroft and Oswald, Q.C. He is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant of the County Palatine of Lancaster, and is Chairman of the Council of that County and of the County Councils Association. He is married to Charlotte, daughter of Admiral Warde. Address: Hampfields, Grange-over-Sands.

HICHENS, Robert Smythe, journalist and novelist, was born at Speldhurst, in Kent, on Nov. 14, 1864, and is the eldest son of the Rev. F. H. Hichens, Rector of St. Stephen's, near Canterbury. He was educated at Tunbridge Wells and Clifton, and, on forming a determination to take up a musical career, at the Royal College of Music. Here he studied his art for some years, as also at Bristol, and wrote and published a number of lyrics for music. At the same time he wrote some recitations and short stories, and finally determined to change music for literature. He underwent a year's training at Mr. Anderson's School of Journalism in the Outer Temple, and has since contributed regularly to the newspapers, being now on the staff of the World. He wrote "The Coastguard's Secret" at the age of seventeen. This was afterwards published, and was followed by his well-known satire on decadents, "The Green Carnation," 1894; "An Imaginative Man," 1895; "The Folly of Eustace," 1896; "Flames," "Byeways," "The Londoners: An Absurdity," 1897. Address: The Grosvenor Club, New Bond Street, W.

HICKEY, Emily, poetess, was born at Macmine Castle, co. Wexford, Ireland, and is the second daughter of the Rev. John Steuart Hickey, and granddaughter of "Martin Doyle." She was educated at home and at a private school, attended lectures at University College, and passed with great distinction in the Cambridge Higher Local Examinations. In 1881, in conjunction with Dr. Furnivall, she founded the Browning Society. Miss Hickey lectures on English Language and Literature. She has published "A Sculptor and other Poems," 1881; "Verse Tales, Lyrics, and Translations," 1889; "Poems," 1895; and has edited "Strafford," by Robert Browning, 1884. Address: 89 King Henry's Road, N.W.

HICKS, Edward Seymour, best known as Seymour Hicks, was born at St. Heliers in 1871, and is the eldest son of Major Hicks of the Black Watch. He was educated in Bath and in Jersey, and was intended for the army, but went on the stage in his seventeenth year, and played under Mrs. Kendal for three years, then under Mr. J. L. Toole for two years, and at all the leading theatres in the metropolis. In 1893 he joined the Gaiety Theatre as leading light comedian, and is now (1899) playing the leading part in "A Court Scandal" at the Court Theatre. His plays include the following four-act dramas: "This World of Ours," 1889; "Uncle Silas" (Shaftesbury Theatre); "One of the Best" (Adelphi), a play founded on the Dreyfus incident, in which Mr. William Terriss obtained one of his last great successes; and "Sporting Life." One-act plays from his pen are: "The New Sub," and "Good-bye," both played at the Court Theatre. He has also written "Under the Clock," a burlesque; and the "Yashmak," a musical play. He is married to Miss Ellaline Terriss, the accomplished actress, daughter of the late William Terriss. London address: 17 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park, W.

HICKS, Henry, M.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., son of the late Thomas Hicks, surgeon, of St. David's, Pembrokeshire, by Anne, daughter of William Griffiths, Esq., of Carmarthen, was born in 1837, and was educated at the Collegiate and Chapter School in that city, and at Guy's Hospital, London. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons and a Licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries in 1862, and M.D. of the University of St. Andrews in 1878, and practised medicine at St. David's from 1862 to 1871. During that time he commenced his geological researches amongst the older rocks of that neighbourhood. His first paper was communicated to the Liverpool Geological Society in 1863. In the following years, in conjunction with the late Mr. Salter, Palæontologist to the Geological Survey, he contributed several papers to the British Association, Geological Society, &c. In 1871 he removed to Hendon, Middlesex, and since that time has carried on researches in North Wales and Scotland, the results being communicated in numerous papers to the Geological Society, British Association, London Geologists' Association, Geological Magazine, &c. Of late his investigations have been mainly confined to the oldest (Pre-Cambrian) rocks of Great Britain, and he has shown that they are exposed in many areas in which their presence had been hitherto unsuspected. Dr. Hicks has also described many new fossils discovered by him in the Cambrian, Ordovician, and Silurian rocks, and has written several papers on the classification of those rocks. He has also published results of explorations carried on by him in ossiferous caverns in North and South Wales, in which evidence is given to show that man occupied some of the caverns during a part of the Glacial period. In 1891 he described the Glacial deposits at Hendon and Finchley, and in 1892 he published an account of the discovery of mammoth and other remains in Endsleigh Street, London, with sections of the deposits in which they were found. He has also written several papers on the rocks of North Devon, and has discovered a rich fauna in the "Morte slates," which until then were considered to be entirely unfossiliferous. In 1896-97 appeared a work from his pen on the "Morte Slates" of North Devon and West Somerset. A new geological map of North Wales was prepared by him for the International Geological Congress which met in London in 1888. Dr. Hicks was awarded the Bigsby Gold Medal of the Geological Society in 1883, and has been Hon. Secretary, and afterwards President, during the years 1896 and 1897, of that society. He was President of the London Geologists' Association in 1883-85; and elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1885. He is corresponding member of the Academy of Natural Science, Philadelphia, and of the Geological Society of Belgium, and hon. member of the Liverpool Geological Society, Chester Society of Natural Science, &c. He married, in 1864, Mary, only daughter of the Rev. P. D. Richardson, Vicar of St. Dogwells, Pembroke-shire. Address : Hendon Grove, Hendon, Middlesex.

HICKS, William Mitchinson, Sc.D., F.R.S., eldest son of Samuel Hicks, was born at Launceston, Sept. 23, 1850, and entered at St. John's College, Cambridge, October 1869. He took the degree of B.A., after Mathematical Tripos, 1873; and was elected Fellow of St. John's College, 1876; and Sc.D. in 1891. The fellowship was extended for five years in 1882. In 1885 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He became Principal of Firth College, now University College, Sheffield, and Professor of Mathematics and Physics in 1883, and later, on the division of the Chair, remained Professor of Physics only. He is the author of the following papers, published in the Transactions of the Royal Society: "On the Motion of Two Spheres in a Fluid," 1879; "On Toroidal Functions," 1881; "Steady Motion and Small Vibrations of a Hollow Vortex," 1883; and "Researches in the Theory of Vortex Rings," 1885. At the British Association Meetings, 1881-82, Mr. Hicks read a "Report on Recent Progress in Hydrodynamics." He has contributed also several papers to various other journals, and is the author of "Elementary Dynamics of Particles and Solids," 1889. He was Hopkins Prizeman in 1890, and President of Section A at the Ipswich meeting of the British Association in 1895. He married Ellen, eldest daughter of H. S. Perrin, in 1887. Address: University College, Sheffield.

HICKS-BEACH, The Right Hon. Sir Michael Edward, Bart., M.P., D.C.L., Chancellor of the Exchequer, eldest son of the late Sir Michael Hicks Hicks-Beach, of Williamstrip Park, Gloucestershire, the eighth baronet, by his wife, Harriett-Vittoria, daughter of John Strattou, Esq., of Farthinghoe Lodge, Northamptonshire, was born in Portugal Street, London, in 1837. From Eton he was sent to Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained a first class in the Final School of Law and Modern History; B.A. 1858; M.A. 1861; Hon. D.C.L. 1878. He succeeded his father in 1854. In July 1864 he was elected M.P. for East Gloucestershire. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor-Law Board from February till December 1868, with the exception of a few weeks, during which he was Under-Secretary for the Home Department. When the Conservatives again came into office, in February 1874, Sir M. Hicks-Beach was appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland. On taking that office he was sworn on the Privy Council, and in 1877

he was admitted to a seat in the Cabinet. In February 1878 he was nominated Secretary of State for the Colonies, in the place of Lord Carnarvon, who had resigned in consequence of a difference with his colleagues on the Eastern Question. Sir M. Hicks-Beach went out of office with his party in April 1880, and on the accession of Lord Salisbury to power was appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer, with the leadership of the House of Commons, June 1885. This he held till Mr. Gladstone's return to power. On the dissolution in 1886 he was returned again for West Bristol, which he had previously represented, and continues to represent, and accepted the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland, vacated by Mr. John Morley. He resigned this office, owing to failure of eyesight, March 1887, and in February 1888 was appointed President of the Board of Trade, and retained that office until August 1892. In 1895 he was again appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer. Sir Michael is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Gloucestershire, and was for fourteen years captain in the Royal North Gloucestershire Militia. He was appointed a Church Estates Commissioner in December 1893. He has served, amongst others, on the Royal Commissions on Friendly Societies, on Reformatory and Industrial Schools, and on Labour. He is married to Lucy, daughter of the third Earl of Fortescue. Address: Netheravon House, Salisbury.

HICKSON, Professor Sydney John, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., is the son of the late George Hickson, and was born in London on June 25, 1859. He was educated at University College School and at Downing College, Cambridge, becoming eventually a Fellow of his College. He took the degree of D.Sc. at the University of London, and was awarded the hon. degree of M.A. by the University of Oxford. Becoming an assistant to Professor Mosley, the Linacre Professor of Comparative Anatomy at Oxford, in 1882, he subsequently spent a year, from 1885 to 1886, in the Malay Archipelago, for the purpose of scientific investigation. He acted as Deputy Professor of Comparative Anatomy at Oxford from 1888 to 1890, and in the latter year became Lecturer in Advanced Morphology at Cambridge. Dr. Hickson has been, since 1894, Professor of Zoology at the Owens College, Manchester. He is the author of: "A Naturalist in North Celebes"; "The Fauna of the Deep Sea." Address: Ellesmere House, Withington, Manchester.

HIGGINSON, Mary (Thacher), was born at Machias, Me., Nov. 27, 1843, and is the daughter of Peter and Margaret Potter Thacher. She is the niece, by his first marriage, of Henry W. Longfellow, who induced her to publish her first book, "Seashore and Prairies," 1876. She has since published "Room for One More" (a tale), 1879; and, with her husband (T. W. Higginson), a volume of poems, "Such as They Are," 1893.

HIGGINSON, Thomas Wentworth, was born at Cambridge, Massachusetts, Dec. 22, 1823. He graduated at Harvard College in 1841, studied divinity, and was a minister of the Theodore Parker school until 1858, when, having entered actively into literature and also into political affairs, notably in the anti-slavery conflict in Kansas, he abandoned the pulpit. In 1862 he became captain in a Massachusetts regiment of volunteers, and afterwards colonel of a coloured regiment in South Carolina, this being the first regiment of freed slaves in the United States service. He was severely wounded in August 1863, and left the service in the following year. From the close of the war to 1878 he resided at Newport, Rhode Island, but since 1878 has lived at Cambridge, Massachusetts. He is an earnest advocate of woman suffrage, and in 1880 and in 1881 was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature. From 1881 to 1884 he was a member of the State Board of Education. He has published: "Outdoor Papers," 1863; "Malbone, an Oldport Romance," 1869; and "Oldport Days," 1873, both depicting life at the watering-place of Newport; "Army Life in a Black Regiment," which was translated into French, 1870; "The Sympathy of Religions," 1871 (reprinted 1883); "Harvard Memorial Biographies," 1866; "Atlantic Essays," 1871; "Brief Biographies of European Statesmen," 1875; a "Young Folk's History of the United States," 1875, which has been translated into French, Italian, and German; "Young Folk's Book of American Explorers," 1877; "Short Studies of American Authors," 1879; "Common Sense about Women," 1881; "Margaret Fuller Ossoli," 1884; "A Larger History of the United States," 1885; "The Monarch of Dreams," 1886; "Hints on Writing and Speech-making," 1887; "Women and Men," 1888; "Travellers and Outlaws," and "The Afternoon Landscape," poems, 1889; "The New World and the New Book," 1892; "Concerning All of Us," 1892; "English History for American Readers" (with Professor Edward Channing of Harvard University); and "Such as they Are," poems (with his wife, Mary Thacher Higginson), 1893; "Massachusetts in the Army and Navy," 1895-96; "Book and Heart," "The Procession of the Flowers," 1897; "Cheerful Yesterdays," and "Tales of the Enchanted Islands," 1898. He also translated the "complete works" of Epictetus, 1865 (revised edit., 2 vols., 1890). In addition to these he is a frequent contributor to the magazines and papers, particularly to the Atlantic Monthly, the Nation, and Harper's Bazaar.

HILES, Henry, Mus. Doc., born at Shrewsbury, Dec. 31, 1826, was educated privately in his native town. Dr. Hiles has held several organ appointments in London and Manchester, and was appointed Lecturer on Harmony and Musical Composition at the Owens College, Manchester, in 1880, which appointment he still holds. He is also Professor of Harmony, Musical Composition and History in the Royal Manchester College of Music, as well as conductor of several important musical societies in and near Manchester. He graduated Mus. B. at Oxford in 1862 and Mus. Doc. in 1867. Dr. Hiles gained the prizes for the best organ composition offered by the College of Organists in 1864, 1865, and 1868; also the prize for the best anthem in 1865; and was by the Council specially elected as a Fellow of the College. In 1868 Dr. Hiles's Anthem for six voices was returned as "incomparably superior to all the other works submitted." In 1878 the prize offered by the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club for the best serious glee was awarded to Dr. Hiles for his four-voiced glee "Hushed in Death," which, with two other of his works, was returned at the head of all the compositions sent in. Dr. Hiles is well known as the author of several standard theoretical works—especially "The Grammar of Music; a Treatise on Harmony, Counterpoint, and Form," "Part-writing, or Modern Counterpoint," an exhaustive treatise on all styles of part writing, invertible or otherwise; and as the composer of a large quantity of church music; also as the author of an Oratorio "The Patriarchs," several cantatas (such as "Fayre Pastorel," "The Crusaders," &c.), of "War in the Household," and other operatic works, of several concert overtures, and of many songs and organ pieces of classical form. In 1882 Dr. Hiles took a leading part in the establishment of "The National Society of Professional Musicians," now called "The Incorporated Society of Musicians," an association of musical artists and teachers, which rapidly developed throughout the kingdom its organisation of earnest followers of the art. Address: Owens College, Manchester.

HILL, Alex., M.A., M.D., J.P., Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, and Master of Downing College, was born at Loughton in 1856, and is the son of John Hill, of the London Stock Exchange. He was educated at University College School, and at Downing College, Cambridge, also for the medical profession at St. Bartholomew's Hospital. He was appointed Fellow of Downing in 1880, and in 1888 Master. He is said to have been the youngest man, and only medical man, appointed to a university headship since William Harvey was made Warden of Merton in 1644. He was appointed Hunterian Professor of the Royal College of Surgeons (Eng.) in 1885, and gave two series of lectures on the Brain, was at one time President of the Neurological Society of London, and has been the energetic Chairman of Executive Committee of the National Home Reading Union since its foundation. He has written some important works on Neurology, which include "The Plan of the Central Nervous System," 1885; and a translation of Obersteiner's "Central Nervous Organs." Other works of his are "Notes to Browning's Poems," and, in 1897, "A Run round the Empire." He married, in 1878, a daughter of the late Benjamin Woodward, of Liverpool. Address: Downing Lodge, Cambridge.

HILL, The Right Hon. Alexander Staveley, Q.C., M.P., D.C.L., J.P., D.L., was born at Dunstall Hall, Staffordshire, in 1825, and was educated at Birmingham Grammar School, in the house of Dr. Lee, the future first Bishop of Manchester, and in company with Rendal, Westcott, Evans, Lightfoot, Benson, and other celebrities. From there he went to Exeter College, Oxford, and in due course, having taken his degree, was elected to a Staffordshire Fellowship at St. John's. He subsequently took his D.C.L. degree, and was appointed one of the Examiners in Law and Modern History, in which capacity he participated in the award of a "first class" to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach. He was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple in 1852, and joined the Oxford Circuit, being elected the same night as Mr. Henry Matthews, Mr. Ward Hunt, and Sir Henry James; and he soon obtained a large practice, eventually becoming leader of the circuit. His practice was very varied, ranging from criminal business, probate and divorce, to Parliamentary; and in addition to all this he found time to devote himself energetically to the Volunteer movement. He was, in fact, one of the first to join the Victoria Rifles in 1859. It was not till 1865 that he was tempted to take any part in politics, and by that time his Parliamentary practice had become exceedingly lucrative. The death of his wife in 1868, and the increasing calls of his profession had, however, decided Mr. Staveley Hill to give up all thought of politics when the offer made by Mr. Disraeli led him to reconsider his decision. He sat for Coventry from 1868 to 1874, for West Staffordshire from 1874 to 1885, and has represented the King'swinford Division since that date. Perhaps the most interesting part of Mr. Staveley Hill's career is his connection with Canada. He first went out there in 1881 to ascertain, on behalf of his constituents, what sort of place it was for emigration; and speedily becoming alive to the advantages of the New World, he not only established a large cattle ranche in the Far West, but returned there himself in successive autumns, and eventually published his book, "From Home to Home," which sets out the wild charm of life among the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains. This book is dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Princess Louise. It is illustrated with sketches by the present Mrs. Staveley Hill, whom he married in 1876, and who has regularly accompanied him in his Canadian tours. Mr. Staveley Hill is a staunch advocate of a duty on foreign manufactured goods, and has for many years worked in the cause of Imperial federation, having seen enough of our Empire to realise how entirely self-supporting it could become. Mr. Staveley Hill was Treasurer of the Inner Temple in 1886, and is Judge-Advocate of the Fleet and Counsel to the Admiralty, and Deputy High Steward to Oxford University. He is also Deputy Lieutenant and J.P. for Staffordshire. He married (1) in 1864 Katharine, daughter of M. Ponsonby, and (2) in 1876 Mary, daughter of the late F. Baird. Addresses: 13 King's Bench Walk, E.C.; 4 Queen's Gate, S.W.; and Oxley Manor, Wolverhampton.

HILL, The Right Hon. Lord Arthur William, M.P., D.L., J.P., youngest son of the 4th Marquis of Downshire, was born in 1846. He entered the 2nd Life Guards as Lieutenant in 1865, and retired in 1868. In 1880 he was returned as Conservative member for co. Down, and in 1885 was returned for co. Down West, which he continues to represent. From 1885 to 1892 he was Comptroller of the Royal Household and Conservative Whip, and was reappointed Comptroller of the Household in 1895. He was Lieutenant-Colonel in the 2nd Middlesex Artillery Volunteers from 1885 to 1887, and is Deputy-Lieutenant for co. Down, and J.P. for Sussex, Berks, and co. Down. He married (2), in 1877, Annie, daughter of J. F. Harrison. Address: 74 Eaton Place, S.W., &c.

HILL, Sir Clement Lloyd, K.O.M.G., C.B., head of the African Department of the Foreign Office, was born on May 5, 1845, and is the third son of the late

Rev. John Hill. He was educated at Marlborough College; entered the Foreign Office in 1867; was secretary to Sir Bartle Frere's mission to Zanzibar in 1872-73; was appointed Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Munich in 1876; and was Commissioner to Hayti in 1886 and 1887. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1887, and C.B. in June 1898, for services in connection with the then recent West African negotiations. He married in 1889 the widow of Charles Waring, daughter of Sir G. Denys. Address: 9 Grosvenor Place, S.W.

HILL, Hon. David Bennett, American statesman, was born at Havana, New York, Aug. 29, 1843. He received an academic education, studied law and was admitted to the Bar at Elmira, New York, in 1864. In the same year he was appointed City Attorney. Since 1868 he has been a delegate to many Democratic State Conventions, serving as President of those held in 1877 and 1881. He was also a delegate to the National Conventions of the same party in 1876 and 1884. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1870 and again in 1871; was chosen Mayor of Elmira in 1882; and in January 1883 became Lieutenant-Governor of the State. On the resignation of Governor Cleveland in 1884 after his election to the Presidency, Mr. Hill became Governor of New York, a position which by subsequent elections he continued to hold till 1891, when he entered the U.S. Senate for the term ending March 1897, at which time he was succeeded by Thomas C. Platt.

HILL, Sir Edward Stock, K.C.B., J.P., M.P. for Bristol (South) from 1886 to 1898, is the son of the late Mr. C. Hill, of Bristol, and was born at Bristol in 1834. He was educated at Bishop's College, Bristol, and on the Continent. He was elected President of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom in 1881, and was President of the Association of Chambers of Commerce from 1888 to 1891. He is partner in the Bristol shipowning and mercantile firm of Charles Hill and Sons, is J.P. for Glamorgan and Cardiff, and was High Sheriff of Glamorgan in 1888, has been Colonel-Commandant (since 1864) of the Glamorganshire Artillery Volunteers, and is K.C. of the Swedish Order of Wasa. He was made K.C.B. in 1892. He married a daughter of General Tickell, C.B., in 1866. Addresses: 1 St. James's Street, S.W., and Rookwood, Llandaff, &c.

HILL, George Birkbeck Norman, D.C.L., LL.D., was born at Tottenham on June 7, 1837, and is the second son of Arthur Hill, Head-master of Bruce Castle School. He is of the family of Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B. He was educated at his father's school, and at Pembroke College, Oxford, where he took a fourth class in Lit. Hum. From 1859 to 1876 he was Head-master of Bruce Castle School, and since that date has devoted himself to letters. As becomes an old Pembroke man, he is the first living authority on Johnsoniana, and has become famous as the editor of the definitive "Boswell" and of Johnson's "Letters." He became B.C.L. in 1866; D.C.L. in 1871; is Hon. Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford; and Hon. LL.D. of Williams College, Mass. His works include: "Dr. Johnson: his Friends and his Critics," 1878; "Footsteps of Dr. Johnson in Scotland," 1890; an edition of Boswell's Correspondence, 1879, and one of the Life, 1886; an edition of "Rasselas," "Wit and Wisdom of Dr. Johnson," 1888; editions of Goldsmith's "Traveller," 1888; "Letters of David Hume to W. Strahan," "Select Essays of Dr. Johnson," 1889; "Letters of Johnson," 1892; "Johnsonian Miscellanies," 1897, &c., &c. Address: 1 The Wilderness, Holy Hill, Hampstead.

HILL, Joanna M. Margaret, was born at Hampstead. She is the youngest daughter of the late Mr. Mathew Davenport Hill, Recorder of Birmingham and M.P. for Hull, and niece of Sir Rowland Hill, of penny-postage fame. For the greater portion of a century the Hill family have been associated with schemes, useful and philanthropic, and from earliest childhood the influences surrounding Miss Joanna Hill were calculated to fit her for a life of intelligent devotion to her fellow-creatures. She was the god-daughter of the well-known writer Joanna Baillie, and a pupil of Mary Carpenter, whose mind left its mark on the character of her pupil. At an early age Miss Hill became the friend and collaborateur of her father in his labours for the amelioration of the condition of criminal and neglected children. In 1860 she and her elder sisters wrote "Our Exemplars," being an account of the lives of persons of all classes who had benefited mankind to a remarkable degree. It was published with a preface by the late Lord Brougham. Circumstances brought to Miss Hill's notice, in 1859, the friendless condition of girls in workhouse schools. She became a member of the Workhouse Visiting Association, and for many years was a constant visitor in the workhouse wards of Bristol, where her father then resided. After her father's acceptance of the Recordership of Birmingham, Miss Hill, with the consent of the guardians of the poor of that town, revived a system of visiting young workhouse girls in service, which had fallen into disuse owing to the failing health of its originator, Mrs. Charles Talbot. While studying the condition of pauper children, Miss Hill heard of a system then being tried in some parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland to restore the pauper child to the privileges of family life under the careful supervision of efficient ladies. To this scheme Miss Hill has devoted her best energies, and, as hon. secretary to the King's Norton Boarding-out Committee, she has accomplished a good work. Miss Hill's evidence before the Select Committee for the Infant Life Protection Bill, will be found in a Blue-Book published in August 1890; also a paper in the appendix of the same by Miss Hill, which contains information concerning her plan for the inspection of pauper children by lady visitors.

HILL, Micaiah John Muller, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., Professor of Mathematics, University College, London, eldest son of the late Rev. Samuel John Hill, was born Feb. 22, 1856, at Berhampore, Bengal. From 1864 to 1872 he was educated at the School for Sons of Missionaries, Blackheath. From this school he obtained, in June 1872, the fourth place and first prize at the Matriculation Examination of the University of London, and in the following September, an Andrews Entrance prize at University College, London. There he devoted his attention chiefly to the study of Mathematics under Professors Henrici and Clifford. In June 1873 he obtained the Exhibition in Mathematics at the first—or, as it is now called, the Intermediate—B.A. Examination. In June 1874 he obtained a second year Andrews prize at University College, and in the following November the Scholarship in Mathematics at the B.A. Examination of the University of London. In April 1875 he competed for the Civil Service of India, and obtained the first place in the open competition, but did not proceed to the further examinations. In October 1875 he entered as an undergraduate at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where he had been elected to an open scholarship, and whilst studying there he was elected, in February 1876, a Fellow of University College, London, and in June of that year he obtained the Gold Medal for Mathematics at the M.A. Examination at the University of London. In January 1879 he was bracketed equal Fourth Wrangler, and immediately afterwards was bracketed equal Smith's Prizeman. From April 1879 to June 1880 he acted as Assistant-Professor of Mathematics at University College, London. In February 1880 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics at the Mason Science College, Birmingham, commencing work there in the following October on the opening of the College. In 1883 he took the degree of M.A. in the University of Cambridge, was elected a Fellow of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and a member of the London Mathematical Society. In 1884 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics at University College, London, acting as Dean of the Faculty of Arts from 1888 to 1890, and Member of the Council of the College from 1888 to 1892. From 1877 to 1882 he acted as Assistant-Examiner, and from 1885 to 1890 as Chief Examiner in Mathematics at the University of London. In 1890 he received the degree of Doctor of Science from the University of Cambridge for original work. In 1891 he was elected a Member of the Council of the London Mathematical Society, and in 1894 a Fellow of the Royal Society. His chief writings on mathematical subjects are a paper on the "Discriminants of Ordinary Integrable Differential Equations" in the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, a paper on the "Fifth Book of Euclid's Elements" in the Transactions of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and the following papers in the Proceedings and Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society: "On the Motion of Fluid, part of which is moving rotationally and part irrotationally" (Proceedings, No. 229, Transactions, Part II., 1884); "On the Locus of Singular Points and Lines which occur in connection with the Theory of the Locus of Ultimate Intersections of a System of Surfaces" (Proceedings, vol. 50, Transactions, vol. 183, 1892); "On a Spherical Vortex" (Proceedings, vol. 55, Transactions, A., 1894). He was married on Dec. 21, 1892, to Minna Grace, elder daughter of the late Marriott Ogle Tarbotton, Consulting Engineer to the Corporation of Nottingham. Address: Lakeview, Northwood, near Rickmansworth.

HILL, Octavia, social reformer, has laboured principally among the poor, whom she seeks to benefit morally and physically. The record of her work is given in "Homes of the London Poor," and from it we learn that in 1864, partly at the suggestion and under the guidance of Mr. Ruskin, who advanced the necessary funds for the beginning of the scheme, Miss Octavia Hill purchased three cottages in one of the poorest courts in Marylebone, and became her own rent-collector and manager, and without any commercial loss, succeeded by kindness and conciliation in effecting the gradual reformation of the tenants. By degrees the whole of the court became hers; and the Countess of Ducie and others entrusted their property in Marylebone and Drury Lane to her management, with the same excellent results. Miss Octavia Hill's work in managing houses has of late years largely extended, and she has also devoted much time to securing and preserving open spaces both in London and in the country. Address: 190 Marylebone Road, N.W.

HILLIER, Frederick James, late editor of the Morning, is the second son of Alfred George Hillier, and was born at Southampton in 1868. He was privately educated, and joined the staff of the New York Herald, becoming successively assistant London correspondent, news editor, in 1890, of the London edition, and then night editor in Paris. He was subsequently offered the chief sub-editorship of the Morning, when it was started, and was promoted to be news editor and editor. In November 1898 he resigned this last post, which he had filled with great ability. He married, in 1890, Anne, daughter of William Henry, of St. Heliers. Address: 18 Electric Mansions, Brixton, S.W.

HIND, C. Lewis, editor of the Academy, was born in 1862. He has been sub-editor of the Art Journal, 1887-92, editor of the Pall Mall Budget, 1893-95, and has written largely for magazines and newspapers. In November 1896 he succeeded Mr. Cotton as editor of the Academy, and has introduced great changes and improvements into the working of that important literary weekly. In November 1898 he published "The Enchanted Stone," which has been described as "a very modern romance," in a style beyond reproach. Address: 43 Chancery Lane, W.C.

HINGESTON-RANDOLPH, The Rev. Prebendary Francis Charles, M.A., born at Truro, March 31, 1833, is the only son of the late Francis Hingeston, St. Ives and Truro, and Jane, eldest daughter of the late William Kirkness, of Kernick. He was educated at the Truro Grammar School, and at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A., Double Hon. fourth Classics and Mathematics, 1855; M.A. 1858). Having held a curacy in Oxford (Holywell), he was appointed in 1859 to the Perpetual Curacy of Hampton Gay, near Oxford, and in 1860 to the Rectory of Ringmore, Devon. He was appointed Domestic Chaplain to the Baroness le Despenser (Dowager Viscountess Falmouth), 1859; Rural Dean of Woodleigh, Devon, 1879; and Prebendary of Exeter, 1885. He is the author of "Specimens of Ancient Cornish Crosses, Fonts, &c.," 1850; "Four Years of a Country Friendly Society," 1870; has edited "The Poems of Francis Hingeston," 1857; "The Chronicle of England, by John Capgrave" (under the direction of the Master of the Rolls);

"Johannis Capgravi Liber de Illustribus Henricis" (in the same series); "The Book of the Illustrious Henries" (translated from the Latin of Capgrave), 1858; and "A Collection of Royal and Historical Letters during the Reign of Henry IV." (for the Master of the Rolls), 1860; "The Register of Edmund Stafford, Bishop of Exeter," 1886; "The Register of Walter Bronescombe and Peter Quivil, Bishops of Exeter," 1889; "The Register of Walter de Stapeldon, Bishop of Exeter, 1892"; "The Register of John de Grandisson, Bishop of Exeter," 3 vols., 1894-98. He married Martha, only child of the late Rev. Herbert Randolph, whose name he assumed in 1860. Address: Ringmore Rectory, near Kingsbridge.

HISTORICUS. See HARCOURT, THE RIGHT HON. SIR WILLIAM.

HITCHCOCK, Ethan Allen, was born at Mobile, Alabama, in September 1835, his parents being of New England stock and he a great-grandson of Ethan Allen of American revolutionary fame. After taking an academic course at New Haven, Connecticut, he went to St. Louis in 1851 and engaged in mercantile pursuits till 1860, when he went to China and was employed by the old-established house of Oliphant & Co. there. Remaining in China for twelve years, he returned to St. Louis in 1874, where he became president of several large manufacturing and railroad corporations, but resigned these positions in 1897 to become United States Minister to Russia.

HITCHENS, Rev. J. Hiles, D.D., was born in 1835, and educated for the Congregational Church Ministry at the Western College. He settled as Minister of Peckham Rye Congregational Church in 1858; was one of the earliest to preach in the London theatres; became a well-known lecturer on historical and biographical subjects; was elected Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature in 1863; was Deputy-Chairman of the London Missionary Society in 1887; became Minister of Eccleston Square Church, Belgrave Road, London, in 1871; President of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews. He is author of "Ecce Veritas," "The Young Men of Scripture," "Bible Waters," "A Ministering Angel," "Perfect Through Suffering," "The Jesuits, their history and principles," "The Face of the King," "Near the Cross," and several other works. Address: 90 Gloucester Street, Belgravia, S.W.

HITT, Robert Roberts, American statesman, was born at Urbana, Ohio, Jan. 16, 1834; removed to Ogle County, Illinois, in 1837; was educated at Rock River Seminary and at De Pauw University. He was First Secretary of Legation and Chargé d'Affaires ad interim, at Paris, from December 1874 until March 1881; was Assistant-Secretary of State in 1881; was elected to the Forty-seventh Congress in November 1882 to fill a vacancy, and has been continuously re-elected since then to represent his district. He is at present (1898) Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives.

HOAR, Hon. George Frisbie, LL.D., brother of the Hon. Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar, was born at Concord, Massachusetts, Aug. 29, 1826. A.B. Harvard, 1846. He was admitted to the Bar in 1849, and began practice at Worcester, where he still resides. He was a Member of the State House of Representatives in 1852, and of the State Senate in 1857. He was City Solicitor in 1860, and in 1868 was elected a Member of Congress, and was re-elected three times, declining a nomination for a fifth term. From 1874 to 1880 he was an Overseer of Harvard; was a Delegate to the Republican National Conventions of 1876, 1880, 1884, and 1888, presiding over that of 1880. He was elected a United States Senator from Massachusetts in 1877, and re-elected in 1883, 1889, and 1895. When a Member of the lower branch of Congress he was one of its managers in the Belknap impeachment trial in 1876, and served on the Electoral Commission which decided the disputed presidential question in the same year. He was a regent of the Smithsonian Institution in 1880, and is now (1898) President of the American Antiquarian Society; a trustee of the Peabody Museum of Archaeology; and a member of many learned societies. The degree of LL.D. has been conferred upon him by William and Mary, Amherst, Williams, Yale, and Harvard Colleges.

HOARE, Alfred, is the fifth son of the late Mr. H. Hoare. He was educated at Eton, and at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was a scholar. In 1873 he was 14th wrangler. He is a partner in the famous banking house at 37 Fleet Street. He represented Holborn in the first London County Council, and was Alderman (Progressive) in the second County Council. He was re-elected Alderman (Radical) for the next six years in March 1898, standing second on the poll with 68 votes. Addresses: 37 Fleet Street; and Athenæum.

HOARE, Edward Brodie, M.P., is the son of the late Rev. Edward Hoare, Hon. Canon of Canterbury, and for many years Vicar of Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, and Maria Eliza, daughter of Sir Benjamin Collins Brodie, Bart. He was born at Richmond, Surrey, on Oct. 30, 1841. He was educated at Tunbridge School and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained his B.A. degree in 1864, and M.A. in 1867. He was for several years a partner in the banking-house of Barnett, Hoare & Co., and became a director of Lloyd's Bank, Limited, on the amalgamation of the two banks in 1884. In 1885 he contested the Attercliffe division of Sheffield, and the Central division of Bradford on the death of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster in 1886. He was returned as Member for Hampstead on the elevation of Sir Henry Holland to the peerage in 1888, and has sat for that constituency as a Conservative since that date. He married Katharine, daughter of Rear-Admiral Sir Wm. Edward Parry, in 1868. Address: Tenchleys, Limpfield, Sussex.

HOBART, Garret A., Vice-President of the United States, was born in Monmouth County, New Jersey, June 3, 1844. He graduated from Rutgers College in 1863; taught school a short time, and then studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1869, commencing practice in Paterson, N. J. He was a Member of the State Legislature in 1873 and 1874, and was elected Speaker of the lower house in 1876; was elected to the Senate of the State in 1879, and in 1881 was President of that body, and re-elected in 1882. He was elected Vice-President of the United States in 1896, and took the oath of office March 4, 1897.

HOBBS, John Oliver (Mrs. Craigie), née Pearl Mary Teresa Richards, is the eldest daughter of John Morgan Richards, and was born at Boston, Mass., on Nov. 3, 1867. She was privately educated, and afterwards studied music at the Royal Academy under Macfarren, and in Paris. She also studied Greek and Latin at University College, London, under that brilliant scholar, the late Professor A. Goodwin. Thus equipped, she early learned the value of literary style, and now shares with Mrs. Meynell the distinction of being a master of epigram and pure English. Her first novel, "Some Emotions and a Moral," appeared in 1891, and at once put her in the first rank of contemporary novelists. This was followed by "The Sinner's Comedy," 1892; "A Study in Temptations," 1893; "A Bundle of Life," 1894; "The Gods, some Mortals, and Lord Wickenham," 1895;

"The Herb-Moon," 1896; "School for Saints," 1897. As a playwright John Oliver Hobbes has been no less successful than as a writer of novels. Her first piece was written for Miss Ellen Terry, and is entitled "Journeys End in Lovers Meeting: Proverb in one Act," 1894. Her play, "The Ambassador," still running with undiminished success at the St. James's Theatre, was first produced in 1898. She has also written "Repentance," a drama in one act, 1899. Address: 56 Lancaster Gate, W.

HOBHOUSE, Lord, The Right Hon. Sir Arthur, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., fourth son of the late Right Hon. Henry Hobhouse, of Hadspen House, Somersetshire, by Harriet, sixth daughter of John Turton, Esq., of Sugnall Hall, Staffordshire, was born at Hadspen, Nov. 10, 1819. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained a first class in classics in 1841. In 1845 he became a Member of the Chancery Bar, and practised as a conveyancer and equity draughtsman, and subsequently as a Queen's Counsel, in the Rolls Court. He was appointed one of her Majesty's Counsel in 1865; but in the following year he quitted the Bar in consequence of ill-health, and was appointed a Charity Commissioner, and in 1869 an Endowed Schools Commissioner. In 1872 he was nominated Law Member of the Governor-General's Council in India, and on his retirement in 1877, was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Star of India. In 1878 he was appointed arbitrator under the Epping Forest Act; and in 1881 he was made a Privy Councillor and a Member of the Judicial Committee. In 1882-84 he was a Member of the London School Board, and from 1889-92 was an Alderman of the London County Council. In 1885 he was created Baron Hobhouse, of Hadspen, in the county of Somerset. Lord Hobhouse has taken a keen interest in many social topics, especially in those connected with women's property, with endowments, and with settlements and transfer of land. He has delivered many addresses on these subjects, some of which were collected and printed under the title of "The Dead Hand," 1880. He stood for Westminster in the Liberal interest at the general election of 1880, but was unsuccessful. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Farrer, in 1868. Addresses: 15 Bruton Street, W.; and Athen-

where he graduated in 1889. His constructive genius was so marked that he was sent for a three years' special course of study to Paris. On his return he organised and conducted the post-graduate course of construction at the United States Naval Academy. When war with Spain was declared in April 1898, he applied for active service and was ordered to the flag-ship New York, with rank of Lieutenant, and distinguished himself in June following by taking an old collier, with the aid of a crew of seven men, in under the guns of the forts at the entrance to the harbour of Santiago, Cuba, and there sinking his vessel in the channel, with a view to preventing the escape of the Spanish fleet then lying within the harbour. He and his men were not able to escape as they had planned, owing to the destruction of their small boat by the furious fire of the enemy, and all were taken prisoners, but were exchanged a month later, with the ready chivalry of the Spaniards, and returned safely to their own ships.

HOCKING, Joseph, minister of religion and novelist, born in St. Stephens in Brannel, Cornwall, on Nov. 7, 1860, is the son of James Hocking, mine owner and farmer, and Elizabeth Hocking (both deceased). He was educated at the local school, afterwards at Owens College, Manchester, and Crescent Range College, Victoria Park, Manchester. As a boy he exhibited an exceptional fondness for reading, and would walk to the nearest town, seven miles away, when twelve years old, in order to spend a few coppers on a cheap reprint of some valuable book. He had read nearly all Sir Walter Scott's books at twelve years of age. He wrote stories from early childhood. At fourteen years of age he had completed a three-volume novel. He became a land surveyor at the age of sixteen, and continued surveying to the age of twenty. He entered Owens College, Manchester, at twenty, and left it when twenty-three, after pursuing theological studies at Crescent Range College, where he took the Cuthbertson Prize, and stood first for the year. He entered the Free Church ministry at twenty-three in a Yorkshire village, stayed there two years, and afterwards removed to London. In 1887 he spent several months in Eastern travel; went to Italy, Egypt (up the Nile), Port Said, Jaffa, Jerusalem, &c., and spent nearly two months in the Holy Land. He also visited Smyrna, Rhodes, Ephesus, Athens, Corinth, &c. On his return from the East he wrote his first novel, "Jabez Easterbrook," a religious novel, and sold it for a song. The book has sold by many thousands. Afterwards he wrote two stories which appeared in a volume entitled "The Monk of Mar-Saba." They are both novels, the scenes of which are laid in the Holy Land, being the direct outcome of his Eastern trip. List of books: "Jabez Easterbrook," a religious novel, 1891; "Lillah," 1892; "Story of Andrew Fairfax," 1893; "Ishmael Pengelly," 1894; "The Monk of Mar-Saba," 1894; "All Men are Liars: a Study in Cynicism and Pessimism," 1895 (the last, his most ambitious book, took more than a year to write, and has had a very large sale, between 20,000 and 30,000, and still sells readily); "Fields of Fair Renown," 1896; "The Birthright; a Romance of Adventure," 1897; "And Shall Trelawney Die?" 1897. He has lately finished a romance entitled "Trevanion," which has appeared in Cassell's Magazine, and been published by James Bowden. He has devoted much time, in Ireland and elsewhere, to the study of Jesuitry, and has begun a new story, which promises to be the most ambitious work he has yet attempted. It will deal with the effect of monastic vows on life, also the struggle between vows and the pleadings of the human heart. Address: Brunswick Manse, Burnley.

HOCKING, Silas Kitto, was born at St. Stephens, in Cornwall, on March 24, 1850. The Hockings belong to one of the oldest Cornish families. His mother was related to Dr. John Kitto, the celebrated commentator. The subject of this sketch was educated at the local Grammar School, and afterwards privately. His first intention was to become a mine surveyor, and to that end his education was directed. Afterwards, however, his inclinations turned in the direction of the ministry, and in the year 1869 he became a candidate for the Methodist itineracy. He was subsequently appointed to charges in Pontypool, Spalding, Liverpool, Burnley, Manchester, and Southport. In the last charge he remained thirteen years, and relinquished it in the year 1896 to devote himself exclusively to literature. In 1879 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society. In 1884 he went to Canada in connection with the British Association, which met at Montreal, and at the close of the meetings he spent several weeks in visiting the principal cities of Canada and the United States. Since that time he has travelled in most Continental countries as well as in Algiers, mainly for the purpose of local colour for his novels, and to get an enlarged acquaintance with the life and manners of European nations. His first book was published in the year 1877. The title was "Alec Green." This was followed in 1878 by "Her Benny," a story of Liverpool street life, which has been translated into a number of languages, and has had a sale of over 100,000 copies. In 1879 "His Father" and "Reedyford" were published. These were followed in successive years by "Ivy," "Sea-waif," "Dick's Fairy," "Real Grit," "Caleb Carthew," "Crookleigh," "For Abigail," "Rex Raynor," "For Light and Liberty," "Doctor Dick," "Where Duty Lies," "One in Charity," "The Heart of Man," "For Such is Life," "In Spite of Fate," and "God's Outcast." The last-named has been lately issued. The total sale of these volumes has reached 1,200,000 copies. In 1894 he was appointed editor of the Family Circle, which post he relinquished in 1896, when along with Mr. F. A. Atkins he established the Temple Magazine, a sixpenny illustrated monthly for Sunday and general reading, which has taken a prominent position among the illustrated magazines of the day. In addition to his literary work Mr. Hocking has lectured on various subjects in nearly all the principal towns and cities of England, drawing large audiences wherever he has appeared. His more recent volumes have been translated into French, German, and Danish. Mr. Hocking is a frequent contributor to periodical literature, and also writes a weekly column of chat for the National Press Agency, in which he deals with current topics from an ethical standpoint. This is syndicated throughout the country under the title of "For a Quiet Hour." He married in 1876 the youngest daughter of Mr. R. Lloyd, of Liverpool, by whom he has two sons and two daughters. Address: 18 Avenue Road, Highgate, N.

HODGE, Harold, editor of the Saturday Review, was born in 1862. His parents are both Cornish, his father being a member of the firm of Gotheby's. He is the youngest of three sons, the eldest being Rector of Holy Trinity, Marylebone, the second a partner with his father in Gotheby's. Mr. Hodge was educated at St. Paul's School, under Mr. Frederick Walker, where he was captain of football and president of the debating society, and at Pembroke College, Oxford, of which he was an Open Exhibitioner. He took his degree in Classics (2nd Mods., 3rd Greats). On leaving Oxford in 1885, he devoted himself for some years to the study of social and political problems in East London. He is still actively connected with the Oxford House in Bethnal Green and with the Mansion House Council on the Dwellings of the Poor. He was called to the Bar (Middle Temple) in 1893, devoting himself to Common Law and Parliamentary practice. He was one of the counsel in the famous Colonial Judge Case (Anderson v. Gorrie), the last case Lord Coleridge ever tried. During this time he was a contributor to the Saturday Review. He has also written in the Fortnightly Review and in the Athenæum. But it was as a politician and social worker rather than as a journalist that Mr. Hodge came to take the editorship of the Saturday Review. He has always taken the deepest interest in Church matters and in problems affecting the welfare of the working classes, particularly questions of housing and public health and elementary education. He inherits a strong turn for natural history. Address: 6 Crown Office Row, Temple, E.C.

HODGSON, Frederic Mitchell, C.M.G., Governor of Gold Coast Colony, was born in 1850, and entered the Post Office in 1869. In 1882 he became Postmaster-General of British Guiana, a post which he exchanged for the Colonial Secretaryship of the Gold Coast in 1888. In 1892 he raised a force of Gold Coast Volunteers, of which he is the Major commanding. Having administered the Colony in the absence of the Governor on several occasions, he was appointed to succeed Sir W. E. Maxwell, K.C.M.G., on March 22, 1898.

HOEY, Mrs. Frances Sarah (who writes as Mrs. Cashel Hoey), wife of John Cashel Hoey, Esq., C.M.G., of Dromalane, Newry, daughter of the late Charles Bolton Johnston, Esq., was born at Bushey Park, Rathfarnham, co. Dublin, Feb. 15, 1830. She married, in 1846, the late Adam Murray Stewart, Esq., of Cromleigh, co. Dublin, and secondly, in 1858, her present husband. Mrs. Cashel Hoey has written for several literary journals since 1860, and is the author of the following novels: "A House of Cards," "Falsely True," "A Golden Sorrow," "Out of Court," "Griffith's Double," "All or Nothing," "The Blossoming of an Aloe," "No Sign," "The Question of Cain," 1882 (new edit., 1890); "The Lover's Creed," 1884; and "A Stern Chase," 1886; "The Queen's Token," &c. Mrs. Cashel Hoey is a contributor to Chambers's Journal, Temple Bar, All the Year Round, Belgravia, London Society, and other periodicals, and is the translator of several works from the French and Italian languages. Among the former are: "The Memoirs of Madame de Rémusat," "The King's Secret," "1794: A Tale of the Terror," "The Last Days of the Consulate," "Frederick the Great and Marie Theresa," "The Surprising Exploits of Dr. Quilès," "Ten Centuries of Toilet" (a translation), and "A Friend of the Queen"

(Marie Antoinette and Count de Fersen—a translation), 1894. Address: Dromalane, Newry.

HOFMEYER, The Hon. Jan H., South African journalist and politician, is the moving spirit of the Africander Bond. He has represented South Africa in many conferences, notably at Ottawa and London. He edits the Volkstein. For many years the ally of Cecil Rhodes (q.v.), he broke with him after the Jameson raid, and in the elections of 1898 was his chief opponent, not as a candidate, but as wire-puller of the Bond Caucus. In his early days he was a man who advised total separation from England, but after the Transvaal War of 1882 he acted as mediator between the Boers and the Cape Government, especially over the Swaziland question, when a peaceful solution was arrived at through his influence.

HOGAN, James Francis, M.P., was born at Nenagh, Tipperary, on Dec. 29, 1855, but while still an infant was taken by his parents to Australia. He was educated in St. Patrick's College, Melbourne, and was for some years in the service of the Education Department of Victoria. In 1881 he joined the staff of the Melbourne Argus, being also a regular contributor to the Melbourne Punch, and the Sydney Daily Telegraph. Articles from his pen have appeared in the Melbourne Review, the Victorian Review, and other colonial periodicals. He was the founder and the first President of the Victorian Catholic Young Men's Society, and the heroic bronze statue of Daniel O'Connell by Mr. Thos. Brock, R.A., now standing in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Melbourne, was erected by a committee of which Mr. Hogan was secretary. He is the author of the following books: "An Australian Christmas Collection," 1886; "History of the Irish in Australia," 1887; "The Australian in London," 1888; "The Lost Explorer," 1890; "The Convict King," 1891; "Robert Lowe, Viscount Sherbrooke," 1893; "The Sister Dominions," 1895; and "The Gladstone Colony," 1898. In February 1893 Mr. Hogan was elected, without opposition, for the Mid Division of Tipperary. Since he entered the House of Commons he has been active in the promotion and ventilation of colonial questions. He organised the Colonial Party, and at its first meeting in August 1893 was unanimously appointed its secretary. To the Contemporary Review for November 1893 he contributed an article explanatory of the constitution, aims, and objects of the Colonial Party, whose roll of membership now numbers 45, drawn from all quarters of the House, but bound together by a common interest in colonial questions and the adequate representation of the interests of Greater Britain in the Imperial Parliament. Mr. Hogan was again returned unopposed for the Mid Division of Tipperary at the general election of 1895. Address: Montague Mansion, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

HOGG, Quintin, is the youngest son of the late Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., Chairman of the Old East India Company, and also brother of the late Lord Magheramorne. He was born in London on February 14, 1845, and was educated at Eton. On leaving school Mr. Hogg at once took an active and personal interest in homeless boys. Eventually he took a large warehouse in the neighbourhood of Drury Lane, which he fitted up as dormitories, and a home for about fifty working boys, with playground, &c., attached. All his leisure was devoted to their welfare, and he practically lived amongst them, sleeping in a special corner of the boys' dormitory. This initiated the movement which is now being continued by the Committee of the Homes for Working-Boys. In time, evening classes and a Sunday School were started in connection with the home by Mr. Hogg, assisted by his old school friends, Mr. (now Lord) Kinnaird, and the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham. In 1873 he started, in a room in Endell Street, under the title of "The Youth's Christian Institute," an association for those of his lads who were above sixteen years of age. The work of the Institute was of so acceptable and attractive a character to youths and young men generally, that the membership gradually rose to 1000, and when the premises of the old Polytechnic in Regent Street came into the market in 1882, Mr. Quintin Hogg purchased them, and adapted them for the work of his Institute. From that time the membership numbers went up by leaps and bounds; and now, in 1898, the members and students exceed 16,000. The work of the Polytechnic is of a threefold character—viz., social, educational, and religious, but attendance at any of the religious meetings or classes is perfectly optional. Upon the purchase of the lease, and the adaptation and enlargement of premises and their maintenance, Mr. Hogg has expended some £200,000. For years, from early evening until closing time at night, he has been on the spot, making the acquaintance of members, and in many ways giving the Polytechnic boys the benefit of his experience and advice. All this work is, however, but one aspect of what has been a very active business life. On leaving Eton, Mr. Hogg entered the old-established West Indian house of Bosanquet, Curtis & Co., as a junior, and is now the head of the firm, its present title being Hogg, Curtis, Campbell & Co. At one time he was much pressed to enter Parliament, and was in 1886 invited by the electors of Westminster to stand as their candidate. Indifferent health, however, and a feeling that public life would interfere with his work at the Polytechnic, caused him to decline the invitation. A few years later, however, upon the constitution of the London County Council, he was spontaneously elected Alderman. In February 1899, after eight months' absence in the East Indies, Mr. Quintin Hogg was welcomed home at the Queen's Hall, Langham Place, by an audience of from 3000 to 4000 members of the Polytechnic, representing all the social interests of that institution. In 1871 he married the daughter of Mr. William Graham, the late M.P. for Glasgow, a lady warmly interested in her husband's work. Addresses: 309 Regent Street, W.; 5 Cavendish Square, W.; and Athenæum.

HOLE, The Very Rev. Samuel Reynolds, D.D., Dean of Rochester, was born on Dec. 5, 1819, is the son of Samuel Hole, Esq., whose family has resided at Cauntun, Nottinghamshire, since Hugh Hole was Vicar in 1567, and was educated at the Grammar School, Newark-on-Trent, and at Brasenose College, Oxford. He was ordained Deacon, 1844; Priest, 1845; and became Curate of Cauntun, 1844; Vicar, 1860; Rural Dean of Southwell, 1865; Prebendary of Lincoln, 1875; Proctor in Convocation, 1875; Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1885; Select Preacher to the University of Oxford, 1885-86; Dean of Rochester, 1887; Almoner of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in 1895; and Grand Chaplain of Freemasons in 1897. Dean Hole is the author of "A Little Tour in Ireland," illustrated by John Leech, 1858; "A Book about Roses," 1859 (this has run through many editions, and has been translated into several languages); "Six of Spades," 1860; "Nice and her Neighbours," 1881; "Hints to Preachers," 1881; and of numerous pamphlets, sermons, and speeches. Among his later works we may mention his "Book about the Garden," 1892; "Memories of Dean Hole," 1892; "More Memories," 1894; and "A Little Tour in America," and "Addresses to Working Men." Addresses: The Deanery, Rochester; and Cauntun Manor, Notts.

HOLE, William, R.S.A., only child of Richard Hole, M.D., of Hole, in Exbourne, Devon, and Anne, his wife, the daughter of Dr. Fergusson, Governor of Sierra Leone, was born in Salisbury on Nov. 7, 1846. On the death of his father from cholera in 1849, his mother returned to her family, then residing in Edinburgh, and her son was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and University. In 1874 he was apprenticed to a firm of civil engineers. After four years he took a trip to Italy, and developed latent artistic instincts in the congenial studio atmosphere of Rome. On his return he could find no employment as an engineer, and definitely abandoned that profession for art. He was trained, in a sort of way, at the Edinburgh School of Art, and then learned his business under Cameron and Chalmers at the School of the Royal Scottish Academy. He was elected Associate of that body in 1878, and full Academician in 1889. He is also a member of the Royal Scottish Water-Colour Society, and of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers. Mr. Hole's claim to distinction is perhaps chiefly due to his power as an etcher, in which art he certainly has taken a foremost place. His principal pictures are: "The End of the '45," 1879; "The Evening of Culloden," 1880; "Prince Charlie's Parliament," 1881; "The Fill of the Boats," 1883; "If Thou hadst known," 1884; "News of Clodden," 1886; "Gethsemane," 1887; and many portraits. His principal original etchings are: "Quasi Cursores," portraits of the Professors of the Edinburgh University in its Tercentenary Year, 1884; and "Canterbury Pilgrims," 1884 (36-inch plate). His other etchings are: "Mill on the Yare," after Crome, 1888; "He is Coming," after Mattys Maris, 1889; "The Sawyers," after J. F. Millet, 1890; "Six plates after Thomson of Duddingston," 1889; and many others. A large plate after Constable's "Jumping Horse," was published in the autumn of 1890, and was followed by two others after Velasquez—viz., "Don Gaspar de Guzman" and "Admiral Pulido Pareja." More recently Mr. Hole issued an important etching after Sir John Millais' "Idyll of the '45." At the Chicago Exhibition Mr. Hole was granted an Award of Merit for his etchings. For the future his name will probably be associated with works of mural decoration. His "Te Deum" in the Church of St. James, Edinburgh, has already attracted considerable attention, and he is at present engaged on the decoration of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, a commission entrusted to him in 1897, and probably the most important work of the kind in point of magnitude which has been given to one man since the recent revival of mural art in these islands. In 1876 Mr. Hole married Elizabeth, daughter of James Lindsay, Esq., W.S. Address: 27 Inverleith Row, Edinburgh.

HOLLAND, Canon Henry Scott, son of George Henry and Hon. Charlotte D. Holland, of Gayton Lodge, Wimbledon, was born at Ledbury, Herefordshire, in 1847, and educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford. He took a first class in the Final Schools in 1870, and in the same year was elected to a senior studentship at Christ Church. He was ordained at Cuddesdon in 1872, and was afterwards Theological Tutor at Christ Church. He was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1882, and again in 1896; Proctor in 1882-83, and Censor of Christ Church in 1883. In 1882 he was appointed Canon of Truro and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop, and in 1884 was made Canon, afterwards Precentor of St. Paul's. He has published several volumes of sermons, "Logic and Life," in 1882; "Good Friday at St. Paul's"; "Creed and Character," 1886; "Christ or Ecclesiastes," 1887; "On Behalf of Belief," 1888; articles on "Justin Martyr" and on "Doctor Liddon" in the Dictionary of Christian Biography; an Essay in "Lux Mundi," "Pleas and Claims," 1893; "God's City"; and, in collaboration with Mr. W. Rockstro, a "Life of Jenny Lind." Permanent address: 1 Amen Court, E.C.

HOLLAND, Professor Thomas Erskine, D.C.L., LL.D., son of the Rev. T. A. Holland, rector of Poynings, Sussex (author of "Dryburgh Abbey and other Poems"), was born at Brighton, July 17, 1835. After entering Oxford as a member of Balliol College, he obtained a Demyship at Magdalen, a First Class in the Final Classical School; a Fellowship at Exeter College, and a Chancellor's Prize. He was called to the Bar in 1863, and practised on the Home Circuit. In 1874 he was elected Vinerian Reader of English Law at Oxford, but resigned that office on being elected, a few months later, Chichele Professor of International Law. He has frequently been law examiner at Oxford, as also (1870-75) in the University of London; (1891-92), at Cambridge; and (1878-80, and 1893-97) to the Inns of Court. He is a member and lately 1st Vice-President of the Institut de Droit International; a Knight of the Order of the Crown of Italy; D.C.L. of Oxford; Fellow of All Souls' College; Assessor of the Chancellor's Court; Hon. Prof. in the University of Perugia; Hon. LL.D. of the Universities of Bologna, Dublin, and Glasgow; and Hon. Member of the University of St. Petersburg, of the Juridical Society of Berlin, and of the Académie de Législation of Toulouse. Among his published works are: "An Essay on Composition Deeds," 1864; "Essays on the Form of the Law," 1870; "The Institutes of Justinian as a Recension of the Institutes of Gaius," 1873 (2nd edit., 1881); "Select Titles from the Digest" (with Mr. C. L. Shadwell), 1874-81; "Alberici Gentilis de Jure Belli," 1877; "The European Concert in the Eastern Question," 1885; "A Manual of Naval Prize Law," issued by authority of the Lords of the Admiralty, 1888; but he is probably best known by his "Elements of Jurisprudence," which, first published in 1880, is now in its eighth edition, and has become a text-book in most English and American Universities and law schools. This work received in 1894 the "Swiney Prize," which is decennially awarded for "the best published work upon Jurisprudence," and was adjudged in 1864 to Sir Henry Maine's "Ancient Law." Addresses: Poyning's House, Oxford; 3 Brick Court, Temple; and Athenæum.

HOLLINGSHEAD, John, author and journalist, son of Mr. Henry R. Hollingshead, of the Irish Chamber, was born in Hoxton, London, Sept. 9, 1827, was educated at Homerton, and entered business early; but preferring journalism, became connected with several leading daily and weekly newspapers, as well as magazines. He joined the staff of Household Words in 1857; was a constant contributor to that periodical and to All the Year Round, the Cornhill Magazine, Good Words, and Once a Week. From 1859 to 1864 he published several volumes of essays and stories, chiefly on life in London. In 1861, the famine year in London, he was the Special Commissioner of the Morning Post at the East End. The outcome of his mission was "Ragged London," in 1861. In 1862 he was connected with the Great Exhibition, and wrote the historical introduction to its catalogue. He has written one or two original dramatic pieces, and was for six years the dramatic critic of the Daily News, London Review, Punch, &c.; he contributed much to Punch, and is a member of the Dramatic Authors' Society and of the French Society of Gens de Lettres. In December 1868, Mr. Hollingshead opened the Gaiety Theatre, in the Strand, but after eighteen years he ceased to be its lessee and manager. He has had three Metropolitan theatres under his direction at one time, with the most powerful combination of actors in London. He has also been the director of the principal theatre in Manchester. In 1879 he induced the whole Comédie Française to visit London and play for six weeks at the Gaiety. A collection of his writings was published under the title of "Miscellanies: Stories and Essays," 3 vols., 1874; two other small collections in 1882 and 1883, called respectively "Plain English" and "Footlights"; and in 1877 he made a successful adaptation of MM. Meilhac and Halévy's "La Cigale," under the title of "The Grasshopper." Mr. Hollingshead is a director of several large variety theatre companies in London, the provinces, and abroad, and was the managing director of "Niagara in London," the popular panorama which Mr. Hollingshead organised for some American friends. In 1890 he collected some papers under the title of "Niagara Spray," containing, like "Footlights," a good many reprints from Punch. In 1892 he published "The Story of Leicester Square," and his Autobiography (2 vols.) in 1894, and "Gaiety Chronicles" in 1898. Addresses: 8 Egerton Mansions, Brompton Road; and 3 Garrick Mansions, Charing Cross Road, W.

HOLMAN-HUNT, William, painter, one of the most prominent of the three working members of the Pre-Raphaelite movement, was born in London in 1827, and exhibited his first picture at the Academy in 1844, a portrait of a child, entitled "Hark!" The earlier works were adapted from poetry and fiction, such as "Dr. Rochecliffe performing Divine Service in the Cottage of Joceline Joliffe at Woodstock," in 1847; "The Flight of Madeline and Porphyro," from Keats's "St. Agnes," in 1848; and "Rienzi vowing to obtain Justice for the Death of his young brother," in 1849. He began that series of religious and mystical subjects, whereby he has since made himself best known, with "A Converted British Family Sheltering a Christian Missionary from the Persecution of the Druids," in 1850; followed by the symbolical "Hireling Shepherd," in 1852. His picture in 1851 was in a different class of sentiment—"Valentine receiving Sylvia from Proteus"; that of 1853, "Claudio and Isabella," and "Our English Coasts," a study of the Downs at Hastings. Three of these pictures were awarded £50 and £60 prizes at Liverpool and Birmingham. The occult meaning of his "Light of the World," and of the "Awakening Conscience," of 1854, was explained by Mr. Ruskin in some letters to the Times. "The Scapegoat," of which the scene was painted upon the margin of the salt-incrusted shallows of the Dead Sea, was exhibited in 1856. The "Finding of the Saviour in the Temple" was exhibited in 1860; and "Isabella and the Pot of Basil," in 1866. His more recent pictures are "London Bridge on the Night of the Marriage of the Prince of Wales"; "The Afterglow"; and "The Festival of St. Swithin." The last-mentioned was in the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1868. The largest of his works, which exclusively occupied his time during a residence of four years in Palestine, was finished in 1873. It is styled "The Shadow of Death," and represents a prevision of the Crucifixion. "Plains of Esdraelon," an Oriental landscape with shepherd and sheep, taken at Nazareth, was exhibited in 1877. "The Ship," an illustration of lines from "In Memoriam," represents the deck of a ship by night, exhibited in 1878. A "Portrait of Sir Richard Owen, C.B.," was exhibited in Bond Street in 1880, &c. "The Triumph of the Innocents" was exhibited in Bond Street in 1885. It represents a company of the spirits of the Children of Bethlehem accompanying the Holy Family on their flight into Egypt. "Christ amongst the Doctors," designed for a mosaic placed in Clifton College Chapel, was exhibited in 1890. In the year 1880 he delivered a lecture at the Society of Arts upon the need of greater knowledge and care on the part of artists in the preparation of the materials upon the perfection of which they have to rely for the permanence of their works. This at the time awakened much attention to the matter, and still encourages research for better methods of obtaining superior preparations. A nearly complete collection of Mr. Holman-Hunt's works was exhibited at the Fine Arts Society's rooms in 1886. He has written in the Contemporary Review two articles of reminiscences of the Pre-Raphaelite movement. In the columns of the Times he subsequently led the attack upon the Royal Academy, in which, of course, he no longer exhibits. In May 1898 the Queen purchased one of his pictures, "The Beloved," exhibited in the New Gallery. Addresses: Draycott Lodge, Fulham; and Athenæum.

HOLME, Charles, F.L.S., editor and proprietor of the Studio, Hon. Secretary of the Japan Society, was born at Derby on Oct. 7, 1848, and is the son of George Holme, a silk manufacturer of that town. He was educated privately at Derby, and from 1868 to 1886 was an East India merchant. He has travelled much in Russia, Japan, and the East generally. He succeeded the late Mr. Gleeson White as editor of the Studio in 1894. Address: The Red House, Upton, Bexley Heath, S.E.

HOLMES, Lord Justice, The Right Hon. Hugh Holmes, P.C., is the son of the late William Holmes of Dungannon, and was born in 1840. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and was called to the Irish Bar in 1865. He was successively Solicitor-General and Attorney-General of Ireland between the years 1878 and 1880; became a Judge of the High Court of Justice in Ireland in 1887, and was in the latter year appointed an Irish Lord Justice of Appeal. He had a seat in the House of Commons from 1885-87 as Conservative member for Dublin University. Address: 3 Fitz-William Place, Dublin.

HOLMES, Richard Rivington, M.V.O., F.S.A., Windsor Librarian, was born in London on Nov. 16, 1835, and is the second son of John Holmes, Assistant Keeper of the MSS. at the British Museum. He was educated at Cholmeley School, Highgate. He was appointed Assistant in the British Museum in 1854, Archaeologist to the Expedition to Abyssinia, 1868, and obtained the medal. In 1870 he became Librarian to the Queen and Keeper of the Prints and Drawings at Windsor Castle. He was honoured with the M.V.O. fourth class in 1897, and is a Lieutenant-Colonel, V.D., late 1st Volunteer Battalion Royal Berks Regiment. He is author of various papers in literary and antiquarian periodicals, of "Naval and Military Trophies," 1897; and of the sumptuous illustrated work entitled "Queen Victoria," 1897. He has exhibited water-colour drawings at the Royal Academy, Grosvenor, and New Galleries, and is a designer of stained glass and other ornamental work. He drew on wood the illustrations to Mrs. Oliphant's "Makers of Venice." Addresses: Windsor Castle; and Athenæum.

HOLMES, Timothy, M.A., F.R.C.S., was educated at Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1847 (M.A. 1850), and at St. George's Hospital, London, of which he is Treasurer and Consulting Surgeon. As a young surgeon he enjoyed the honour of the great Sir Benjamin Brodie's intimacy. He is Fellow, and was at one time President, of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., has been Vice-President of the Pathological Society, and was at one time Senior Vice-President and Professor of Surgery and Pathology at the Royal College of Surgeons (England), where he lectured in 1872-74 on the "Surgical Treatment of Aneurism." He was also at one time Chief Surgeon to the Metropolitan Police Force, and Surgeon to the Hospital for Sick Children. He has edited the famous "System of Surgery," and has contributed important articles to that work. He is author of "A Treatise on the Surgical Treatment of the Diseases of Infancy and Childhood," and "A Treatise on Surgery, its Principles and Practice"; and with Dr. Bristowe wrote a "Report on Hospitals" in the sixth Annual Report of Medical Officers to the Privy Council. Lately he has published "Sir Benjamin Brodie" in the Masters of Medicine Series, 1898. Address: 6 Sussex Place, Hyde Park, W.

HOLYOAKE, George Jacob, born at Birmingham, April 13, 1817, was educated at the Mechanics' Institution in that town. He was appointed Superintendent of Assistants of the first Exhibition of Arts and Manufactures held in Birmingham in 1839; Teacher of Mathematics to the Mechanics' Institution, and one of the Lecturers to explain the Social System of Robert Owen, 1841. In 1846 he was awarded the five prizes offered by the Independent Order of Oddfellows for five new Degree Lectures upon Knowledge, Charity, Justice, Science, and Progress. He was Acting Secretary to the British Legion sent out to Garibaldi; and Secretary of the Hyde Park Demonstration Committee against Lord Palmerston's Conspiracy Bill. Mr. Holyoake is the founder of "Secularism," a system which, according to him, "bases duty on considerations purely human, relies on material means of improvement, justifying its beliefs to the conscience, irrespective of Atheism, Theism, or Revelation." He is the author of numerous works on working-class education, theological criticism, politics, and co-operation; "Uses of Euclid"; "Reasoning from Facts"; "Public Speaking and Debate"; "Trial of Theism"; "History of Middlesborough-on-Tees"; "Letters to Lord John Russell on an Intelligence Franchise"; "The Political Situation"; a letter to Joseph Cowen, which J. S. Mill declared, 1865, to be "the best of Mr. Holyoake's political writings"; "The History of Co-operation in Rochdale," which caused upwards of 250 co-operative societies to be founded in two years, and has been translated into the chief European and Indian languages; "A History of Co-operation in England," in 2 vols.; and "A New Defence of the Ballot," which Mr. Bright described as the only original argument for it he had seen. He was the editor of thirty volumes of the Reasoner. Mr. Holyoake was the last person imprisoned in England for alleged Atheism. The cause was an answer given in debate after a lecture upon Home Colonies (1841). Mr. Justice Erskine admitted that Mr. Holyoake did not introduce theology into the address, and merely gave an honest answer to a public question, but sentenced him to six months' imprisonment to encourage him in candour. Mr. Holyoake was also the last person against whom an indictment was issued by the Court of Exchequer for publishing unstamped papers in support of the Society for Repealing the Taxes upon Knowledge. Mr. Holyoake having incurred upwards of £600,000 of fines, Mr. Gladstone said to a deputation upon the subject that "he recognised that Mr. Holyoake's object was not to break the law, but to try the law." The Repeal of the Newspaper Stamp Act, however, caused the prosecution to be abandoned. He was chiefly instrumental in causing the Evidence Amendment Bill to be passed, which legalised purely secular affirmations. He suggested and furnished the scheme of the series of Blue-Books issued by Lord Clarendon, prepared by the Foreign Office on the "Condition of the Industrial Classes in Foreign Countries." It was on his suggestion, made when Lord John Manners was Commissioner of Works, that the limelight was placed over the Clock Tower at Westminster, to denote at night when Parliament was sitting. A later work is the "Life of Joseph Rayner Stephens, Preacher and Orator." In 1882 he a second time visited Canada and the United States to propose to the Governments of both countries the issue of a Settlers' Guide Book, to be prepared and published on their authority, Mr. Gladstone making Mr. Holyoake two grants from the Public Service Fund in aid of this object. Mr. Holyoake edited the first three volumes of the Present Day, a journal discussing "Agitated Questions without Agitation." His recent works are: "Among the Americans," "A Hundred Days Abroad in New Mexico and Canada," and "Hostile and Generous Toleration." He has been a member of the Central Board since its first establishment in 1869. He has also published "Self-Help One Hundred Years Ago," 1890; "The Co-operative Movement of To-day," 1891; "Sixty Years of an Agitator's Life," 1892; "Public Speaking and Debate," 1894; "Origin and Nature of Secularism," showing that where Free Thought commonly ends Secularism begins, 1896; "Jubilee History of the Leeds Co-operative Society," 1897. Address: Eastern Lodge, Brighton. Clubs: National Liberal (Hon. Member), and of the Institute of Journalists, of the Cobden Club, and the Musée Social, Paris.

HOME, Earl of, Charles Alexander Douglas-Home, K.T., D.L., J.P., was born at the Hirsell, Coldstream, on April 11, 1834, and is the son of the 11th Earl, whom he succeeded in 1881, and Lucy, eldest daughter of the second and last Lord Montague. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A.). He was Lord-Lieutenant of Berwickshire from 1879 to 1890, since which year he has been Lord-Lieutenant of Lanarkshire. He is A.D.C. to the Queen, Major-General of the Royal Company of Archers, Colonel of Yeomanry, and Hon.

Colonel of Volunteers (V.D.). He assumed the name of Douglas in 1877. In 1899 he was created K.T. in place of the late Lord Napier and Ettrick. He married, in 1870, Maria, daughter of Captain Charles C. Grey, R.N. Addresses: 6 Grosvenor Square, W.; The Hirsell, Coldstream, Berwickshire; and Douglas Castle, Lanarkshire &c.

HOOK, James Clarke, R.A., was born in London, Nov. 21, 1819. His father, Mr. James Hook, was the Judge Arbitrator in the Mixed Commission Courts, Sierra Leone, and his mother was the second daughter of Dr. Adam Clarke, the biblical commentator. The future artist was entered as a student of the Royal Academy in 1836, and his progress from the outset was marked and encouraging. He took the first Medals in the life and painting schools in 1852. He obtained the Gold Medal for historical painting in 1845, the subject being "The Finding of the Body of Harold." Up to this time Mr. Hook had chiefly confined himself to subjects from English history, and occasional portraits. In 1846 he obtained the travelling pension of the Royal Academy for three years, and in the same year married the third daughter of Mr. James Burton, solicitor, and went to Italy. After eighteen months' absence he gave up half his pension, and returned to England. He now began painting subjects from Italian and French history and poetry, and occasionally from Scripture. Of this class may be mentioned the following, all exhibited at the Royal Academy: "Pamphilus relating his Story," a subject from Boccaccio, 1844; "The Song of Olden Time," 1845; "The Controversy between the Lady Jane Grey and Feckenham," 1846; "Bassanio commenting on the Caskets," a scene in the "Merchant of Venice," 1847; "The Emperor Otho IV. and the Maid Gualdrada," 1848; "The Chevalier Bayard wounded at Brescia," also, "Othello's First Suspicion," and "Bianca Capello," 1849; "Escape of Francesco Novello di Carrara and the Lady Taddea," and "A Dream of Venice," 1850. Mr. Hook was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1850, and attained the full honours of the Academy in 1860. He exhibited "The Rescue of the Brides of Venice," and "The Defeat of Shylock," 1851; "The Story of Torello," from Boccaccio, and "Othello's Description of Desdemona," 1852; "The Chevalier Bayard knighting the Son of the Duke of Bourbon," and "Isabella of Castille and the Idle Nuns," 1853; "Incidents in the Persecution of the Protestants in Paris," 1854; and "Gratitude of the Mother of Moses for the Safety of her Child," 1855. About this period Mr. Hook returned to his first inclination, and devoted himself chiefly to pastoral and modern subjects. Of examples in his later style we may instance the following: "The Birthplace of the Streamlet," "The Market Morning," and "The Shepherd's Boy," 1855; "The Fisherman's Good-Night," 1856; "A Signal on the Horizon," and "The Ship-Boy's Letter," 1857; "A Pastoral," with a quaint inscription from Spenser, and "The Coast-Boy Gathering Eggs," 1858. Of late years Mr. Hook has devoted himself to marine subjects, "Luff, Boy!" "A Cornish Gift," and "The Skipper Ashore," 1859; "Leaving Cornwall for the Whitby Fishing," 1861; "The Trawlers," 1862; "Fish from the Doggerbank," 1870; "Salmon Trappers, Norway," "Norwegian Haymakers," "Market Girls on a Fjord," 1871; "As Jolly as a Sand-Boy," 1872; "Hearts of Oak," and "The Samphire Gatherer," 1875; "Crabbers," 1876; "A Gull Catcher," "The Coral Fisher, Amalfi," 1878; "Little to Earn and Many to Keep," "Mushroom Gatherers," and "Tanning Nets: Witches and Cauldrons from the Macbeth Country," 1879; "King Baby: The White Sands of Iona," "Home with the Tide," "Sea-pools," and "Mussel-Gardens," 1880; "Diamond Merchants, Cornwall," and "Past Work," 1881; "Caller Herrin," and "Devon Harvest Cart: the Last Handful Home," 1882; "Catching a Mermaid," "Love Lightens Toil," "The Wily Angler," "Carting for 'Farmer Pengelly,'" 1883; "The Broken Oar," 1886; "The Sea-weed Raker," 1889; "Last Night's Disaster," and "A Jib for the New Smack," 1890. More recently he has exhibited "Good Liquor, Duty Free," 1893; and "Before Sundown," "Herring-packers," "Practising without Diploma," and "Seed-time," 1894; "Finnan Haddie," "Hey, Ho, Seely Sheepe!" "A Harvest in the West Country," 1895; "A Dish of Prawns," and "Breadwinners of the North," 1896; "From the Shore to the Field," Portrait of Allan J. Hook, Esq.; "Low Water at the Tidal Crossing," "A Dutchman's Home," 1897; "A Turn in the Lane: Blackberries"; "Idlers," "Trouble with the old Muzzle-loader," and a landscape, 1898; "Waders," "Grist to the Mill," "Water-Cresses!" and a portrait of Bryan Hook, Esq., 1899. Address: Silverbeck, Churt, Farnham, Surrey.

HOOKER, Sir Joseph Dalton, G.C.S.I., C.B., P.P.R.S., M.D., F.L.S., F.G.S., D.C.L. Oxon., LL.D. Cantab., Dublin, Edin., and Glas., is the second and only surviving son of the late Sir William Jackson Hooker, Regius Professor of Botany in Glasgow University, and subsequently Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew, by Maria, eldest daughter of Mr.

Dawson Turner, F.R.S., banker, of Great Yarmouth, Norfolk. He was born at Halesworth, Suffolk, June 30, 1817, and was educated at the High School and University of Glasgow, where he took the degree of M.D. in 1839. At the age of twenty-one he accompanied, officially as assistant-surgeon, but in reality as naturalist, the famous expedition of Sir James Clark Ross, fitted out by the Government for the purpose of investigating the phenomena of terrestrial magnetism in the South Circumpolar Seas. The result of his researches during this voyage was a series of superb volumes on the botany of the Southern regions, embracing the flora of the Antarctic Islands, Fuegia, New Zealand, and Tasmania. By a comparison of the plants of these regions with those of other parts of the world, he succeeded in advancing our knowledge of the laws which govern the distribution of plants over the surface of the earth. He returned to this country after an absence of four years. In 1846 he accepted the appointment of botanist to the Geological Survey of Great Britain under Sir H. de la Bèche, and he contributed a valuable paper to the second volume of the "Records" of that institution on the vegetation of the Carboniferous period as compared with that of the present day; and another on the structure of coal-fossils. In 1847 Dr. Hooker undertook a journey to India for the purpose of investigating the plants of tropical countries, and the flora of a hitherto unexplored region of the Himalayas. In the course of his travels in these remote districts he was for some time kept prisoner by the Rajah of Sikkim. He returned in 1851, and published two very interesting volumes of "Himalayan Journals," and a number of scientific works on the botany of India. In 1850, while in India, he published some beautiful sketches of rhododendrons from the Sikkim Himalaya, several of which have since been introduced into England. These expeditions, though partly at his own expense, were conducted under the authority of Government, which supplied some of the funds. He was appointed in 1855 Assistant-Director of Kew Gardens; and, on his father's death in 1865, succeeded to the Directorship, which he resigned in 1885. He was some time Examiner in Natural Science of candidates for medical appointments in the Royal Army and in the late East India Company's Service, and Examiner in Botany to the London University and Apothecaries Company. In the autumn of 1860 he accompanied the late Admiral Washington on a tour in Syria, during which he paid special attention to the oaks of that country. Dr. Hooker presided over the meeting of the British Association held at Norwich in 1868. The main subject of his address, which gave rise to much controversy, was the consideration of the views put forward from time to time by Mr. Darwin on the doctrine of the continuous evolution of life, and in connection with this, on what is termed "natural selection," together with his theory of the "origin of species." To Darwin's notions, expressed in their fullest extent, Dr. Hooker gave his entire adhesion. He was appointed a Companion of the Bath (Civil Division) in 1869. In April 1871 Dr. Hooker left England for Morocco, in company with Mr. John Ball, F.R.S., and Mr. G. Maw, F.L.S., his purpose being to collect the plants of that comparatively unexplored country. On the 16th of May he and his companions made the ascent of the Great Atlas, the heights of which mountain had never before been trodden by any European; and at the close of June returned to Kew, bringing a large collection of plants. In 1873 Dr. Hooker was elected President of the Royal Society, but resigned in 1878, when the late Mr. W. Spottiswoode was chosen as his successor. In 1877 he was created Knight Commander of the Star of India, for his services to the Government of India, and in 1897, on the completion of "The Flora of British India," was raised to G.C.S.I. In 1877 he paid a visit of three months' duration to the United States, where he was most cordially received by the leading scientific men. On his return he presented to Kew a large collection of seeds and museum specimens, and a herbarium of about a thousand species, together with notes on the distribution of the North American trees in particular. He was awarded by the Royal Society a Royal medal in 1854, the Copley in 1887, and the Darwin in 1892. In 1884 the Founders' medal of the Royal Geographical Society was awarded to him "for his eminent services in scientific geography"; and in 1883 the Society of Arts presented to him their Albert medal for the services he has rendered to the arts, manufactures, and commerce by promoting an accurate knowledge of the floras and economic vegetable products of the several colonies and dependencies of the Empire. In 1888 he received the medal of the Linnean Society, and in 1898 that of the Manchester Philosophical Society. Sir Joseph is a member of various learned societies, and a corresponding member of the Institute of France. His works are: "Botany of the Antarctic Voyage," 6 vols., 4to, 1847-60; "Handbook of the New Zealand Flora," 1867; "Rhododendrons of the Sikkim-Himalaya," 1849-51; "Himalayan Journals," 2 vols., 8vo, 1854; "Genera Plantarum," 1862, et seq.; "The Student's Flora of the British Islands," 1870; "The Flora of British India," 1872-97; "Journal of a Tour in Morocco and the Great Atlas," 1878. Addresses: The Camp, near Sunningdale; and Athenæum.

HOPE, Anthony. See HAWKINS, ANTHONY HOPE.

HOPE, Sir Theodore Cracraft, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., was born in 1831, and is the only son of the late James Hope, M.D., F.R.S. He was educated at Rugby and at the East India Company's College at Haileybury, and entered the Bombay Civil Service in 1853. He was an Educational Inspector in India, 1855-60; member of the Governor-General's Legislative Council, 1875-80; provisional member of Council, Bombay, in 1880; Secretary to the Government of India for Finance and Commerce, 1881-82; Finance Minister (officiating), in 1882; Public Works Member of the Governor-General's Councils, 1882-87. He has retired from the Civil Service, and was created a K.C.S.I. in 1886. In 1893 he published "Church and State in India." He married in 1866 Josephine, only daughter of the late John Williamson Fritton, of Braiddule House, co. Down. Addresses: 21 Elvaston Place, S.W.; Bel Ritiro, San Remo; and Athe-

Baron Ventry. Address: Hopetoun House, South Queensferry, Linlithgowshire.

HOPKINS, Edward J., Mus. Doc., Organist at the Temple Church, born in Westminster, June 30, 1818, was admitted, at the age of eight, as a chorister in the Chapel Royal, St. James's, where he remained till his voice broke in 1833. He then became a pupil of Thomas Forbes Walmisley, organist of the Church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. About a twelvemonth afterwards, Sept. 17, 1834, Mr. Hopkins played for and obtained his first appointment, that of organist to Mitcham Church, Surrey, at the early age of sixteen. This post he exchanged for that of organist to St. Peter's, Islington, in 1838. The same year he obtained the Gresham gold medal for his anthem, "Out of the Deep"; and in the year 1840 he obtained a similar prize for his anthem, "God is gone up," the umpires being Dr. Crotch, Mr. W. Horsley, and Sir John Goss. In 1841 he accepted the position of organist to St. Luke's Church, Berwick Street, where he remained until 1843. During that time he executed a task calling for much diligence and patience, viz., that of "scoring" two sets of old madrigals from the separate and unbarred part-books for the Musical Antiquarian Society—Thomas Weelkes's first set of madrigals, 1597; and John Bennet's first set of madrigals, 1599; the former of which was published in the early part of 1843, and the other a few years later. About that time he began to publish a series of arrangements for the organ, the first three numbers of which were devised for the GG organ, to the use of which he had been trained; but the remainder of the series were laid out for the CC organ, to which, in conjunction with Dr. Gauntlett and Henry Smart, Mr. Hopkins became an early adherent. On May 7, 1843, Mr. Hopkins played his first probationary service at the Temple Church, and in the following October he was formally appointed "Organist to the Honourable Society of the Temple," by the Benchers. He retained his position until 1898. In 1849 the octave and a half of F pedals were removed from the Temple organ, and a proper set, of the range of two octaves and a half (from CCC to F), were laid down in their stead. For the opening of the organ with this important improvement, the service known as "Hopkins in F" was written, and was soon followed by the second service in A major. Previous to this, however, he had resumed publication of the series of organ arrangements for the CC organ, introducing the Continental oblong form for the printing; and he had also issued his "Four Preludial Pieces." In September 1850 Mr.

HOPETOUN, Earl of, The Right Hon. John Adrian Louis Hope, G.C.M.G., D.L., Lord Chamberlain, was born at Hopetoun House, N.B., Sept. 25, 1860, and is the son of the 6th Earl and Etheldred Anne, daughter of C. T. S. Birch-Reynardson, Esq., and was educated at Eton College. He succeeded his father in 1873. He passed at Sandhurst in 1879, but did not enter the army. He was appointed Lieutenant, Lanarkshire Yeomanry, 1880; is a Deputy-Lieut. for Linlithgow, Lanark, and Dumfries; and Justice of the Peace for Linlithgow. Earl Hopetoun was Junior Whip in the House of Lords from 1883 to 1886; was Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen from 1885 to 1889; and was Lord High Commissioner to the Church of Scotland 1887-88-89. He is the Hon. Colonel of the Forth Submarine Mining Volunteer Corps; and was made Governor of the Colony of Victoria in 1889 in succession to Sir Henry Loch, and in the same year was made G.C.M.G. He resigned this position in 1895, since which year he has been President of the Institution of Naval Architects. In December 1898 he was appointed Lord Chamberlain in the room of the late Earl of Lathom. He married in 1886 the Hon. Hersey Alice Eveleigh-de-Moleyns, daughter of the 4th

Hopkins delivered a course of four lectures at the Collegiate Institution, Liverpool, on "The Construction and Capabilities of the Organ, illustrated with Diagrams, &c.," which, on receiving the request that they should be printed, were developed into the book since entitled "The Organ: its History and Construction," by Dr. Rimbault and E. J. Hopkins. In 1880 Dr. Hopkins's history of the organ appeared in Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music," and in 1883, at the request of the Treasurers of the two hon. societies, Dr. Hopkins undertook the rather heavy task of preparing a new book of the words of the anthems, and a pointed psalter with chants, for the express use of the Temple Church. Dr. Hopkins has composed a number of anthems, services, and voluntaries, and has received many honourable distinctions in recognition of his services to music.

HOPKINS, Admiral Sir John Omanney, K.C.B., late Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean, son of the Rev. W. T. Hopkins, Rector and Rural Dean of Nuffield, Oxford, was born in 1834, and educated at Marlborough College. He entered the navy in 1848, and was promoted Lieutenant in 1854. During the Russian war he served in H.M.S. Sanspareil, H.M.S. Britannia, and H.M.S. London, and was present at the attack on the sea defences of Sebastopol and in various other operations, for which he received the Crimean and Turkish medals. He was promoted Commander in 1862 and Captain in 1867, and was appointed Private Secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty in 1881, in which year he was also appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Queen. In 1883 he was selected to fill the office of Captain Superintendent of Sheerness Dockyard. This appointment he relinquished in 1885 in order to take over the duties of the Directorship of Naval Ordnance. Sir John attained Flag rank in 1885, and was elected a member of the Inter-Departmental Committee, which was ordered by the Government to inquire into the supply of naval armaments. He was Admiral Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard between 1886 and 1888, when he became a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty. In 1892 he went to the North American and West Indian Station as Commander-in-Chief of the English Fleet in those waters. While he held that command a revolution took place at Nicaragua, and Admiral Hopkins received the thanks of the inhabitants of Bluefields for despatching a ship to their assistance, and by his prompt action rendered a most valuable service in protecting them from the outrages of brutal and undisciplined soldiers. He became Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean in 1896, and was retired from the service in July 1899. Sir John was created a K.C.B. in 1892. He married (1) in 1875 a daughter of Metcalfe Larken; and (2), in 1882 Minna, daughter of Admiral Sir Sydney Dacres, G.C.B. Address: United Service Club.

HOPPER, Eleanor Nora, was born Jan. 2, 1871, in Exeter, and was the daughter of the late Harman Baillie Hopper, Captain 31st Bengal Native Infantry, by his second wife, Caroline Augusta Hopper (née Francis). She was educated at the school of Mr. A. S. B. Scott, of Emperor's Gate, Kensington. Miss Hopper is a student of folk-lore and superstition. She is the author of the serial, "A Northern Juliet," now running in Atlanta, of "Ballads in Prose," 1894; "Under Quicken Boughs," 1896; and is a contributor to Longmans', Atlanta, Household Words, Macmillan's, Yellow Book, English Illustrated, Sketch, Black and White, All the Year Round, Morning Post, Album, Illustrated London News, Ludgate Monthly, Pall Mall Gazette, Sylvia, Girls' Own Paper, Woman, National Observer, New Review, Gentleman's Magazine, the Evergreen, the Lyceum. She began to write first for publication in 1887, and her earliest contribution was a poem which appeared in the Family Herald on Sept. 5, 1887. Her poems on Irish subjects are specially admired. Address: 36 Royal Crescent, W.

HOPPS, John Page, was born in London, Nov. 6, 1834, and was educated in London and at the Baptist College, Leicester. He entered the Baptist ministry at Hugglescote and Ibstock, Leicestershire, in 1855, and became assistant to George Dawson at the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham, in 1858. In 1860 he accepted an invitation from a Unitarian church at Sheffield; and afterwards was Unitarian minister at Dukinfield and Glasgow. At Glasgow he was elected a member of the first School Board, being the only representative thereof of the principle of secular education only in public schools. In 1876 he became minister of the Great Meeting, Leicester. For thirty years, in addition to the ordinary gatherings of his congregation, he has held meetings of working people on Sunday afternoons in public halls, at Birmingham, Sheffield, Manchester, Glasgow, and Leicester, for worship and "the uplifting of the life." During part of this time in Leicester, for several winters, he closed his chapel on Sunday evenings, and gathered together immense audiences of working people in the Floral Hall. He was proprietor and editor of the Truthseeker for twenty-five years, from 1863 to 1887, and is the author of a great number of works on theological and religious subjects, including a "Revised Old Testament" for young people, a "Life of Jesus" for the young, and several volumes of non-controversial sermons, also of various hymns and poems. He is the writer of the most widely circulated statement of the Unitarian Faith, of which four hundred thousand copies have been issued. The following are some of the titles of Mr. Hopps's sermons:—"Fear of Evil Mastered by Faith in God," "Self-possession through Endurance," "The Goodness of God in a World of Struggle," "Love for God a Power working with us for Good." Mr. Hopps has always been a social reformer, an advocate of co-operation, and a politician. In 1885 he contested South Paddington against Lord Randolph Churchill, and in 1889 was invited to be the Liberal candidate for St. George's-in-the-East. He has written a series of papers on the Irish question, which have had a combined circulation of over a quarter of a million. He has been a frequent contributor to the Pall Mall Gazette, the Daily News, the Daily Chronicle, the Star, and the Echo. He is the editor of the Coming Day, the first number of which was published Jan. 1, 1891. In 1892 he founded "Our Father's Church," a purely spiritual community, whose members, in various parts of the world, unite on the basis of "The Fatherhood of God (who is the inmost uplifting Life of all things), and the brotherhood of man for sympathy and service." The members of the Church have no officials and no rules, and never meet. "The Ideal," the accepted testimony of the Church, simply sets forth the leading principles of an ideal life in society. It has been translated into Welsh, French, German, Italian, Hungarian, and Japanese, and published all over the world in English. In 1892 he accepted the pastorate of "The Free Christian Church," Croydon. Address: Oak Tree House, South Norwood Hill, S.E.

HOPWOOD, Charles Henry, Q.C., appointed Recorder of Liverpool in 1886, fifth son of J. S. S. Hopwood, of Chancery Lane, solicitor, was born July 20, 1829, and educated at a private school, and afterwards at King's College School and at King's College, London. He became Barrister of the Middle Temple in 1853, practised on the Northern Circuit and in London, and was made Queen's Counsel in 1874. He was elected M.P. for Stockport, 1874, and was returned again in 1880, but rejected in 1885. In 1892 he was elected for the Middleton Division of Lancashire, and sat till 1895. He was elected Benchler of the Middle Temple, 1876, and Reader, 1885; was appointed Recorder of Liverpool, February 1886; attained considerable practice, and was joint author of "Election Cases," Hopwood and Philbrick, and Hopwood and Coltman. He advocated the cause of Trades Unions, defending at the Bar their members against prosecution, and insisting upon protection of their funds against the prejudice of the time. In the House of Commons he assisted in amending the laws as to employers and workmen, and pressed forward reforms in the summary jurisdiction of justices to reduce the frequency and length of imprisonments. He advocated the creation of a Court of Appeal in indictable cases. He worked for the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts as to Women, as well as of the Vaccination laws. Always advanced in political opinions, he supported every extension of the suffrage. He is earnest for a merciful administration of the criminal law, which he believes to be harsh and inconsiderate, producing conviction of the innocent, and despair, not reform, of the guilty. To carry out these views he has founded the Romilly Society, named after Sir Samuel Romilly, one of the first advocates of mercy towards offenders. Address: Northwich Lodge, 2 St John's Wood Road, N.W.

HORE, Annie Boyle, wife of the following, Edward Coode Hore, was born in Bloomsbury, London, April 8, 1853. She was educated at Queen's College, and gained the Monteagle Scholarship in 1867. In 1882 Mrs. Hore commenced her travels in Central Africa. On her first journey she started from Saadani and reached Mambria, 200 miles inland, trying the experiment of wheels. In 1884 Mrs. Hore started from Quillimane to try to reach Tanganyika by the Nyassa route, but after a five days' journey up the Kwa-kwa river in a little open boat, she was obliged to turn back from Marandeni on account of war between the Portuguese and the natives. A month later Mrs. Hore joined her husband at Delagoa Bay, and together they took the old road to Ujiji, via Saadani, Mpwapwa, Ugogo, and Unyamwezi. Mrs. Hore was the first white woman to reach the shores of Lake Tanganyika, and she spent nearly four years on Kavala Island teaching the children the first rudiments of Christianity and civilisation. Mrs. Hore is the authoress of "To Lake Tanganyika in a Bath Chair." Mrs. Hore accompanied her husband to Polynesia (1894).

HORE, Edward Coode, F.R.G.S., was born in Islington on July 23, 1848. His parents were of two old Cornish families. He was educated chiefly in a private school at Cambridge, and was apprenticed, at the age of sixteen, to the owner of a London ship, and visited nearly every part of the world, serving on more than twenty different vessels, from the small coasting schooner to the first-class mail steamer, and passed through all the grades of apprentice, able seaman, boatswain, third, second, and chief officer, and master. In March 1877 Captain Hore was appointed to the London Missionary Society's pioneer expedition in Central Africa. He lived on the shores of Lake Tanganyika for about ten years, first at Ujiji, then at Niumkorlo (south end), and subsequently on Kavala Island. He surveyed the 1000 mile coastline of Lake Tanganyika in a little log canoe, and discovered the Lukuga to be the true outlet of the lake. In 1884 Captain Hore returned to England to report upon his work. In 1882 he took the sections of a steel lifeboat, on trucks, from Saadani to Ujiji, a distance of 836 miles, in less than 100 days. In 1888 he finished the building of the steam yacht the Good News on Lake Tanganyika. Captain Hore received a gold chronometer from the Government of the French Republic for attention and assistance to the late Abbé Debaize; and in 1890 received the Cuthbert Peek grant from the Royal Geographical Society. Captain Hore is the author of "Tanganyika; eleven years in Central Africa"; as well as of contributions to various journals descriptive and defensive of the condition and rights of the natives of Central Africa, for whom he has deep sympathy. In pursuit of the same subject he also during three years delivered many lectures throughout England, and in Australia, New Zealand, and the U.S.A.; and exhibited in London a display of models (made by himself) illustrative of Central African life. These lectures were known as the "Brightest Africa" lectures. Early in 1894 Captain Hore accepted a call to further work in the Mission field, and has been appointed chief officer of the fine new steamship John Williams for the London Missionary Society's work in Polynesia.

HORNBY, The Rev. James John, Provost of Eton College, D.D., D.C.L., third son of the late Admiral Sir Phipps Hornby, G.C.B., of Little Green, Sussex, and of Maria, daughter of the Right Hon. Sir John Burgoyne, was born at Winwick, Dec. 18, 1826, and educated at Eton under the Rev. Dr. Hawtrey, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where, in 1849, he took a first class in Lit. Hum. He rowed twice in the Oxford University Eight, viz., in 1849 and 1851, and was known at College and at Eton as a cricketer. He is now a member of the Alpine Club. In 1849 he became a Fellow of Brasenose College, and in 1854 Tutor and Principal of Bishop Cosin's Hall in the University of Durham. Returning to Oxford in 1864 he became Classical Lecturer at Brasenose; and in 1866 was Senior Proctor of the University. At the close of the latter year he was elected Second Master of Winchester School, which post he retained till his appointment as Head-Master of Eton in January 1868. Dr. Hornby was appointed one of Her Majesty's honorary chaplains in February 1882, and made D.C.L. of Durham University the same year. He was appointed to the Provostship of Eton, July 1884, and is Chairman of the Governing Body of Eton. He married in 1869 Augusta Eliza, daughter of the Rev. J. C. Evans, of Stoke Poges (died 1891). Addresses: The Lodge, Eton College; and Athenæum.

HORSLEY, John Callcott, R.A., son of the late William Horsley, the well-known musician, and grand-nephew of the late Sir Augustus Callcott, the eminent painter, was born in London, Jan. 29, 1817. His first exhibited picture, painted while he was a youth—"Rent-Day at Haddon Hall in the Sixteenth Century"—was spoken of in high terms by Wilkie. "The Chess-Players," "The Rival Musicians," "Waiting for an Answer," were first seen in the British Institution; and he exhibited, for the first time at the Academy, the "Pride of the Village" (now in the Vernon Gallery). This was followed by "The Contrast: Youth and Age," in 1840; "Leaving the Ball," another "Contrast," gay pleasure seekers on the one hand, the homeless outcast on the other; and "The Pedlar," both in 1841; "Winning Gloves," in 1842; and "The Father's Grave," in 1843. In the latter year Mr. Horsley's cartoon of "St. Augustine Preaching," gained at Westminster Hall one of the three prizes in the second rank of £200; and in the trial of skill of 1844 he obtained, by his two small frescoes, a place among the six painters commissioned to execute further samples for the Palace at Westminster. That of 1845, for "Religion," was approved, and the subject executed at large in the House of Lords. In 1847 his colossal oil painting, "Henry V., believing the King dead, assumes the Crown," secured a premium of the third class. Another fresco which he was employed to execute, "Satan Surprised at the Ear of Eve," is to be seen in a portion of the New Palace, called Poets' Hall. Amongst his later works are: "Malvolio in the Sun practising behaviour to his own Shadow," "Hospitality," "The Madrigal—"Keep your Time," "The Pet of the Common,"

"L'Allegro and Il Penseroso" (painted for the late Prince Consort); "Lady Jane Grey and Roger Ascham," "A Scene from Don Quixote," "Flower Girls—Town and Country," "The Holy Communion," "The Lost Found," "A Jealous Eye," "The Duenna's Return," "The New Dress," and "Under the Mistletoe," "The Bashful Swain," "The Duenna and Her Cares," "Attack and Defence," "Detected," "The Gaoler's Daughter," "Caught Napping," "The Banker's Private Room—Negotiating a Loan," "Old Folk and Young Folk," "Pay for Peeping," "In with You," "Stolen Glances," "The other Name?" "The Poet's Theme," "Sunny Moments," and a large religious subject with figures of a colossal size, entitled "The Healing Mercies of Christ," painted as an altar-piece for the chapel of St. Thomas's Hospital; portrait of Thomas Woolcombe, Esq., painted for the South Devon Railway Company; "Under Lock and Key," "Coming Down to Dinner," "The World Forgetting," "Critics on Costume—Fashions Change," "Le Jour des Morts," "Life in the Château Gardens at Fontainebleau," 1881; "A Merry Chase in Haddon Hall," 1882; and "Wedding Rings," 1883, &c. In 1893 he exhibited a portrait of Alderman Treloar at the Royal Academy. In 1882 Mr. Horsley was elected Treasurer of the Royal Academy. He has been very active in bringing together the magnificent collections of "Old Masters" displayed every winter since 1870 at Burlington House. On attaining eighty years of age Mr. Horsley, having held the office of Treasurer to the Royal Academy for fifteen years, resigned that post in 1897 and joined the list of "Retired Academicians." Addresses: 1 High Row, Kensington, W.; and Willesley, Cranbrook.

HORSLEY, Victor Alexander Haden, M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.S., B.Sc., son of J. C. Horsley, R.A., was born on April 14, 1857, in Kensington, and educated at Cranbrook School and University College Hospital with the view of entering on a medical career. After taking the Gold Medal in Anatomy and in Surgery, obtaining the Surgical Scholarship at the University of London, and holding the usual preliminary posts, including the Surgical Registrarship, he was appointed on the surgical staff of the Hospital, having previously taken the F.R.C.S. and London degrees in medicine and surgery. From 1884 to 1890 he held the post of Professor-Superintendent of the Brown Institution, in the laboratory of which he carried out investigations into the localisation of functions of the brain and into the functions of the thyroid gland, by which latter he proved that the disease known as myxœdema was caused by the loss of this organ. In 1885 he was appointed Secretary to the Royal Commission on Hydrophobia, in which capacity he personally sought out and followed up the cases operated on, and became thoroughly convinced of the efficiency of their treatment. In 1886 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society, to the Transactions and Proceedings of which he, in conjunction with others, has contributed many papers bearing principally on brain physiology and localisation. Having been elected Surgeon to the National Hospital for Paralysis and Epilepsy, he, in 1886, performed a successful operation for removal of a tumour in the brain of a patient suffering from those diseases. This he followed up by many others of a similar nature, and in 1887 he performed the first successful operation for the removal of a tumour of the spinal cord. The operations in question formed the subject of papers on Brain Surgery in 1886 in the British Medical Journal, and again in 1887 and 1890. In 1890 he suggested the use of the thyroid gland in the treatment of myxœdema, the method proposed being that of grafting the gland into the bodies of patients suffering from the disease, and in 1891 he contributed a critical and historical view of the subject to Virchow's "Festschrift." In the same year he, in conjunction with Professor Gotch, was appointed to give the Croonian Lecture of the Royal Society, the subject being "The Mammalian Nervous System, its Functions and their Localisation, determined by an electrical method." From 1891 to 1893 he held the post of Fullerian Professor at the Royal Institution, and delivered three sets of lectures (of which the first has appeared in book form) on the Brain and Spinal Cord. He was elected President of the Section of Pathology at the British Medical Association in 1892, and in 1893 opened the discussion in the Surgical Section of that Association with a paper on the treatment of Cerebral Tumours. As one of the lecturers before the British Association for that year he delivered an address on the Discovery of the Functions of the Nervous System, showing how largely our knowledge on the subject is the result of experimental research. In the same year he was awarded the Cameron Prize for Therapeutics by the University of Edinburgh. Mr. Horsley was Professor of Pathology at University College (1893-96), and in the Pathological Laboratory of that Institution, as well as at the Brown, has carried out researches on intra-cranial pressure with Mr. Spencer, on the larynx with Dr. Semon, on rabies, on the Du Buisson hot-air treatment for hydrophobia, on the motor function of certain cranial nerves with Dr. Beevor, and on gunshot wounds of the brain with Dr. Kramer. Mr. Horsley is also the author of several papers in the British Medical Journal, especially on the surgical treatment of neuralgia, and an operation, after the method of Lannelongue, for the relief of microcephalic idiocy in children. He is a member of the German Surgical Society, the American Surgical Society, the American Neurological Society, the Société de Biologie in Paris, and a corresponding member of the Royal Association of Physicians of Buda-Pesth. He has greatly interested himself in questions of medical politics, is President of the Medical Defence Union, and has devoted much of his leisure time to the study of archæology, especially in reference to prehistoric methods of trephining, on which latter subject he has delivered several lectures, the first being before the Royal Institution in 1886. Mr. Horsley is an ardent advocate of experimental research, and his vindication of himself and his English colleagues at the Church Congress of 1892, followed by his article on the subject in the Nineteenth Century and by many letters in the Times, &c., is well known. Addresses: 25 Cavendish Square, W.C.; and Athenæum.

HORTON, Robert Forman, M.A., D.D., one of the most distinguished preachers and authors in the Congregational body, was born in London on Sept. 18, 1855, and is the son of the Rev. T. G. Horton, at that time minister of Tonbridge Chapel. He was educated at Tettenhall College, Shrewsbury School, and New College, Oxford; taking a first class in Lit. Hum., and subsequently becoming Fellow of the College and Lecturer in Roman history. About this time he published his first book, "A History of the Romans," which is still a favourite textbook at the Universities and Public Schools. In December 1883 Dr. Horton's name came prominently before the public in connection with his appointment by the governing body of the University as one of the Examiners in "The Rudiments of Faith and Religion," which included examination in the Thirty-Nine Articles. A fierce outcry was raised in the Clerical and Conservative circles of the University at the appointment of a Nonconformist to the office, a vigorous opposition was started, and at the meeting of Convocation the proposal was defeated by a considerable majority. In the following January Dr. Horton was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church, Lyndhurst Road, Hampstead, the services of which he had been conducting in a tentative way for more than three years previously. The success of his ministry may be judged from the fact that whereas at the formation of the church on Oct. 27, 1880, the total membership was 59, including himself, the number of members at present in active communion is 1170, besides about 100 whose names still remain upon the register, but are abroad or residing too far away for practical connection with the Church. The work of the Church is highly organised, and the reports of the various institutions connected with it, in the "Church Manual," form a considerable volume. A large mission and social settlement is also carried on at Lyndhurst Hall, Warden Road, Kentish Town, which was erected some years ago at a cost of over £6000. In 1893 Dr. Horton was invited to deliver the annual lectures on preaching at Yale University, and visited America for that purpose, the lectures being afterwards published under the title of "Verbum Dei." In recognition of this important service the University conferred upon him the degree of D.D., but personally Dr. Horton does not use it, nor the ordinary title of "Rev.," preferring to be considered simply a Christian layman. Notwithstanding the pressure of his pastoral duties, and the number of his outside preaching engagements, Dr. Horton has found time to add considerably to the literature of the day, his principal works, in addition to those already mentioned, being "Inspiration and the Bible," "Revelation and the Bible," "The Book of Proverbs," "This do," "The Cartoons of St. Mark," "The Lyndhurst Road Pulpit," "Oliver Cromwell," "The Teachings of Jesus," "John Howe," and "The Women of Scripture." He is also a frequent contributor to the magazines, and many of his papers have been republished in attractive form, such as "The Art of Living Together," "The Four Pillars of the Home," "The Conquered World," "Success and Failure," &c. Recently a series of addresses by him on Romanism, republished under the title of "England's Danger," has excited wide interest and attention. His monthly lecture to artisans appears in the "Christian World Pulpit" on the Wednesday following the first Sunday of each month, and thus reaches a wide circle of readers. Dr. Horton, in the year 1898, occupied the position of Chairman of the London Congregational Union, and he has already filled the Chair of the London Missionary Society. Address: Chesils, Christ Church Road, Hampstead, N.W.

HOSKINS, Admiral Sir Anthony Hiley, G.C.B., son of the late Rev. Henry Hoskins, was born in 1828. He was educated at Winchester, and entered the navy in 1842. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1849, Commander in 1858, and Captain in 1863. As a Midshipman in H.M.S. Conway he was present at the operations off Madagascar and in the Mozambique Channel in 1845 and 1847. During the Kaffir War of 1851-52 he was a Lieutenant of H.M.S. Castor, and acted as Naval A.D.C. to General Sir Harry Smith, being several times mentioned in despatches. He went to China in 1857 as Commander of H.M.S. Slaney, and was present at the capture of Canton and the Taku Forts. As Commodore, Sir Anthony Hoskins had command of the Australian station between 1875 and 1878, when he also received a C.B. He held the appointment of Aide-de-Camp to the Queen for three years before his promotion to flag-rank in 1879. As a Rear-Admiral he was employed on special service in Egypt during the war of 1882, and was awarded a K.C.B. and the thanks of both Houses of Parliament. Upon his return to England he was appointed Admiral-Superintendent of Naval Reserves. In 1889 he went to the Mediterranean as Commander-in-Chief, and while on that station was presented with the Medjidie of the first class by the Sultan of Turkey. Sir Anthony has been three times a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty, and received a G.C.B. as a special reward for distinguished service upon his retirement from the active list in November 1893. He has also served upon several of the committees appointed by the Admiralty to inquire into service matters, and was the recipient of a good-service pension in 1893. He married, in 1865, Dorothea, a daughter of the Rev. Sir George Robinson. Address: 17 Montague Square, W.

HOSMER, Harriet, born at Watertown, Massachusetts, Oct. 9, 1830, was educated at Lenox, Massachusetts, and early displayed a taste for art. She received a few lessons in modelling in Boston, and then entered a medical College in St. Louis to study anatomy and dissection. Her first work in marble was a reduced copy of Canova's bust of Napoleon, which was soon followed by an ideal work, "Hesper, or the Evening Star." In 1852 she went to Rome, and became a pupil of Gibson. After two years of study and modelling from the antique, she produced the busts of "Daphne" and "Medusa." Her first full-length figure in marble was Cenone, completed in 1855, and this was followed in the same year by "Puck," of which many copies have been made. Next came a companion piece, "Will-o'-the-Wisp." Her reclining statue of "Beatrice Cenci" was completed and exhibited in 1857. A colossal statue of "Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra, in chains," was her next important work, followed by the "Sleeping" and the "Waking Faun," and a design of a memorial monument to Abraham Lincoln. Besides her skill in sculpture, Miss Hosmer has exhibited talents for designing and constructing machinery and devising new processes, especially in connection with her own art, such as a method of converting ordinary Italian limestone into marble. She has resided for many years in Rome, making occasional visits to the United States.

HOTHAM, Admiral Sir Charles Frederick, K.C.B., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, is the son of the late Captain John Hotham, R.N., and a relative of the Barons Hotham. He was born in 1843, entered the navy as a Cadet in 1856, and was promoted Lieutenant in February 1863, Commander in April 1865, and Captain in December 1871. He first saw active service in the Maori War of 1863, and in November of that year he landed with a party of small-arm men to attack the rebel redoubt at Rangariri, on which occasion he was wounded. His services were favourably noted at the Admiralty, and he was afterwards sent in charge of a detached party to escort an officer across mud flats in rear of enemy's position. He was specially mentioned in despatches and promoted, receiving also the New Zealand medal. As Flag-Captain to the Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Fleet he took part in the bombardment of Alexandria, and for his services throughout the Egyptian War he was created a C.B., and was awarded the Khedive's Star, and the Osmanieh of the third class. In 1880 Captain Hotham was appointed a member of the Royal Commission on the system of purchase and contract for the Royal Navy. He has also been a naval Aide-de-camp to the Queen. In January 1888 he was promoted Rear-Admiral, and in the same month became a Lord of the Admiralty. He went to the Pacific station as Commander-in-Chief in 1890, holding that appointment for three years. Admiral Sir Charles Hotham, who is the youngest officer of his rank, is married to Margaret, daughter of David Milne-Home, Esq., of Milne-Graden, Berwickshire. Addresses: St. Mary's, Berkeley; and 20 Warwick Square, S.W.

HOUGHTON, Lord. See CREWE, EARL OF.

HOULDSWORTH, Sir William Henry, Bart., M.P., is the son of the late Henry Houldsworth, of Coltness, Lanarkshire, and was born at Manchester on Aug. 20, 1834. He was educated at St.

Andrews University. He has represented North-West Manchester, as a Conservative member of the House of Commons, since 1883, and has served as a member of the Royal Commissions on Trade Depression, Gold and Silver, and the Liquor Licensing Laws. He was appointed a Delegate to the Monetary Conference at Brussels in 1890, and also to the Labour Conference at Berlin in 1892. Sir William Houldsworth is a Justice of the Peace for Lancashire and Cheshire, a County Alderman for Lancashire, and is married to Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Crum, of Thornliebank, Renfrewshire. He was created a Baronet in 1887. Address: 35 Grosvenor Place, S.W.; and Coodham, Kilmar-nock, N.E.

HOUSSAYE, Henry, the son of Arsène Houssaye, was born in Paris, Feb. 24, 1848, and was educated at the Lycée Napoléon. He was first destined for painting, but turned towards the study of Greek antiquities. During the war of 1870 he was an officer of Mobs, and was decorated with the Legion of Honour for his gallantry. At nineteen he started in literature with a "History of Apelles," 1867, and after a stay in Greece of some duration he issued "History of Alcibiades and the Athenian Republic," 1873, which obtained the Thiers Prize. His other works include: "Mémoire sur le Nombre des Citoyens d'Athènes au V^e Siècle," 1882 "Aspasie, Cléopâtre, Théodora," 1890 "Le Premier Siècle de Paris, 52 B.C.," 1876 "Les Hommes et les Idées," a collection of articles from the Journal des Débats. He has contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes and La Presse. His later works have been on the History of the Campaigns of Napoleon in 1814 and 1815, and they gained him a seat in the French Academy in 1894 as successor to Leconte de Lisle. His Paris address is 39 Avenue Friedland.

HOUSTON, R. P. W., M.P., was born in 1863, and was educated at Liverpool College. He is a Liverpool shipowner, and practises as engineer and shipbuilder, whilst he is also the chief director of the Houston Line of steamers. He has since 1892 represented the West Toxeth Division of Liverpool, as a Conservative member of the House of Commons. Addresses: 44 Park Lane, W.; and The Lawn, Aigburth, Liverpool.

HOWARD, Sir Henry, K.C.M.G., C.B., is the son of Sir Henry F. Howard, G.C.B., and was born in 1843. Entering the Diplomatic Service, he was appointed Second Secretary at Buenos Ayres in 1873, at the Hague in 1875, and at Washington in 1877. He was Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Guatemala from 1883 to 1884, and became Secretary of Legation at Athens in 1885. Transferred to Copenhagen in 1886, he served in the same capacity there for a year, and also at Pekin from 1887 to 1891. Mr. Howard was promoted to be Secretary of Embassy at St. Petersburg in 1891, and occupied the same position at Paris from 1894 to 1896. Since the latter year he has been Minister at the Hague. He was created K.C.M.G. at the New Year, 1899. He was married, in 1867, to Miss Cecilia Riggs, an American lady. Address: British Legation, The Hague.

HOWARD, General Oliver Otis, LL.D., was born at Leeds, Maine, Nov. 8, 1830. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1850; and in 1854 at the Military Academy at West Point, where, in 1857, he was made Instructor, and later Assistant-Professor of Mathematics. Upon the breaking out of the civil war he was made Colonel of a regiment of volunteers; commanded a brigade at the battle of Bull Run; and was made (Sept. 3, 1861) Brigadier-General of volunteers. He lost his right arm at the battle of Fair Oaks, June 1, 1862. He was made Major-General of volunteers, Nov. 29, 1862; and had the command of a division at Burnside's defeat at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862. Soon after, he was placed in command of the 11th Army Corps, which was attacked at evening by the Confederate General Jackson, and put to flight, at Chancellorsville, July 1, 1863. He received the thanks of Congress for taking the position of success at Gettysburg. In the following autumn he was sent with his corps to the West; took part in the campaign which followed, down to the capture of Atlanta, and commanded the right wing of the army during Sherman's "march to the sea." He was in December 1864 promoted to Brigadier-General, and in the following March to Brevet Major-General in the regular army. In May 1865 he was placed at the head of the Freeman's Bureau, his duties lasting until 1874; and he served also from 1869 to 1873 as President of Howard University. In 1872 he was sent as special commissioner to the Indians in New Mexico and Arizona; and from 1874 to 1881 he commanded the Department of Columbia on the Indian frontier. In 1881 he took charge for two years of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point; and was subsequently transferred to the command of the Department of the Platte. In 1886 he received his full rank of Major-General, and was placed on the retired list in 1894 on account of reaching the age limit. The degree of A.M. was conferred upon him by Bowdoin College in 1853, and that of LL.D. by Waterville and Shurtleff Colleges in 1865, and by the Gettysburg Theol. Seminary in 1866. The French Government made him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in 1884. He has contributed many articles to the magazines, and has published: "Donald's School Days," 1879; "Chief Joseph," 1881; and "General Taylor" (in the Great Commanders series), 1893.

HOWELL, Very Rev. David, B.D., is the son of John Howell, of Pen Coed, and was born in 1831; ordained Deacon in 1855, and Priest in 1856; he was Curate of Neath from 1855 to 1857; and became Vicar of Pwllheli in 1861. He was presented to the Vicarage of Cardiff in 1864; was appointed Vicar of Wrexham in 1875, and Archdeacon of Wrexham in 1889. He became a Canon of St. Asaph in 1885, and was appointed to the Deanery of St. David's in 1897. Address: The Deanery, St. David's.

HOWELLS, William Dean, M.A. (Harvard and Yale), was born at Martinsville, Ohio, March 1, 1837, and is the son of William Cooper and Mary Dean Howells. In 1840 he removed to Hamilton, Ohio, with his father, who was a printer and journalist. He learned the printer's trade of his father, and was afterwards editorially connected with the Cincinnati Gazette and the Ohio State Journal. From 1861 to 1865 he was United States Consul at Venice. Returning to America he engaged in literary labour, and in 1871 became editor of the Atlantic Monthly, a position which he retained until 1880, when he relinquished it to devote himself exclusively to writing. Besides his papers in that magazine and other periodicals, he has published "Poems of Two Friends," himself and J. J. Piatt, 1860; "Life of Abraham Lincoln," 1860; "Venetian Life," 1866; "Italian Journeys," 1867; "No Love Lost," 1868; "Suburban Sketches," 1870; "Their Wedding Journey," 1872; "A Chance Acquaintance," and "Poems," 1873; "A Foregone Conclusion," 1874; "Counterfeit Presentment," a Comedy, and "A Day's Pleasure," 1876; "The Parlour Car," "Out of the Question," and "Life of Rutherford B. Hayes," 1877; "The Lady of Aroostook," 1879; "The Undiscovered Country," 1880; "A Fearful Responsibility, and other Stories," and "Dr. Breen's Practice," 1881; "A Modern Instance," 1882; "A Woman's Reason," and "The Sleeping Car," 1883; "The Register," 1884; "The Elevator," "The Rise of Silas Lapham," and "The Garroters," 1885; "Indian Summer," and "Tuscan Cities," 1886; "The Minister's Charge," and "April Hopes," 1887; "Annie Kilburn,"

"Modern Italian Poets," 1888; "A Hazard of New Fortunes," 1889; "The Shadow of a Dream," 1890; "An Imperative Duty," 1891; "The Quality of Mercy," 1892-93; "The World of Diamonds," and "The Coast of Bohemia," 1893; "A Traveller from Alturia," 1894; "My Literary Passions," 1895; "The Day of their Wedding," "Impressions and Experiences," "A Parting and a Meeting," 1896; "The Landlord at Lion's Head," "An Open-Eyed Conspiracy," "A Previous Engagement," "Stories of Ohio," 1897, and "The Story of a Play," 1898. Under the title of "Choice Biography," he edited, in 1877-78, a series of eight small volumes. For several years he conducted a regular department, the Editor's Study, in Harper's Magazine, but resigned the charge of it in 1891. All his works have been largely circulated in England, where, of late years, he has become almost as well known as in his own country.

HOWLAND, The Hon. George William, Canadian statesman, was born at Waterford, Ireland, May 19, 1835, and emigrated to Prince Edward Island with his parents in 1839. He was educated at the Central Academy, Charlottetown, and followed a mercantile career. From 1862 to 1873 he was a Member of the Island Assembly, and at the time of the Union was defeated at Prince for the first Dominion Parliament. However, in 1873 he was called to the Senate of Canada, where he sat until his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Isle in 1894. In 1892 he came to London to consult Sir Douglas Fox on a project to connect the island with the mainland by a submarine tunnel. He is a Vice-President of the British Empire League in Canada. Address: Government House, Charlottetown, P. E. I.

HOWLAND, The Hon. Sir William Pearce, C.B., K.C.M.G., was born at Pawlings, Dutchess Co., N.Y., May 29, 1811, but removed to Canada in 1830. He at once engaged in business at Toronto, and in time became one of the largest mill-proprietors in the Dominion. He was returned for West York in 1857, and sat in the Legislature of Canada until 1868, when he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. In 1862 he became a Member of the Executive Council of Canada; from 1862 to 1863 he served as Minister of Finance; 1863-64 as Receiver-General; and 1864-66 as Postmaster-General. In 1866 he succeeded the Hon. A. T. Galt as Finance Minister, and on the formation of the first Dominion Government, in the following year, he accepted the portfolio of Minister of Inland Revenue, and was sworn a Member of the Privy Council. That position he resigned in 1868 on accepting the Lieut.-Governorship of Ontario, held by him till 1873. He was created a C.B. in 1867, and a K.C.M.G. in 1879. He lives at Toronto.

HOWORTH, Sir Henry Hoyle, K.C.I.E., M.P., Vice-President of the Society of Antiquaries, Corr. Member of the Royal Academy of Lisbon and of the Geographical Society and Anthropological Society of Italy, Hon. D.C.L., F.R.S., F.S.A., F.G.S., &c., is the son of the late Henry Howorth, of Lisbon, merchant, and was born in Lisbon, July 1, 1842, educated at Rossall School, and called to the bar at the Inner Temple, June 11, 1867. He has devoted himself chiefly to literature and politics, and is the author of a large work on the "History of the Mongols," of which several volumes are published, and which is still in progress; a "History of Chinghiz Khan and his Ancestors," based upon an entirely new chronicle of the race found in the Peking Library (this work has been published in a series of over 30 chapters in the Indian Antiquary); of a considerable geological work entitled "The Mammoth and the Flood," discussing the problems arising out of the destruction of so-called palæolithic man and his contemporaries; of a second work entitled "The Glacial Nightmare and the Flood," in which the theories of the more extravagant glacialists are attacked, and the effects which they largely assign to ice are attributed to water. These two works, which have been favourably reviewed in the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews and elsewhere, involve an attack upon the current theories of Uniformity. Sir Henry Howorth has also edited a work on the "History of the Vicars of Rochdale," for the Chetham Society. In addition he has written more than seventy scientific memoirs, chiefly on geological, ethnographical, and historical subjects. Among these are several series of papers on the Westerly Drifting of Nomades, on the Early Ethnography of Germany, on the Spread of the Slavs, in the Journal of the Anthropological Institute; a similar series on the Northern Frontiers of China, in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society; and a series on the Early Expeditions of the Scandinavians, in the Journal of the Royal Historical Society. He has also contributed memoirs to the International Congress of Orientalists, to the Journal of the Royal Geographical Society, the Archæologia, the Geological Magazine, the Journal of the Numismatic Society, the Quarterly, Edinburgh, and other reviews; and has contributed numerous letters to the Times, Spectator, &c., on political and social subjects, &c. He is a magistrate for Lancashire; and for more than twenty years he has been actively interested in Lancashire politics. He is a trustee of Owens College and a Feoffee of Chetham's College and Library. In 1894 he was appointed President of the Archæological Institute, and in May 1899 was appointed Trustee of the British Museum in place of the late Mr. Drury Fortnum. Sir Henry Howorth was elected a Conservative member for South Salford at the general election of 1886, and again in 1893. In recognition of his works upon Eastern history, &c., he was created a K.C.I.E. in 1892, and a F.R.S. in 1893. In 1869 he married the eldest daughter of the late J. P. Brierley. Addresses: 30 Col-lingham Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

HOWSE, Henry Greenway, M.B., F.R.C.S., received his medical education at Guy's Hospital, London, and graduated M.B. at the University of London, where he was Surgical Scholar and Exhibitioner in Physiology and Biology. He is Senior Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery at Guy's, Consulting Surgeon at Evelina Hospital, Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., and Member of Council, and lately Vice-President of the Royal College of Surgeons (Eng.), and has been Examiner in Surgery and in Anatomy at the University of London. He has contributed important articles to Heath's "Dictionary of Practical Surgery," 1886, to Stevenson and Murphy's "Treatise on Hygiene," to the Med. Chir. Transactions, "Guy's Hospital Reports," the Transactions of the Pathological Society, and other leading medical journals. Address: 59 Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

HOWTH, Earl of, William Ulick Tristram St. Lawrence, K.P., was born on June 25, 1827, and succeeded his father as 4th Earl in 1874. He was educated at Eton, and then entered the army, from which he retired, as Captain of the 7th Hussars, in 1850. He acted as State Steward to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland from 1855 to 1858, and from 1859 to 1866; and he sat in the House of Commons as Liberal Member for the borough of Galway from 1868 to 1874. Addresses: 55 Jermyn Street, S.W.; and Howth Castle, co. Dublin.

HUBBARD, The Hon. Evelyn, M.P., was born in London on March 18, 1852, and is the youngest son of the 1st Baron Addington, and Maria Margaret, eldest daughter of the 8th Baron Napier, of Merchiston. He was educated at Radley, and at Christ Church College, Oxford, where he took a second class in Classical Moderations in 1872, and a second in History in 1874, and graduated B.A. in 1874; M.A. 1878. He engaged in business in Russia in 1875, and is a member of the firm of Russia merchants, Messrs. Hubbard & Co., of St. Helen's Place, London, and of Egerton, Hubbard & Co., of St. Petersburg. He is a Director of the Bank of England, a Commissioner of Public Works Loans, a D.L. for the City of London, and in 1895 was elected an Alderman of the London County Council, an office which he resigned in March 1898. As a Conservative he contested North Bucks twice, in 1889 and 1891, and Plymouth in 1895, when, in company of Sir Edward Clarke, he was beaten by only 26 votes. He was returned for Brixton West at a bye-election in January 1896. He married in 1881 Evelyn Maude, youngest daughter of Wyndham Spencer Portal, of Malshanger, Hants. Addresses: 38 Lennox Gardens, S.W.; The Rookery, Downe, Kent.

HUBBARD, N. W., Alderman of the London County Council, was born at Brixton, Surrey, on September 29, 1846, his parents being in a humble position. He received but little education in a local school, and having lost his father very early in life, he went out to work at the age of nine years. Mr. Hubbard very early began to take interest in public affairs, at first devoting his efforts chiefly to social and temperance reform. In the year 1881 he was elected a member of the Lambeth Vestry, and he has continued to be a member up to the present time. Chiefly through his untiring efforts, baths and wash-houses were established in Lambeth in 1897, and were opened on the 9th July by the Prince of Wales, Mr. Hubbard presiding at the opening ceremony. When the London County Council came into existence in 1889, Mr. Hubbard was elected a member for the Norwood Division of Lambeth, and was again re-elected in 1892. At the elections in 1895, however, he lost his seat, but the Progressive party, knowing his worth, and being desirous of retaining his services, made him an Alderman, which position he still occupies. He has been Chairman of the Fire Brigade Committee, the Highways Committee, and Vice-Chairman of several other committees, and is at the present time Chairman of the Asylums Committee. In connection with his temperance work, Mr. Hubbard is a prominent member of the Independent Order of Good Templars, and for four years occupied the position of Grand Counsellor of the Grand Lodge of England. For the last thirty years Mr. Hubbard has been a successful merchant, whilst in addition he is Chairman of the British Homes Assurance Corporation, Limited, 25 Great Winchester Street, E.C., an institution started for the purpose of enabling persons to become the owners of their own houses. Mr. Hubbard has several times been invited to contest a parliamentary seat, but up to the present has not acceded to these requests. Address: 39 Shakespeare Road, Herne Hill, S.E.

HUDLESTON, Wilfrid H., M.A., F.R.S., J.P., is the son of John Simpson, of Knaresborough, M.D., who in April 1867 assumed by royal license the surname of Hudleston, in right of his wife, Elizabeth, heiress of line of the Hudlestons of co. Cumberland. He was born at York, June 2, 1828, and educated at York and at Uppingham, and afterwards at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1850. During the period between 1855 and 1860 he travelled in Lapland, Algeria, Greece, Turkey, and other countries, as an ornithologist, and contributed articles to the earlier numbers of the Ibis. Of late years he has paid much attention to the study of geology, and has written numerous papers, reviews, and addresses, which have appeared in the Proceedings of the Geologists' Association, the Geological Magazine, the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Mineralogical Magazine, the issues of the Palaeontographical Society, and in other publications. He is a Past President of the Geologists' Association, of the Mineralogical Society, of the Malton Field Naturalists' Society, and of the Yorkshire Naturalists' Union. He was elected President (1889-90) of the Devonshire Association for the Advancement of Science, Literature, and Art, and in 1892-94 was President of the Geological Society of London, of which he had previously been Secretary. In 1897 Mr. Hudleston was awarded the Wollaston Gold Medal by the Council of the Geological Society. Address: 8 Stanhope Gardens, S.W.

HUDSON, Charles Thomas, M.A., LL.D. Cantab., F.R.S., son of John Corrie Hudson, Esq., of Guildford, was born at Brompton, London, on March 11, 1828, and was educated at The Grange, Sunderland. He entered St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1848, and was 15th Wrangler in 1852. He was President of the Royal Microscopical Society in 1888, 1889, and 1890, and elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1889. He is joint author with Mr. P. H. Gosse, F.R.S., of Hudson and Gosse's "Rotifera," and is the discoverer of Pedalion mirum, and of numerous new genera and species of Rotifera, described in papers published in the Journal of the Royal Microscopical Society, Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science, and the Annals and Magazines of Natural History, from 1869 to the present year. Dr. Hudson is specially distinguished for his knowledge of the Rotifera, concerning which he is the chief living authority. In 1886 he published, with the assistance of P. H. Gosse, F.R.S., the "Rotifera; or, Wheel Animalcules," 2 vols. He married (?) Louisa M. F., daughter of Free love Hammond, of the Inner Temple, in 1858. Address: Lamorna, Dawlish.

HUDSON, Prof. William Henry Hoar, M.A., LL.M., was born in London on Dec. 11, 1838, and is the son of W. Hudson, Esq., Architect. He was educated at King's College, London, and St. John's College, Cambridge. At the University he was third Wrangler in 1861, Fellow of St John's College from 1862 to 1875, Lecturer of the same College, 1869-82, for some time also a Lecturer at St. Catherine's College, Camb., and occupied the position of Examiner for the Mathematical Tripos in 1873. He is now Professor of Mathematics at both King's and Queen's Colleges, London; a Fellow of King's College, London; a member of the Council, and Auditor of Newnham College, Cambridge; a Member of the London Mathematical Society, and also of the Cambridge Philosophical Society. Prof. Hudson has published "Notes on Dynamics," 1883; and the revised and enlarged edition of Barnard Smith's Arithmetic for Schools, 1892. His son, Mr. R. W. H. T. Hudson, was Senior Wrangler at Cambridge in 1898. Address: 15 Altenberg Gardens, S.W.

HUGGINS, Sir William, K.C.B., F.R.S., Hon. F.R.S.E., D.C.L. Oxon., LL.D. Cantab., Edin., Dublin, and St. Andrews, Ph.D. Leyden, was born in London, Feb. 7, 1824, and received his early education at the City of London School. He afterwards continued his studies in mathematics, classics, and modern languages with the assistance of private masters. Much of his time was given to experiments in natural philosophy, and he collected apparatus by the use of which he gained considerable practical knowledge of the elements of chemistry, electricity, magnetism, and other branches of physical science. In 1852 he was elected a member of the Microscopical Society, and for some years he applied himself with much assiduity, with the aid of the microscope, to the study of animal and vegetable physiology. In 1855 Sir William Huggins erected an observatory at his residence at Upper Tulse Hill, and occupied himself for some time with observations of double stars, and with careful drawings of the planets Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn. From the first establishment of his observatory it was his desire not to continue in the beaten track of astronomical observation, but, if possible, to bring to bear upon the science of astronomy the practical knowledge which he had obtained of general physics. For his important discoveries and researches by means of the spectroscope applied to the heavenly bodies, Sir William Huggins received, in November 1866, one of the Royal Medals placed at the disposal of the Royal Society, of which he had previously, on June 1, 1865, been elected a Fellow. In 1867 the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society was awarded to Sir William Huggins and Dr. Miller for their conjoint researches. Sir William Huggins has since continued his prismatic researches by a re-examination of the nebulae with a more powerful spectroscope, by which his former results have been confirmed. He has also examined the spectra of various comets, and has found that the greater part of the light of these objects is different from solar light. Sir William Huggins has made observations of the spectra of the solar prominences, and devised the method by which the forms of these objects may be seen. From 1875 he has been engaged in obtaining photographs of the ultra-violet portions (invisible to eye observation) of the spectra of the stars. This difficult research has led to important results, and has opened quite a new field of work to the astronomer; it furnishes one of the chief data which we at present have as to the probable relative ages of the stars and of the sun. Sir William has extended this method of research to the planets, to comets, to the Great Nebula in Orion and to other nebulae; new results of importance being obtained. For these newer researches, and for that on the motion of stars in the line of sight, Sir William Huggins a second time received a medal from the Royal Society, the Rumford Medal being conferred upon him in 1880; also a Prix Valtz (1883) from the Institute of France; and the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society for the second time (1885). The research on the motions of the stars in the line of sight was indeed a new departure of the utmost importance in astronomical physics. It has since been followed up at Greenwich, and at Potsdam and Harvard, by means of photography. Besides revealing to us the orbits of many stars, and otherwise undetectable companion stars, the study of line of sight motions must certainly widely increase our knowledge of the general laws and arrangements of the stellar universe. The work of the Tulse Hill Observatory continues to be actively carried on. Some of the latest investigations (still in progress) include researches on the evolution of double stars; on the correlations of the ultra-violet spectra of stars, and those of nebulae; while in the Physical Laboratories attached to the Observatory researches have recently been made on the spectrum of Calcium which have important bearings on the problems of solar and stellar physics; and other chemical researches are in hand. An autobiographical article giving a useful account of Sir William Huggins's early work, which laid the foundations of Astrophysics in this country, was published in the Nineteenth Century for June 1897, under the title "The New Astronomy." Sir William Huggins delivered the Rede Lecture at the University of Cambridge in 1869, when he gave an account of his researches in astronomy by means of the spectroscope. In May 1870 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge, and at the Commemoration at Oxford the same year, the degree of D.C.L. On the occasion of the meeting of the British Association at Edinburgh in 1871, he was created honorary LL.D. of that university. A large duplex telescope by Messrs. Grubb, of Dublin, consisting of an achromatic of fifteen inches, and of a reflector of eighteen inches, constructed at the expense of the Royal Society, was placed in 1871 in Sir William Huggins's hands, and fixed in the observatory erected by him at Upper Tulse Hill. In July 1872 he was elected a Foreign Member of the ancient University, Dei Lincei, in Rome. In the October of the same year the Academy of Sciences of Paris awarded the Lalande Prize for Astronomy to Sir William Huggins, as an acknowledgment of his researches in the physical constitution of the stars, planets, comets, and nebulae. The late Emperor of Brazil, who has twice paid long visits to Sir William Huggins's observatory, honoured him with the distinction of Commander of the Order of the Rose in March 1873. About the same time he was elected a Foreign Member of the Royal Society of Denmark, and also of the Philosophical Society of Lund. In January 1874 he received the honour of being elected a Corresponding Member of the Academy of Sciences of Paris. At the tercentenary commemoration of the University of Leyden, in 1875, Sir William Huggins received the honorary degree of Doctor of Physics and Mathematics. In 1877 he was elected a Corresponding Member of the Royal Society of Göttingen, and a member of the Royal Society of Bohemia. In 1886 he received the degree of LL.D., honoris causa, from Trinity College, Dublin; in 1888 the Prix Janssen from the Institute of France; and in 1897 the Wilde Medal from the Lit. and Phil. Society of Manchester. He is also an Hon. Fellow of the Royal Society of New South Wales; an Hon. Foreign Member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Boston; and a Fellow of various other learned Societies at home and abroad. Sir William Huggins was President of the Royal Astronomical Society from 1876 to 1878; and President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1891-92. In June 1897, on the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee, he was created a K.C.B. (Civil Division) in recognition of his great services to astronomical science. He married, in 1875, Margaret, daughter of John Murray, Dublin. Addresses: 90 Upper Tulse Hill, S.W.; and Athenæum.

HUGHES, Professor David Edward, F.R.S., was born in London on May 16, 1831; his parents, however, emigrated to the United States. He was, in 1850 (on account of his great musical talents), appointed Professor of Music at the College of Bardstown in Kentucky, where he had received his education. His equal talents for physical sciences and mechanics later on procured him the appointment to the Chair of Natural Philosophy at the same College. His first great invention was that of the printing telegraph which bears his name. In 1854 Professor Hughes went to Louisville to superintend the making of his first instrument, but the patent for it was not taken out in the United States until 1855. In that year the invention became a practical success, and no sooner was this the case than Professor Hughes received a telegram from the editors of the American Associated Press summoning him to New York. The American Telegraph Company was then in possession of the Morse instrument, and levied rates for transmission which were felt to be excessive. The Hughes typewriter was therefore taken up in opposition to the Morse. A company was formed, and the lines of several small companies were leased. In 1857 these smaller companies united to form one large corporation—the present Western Union Telegraph Company. In that year Professor Hughes came to England in order to effect its introduction here, but the English authorities metaphorically threw cold water on his invention, and he could not, at that time, persuade the telegraph companies here even to try it; so, after three years' fruitless efforts, he went to France, where the French Imperial Government at once put the instrument in practical use as an experiment between Lyons and Paris. At the end of that trial a provisional contract was made with Professor Hughes for the right to the use of the instrument for all the French lines; stipulating that the experimental trials should be continued and extended between Marseilles, Lyons, Paris, and Bordeaux for twelve months, during which a committee of the highest scientific experts should watch and report upon the results obtained. The report of this committee being highly favourable, the French Government, in 1861, adopted the Hughes instrument for all their important lines. The Emperor Napoleon III. took great interest in the invention, and often sent for Professor Hughes in order to consult him privately upon several of his Majesty's own electrical inventions. Professor Hughes was nominated, in 1862, Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur, and made a member of the Telegraph Commission de Perfectionnements. In the latter capacity he undertook, in conjunction with Professor Guillemin, at the request of the Government, a series of experiments upon the comparative value of the lightning protectors then in use. These experiments were made at the laboratory of the Ecole de St. Cyr, and formed the subject of memoirs published in the Comptes rendus of the Academy of Science. At the end of the year 1862, the Italian Government invited Professor Hughes to visit Italy, and instruct their officers in the use of his instrument. This was done, and the instrument was tried probationally for six months between Florence, Genoa, and Turin, at the end of which time the Hughes system was adopted for all their important lines. In 1863 the United Kingdom Telegraph Company of England adopted the Hughes instrument for their lines. In 1864, Professor Hughes was invited by the Russian Government to visit St. Petersburg, where he remained nine months, during which he had the honour of being a guest of the Emperor in the Summer Palace of Czarskoezelo, where he was requested to explain his invention, and also to give a lecture on electricity to the Czar and his court. His instrument was adopted for all long Russian telegraph lines, and he was made a Knight of the Order of St. Anne. Between 1864 and 1876 Professor Hughes was called successively to Germany, Austria, Turkey, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, and Spain, where his telegraph system met with the same thorough adoption. In 1878 Professor Hughes announced through a paper to the Royal Society his discovery of the microphone. This instrument not only transmits speech, but magnifies the smallest sound, so that it is easy to render audible the faintest sound, such as the walk of a fly. The microphone is now universally employed as a transmitter to the telephone. In 1879 he presented to the Royal Society his invention of the Induction Balance, now well known to the scientific world. In 1880 Professor Hughes was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; and he has since read numerous papers upon electricity and magnetism before that Society, for which, together with his discovery of the microphone and invention of the Induction Balance, the Royal Society, in 1885, bestowed upon him their Royal Gold Medal, and in 1897 the Prince of Wales, as Chairman of the Society of Arts, presented to him, in the name of the Society, and in presence of the Council at Marlborough House, their Gold Albert Medal, "in recognition of the services he has rendered to arts, manufactures, and commerce by his numerous inventions in electricity and magnetism, especially the Printing Telegraph and the Microphone." The Post Office in England now makes use of the Hughes system for all its Continental messages, and it is in active service in all the large cities of the Continent. In 1881 Professor Hughes represented Great Britain as one of the Commissioners at the Paris Electrical Exhibition; and in 1886 he was elected President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. He has received numerous orders of knighthood, medals, and diplomas from the different countries which have appreciated his works. Professor Hughes is Commander of the Légion d'Honneur (France); Charles III. (Spain); Iron Crown (Austria); Medjidieh (Turkey); and Knight of St. Anne (Russia); St. Maurice and St. Lazarus (Italy); St. Michael's (Bavaria); Grand Officer of the Royal Order of Takovo (Serbia); Officer of the Royal Order of Leopold (Belgium); and he received the special Gold Grand Prix (one of ten only), Paris Exhibition, 1867, as well as the Grand Diplôme d'Honneur, Paris Electrical Exhibition, 1881; besides numerous other medals and titles of less importance. Address: 40 Langham Street, Portland Place, W.

HUGHES, Colonel Edwin, M.P., L.C.C., V.D., was born at Droitwich, Worcestershire, May 27, 1832, and educated at the Grammar School, Birmingham. In 1862 he was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Plumstead Artillery Volunteers, and became a prize-winner at many county and Wimbledon competitions. In 1865, Mr. Hughes was appointed chief county Conservative agent, and was successful in gaining enough on one revision to win six seats, which have ever since been kept by the Conservatives. In 1874 he was transferred to the City of London Conservative Association, and increased the Conservative majority by thousands, so that in 1880 they polled two to one, and in 1885 four to one. After twenty-five years' exertions he procured the return in 1880 of two Conservative members for Greenwich. He took an active part in the agitation against the School Board in 1885, and on the triumph of the "economical" party he was elected to the post previously held by the Hon. Lyulph Stanley. In 1885 he was elected first member for Woolwich by a large Conservative majority; and again in 1886 he was returned by a still larger majority. In 1887, retiring from the Volunteers, he became Honorary Colonel of the Artillery Brigade he had raised and commanded for twenty-eight years. He is an authority on Metropolitan Local Government, and in 1889 he was elected Member of the London County Council, where he has continuously represented Woolwich from the first. In 1892 he was re-elected to Parliament by a majority of 1892 over Mr. Ben Jones, whom he again beat by a very large majority in 1895. He has laboured unceasingly in the cause of the Government workmen as to superannuation, and of the sailors as to Greenwich Hospital pensions, and obtained two select Committees of the House of Commons in favour of his several propositions, gaining enormous advantages to others by his exertions, in pensions and increased wages of the capital value of over £5,000,000. Thus it comes about that in dockyard towns and in Woolwich Arsenal he is gratefully known as the "Pensioner's Champion." Colonel Hughes has given concurrent municipal service on various London Boards totalling to one hundred and seventeen years. His continuous political service as agent and member amounts to fifty-one years, his services, municipal and parliamentary together, probably exceeding that of any other public man. He is married to Mary Adele Elliott. Address: Oaklands, Plumstead Common.

HUGHES, Rev. Hugh Price, M.A., London, a celebrated Wesleyan preacher, was born in 1847, at Carmarthen, South Wales, and is the son of the late John Hughes, Esq., surgeon, coroner, senior magistrate, chairman of School Board, &c., in Carmarthen, who died in 1897. He was educated privately, and afterwards attended lectures at University College, London, and at the Theological College of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, at Richmond, Surrey, where Dr. Moulton was his tutor. His first appointment was to Dover in 1869. He remained there, and at every other place to which he was appointed, for the three years permitted by the itinerancy law of his Church. His successive appointments were, Dover, Brighton, Stoke Newington, London; Mostyn Road, London; Oxford, and Brixton Hill. At the conclusion of his three years at Brixton Hill he was appointed to his present position as superintendent of the West London Mission, which conducts services in St. James's Hall, Prince's Hall, Wardour Hall, and Cleveland Hall, and has a centre of social philanthropy in Lincoln House, 60 Greek Street, Soho Square; a residence for young men at Wiclif House, Fitzroy Square; and a Sisterhood in Katherine House, Montague Street, Russell Square. During 1888 he joined in the Education controversy which arose in relation to the Majority Report of the Commission. He published, in 1889, "Social Christianity," now in its third edition; and "The Philanthropy of God," in 1890. Other works from his pen are "Ethical Christianity," "Essential Christianity," and "The Atheist Shoemaker." In 1892 he came prominently forward at the "Review of the Churches" Conference at Grindelwald, when his remarks on a possible reconciliation between English Dissenters and the Church of England led to much discussion. He was present also at the Conferences at Lucerne in 1893. He is editor of the Methodist Times, the most influential Methodist newspaper; is an active total abstainer, and Vice-President of the United Kingdom Alliance. He took a prominent part in the Social Purity movement; is a permanent member of the Methodist Conference; and a leader also of "The Forward Movement," which aims at the promotion of Social as well as Individual Salvation. He was President of the Wesleyan Conference, 1898-99. Address: Methodist Times Office, 125 Fleet Street, E.C.

HUGHES, Professor Thomas M'Kenny, F.R.S., F.S.A., is a native of the Principality, and was appointed Woodwardian Professor of Geology at the University of Cambridge in 1873. In connection with the completion of his 25th year of office he was entertained at a public dinner, in London, on Feb. 26, 1898, when he was presented with an illuminated address, in which he was congratulated on the notable success of the Cambridge School of Geology. The address was presented in the name of former students. Professor M'Kenny Hughes has contributed many reports and papers on Geology to the British Association Reports and to geological papers, &c. Address: Cambridge.

HULL, Bishop of. See BLUNT, THE RIGHT REV. R. F. L.

HULL, Professor Edward, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., late Director of the Geological Survey of Ireland, and Professor of Geology in the Royal College of Science, Dublin, was born at Antrim, in Ireland, on May 21, 1829; his father, the late Rev. J. D. Hull, Vicar of Wickhambrook, in Suffolk, being then the curate of the parish. He comes of a military family, distinguished for bravery in the days of the Peninsular war. Professor Hull was educated at Edgeworthstown School, and graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1850, obtaining in the same year the Diploma of Civil Engineering in the school attached to Dublin University. It was while attending the lectures of Professor Oldham that he acquired his first knowledge of geology. On the recommendation of his instructor, he was appointed, in 1850, to the staff of the Geological Survey of Great Britain, under the general direction of Sir H. T. de la Bèche, Professor (now Sir Andrew C.) Ramsay, being Local Director; and he served the first years of his official life in company with the late Professor Jukes (whom he afterwards succeeded) and Dr. Selwyn, the Director of the Geological Survey of Canada. During the period of about twenty years in which Mr. Hull was engaged on the survey of Great Britain, he geologically mapped a large portion of the central counties of England, including the coal-fields of Lancashire, Cheshire, and Leicestershire. In 1867 he was appointed District-Surveyor to the Survey of Scotland; and in 1869 Director of the Geological Survey of Ireland (in succession to Professor J. B. Jukes), and Professor of Geology to the Royal College of Science, Dublin. Under his directorate the northern half of Ireland has been geologically surveyed, and a large portion of the southern half revised and brought into harmony with the British formations. Mr. Hull was elected Fellow of the Geological Society of London in 1855, and of the Royal Society in 1867. During the inquiries made by the Royal Commission, under the presidency of the Duke of Argyll, Prof. Hull gave much information regarding the resources of the British and Irish coal-fields, which are recorded in the Report of the Commission issued in 1871. The Report on the Irish coal-fields was drawn up by himself. In 1873 Prof. Hull was elected President of the Royal Geological Society of Ireland, and in 1874 he was appointed Examiner in Geology to the University of London in conjunction with Prof. T. R. Jones, F.R.S., which appointment he held for three years. At the meeting of the British Association in Belfast, in 1874, he was President of the Geological Section (C), and read an address on the volcanic phenomena of the North of Ireland. In 1879 he received the honorary degree of LL.D from the University of Glasgow on the occasion of the installation of the late Duke of Buccleuch as Chancellor. One of the most important events in Prof. Hull's life was his visit to Arabia Petraea and Palestine towards the close of 1883. On the recommendation of Colonel (now Major-General) Sir Charles Wilson, R.E., he was nominated by the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Society to take the command of an expedition organised for making a geological and topographical survey of the Arabah Valley and adjoining territories between the Sinaitic Peninsula on the south and Southern Palestine on the north. In that expedition he was accompanied by Colonel Kitchener, R.E. (now the famous Sirdar of the Egyptian Army), Mr. H. C. Hart, his son Dr. E. G. Hull, and several assistants; and in November of the above-named year (1883), the party, with an escort of twenty-nine camels and their drivers, left Suez, and traversed the Sinaitic Peninsula, the Arabah Valley from Akabah to the Dead Sea, visiting Mount Hor and Petra, and thence across Southern Palestine to Gaza by Beersheba; the period occupied being about three months. By this expedition the surveys of Sinai and Palestine were connected, and the geological phenomena mapped and described. Collections of plants and animals were made by Mr. Hart, and meteorological observations were carried out daily by Mr. Reginald Laurence. The narrative of the expedition was drawn up and published by the Palestine Exploration Committee, under the title of "Mount Seir, Sinai, and Southern Palestine"; and the geological details are contained in the memoir, "On the Physical Geography and Geology of Arabia Petraea, &c.," 1886. In 1893 Prof. Hull visited Egypt and the Nile Valley as far as the First Cataract, for the purpose of examining the evidence regarding the former magnitude of that river as compared with that of the present day; and arrived at the conclusion that in the Pleistocene (or Glacial) epoch its volume was vastly greater than at present. The evidence for this conclusion was laid before the Geological Society of London. At the annual meeting of the Geological Society of London, in 1890, the Murchison Medal was presented to Prof. Hull in consideration of his services to Geology. Prof. Hull is the author of several works and scientific memoirs, of which the following are the more important: "The Coal-Fields of Great Britain: their History, Structure, and Resources," 1865, 4th edit., 1881; "A Treatise on the Building and Ornamental Stones of Great Britain and Foreign Countries," 1872; "Contributions to the Physical History of the British Isles," 1882; "Sketch of Geological History," 1887; "A Text-Book of Physiography or Physical Geography," 1888; "The Physical Geology and Geography of Ireland," 1878; "Mount Seir, Sinai, and Southern Palestine," 1885; "Memoir on the Physical Geology and Geography of Arabia Petræa, Palestine, and adjoining Districts," 1886; "Our Coal Resources at the Close of the Nineteenth Century," 1897; also several memoirs of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, and papers in the Transactions of learned and scientific societies. Prof. Hull is an Honorary Member of the Geological Societies of Belgium, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Manchester; and of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, and of the Academy of Science, Philadelphia. On the completion of the Geological Survey of Ireland in 1890, Prof. Hull retired from the public service. Address: 20 Arundel Gardens, W.

HUMBERT I., Rénier-Charles-Emmanuel-Jean-Marie-Ferdinand-Eugène, King of Italy, the eldest son of the late King Victor Emmanuel II., and of Adélaïde, Archduchess of Austria, was born at Turin, March 14, 1844. At an early age he obtained an insight into political and military life under the guidance of his father, whom he attended during the war of Italian Independence, although he was then too young to take an active part in the struggle. The youthful heir to the throne was more closely connected with the movement for the unification of Italy, which followed the events of 1859. In particular he took part in the work of reorganising the ancient kingdom of the Two Sicilies; and in July 1862 he visited Naples and Palermo, where he shared the popularity of Garibaldi. When the war between Prussia and Austria was imminent, Prince Humbert was despatched to Paris to ascertain the sentiments of the French Government in reference to the alliance between Italy and Prussia. On the outbreak of hostilities he hastened to take the field; obtained the command of a division of General Cialdini's army with the title of Lieutenant-General; and was present at the disastrous battle of Custoza (June 23, 1866), where it is said he performed prodigies of valour. On April 22, 1868, he married, at Turin, his cousin, the Princess Marguerite Marie Thérèse Jeanne of Savoy, daughter of the late Duke Ferdinand of Genoa, brother of King Victor Emmanuel. The Queen is a most accomplished lady, an artist, and a mountaineer of courage and endurance. A son was born at Naples, Nov. 11, 1869, who received the names of Victor Emmanuel Ferdinand Mary Januarius, and the title of Prince of Naples.

After the occupation of Rome by the Italian troops in 1870, Prince Humbert and the Princess Marguerite took up their residence in the Eternal City. He succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, Jan. 9, 1878. As he was entering Naples, Nov. 17, 1878, a man named Giovanni Passanante approached the Royal carriage and attempted with a poniard to assassinate his Majesty. The King escaped with a slight scratch, but Signor Cairoli, the Prime Minister, who was with him, was wounded rather badly in the thigh. Passanante was condemned to death, but the punishment was commuted by the King to penal servitude for life. King Humbert received the Order of the Garter by the hands of the Duke of Abercorn at the Quirinal, March 2, 1878. He is a Chevalier of the Order of the Black Eagle; and of the Austrian Order of the Golden Fleece, &c. King Humbert and Queen Marguerite celebrated their silver wedding at Rome in April 1893. His son, the Crown Prince Victor Emmanuel, Prince of Naples, was married in Oct. 1896 to the Princess Helen of Montenegro. A second attempt upon the King's life in 1897 happily failed. There had been rumours as to the unpopularity of the monarchy, and this event was almost regarded as a confirmation of such reports. As the King was driving out on April 22 to the Capannelle Racecourse, a workman struck at him with a dagger. The blow was averted, the man was seized, and was eventually sent to penal servitude for life.

HUMPHREY, The Rev. William, S.J., son of John Humphrey, Esq., J.P., of Pitmedden, Aberdeenshire, was born at Aberdeen, July 31, 1839. He was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, and is a member of the General Council of the University of Aberdeen. He studied law at the University of Edinburgh; was ordained a clergyman of the Church of England by Dr. Forbes, Bishop of Brechin, and held the living of St. Mary Magdalene, Dundee. He became a Roman Catholic in March 1868, and went to Rome, where he made his theological studies at the Collegio Romano. He was ordained priest by Cardinal Manning in 1871, and served on the mission in London till 1874, when he entered the Society of Jesus. Father Humphrey is the author of "The Divine Teacher," 7th edit.; "Mary Magnifying God," 7th edit.; "The Written Word"; "Other Gospels"; "Mr. FitzJames Stephen and Cardinal Bellarmine"; "The Religious State"; "The Bible and Belief"; "Christian Marriage"; "The One Mediator," 2nd edit.; "The Vicar of Christ"; "Elements of Religious Life"; "Conscience and Law, or Principles of Human Conduct"; "Recollections of Scottish Episcopalianism"; "His Divine Majesty; or, The Living God"; and has contributed to the "Catholic Academia" and the Month. Address: 114 Mount Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

HUMPHRY, Mrs. C. E. ("Madge" in Truth), author and journalist, was born in Londonderry, and is a daughter of the late Rev. James Graham, Derry Cathedral, and grand-daughter of the late Rev. John Graham, Rector of Tamlaght-ard, author of "The Siege of Derry," "Annals of Popery," &c. She was educated in Dublin. As a journalist she has contributed "Girls' Gossip" by "Madge" to Truth since the origination of those papers. She has also contributed to the Daily News since 1884. Publications: "Cookery Up-to-Date," and "Manners for Men," 1897; "Manners for Women," 1898; and "A Word to Women." Address: 42 Blomfield Road, Maida Hill, W.

HUNGARY and BOHEMIA, King of. See FRANCIS JOSEPH I.

HUNTER, Major-General Sir Archibald, K.C.B., D.S.O., Commander 1st Cl. Dist., Ind., son of Archibald Hunter, Esq., merchant, and Mary Jane, daughter of Major Duncan Graham, of Glenly, Perthshire, was born Sept. 6, 1856. He was educated at Glasgow Academy and at Sandhurst, entering the Army as Lieutenant of the Royal Lancashire Regiment in June 1874. For two years he served as Adjutant to his regiment, and was promoted Captain in August 1882. Major in June 1885, and Colonel in January 1894. He served in the Nile Expedition, was mentioned in despatches and was awarded the Medjidieh of the third class and the Osmanieh of the fourth class. In 1885 he was employed with the Egyptian Frontier Force, and was present at the action of Giniss, where he was severely wounded, again obtaining mention in despatches and the D.S.O. During 1889 he served on the Soudan Frontier in command of a Brigade of the Egyptian Army and took part in the engagements at Arguin and Toski. He was promoted to Lieut.-Colonel. In August of 1892 Colonel Hunter was appointed Governor of the Red Sea Littoral and Commandant at Suakin, and afterwards Commander of the Egyptian Frontier Field Force. In 1896 he served with the Dongola Expeditionary Force under Sir Herbert Kitchener in command of the Infantry Brigade, being present at the engagement at Firket and the operations at Hafir. He was mentioned in despatches, and specially promoted to Major-General for distinguished service in the field. In March of 1898 General Hunter made a reconnaissance of the enemy's position at Atbara, and shortly after the brilliant action was fought in which 3000 dervishes were slain and 4000 taken prisoners. General Hunter was second in command on that occasion. He was appointed Governor of Omdurman on the settlement of affairs after the battle. Address: Highthorn, West Kilbride, Ayrshire.

HUNTER, Colin, A.R.A., was born in Glasgow, July 16, 1841, and is the son of John Hunter, bookseller and postmaster, of Helensburgh. He was educated in that town, and began painting at twenty years of age, after four years' clerkship. His education as a painter was derived from nature. His principal pictures are "Trawlers Waiting for Darkness," exhibited in the Royal Academy, 1873; "Salmon Stake Nets" (R.A.), 1874, now in the Sydney Government collection; "Give Way" (R.A.), 1875; "Digging Bait" (R.A.), 1876; "Their Only Harvest" (R.A.), 1878, now the property of the Chantry Bequest Trustees; "Silver of the Sea" (R.A.), 1879; "Mussel Gatherers," and "In the Gloaming" (R.A.), 1880; "The Island Harvest" (Fine Art Society's Rooms), 1881; "Waiting for the Homeward Bound" (R.A.), 1882, now in the Adelaide collection; "A Pebbled Shore" and "Lobster Fishers" (R.A.), 1883; "Herring Market at Sea" (R.A.), 1884, now in Manchester Corporation collection; "The Rapids of Niagara" (R.A.), 1885; "The Woman's Part" (R.A.), 1886; "Their Share of the Toil" (R.A.), 1887; "Fishers of the North Sea" (R.A.), 1888; "Baiters" (R.A.), 1889; "The Hills of Morven" (R.A.), 1890; and, more recently, "Ireland" and "Lobster Fishers," 1893; and "The Gleanings of the Herring Harvest," and "Wintry Weather," 1894. Since 1895 he has exhibited some eighteen pictures of wild life at the Royal Academy's Exhibition. Mr. Hunter was elected an associate of the Royal Academy in January 1884, and is also a Member of the Royal Scottish Water-Colour Society. He married, in 1873, Isabel, daughter of John H. Young, of Glasgow. Address: 14 Melbury Road, Kensington, W.

HUNTER, Sir William Guyer, K.C.M.G., M.D., F.R.C.P., eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Hunter, of Catterick, Yorkshire, was born in 1831, and educated at King's College, London, at Aberdeen University, and at various hospitals. He entered the Indian Medical Service, Bombay Presidency, in 1850, and served through the Burmese War and the Indian Mutiny. In 1876 he was appointed Principal of the Grant Medical College; and in 1879 Vice-Chancellor of the University of Bombay. He retired in 1880, and in 1883 went out to Egypt to serve on the Cholera Commission. For his services on this occasion he was made a K.C.M.G. In 1885 he entered Parliament as Conservative member for Central Hackney, and was again returned for the same constituency in 1886, retaining the seat until 1892. He married (2), in 1871, a daughter of S. Stainburn. Address: 21 Norfolk Crescent, W.

HUNTER, Sir William Wilson, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., M.A. Oxford, Hon. LL.D. Cambridge and Glasgow, son of the late A. Galloway Hunter, Esq., of Denholm, was born July 15, 1840, and educated at the universities of Glasgow, Paris, and Bonn. He headed the list of Indian civilians appointed in 1862; and after distinguishing himself in Calcutta by proficiency in Sanskrit and the modern vernaculars in India, passed through the appointments of a junior civil servant in the Bengal districts. On the outbreak of the Orissa Famine of 1866, he was appointed Inspector of Public Instruction in the province of Orissa and the south-western division of Bengal. At the end of the dearth he received the thanks of the Government, but was invalided to England. When on sick leave Sir William Hunter wrote "The Annals of Rural Bengal," which in the next ten years passed through five editions; and a "Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia." On his return to Bengal, he received the gazetted acknowledgments of the Governor-General and the Secretary of State; together with a present of Rs. 20,000 of public money, also notified in the Government Gazette, for his services. In 1869 he was attached on special duty to the Secretariat of the Government of Bengal; in 1870 to that of the Supreme Government of India, acting for a time as Under-Secretary; in 1871 he was appointed Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India. As the head of this Department he organised, and carried out from beginning to end, the Statistical Survey of India. The first census of India was taken in 1872. In 1876 he issued the "Statistical Account of Bengal" in twenty volumes. For the other eleven provinces of India a statistical survey was executed under his direction in each district of an area "equal to all Europe less Russia." Sir William Hunter again received the gazetted thanks of the Government. His labours had done much to throw light on the causes and management of famines, and to bring them within administrative control. In 1878 he was appointed in the first list of members of the new Order of the Indian Empire. By 1880 the Statistical Survey of India had been brought to completion under his direction, and its records had been made available to the public in 128 printed volumes. In 1881 he issued a condensation of this vast work, alphabetically arranged, in the "Imperial Gazetteer of India," in nine volumes. In the same year he was appointed a Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, and in 1882 President of the Education Commission in India. As a Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, Sir William Hunter took an active part in the important series of measures which issued from the Indian Legislature between 1881 and 1887, especially those affecting the Land Law, and the Tenancy Rights of Cultivators. As President of the Indian Education Commission he was largely instrumental in consolidating public instruction in India on its present basis. The results of these labours have been briefly but accurately described as the development of the Department of Public Instruction in India into a truly national system of education for that country. For these services he again received the gazetted thanks of the Government, and was appointed a Companion of the Star of India. In 1884 Sir William Hunter was deputed to England, by the Governor-General in Council, to give evidence before the Parliamentary Committee upon the economic aspects of Indian railway development. In 1886, in addition to his duty in the Viceroy's Legislative Council, Lord Dufferin appointed him to the Finance Commission, to conduct a searching inquiry into Indian expenditure, and to revise the financial relations of the Provincial Governments to the Supreme Government of India. Among the honorary offices discharged by Sir William Hunter during the course of his Indian career was that of the Vice-Chancellorship of the University of Calcutta. In 1887 he was appointed a Knight Commander of the Star of India, and having completed his twenty-five years of service, he retired from that country. On his return to England he brought out the expanded edition of the "Imperial Gazetteer of India" in fourteen volumes. Since then he has been a consistent and powerful advocate of moderate reform in India. As an examiner and occasional lecturer in the Honours School of Oriental Studies, and as a member of the Faculty of Arts, he has taken an active part in the university life of Oxford. Under his impulse the University Press undertook the series of short histories and biographies now well known as "The Rulers of India." Of this series Sir William Hunter was the projector and editor, and of its twenty-five volumes three are from his hand. Sir William Hunter has received honorary degrees from the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Glasgow; and is an honorary member of many learned societies in Europe and Asia. He is an active magistrate and J.P. for Berkshire and Oxfordshire, and a Deputy-Lieutenant of the former county. His best-known books are the "Annals of Rural Bengal," "Orissa, or an Indian Province under Native and British Rule," "The Indian Mussulmans," "A System of Famine Warnings," "A Life of Lord Mayo," 2 vols.; a shorter life of the same in one volume, "The Life and Work of the Marquess of Dalhousie," "A Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia," "The Imperial Gazetteer of India," 14 vols.; "The Indian Empire, its History, People, and Products," which condenses into one volume, for popular use, the main results of the Statistical Survey of India. His "Brief History of the Indian Peoples" has been translated into five languages, and in its English editions has reached eighty-five thousand copies. Among his more recent works are "The Old Missionary," "The Thackerays in India," and "A Life of Brian Hodgson." In March 1899, he published vol. i. of an important "History of British India." Sir William Hunter married the daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Murray, M.A., LL.D., J.P., the author of "The Literary History of Galloway," and other antiquarian works. Addresses: Oaken Holt, Cumnor, Berkshire; 128 Piccadilly; and Athenæum.

HUNT-GRUBBE, Admiral Sir Walter James, K.C.B., son of the late Rev. James Hunt-Grubbe, was born in 1833, and entered the navy in 1844. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1854, serving in H.M.S. Scourge on the West Coast of Africa, and took part in the bombardment of the towns of Pessie and Labadie, and was subsequently landed for the instruction of the Gold Coast Artillery. In 1855 he was appointed to command H.M.S. Teazer for the suppression of the slave-trade on the West Coast of Africa, and a few years afterwards commanded H.M.S. Jaseur on the same station for a similar purpose. As Senior Lieutenant of H.M.S. Arrogant he took part in the operations on the river Gambia in 1861, and also the capture of the stockaded town of Saba. He was mentioned in despatches and promoted to Commander. In 1866 he was appointed in charge of the Island of Ascension. During the second phase of the Ashanti War of 1874 he commanded the Naval Brigade, taking part in all the fighting and the capture of Kumassi. He was severely wounded, mentioned in despatches, and promoted to C.B. As Captain of H.M.S. Sultan he was present at the bombardment of Alexandria, and being the Senior Captain of the Mediterranean Fleet at that time, he was appointed to command the offshore squadron in the attack on the forts, and for his services on that occasion he received a K.C.B. Sir Walter also had charge of the transports in the feint on Aboukir, and was constantly employed in watching the enemy's coasts until the close of the campaign. He was promoted Rear-Admiral in 1884, and the following year was appointed Commander-in-Chief on the Cape and West Africa station. For three years he was Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard, and also Umpire in the Naval Manœuvres of 1893 and 1894. He attained the rank of full Admiral in 1895, and was appointed President of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, retiring from the active list in 1897. Admiral Sir Walter Hunt Grubbe has been an Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and is a J.P. for Hampshire. He married, in 1867, Mary Anne, daughter of William Codrington, Esq., of Wroughton, Wilts. Address: Royal Naval College, Greenwich.

HUNTINGTON, Daniel, LL.D., American artist, was born at New York, Oct. 14, 1816. He was prepared for College by Rev. Horace Bushnell at New Haven, and entered Hamilton College in 1832; and in 1835-36 was a pupil of S. F. B. Morse in the art department of the New York University. In 1836 he exhibited "The Toper Asleep," a "Bar-room Politician," and several landscapes. In 1839 he studied in Florence and Rome, where he painted "The Sacred Lesson" and "Christian Prisoners"; and, on his return to America, painted "Mercy's Dream" and "Christiana and her Children." In 1844 he again went to Rome, where he painted the "Roman Penitents," "Italy," "The Communion of the Sick," and several landscapes. In 1851 he visited England, where he painted the portraits of several distinguished personages, among them Sir Charles Eastlake (then President of the Royal Academy) and the Earl of Carlisle, now in the collection of the Historical Society. Among his later works, besides numerous portraits, are "Lady Jane Grey and Feckenham in the Tower," "Henry VIII. and Queen Catherine Parr," "Queen Mary Signing the Death-Warrant of Lady Jane Grey," "The Good Samaritan," "The Sketcher," "Ichabod Crane and Katrina van Tassel," "The Counterfeit Note," another "Mercy's Dream," "The Republican Court," a number of Shakespearian subjects, "Chocurna Peak," "Philosophy and Christian Art," "Sowing the Word," and "Titian and Charles V." In 1882 he visited Spain, and painted "The Goldsmith's Daughter," "The Doubtful Letter," as well as portraits. Since his return he has painted "A Burgomaster of New Amsterdam," and many portraits of distinguished people. He was one of the founders of the Century Club, of which he was President until 1895; and he is a Vice-President of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He was President of the National Academy of Design, New York, from 1862 to 1891, with the exception of a few years.

HUNTINGTON, The Right Rev. Frederick Dan, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop of Central New York, was born at Hadley, Mass., May 28, 1819. He was graduated from Amherst College in 1839, studied divinity at Cambridge, and in 1842 became pastor of a Unitarian church in Boston. In 1855 he was elected preacher to Harvard University, and Plummer Professor of Christian Morals. In 1860 he withdrew from the Unitarian denomination, and was ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church. He organised a new parish, which he named Emmanuel Church. In 1861 he was one of the founders of the Church Monthly. In 1869 he was consecrated Bishop of Central New York, taking Syracuse for his Cathedral City. Among his publications are: "Sermons for the People," 1856; "Lessons on the Parables," 1856; "Christian Believing and Living," 1860; "Lectures on Human Society, as illustrating the Power, Wisdom, and Goodness of God" (Lowell Lectures), 1860; "Elim, or Hymns of Holy Refreshment," 1865; "Lessons for the Instruction of Children in the Divine Life," 1868; "Helps to a Holy Lent," 1872; "Steps to a Living Faith," 1873; "New Helps to a Holy Lent," 1876; "Personal Christian Life in the Ministry," 1887; "Forty Days with the Master," 1891; a Pamphlet on "Strikes," 1891; "The Golden Rule applied to Business and Social Life," 1892; besides other pamphlets, sermons, charges, and contributions to various periodicals. In 1883, by appointment, he wrote the Pastoral Letter of the House of Bishops.

HUNTLY, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Charles Gordon, Bart., LL.D., J.P., was born at Orton-Longueville, Peterborough, on March 5, 1847, and succeeded his father as 11th Marquis in 1863. He is the premier Marquis of Scotland, acted as Lord-in-Waiting from 1870 to 1873, and was Captain of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms in 1881. Lord Huntly filled the position of Lord Rector of Aberdeen University in 1890, 1893, and again in 1896. He was married, in 1869, to Amy, daughter of Sir William Cunliffe-Brooks, Bart., of Barlow Hall, Lancashire. Address: Orton-Longueville, Peterborough, &c.

HURLBATT, Miss Ethel, Principal of Bedford College, London, is a native of Kent, and was educated at private schools until 1884. In 1888 she entered Somerville College, Oxford, as an Exhibitioner, and took a second class in the Final Honour School of Modern History in 1891. She remained in College until June 1892, for further historical work, holding a Special Scholarship given by the Clothworkers' Company. In 1892 she was appointed Principal of Aberdare Hall, the residence for women students of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire, Cardiff. During the six years of her tenure of this office the number of students increased from 17 to 39, and new and permanent buildings were completed and occupied in January 1895. Miss Hurlbatt acted as Hon. Sec. for South Wales of the Association for the Promotion of the Education of Girls in Wales. She also served on the Committee of the Training School of Cookery and Domestic Arts, Cardiff, and was a Governor of the Howell School, Llandaff. For several years Miss Hurlbatt was employed temporarily during the Long Vacation upon the staff of the Bodleian Library, Oxford, where she was employed in calendaring mediæval charters. In February 1898, Miss Hurlbatt was appointed Principal of Bedford College (for Women), London. There can be no doubt that this College will have increasing importance in the future. It was recognised by the Cowper Commission (London University) as one of the Colleges qualified for recognition as a "School" of the revised University of London. There are at present 180 students attending the College (37 in residence), of whom 132 are preparing for examinations of the University of London, for which the College specially fits them.

HUTCHINS, Sir Philip Perceval, K.C.S.I., was born in London, Jan. 28, 1838, and is the fifth son of William Hutchins and Isabella, daughter of Leigh Thomas, sometime President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' and Haileybury, and joined the Madras Civil Service in 1857. He was District Judge of Madura, 1872-82, and after having been called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1875, he became a Judge of the High Court of Madras in 1883, and a member of the Council in 1886. From 1888 to 1893 he was a member of the Governor-General's Council, when he joined the India Office as Secretary of the Judicial and Public Department. In June 1898 he succeeded Sir A. Arbuthnot as a member of the Council of India. He became a C.S.I. in 1888, and K.C.S.I. in 1891. Address: 72 Cromwell Road, S.W.

HUTCHINSON, John, Librarian of the Middle Temple, is the eldest son of George Hutchinson, of the Hutchinsons of Cornforth and Bishop Middleham, in the co. of Durham, whose sister Mary married the poet William Wordsworth. He was born at Ballingham, in the co. of Hereford, and was educated at home and at Chelsea, under the Rev. Derwent Coleridge, and in Paris. In 1855 he was appointed First Master of the English Form (now the School of John Lyon) in connection with Harrow School, and was subsequently Vice-Principal of Hereford Proprietary College, and Master of the Modern Department of Doncaster Grammar School. In 1879, after establishing the College at Llandrindod Wells, Radnorshire, he retired from educational work, and in the following year obtained the appointment he now holds as Keeper of the Library of the Hon. Soc. of the Middle Temple. He has been a contributor to periodical literature, and has published "Ariconia: a Poem," 1853; "Herefordshire Biographies," 1890; "Men of Kent," 1892; "Llandrindod Legends and Lyrics," 1895; "The Legend of Hereford Cathedral: a Poem," 1897; &c. Address: The Middle Temple Library, London.

HUTCHINSON, Professor Jonathan, M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.S., LL.D., Past President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, was born on July 23, 1828, at Selby, Yorkshire, and educated there. He is the second son of Jonathan Hutchinson and Elizabeth Massey. He was admitted a Fellow of the College of Surgeons in 1862; was appointed President of the Hunterian Society in 1869 and 1870; President of the Pathological Society in 1879 and 1880; of the Ophthalmological in 1883; of the Neurological in 1887; of the Medical in 1890; and of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical in 1894-96. He was Professor of Surgery and Pathology in the Royal College of Surgeons from 1877 to 1882, and was elected President of that College in 1889. Professor Hutchinson was a member of the Royal Commission appointed in 1881 to inquire into the condition of the London hospitals for smallpox and fever cases, and into the means of preventing the spread of infection. He was also a member of the Royal Commission on Vaccination. The degree of LL.D. (Hon.) was conferred upon him by Glasgow University in 1887, and by that of Cambridge in 1890. At the Tercentenary of Trinity College, Dublin, he received the honorary diploma of M.D. He holds also the Honorary Fellowship of many learned societies in connection with medicine on the Continent and America. He has taken much interest in "Educational Museums" as a means of popular education, and has arranged one at Haslemere which possesses novel features. Among his principal works may be mentioned: "Rare Diseases of the Skin," "The Pedigree of Disease," "Illustrations of Clinical Surgery," as well as his quarterly Archives of Surgery, and a short-lived experiment, the Home University. Addresses: 15 Cavendish Square, W.; and Inval, Haslemere, Surrey.

HUTCHINSON, The Hon. Sir Joseph Turner, Chief-Justice of Cyprus, was born at Braystones, Cumberland, on March 28, 1850. His father was one of the old Cumberland "Statesmen," whose forefathers had lived on the same small estate for upwards of three centuries. He was educated at St. Bees Grammar School; elected to a foundation scholarship at Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1870; took his degree there in 1873 in the first class of the Classical Tripos, and proceeded to M.A. in 1876. After leaving Cambridge he became Sixth Form Master at Dulwich College, where he, in conjunction with Arthur Gray, edited for the Pitt Press the Hercules Furens of Euripides; afterwards was Sixth Form Master at the City of London School from 1876 to 1879; and in 1879 was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple. He practised for eight years as an Equity draughtsman and conveyancer. In April 1888 he was appointed Queen's Advocate of the Gold Coast Colony; and in January 1890, on the retirement of Mr. Macleod, was appointed Chief-Justice. This post he held until 1895, when he became Chief-Justice of Grenada, in which year he was knighted. In 1897 he was appointed to his present post. Home address: Grenada, Braystones, Cumberland.

HUTCHISON, John, R.S.A., sculptor, was born at Lauriston, Edinburgh, June 1, 1832. At the age of thirteen he was apprenticed to a wood-carver in the High Street, Edinburgh, and in the evenings, during his apprenticeship, studied drawing and modelling in the Trustees' Academy and the School of Arts. In 1852 he was employed to execute the wood-carvings and other decorations in relief for the Picture Gallery then in course of erection at Hospitalfield, Arbroath, by Patrick Allan

Fraser, H.R.S.A. Returning to Edinburgh, he studied in the Antique and Life School of the Trustees' Academy, then under the able direction of Robert Scott Lauder, R.S.A. He first exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy in 1856. In 1859 he exhibited there a colossal bust of "Harald Hardrada, the Norse Sea-King," which was purchased by the Hon. Mrs. Norton for Lord Dufferin; it is now at Clondeboys, Ireland. In 1860 he visited Rome and studied with the late Alfred Gately, an able and enthusiastic sculptor. Returning to Edinburgh with several works in marble, executed at Rome, he exhibited in the 1862 Exhibition a bust in marble of a Roman matron. Again visiting Italy in 1863, he executed several works in marble, "Pasquicia," a Roman girl, now in the National Gallery, Edinburgh; and a life-size statue in marble of a "Roman Dancing-Girl Resting." While in Italy Mr. Hutchison enjoyed the friendship of the Italian sculptors Tenerani and Dupre, and Hiram Powers, the American. In 1862 he exhibited for the first time in the Royal Academy a marble bust of John Philip, R.A.—a commission from Mr. Philip—and has contributed to Royal Academy Exhibitions for many years; in 1889 he exhibited a study in bronze, "Il Condottiere." He has executed colossal bronze statues of James Carmichael, engineer (inventor of the fan-blast), erected in Dundee; Adam Black, M.P., publisher, for Edinburgh; Dr. Grigor, M.D., for Nairn. For Lochmaben a colossal statue of King Robert Bruce in freestone; a statue in bronze-gilt of a Greek Torch Racer for the summit of the dome of the University of Edinburgh; four statues (life-size) for the Scott Monument, Edinburgh, viz., Baron Bradwardine, Hal-o'-the-Wynd, the Glee Maiden, and Flora MacIvor. For the relic-room of the Scott Monument, eight historical portrait-heads alto-relievo in bronze. Amongst many other monuments which Mr. Hutchison has designed and executed may be mentioned a marble monument in Leyland Church, Lancashire, a recumbent figure of a lady (Mrs. Farington) resting on an altar-tomb; and a monument in memory of G. Paul Chalmers, R.S.A., in the Dean Cemetery, Edinburgh. He has also executed and exhibited in the Royal Academy and Royal Scottish Academy various busts of distinguished characters; likewise studies in marble and bronze of Hamlet, Dante, Don Quixote, Bonny Kilmeny, Genevieve; and Marietta, a Roman Girl, now in the National Gallery, Edinburgh. By command of the Queen, Mr. Hutchison has executed busts of the late Principal Tulloch and Dr. Norman Macleod for Balmoral, and has also designed and executed the marble monument in memory of the Royal Stewarts buried in Paisley Abbey. In 1888 her Majesty honoured Mr. Hutchison with sittings for her bust at Windsor Castle. The bust of the Queen and that of the late Prince Consort were executed for the Victoria Art Galleries, Dundee. Mr. Hutchison was elected Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1862; Academician in 1867; Librarian in 1877; and Treasurer in 1886.

HUTTON, Arthur Wollaston, youngest son of the Rev. H. F. Hutton, Rector of Spridlington, Lincolnshire, was born Sept. 5, 1848. Educated at Bury St. Edmunds Grammar School, at Brussels (under M. le Pasteur Vent), and at Cheltenham College, he obtained a scholarship at Exeter College, Oxford, and entered upon residence there in January 1867. In 1869 he obtained a second class in classical moderations, and in June 1871 he was placed alone in the first class in the honour school of theology, and graduated B.A. in that year, and M.A. in 1873. Ordained by the Bishop of Oxford, he was curate of St. Barnabas Church in that city, 1871-73, and in 1872, on the occasion of the secession to the Church of Rome of his fellow-curate, the Rev. C. H. Moore, he published an essay entitled "Our Position as Catholics in the Church of England." In 1873, on the death of his father, he was appointed to the living of Spridlington, a village nine miles N.E. of Lincoln. Here he rebuilt the church and enlarged the school; but in January 1876 he resigned his position, and was shortly afterwards received into the Catholic Church by Dr. (afterwards Cardinal) Newman. Thenceforward, until 1893, he resided at the Birmingham Oratory as one of the community, being ordained priest in 1879, and having for the greater part of the time the management of the public elementary schools. In 1879 he published "The Anglican Ministry, its nature and value in relation to the Catholic Priesthood," a criticism of the position of the Ritualists, to which Cardinal Newman contributed a preface of twenty pages. In November 1883 Mr. Hutton withdrew from the Catholic Church and the clerical profession, and held no definite position until 1887, when he was appointed the first librarian of the Gladstone Library at the National Liberal Club in Whitehall Place. He retired from this post in March 1899, and was succeeded by F. G. Haley. In addition to other magazine articles, lectures, and reviews, Mr. Hutton published in the Expositor for September, October, and November 1890, "Personal Reminiscences of Cardinal Newman"; in 1892, in the series of English Leaders of Religion, a life of Cardinal Manning; and in the same year, in Bohn's Standard Library, a new edition of Arthur Young's "Tour in Ireland." In conjunction with Mr. H. J. Cohen, Mr. Hutton began in 1892 a collected edition of the "Speeches and Public Addresses of Mr. Gladstone," to be completed in 11 vols.; and in the autumn of 1894 appeared an essay on "The Vaccination Question," in the form of an open letter to Mr. Asquith. Address: Warden Lodge, Chiswick.

HUTTON, Sir John, J.P., late Chairman of the London County Council, was born in London in 1842, and educated by private tutors. He began life as a journalist, and for more than twenty years was connected with the Weekly Times, of which he eventually became editor and proprietor. He also partly owned the Sporting Life newspaper, and had at one period an interest in four important journalistic or literary properties. In 1889 he stood for the London County Council, and was returned as senior member for South St. Pancras, for which he was again elected in 1892, 1895, and 1898. He acted for three years as Chairman of the Building Act Committee, in which position he established a reputation for industry. When the second Council met he was elected Vice-Chairman, and upon the resignation of Lord Rosebery succeeded him as Chairman. In March 1893 and 1894 he was re-elected to this post, which he retained to 1895. Sir John Hutton, who was at one time a man of leisure, devoted the whole of his time to his presidential duties, and has only on very rare occasions missed a meeting of the Council. His annual address was considered an ample commentary on the Council's work. He is a Progressive. The honour of knighthood was conferred upon him in May 1894, his name being among the "birthday honours" on the 26th. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Neal, in 1864. Addresses: 10 Cumberland Terrace, Regent's Park; Ongar Hill Cottage, Addlestone, Surrey.

HUTTON, Laurence, author and literary editor of Harper's Magazine, was born in New York on Aug. 8, 1843, was educated at private schools, at Yale (of which he is M.A.), and at Princeton University. He was in business from 1863 to 1871, and then began to write dramatic criticism, and to contribute to the magazines. In 1885 he joined the staff of Harper's, and in time became editor of the magazine. He has published several works on the American stage, including a life of Edmund Booth, "Portraits in Plaster," "From the Books of Laurence Hutton," "Boy I knew," and "Literary Landmarks" of London, Edinburgh, Jerusalem, Venice, Rome, and Florence. Address: 229 W. 34th Street, New York.

HUYSMANS, Joris Karl, French author, was born in Paris, Feb. 5, 1848, of a family of Dutch origin and artistic reputation. At an early age he threw himself ardently into the footsteps of the leaders of the naturalistic and pessimist school. He was first an imitator of Baudelaire and then of Zola, and distinguished himself by his minute depiction of extreme realism. He then attached himself to the Decadents, and was characterised by Max Nordau, in that writer's manner, as it said, as the type of "literary hysteria." His first work was a volume of poems in prose, "Le Drageoir à Épices," 1874; and this was followed by a novel, "Marthe," the history of a girl. Then came "Les Sœurs Vatar," 1879; "Croquis Parisiens," 1880, illustrated by Forain; "En Ménage," 1881; "À Rebours," 1884, by many considered his finest work; "En Rade," 1887; "Les Vieux Quartiers de Paris," 1890. In 1891 he more or less dissociated himself from the Zolaistic school, and published "La-Bas," a study of diabolism in Paris. This was followed by "En Route," 1895, more or less a continuation and recantation of the previous work—and in "La Cathédrale," 1897, he goes still further along the path of neo-Catholicism. In 1881 he collaborated in "Les Soirées de Médan," to which he contributed "Sac au Dos." He is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and his Paris address is 41 Rue de Sèvres.

HYACINTHE, Father. See LOYSON, ABBÉ CHARLES (PÈRE LOYSON).

HYNDMAN, Henry Mayers, Socialistic leader, eldest son of the late John Beckles Hyndman, a capitalist and most generous benefactor of churches, was born on March 7, 1842; educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; B.A. 1864; and entered the Inner Temple in 1863. He was special correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette during the war between France and Italy in 1866. He is the author of "The Indian Famine and the Crisis in India," 1887; "England for All," 1881; "Historic Bases of Socialism in England," 1883; "The Social Reconstruction of England," "Socialism and Slavery," and "A Summary of the Principles of Slavery," and "Will Socialism Benefit the English People?" 1884. More recently he has published "Socialism and Slavery," and "General Booth's Book Refuted," 1890; "The Commercial Crisis of the Nineteenth Century," 1892; and "Economics of Socialism," 1896. He married, in 1876, Matilda Ware. Address: 9 Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.

IBSEN, Henrik, dramatist and poet, was born at Skien, in Norway, on March 20, 1828, and is the son of a rich merchant. He is said to be of Scotch descent on his mother's side, but as he is unable to this day to read English, his foreign extraction is perhaps doubtful. The choice of his boyhood was to be an artist, but his father failed in business when Henrik was only eight years old, and all his dreams of a university education and artistic training were dispelled. He was forced to earn his own living, the only opening available being in a small apothecary's shop in an obscure provincial town. For five years he lived the humdrum life of an assistant druggist, dispensing drugs and learning all he could, with a youthful longing to enter the medical profession. In his spare hours, which were few, he read out-of-the-way books. The struggle was hard and embittering, and at last, unable to stand it any longer, young Ibsen started for Christiania with only a small sum of money in his pocket. In 1849, with the assistance of some of his student-friends, he published, under the pseudonym of "Brynjolf Bjarme," his first book. This first venture was a dismal failure, finding but thirty buyers, and, heart-broken, Ibsen was compelled to sell the remaining copies as waste paper in order to keep the wolf from the door. He drowned his misery by becoming an ardent Radical and by writing revolutionary poems. In the same year he entered the university, where, in conjunction with others, including Björnson, with whom he studied, he founded a literary journal in which appeared his first satire, "Norma, or a Politician's Love." He sought mental recreation in attending and addressing Radical meetings, but, failing in Greek and mathematics at his matriculation examination, he left the university and occupied himself with the composition of poems and dramas, and in addressing more meetings. En passant, it is curious to notice that in later life Ibsen lost both his Radicalism and his eloquence, maturing into a staid Conservative of the most uncompromising type, and becoming utterly incapable of speaking in public. On leaving the university he again turned to literature and wrote "The Warrior's Barrow," which was acted successfully in the Christiania Theatre in 1850. Through the influence of Ole Bull, the violinist, he was appointed stage manager of the Bergen theatre. He remained in Bergen for seven years, and then returned to Christiania to take over the management of the new theatre (The Norske), thus gaining that experience of stage work which has made his plays so popular with the profession. Becoming tired of the theatre he retired in 1862, and, wishing to travel, applied to the Government for that truly admirable Norse institution, a poet's pension, but Björnson, his old fellow-student, being at that time better known, received it instead. However, in 1864 the Storting granted him the allowance, Ibsen having previously decided to abandon political affairs. For some time he lived in Rome, and travelled a great deal on the Continent, realising, as one result, the petty tyranny of Norway and the narrowness of her officials, which he denounced in "Brand," attacking vigorously the Established Church. Then came "Peer Gynt," probably his best-known effort, and from that date a continuous stream of dramas, poems, and novels has issued from the master-brain of Ibsen. The following of his works have been translated into English, and have exercised a stimulating influence on English literary and dramatic criticism: "The Pillars of Society," 1877; "Ghosts," 1881; "An Enemy of Society," and "The Wild Duck," 1884; "Rosmersholm," 1886; "Hedda Gabler," 1890; and "The Master Builder," 1892. All of the foregoing have been dramatised, as also have others, such as "A Doll's House," "Little Eyolf," and "John Gabriel Borkman." In these representations some of the finest talent on the English stage has taken part, and, if space permitted, an interesting list of productions might be given. However, two particular performances may be cited, as they aroused considerable feeling and criticism, viz., "An Enemy of the People," produced by Mr. Beerbohm Tree at the Haymarket Theatre, on June 15, 1893; and "Little Eyolf," staged by the New Century Theatre and acted by Miss Janet Achurch, Miss Elizabeth Robins, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell. Within the last few years (he was comparatively unknown beyond Norway ten years ago) Ibsen has acquired a considerable and influential following in England, due, in part, to the efforts of Messrs. William Archer and Edmund Gosse, who, by translation and connotation, have largely aided in the introduction of Ibsen to English readers. It is to be regretted that Ibsen himself has not thought fit to make a direct appeal to English circles, but he once declared himself indifferent to the study of English, as he felt that he could never "get at the heart," as he expressed it, of the English people, although he confessed to a strong desire to see and talk with such English giants as Tennyson, Gladstone, and Herbert Spencer. The new feeling towards the Norwegian master, referred to above, received its clearest and most fitting expression in an address presented to Ibsen by some of his English admirers, on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, March 20, 1898. Accompanying the address, which was signed by a representative gathering, was a set of silver, consisting of a ciborium or loving cup, an exact facsimile of one executed for King George II. in 1730; a ladle, in silver and ebony, an original, made about 1725; and a small cup of the same period. On the same date (March 20, 1898) a long poem by Mr. William Archer appeared in the Daily Chronicle, inscribed to Ibsen, and hailing him as "Great Poet, . . . by friends' and foes' consent, in Drama's wide domain pre-eminent!" His seventieth birthday was celebrated in Christiania amid great festivities, and congratulations were presented by the President of the Storting, in the name of that body, and by numerous deputations, associations, and private persons. King Oscar also took part, and, in his telegram of congratulation, said: "Your day of honour is, likewise, the day of honour of the Norwegian people." A critical estimate of his work, entitled "Ibsen on his Merits," was recently elaborated by Sir Edward R. Russell and Mr. Percy Cross Standing.

IGNATIEFF, Nicholaus Pavlovitch, a Russian general and diplomatist, was born January 29, 1832. He is the son of Count Paul Ignatieff, a captain of infantry, who at the time of the military insurrection that occurred at St. Petersburg in consequence of the somewhat forcible accession of the Grand-Duke Nicholas to the throne of Russia in 1825, was the first to pass over, with his company, to the side of the new Czar—a defection which it was his duty to make in this manner in opposing the defection of the rebels, and which ensured the triumph of the former, and gained for Captain Ignatieff and his family the powerful protection of Nicholas I. The subject of this notice had at the very outset of his career the Emperor Alexander II. for his godfather. He was educated at home and in the Corps des Pages, and, according to custom, quitted that select establishment for young aristocrats to enter the Guard; and in the Military Academy, after three years' study, he was appointed as staff officer. At the beginning of the Crimean war he was ordered to be on the staff of General Berg. He occupied at Riga the post of Quartermaster-General of the Baltic corps. He then passed from the military to the diplomatic service, finding his point of transition in the military attachéship to the Embassy at London. His chief performance in this capacity was a report on England's military position in India, which so pleased the Emperor that he summoned Captain Ignatieff to Warsaw for a personal interview. In 1858 Ignatieff, now a colonel and aide-de-camp to the Emperor, was sent on a special mission to Khiva and Bokhara. He was afterwards made a major-general in the Imperial suite, and sent as a plenipotentiary to Peking, 1860, where he concluded a treaty by which the province of Ussuri was ceded by China to Russia. On his return to Russia he was made Director of the Asiatic Department in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In 1864 he was appointed Minister at Constantinople, where his legation was afterwards (1867) raised to the rank of an embassy. Apart from his rank as ambassador, he was a lieutenant-general, and general aide-de-camp to the Emperor. The object which General Ignatieff steadily pursued at Constantinople was to secure for Russia a powerful influence over Turkey. He completely reassured the late Sultan Abdul Aziz as to the intentions of the Government of St. Petersburg, while on the other hand he gained the good-will of the Christian subjects of the Porte by his courteous behaviour and his simulated anxiety to protect them. In the negotiations between the various European Powers prior and subsequent to the war between Russia and Turkey, General Ignatieff took a very prominent part, and the treaty of San Stefano was mainly his work. He was recalled from the embassy at Constantinople, May 2, 1878, when Prince Lobanoff was sent there in his place. Afterwards he was appointed Minister of the Interior, from which post he was dismissed in June 1882, owing to disagreements with the pacific M. De Giers. He remained, however, a member of the Council of the Empire. He is a bitter enemy of the Nihilists.

IGNATIUS, Father. See LYNE, THE REV. JOSEPH LEYCESTER.

ILBERT, Sir Courtenay Peregrine, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., was born June 12, 1841, at Kingsbridge, Devon, and is the eldest son of the late Rev. Peregrine A. Ilbert, Rector of Thurlestone, Devon. He was educated at Marlborough, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained an open scholarship, and also the Hertford, Ireland, and Craven University Scholarships. He was placed in the first class in the Classical Moderations 1862, and in the Lit. Hum. 1864, and was elected to a Balliol Fellowship. After taking his degree he read for the Bar, and was elected to the Eldon Law Scholarship in 1867. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1869, and practised as a parliamentary and equity draughtsman and conveyancer. For many years he did work in connection with the Parliamentary Counsel's office, and had a considerable share in the drafting of important Government measures. He was Counsel to the Education Department from 1879 to 1882; Legal Member of the Council of the Viceroy of India from 1882 to 1886; and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta in 1885. During Lord Dufferin's absence in Burma in 1886 he was President of the Viceroy's Council, with the powers of the Governor-General. As Legal Member of Lord Ripon's Government in India, Mr. Ilbert's name was associated with a measure for the Amendment of Criminal Procedure, in pursuance of the Viceroy's policy, which became the subject of vehement contention, and was popularly known as the Ilbert Bill. He was also responsible for an important measure for revising the relations between landlord and tenant amongst an agricultural population of sixty millions, known as the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which, as finally amended after long and careful discussion, is now part of the law of India. This was only one of a series of similar measures, affecting the tenure of land in almost every part of India, for which Mr. Ilbert was responsible, as Legal Member of the Council, first under the Marquis of Ripon, and afterwards under the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava. On returning from India in 1886 Mr. Ilbert was appointed to the permanent office of Assistant Parliamentary Counsel to the Treasury, which he still holds. He was knighted in February 1895. In January 1899 he was appointed Parliamentary Counsel to succeed Sir Henry Jenkyns, K.C.B., retired. He is a member of the Council of Marlborough College, and of the Board of Visitors of the Cooper's Hill Engineering College. A paper which he read at the Imperial Institute in 1894 resulted in the foundation of the Society of Comparative Legislation. He is the author of a book on the Government of India (Clarendon Press, 1898). In 1874 he married Jessie, daughter of the Rev. C. Bradley, and niece of the present Dean of Westminster. Permanent addresses: 67 Gloucester Place, Portman Square; and 3 Whitehall Gardens (official).

ILCHESTER, Earl of, The Right Hon. Henry Edward Fox-Strangways, was born on Sept. 13, 1847, and is the only son of the Hon. John George Fox-Strangways. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford; from 1873 to 1874 he was Captain of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, has been a Captain of Yeomanry, is Lord-Lieutenant and County Alderman of Dorset, and a member of the London County Council. He succeeded his uncle, the fourth Earl, in 1865, and was sworn of the Privy Council in 1874. He married, in 1872, Lady Mary Eleanor Anne Dawson, daughter of the first Earl of Dartrey. His London residence is the historic Holland House, Kensington.

IMAGE, Selwyn, artist, is the second son of the Rev. John Image, of Bodiam, Sussex, and was born in 1849. He was educated at Marlborough and at New College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1872 (M.A. 1875). He was curate of St. Anne's, Soho, from 1876 to 1880, but has since devoted himself entirely to his art, the rudiments of which he acquired under the influence of Mr. Ruskin, one of whose earliest pupils he was at the Slade School, Oxford. Writing in a recent number of the Studio, the editor says: "Mr. Selwyn Image's influence upon modern art is well known to those who have studied its development in recent years." The labours of the Century Guild, the organ of which was the Hobby Horse quarterly, have been mainly in the direction of a revived interest in the English Renaissance as well as its Italian prototype, infused in both cases by Pagan learning as well as by the more barbarous Gothic creed. These labours were greatly inspired by Mr. Image. The title-page of the Century Guild Hobby Horse was from his design, and many have seen in its outlines the inspiration of much modern decorative work, such, for instance, as the late Mr. Aubrey Beardsley's incomparable line. Mr. Image has done much decorative work, and has painted landscape, but he is chiefly known for his glass. He is perhaps the most distinguished of English designers for glass, the austere beauty and extreme delicacy of his work placing him far above the facile and flamboyant employés of the great firms of church decorators, who are ordinarily called in to help in the perfunctory adornment of our churches. Among his principal works are the windows for the Prince of Wales's Pavilion at the Paris Exhibition, the west window in St. Luke's, Camberwell, four archangels in Morthoe Church, Devon, besides windows in private houses. He is a frequent exhibitor at the Arts and Crafts Exhibitions, and is member of committee of several art societies concerned in the reform of decoration. He has lectured on art at the Society of Arts and at the Arts and Crafts Exhibition. He has also written much on art, and has published a volume of poems, which ranks him among "poet-painters." His address is: 6 Southampton Street, Bloomsbury.

INCE, The Rev. William, D.D., eldest son of the late William Ince, sometime President of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, was born in the parish of St. James's, Clerkenwell, June 7, 1825, and educated at King's College, London, and Lincoln College, Oxford, where he gained a scholarship in 1843. He graduated B.A. with first class in Lit. Hum. in 1846; and became Fellow of Exeter College in 1847; Sub-rector of Exeter, 1857-1878, when he was appointed Regius Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church in succession to Dr. Mozley. Dr. Ince was Whitehall Preacher, 1860-62; Public Examiner at Oxford, 1866-68; and Chaplain to the Bishops of Oxford, Dr. Mackarness, and subsequently Dr. Stubbs, 1871-1888. He has published "Some Aspects of Christian Truth," 1862; "Religion in the University of Oxford," 1874; "Education of the Clergy at the Universities," 1882; and various university and college sermons, two funeral sermons, and some addresses. Address: Christ Church, Oxford.

INCHIQUIN, Lord, Sir Edward Donough O'Brien, Bart., K.P., a Representative Peer for Ireland, was born in Dublin on May 14, 1839, and is the eldest son of the 13th Baron, whom he succeeded in 1872, and Mary, eldest daughter of William FitzGerald, of co. Clare. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A. Hon.). He was High Sheriff of co. Clare in 1862, and has been Lord-Lieutenant of that county since 1886. He is Hon. Colonel in the 7th Division Royal Artillery, Ireland, and became a Representative Peer in 1873. He married (1), in 1862, the Hon. Emily Holmes-A'Court, daughter of the 2nd Baron Heytesbury (she died in 1868); and (2), in 1874, the Hon. Ellen Harriet White, daughter of the 2nd Baron Annaly. Address: Dromoland Castle, co. Clare.

INDERWICK, Frederick Andrew, Q.C., J.P., is the son of the late Andrew Inderwick, R.N., and was born in 1836. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1858, becoming a Q.C. in 1874, and a Benchler in 1877. After contesting Cirencester in 1868, and Dover in 1874, he was elected as member for Rye, in the Liberal interest, in 1880, and continued to represent that constituency until 1885. He acted as Mayor of Winchelsea from 1892 to 1893. Mr. Inderwick is the author of: "Law of Wills, Divorces, and Matrimonial Causes Act," "The Story of King Edward and New Winchelsea," "The Prisoner of War," "Side Lights on the Stuarts," "The Interregnum," "The King's Peace." He was married, in 1867, to Frances, daughter of John Wilkinson, of the Exchequer and Audit Department. He practises on the South-Eastern Circuit. Addresses: 1 Mitre Court Buildings, E.C.; and Mariteau House, Winchelsea, Sussex.

INGE, The Rev. William, D.D., Provost of Worcester College, Oxford, was born, in 1829, at Ravenstone, Leicestershire, and is the eldest son of the Rev. Charles Inge of Benn Hill, Atherstone. He was educated at Shrewsbury School, and matriculated at Worcester College in 1849. He was a scholar of his college from 1849 to 1854, was in the first class in Classical Moderations in 1852, and in the first class in Lit. Hum. in 1853. He was also a member of the University Eleven in 1853 (B.A. 1853; M.A. 1856; B. and D.D. 1892). He was Fellow of his College from 1854 to 1859, and succeeded Dr. Cotton in 1881 as Provost, at a time when he had been for many years a country clergyman, first as curate of Crayke, Yorks., 1857-75, and secondly as Vicar of Alrewas, Staffs., 1875-81. He is a member of the Hebdomadal Council, was hon. secretary to the Oxford Education Board in 1884, Commissary for the Bishop of Grahamstown, 1883-88, and examining chaplain to the Bishop of Lichfield, 1880-91, and to the Archbishop of York in 1891.

INGRAM, The Right Rev. A. F. W.
See WINNINGTON-INGRAM, A. F.

INGRAM, John H., was born in London, Nov. 16, 1849, and educated at Lyonsdown and City of London Colleges and by private tutors. He entered the General Post Office in 1868. In 1863 he published a small volume of verse, subsequently suppressed. This was followed, in 1868, by "Flora Symbolica," a work on the folk-lore of flowers, which has passed through numerous editions. In 1873 he began a series of articles in English and American periodicals, calling attention to misrepresentations about the life and character of Edgar Allan Poe; and in October 1874 embodied some of the results of his investigations in a short "Memoir of Poe," prefixed to a four-volume edition of the poet's works. This was followed in 1880 by an exhaustive two-volume biography of Edgar Allan Poe; new one-volume editions of which work have since been published, the latest in the Minerva Library of Famous Books, for which series Mr. Ingram edited and copiously annotated a new edition of Lockhart's "Life of Burns," 1890. In 1879, under the name of "Don Felix de Salamanca," he published "The Philosophy of Hand-writing," wherein the characters of several celebrated contemporaries were assumed to be portrayed by their calligraphy. In 1881 he published a volume of "Fairy Tales," translated from the Spanish of Fernan Caballero, and in 1882 a collection of historical sketches, styled "Claimants to Royalty." In the winter of 1883 he published a volume of historical ghost stories, entitled "The Haunted Homes of Great Britain," and in 1884 a second series of similar narratives. In the same year appeared his life of "Oliver Madox Brown," the young painter, who died in 1874. In 1884 Mr. Ingram edited an illustrated édition de luxe of Edgar Poe's "Tales and Poems," in 4 vols., and a selection from Poe's works, in 2 vols., for the Tauchnitz collection. In 1885 he published a monograph on Poe's "Raven"; in 1887, a collection of Mrs. Browning's Poems, with Memoir, and in 1889 a variorum edition of Poe's "Poetical Works." He is editing a series of original biographical manuals, entitled the Eminent Women series, and wrote for it, in 1888, a Life of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. It is the only complete memoir of Mrs. Browning yet published, has gone through several editions, and has been adopted as a University text-book. In 1892 Mr. Ingram edited, with a biographical introduction, a reprint of George Darley's "Sylvia," and wrote various papers for Mr. Miles's "Poets and Poetry of the Nineteenth Century." He is a contributor to many of the leading reviews of Europe and America, and has occasionally lectured on behalf of educational institutions. Address: General Post Office, E.C.

INGRAM, John Kells, LL.D., Litt.D., born in the county of Donegal, Ireland, on July 7, 1823, and eldest son of the Rev. William Ingram, was educated at Newry School and Trinity College, Dublin. He was elected scholar of his College in 1840, and Fellow in 1846, Professor of Oratory and English Literature in 1852, Regius Professor of Greek in 1866, and Librarian in 1879. He is now Vice-Provost of Trinity College. He was President of the Statistical Section of the British Association in 1878, and in that capacity delivered an address on "The Present Position and Prospects of Political Economy," which attracted much attention at home and abroad, and was translated into German by the well-known economist, Dr. H. Von Scheel, and into Danish by A. Peterson. He also gave an address to the Trades Union Congress in 1880 on "Work and the Workman," of which a French translation appeared in the following year. He is author of the article "Political Economy" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica" (9th edit.), which has since been reprinted in a separate volume (1888), and which has been translated into French, Italian, Spanish, German, Swedish, Russian, Polish, Czech, and Japanese. He also contributed to the same Encyclopædia the article "Slavery" (separately published, with additions, in 1895, and since translated into German) and many biographical notices, amongst which may be mentioned those of Quesnay, Turgot, Petty, Adam Smith, Ricardo, Arthur Young, and Cliffe Leslie. He is author of "Greek and Latin Etymology in England," "The Etymology of Liddell and Scott," and other articles in Hermathena, a university journal which he edited for some years; of papers on "The Opus Majus" of Roger Bacon, on "The First English translation of the De Imitatione Christi," on "Mediæval Moral Tales," and other subjects, in the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy; of a paper on "The Weak Endings of Shakespere," in the Transactions of the New Shakespere Society, vol. i.; of Lectures on Shakespere and Tennyson in "Afternoon Lectures" (Dublin, 1863 and 1866), and of the etymological portion of Dr. William Smith's Latin School Dictionary, 2nd edit., 1883. He edited for the Early English Text Society, in 1893, the old English version of the Imitation mentioned above. He was President of the Library Association in 1884, and delivered an address on "The Library of Trinity College, Dublin." He has also been President of the Statistical Society of Ireland, and of the Royal Irish Academy, and is one of the Trustees of the National Library of Ireland, a Visitor of the Science and Art Museum, Dublin, and a Commissioner for the Publication of the Ancient Laws and Institutions of Ireland. He received in 1893 the Hon. Degree of LL.D. from the University of Glasgow, and is an Hon. Member of the American Economic Association. He married, in 1862, Madeline, daughter of J. J. Clark, D.L., Largan-together, co. Londonderry. She died in 1890. Addresses: Trinity College, Dublin; and 38 Upper Mount Street, Dublin.

INGRAM, The Very Rev. William Clavell, D.D., Dean of Peterborough, is the eldest son of the late Rev. George Ingram, B.D., formerly rector of Chedburgh, in the county of Suffolk, and Jane Kames Clavell, his wife. He was born at Chedburgh Rectory on Aug. 11, 1834. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1857. After taking his degree, he was for some time an assistant master at St. Nicolas

College, Lancing, and he was ordained Deacon by the late Bishop Gilbert at Chichester in 1859, and Priest the following year. He proceeded to the degree of Master of Arts in 1864, and to the degree of Doctor in Divinity in 1893. In 1863 he was appointed Chaplain to Her Majesty's Forces at Woolwich, and the following year he accepted the Crown living of Kirkmichael in the Isle of Man, and became Chaplain to the late Bishop Powys. Here he remained for ten years till Bishop Magee removed him to the living of St. Matthew's, Leicester, a large poor parish, containing at that time some 15,000 inhabitants. In 1887 Bishop Magee, afterwards Archbishop of York, promoted Dr. Ingram to an honorary Canonry in Peterborough Cathedral, and in 1892, on Mr. Gladstone's nomination, he became Dean of Peterborough. Dr. Ingram is the author of several sermons, amongst others a volume entitled "Happiness in the Spiritual Life," published by Longmans, and he has also written a short account of Peterborough Cathedral, issued by Isbister and Co. Address: The Deanery, Peterborough.

INGRAM, Sir William James, Bart., was born in 1847, and is the son of the late Herbert Ingram, sometime M.P. for Boston, and justly famous in the annals of journalism and English enterprise as the founder of the Illustrated London News. His mother was Anne, daughter of William Little, Esq., of Eye, and was afterwards Lady Watkin, wife of Sir E. Watkin, Bart. The subject of our notice was educated at Winchester, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1872. From 1874 to 1880 he represented Boston in the Liberal interest in the House of Commons, and again in 1885-86, and 1892-95. Sir William Ingram is proprietor of the Illustrated London News, the English Illustrated Magazine, the Sketch, and the Penny Illustrated Paper. He invented the rotatory printing press named after him, and a main factor in the phenomenal success of the last-mentioned paper. Together with Mr. Charles Ingram, he projected the well-known weekly, the Sketch, which obtained an immediate and wide-spread success. He was created a Baronet in 1893. He married, in 1874, Mary, daughter of the Hon. Edward Stirling, of Adelaide. His heir, Mr. Herbert Ingram, was born in 1875. Addresses: 65 Cromwell Road, S.W.; The Bungalow, Westgate-on-Sea, &c., &c.

IRVING, Sir Henry, LL.D., the name assumed by John Henry Brodribb, the actor, only son of the late Samuel Brodribb, was born Feb. 6, 1838, at Keinton, near Glastonbury, and educated at Dr. Pinches' school, in George Yard, Lombard Street, London. He made his first public appearance at the Sunderland Theatre, Sept. 29, 1856, and after a series of engagements at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Manchester, and Liverpool, extending over nine years, he was engaged on July 30, 1866, to play, with Miss Kate Terry, at Manchester, by Mr. Dion Boucicault, in an original play of his, entitled "Hunted Down." This led to a London engagement, when he came out at the St. James's Theatre as Doricourt in the "Belle's Stratagem." He subsequently played at Drury Lane, the Haymarket, and the Gaiety theatres. In May 1870 he transferred his services to the Vaudeville Theatre, playing Digby Grant in Mr. Albery's comedy of the "Two Roses," which character he sustained for 300 consecutive nights. His representation of "Hamlet" at the Lyceum Theatre, Oct. 31, 1874, produced a great sensation among the playgoing public, and opinion was at first much divided as to the merits of the performance, but it is now generally admitted that by his rendering of this and of other Shakespearian parts, Mr. Irving has placed himself at the head of English tragedians. "Hamlet" was played for 200 nights, the longest run of the play on record. He appeared in "Macbeth" Sept. 18, 1875; in "Othello" in 1876; and next as Philip in Tennyson's drama of "Queen Mary." Afterwards Mr. Irving played his Shakespearian parts in the provinces, in Scotland, and in Ireland. When in Dublin he played "Hamlet" by the request of the University, he having been presented with an address in the Dining Hall of Trinity College. In January 1877 he added to his Shakespearian repertory by playing "Richard III." at the Lyceum. The withdrawal of Mrs. Bateman from the Lyceum gave Mr. Irving supreme control over the theatre, of which he had long been the mainstay. It opened under his management on Dec. 30, 1878, when he again played "Hamlet" for 100 nights. The most remarkable incidents of Mr. Irving's management have been the production of "Othello" (in which he alternated the parts of the Moor and Iago with Mr. Edwin Booth), "The Merchant of Venice," "Much Ado about Nothing," "The Cup," "Twelfth Night," and "Faust," all which have been played in conjunction with Miss Ellen Terry. A public banquet was given to Mr. Irving at St. James's Hall, on July 4, 1883, shortly before his departure with the

Lyceum company for a theatrical tour in the United States. A second visit to America was made in 1884, and before its close Mr. Irving delivered an address to the students of Harvard University on the art of acting. He also delivered an address by the invitation of the Vice-Chancellor (Dr. Jowett) at Oxford, on June 26, 1886. On May 5, 1887, Mr. Irving was elected a Life Trustee of Shakespeare's birthplace. On June 1 he produced Byron's "Werner" at the Lyceum Theatre for the benefit of Dr. Westland Marston, with the fine result of giving over £800 to the distressed dramatist. On October 17 he visited Stratford-on-Avon for the purpose of making the dedicatory speech at the presentation of a public fountain by Mr. G. W. Childs, of Philadelphia, and the next day left Liverpool for a third tour in America, lasting until March 24, 1888. During his stay in the States he was given, on March 15, a reception by the American Goethe Society, and on March 19, by special desire of the War Department, he took his company to the Military Academy at West Point, where, with Miss Ellen Terry, he gave "The Merchant of Venice" in Elizabethan dress and without scenery of any kind. On March 12 the great blizzard occurred which paralysed New York for a week, and on that evening the Star, where Mr. Irving was performing, was the only theatre open. After a short season at the Lyceum he took "Faust" on tour, and at Bolton laid the foundation-stone of a new theatre. On November 28 he was entertained at a public banquet in Birmingham. On December 29 he produced "Macbeth" at the Lyceum, with Miss Ellen Terry as Lady Macbeth, and ran it until the following summer, nearly 200 nights, which is the longest run of the play on record. In April of the year 1889 he visited Germany, where "Julius Caesar" and "The Merchant of Venice" were presented for him at the Berliner Theatre by Herr Barnay; and on his return home he played, with Miss Ellen Terry, before the Queen at Sandringham. On September 28 he revived at the Lyceum Watts-Phillips' play "The Dead Heart." The play ran the whole season, ending in the summer of 1890, after which, with Miss Ellen Terry, he made a short provincial tour, giving recitals of "Macbeth" with the accompaniment of Sir Arthur Sullivan's music. On Sept. 20, 1890, he produced "Ravenswood," by Herman Merivale, founded on Sir Walter Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor." This was followed in 1891 by a revival of "Much Ado," "The Lyons Mail," and "The Corsican Brothers." During the season of 1892 Mr. Irving's company played "Henry VIII.," a notable revival, at the Lyceum, the great actor taking the part of Cardinal Wolsey. His next part was not dissimilar to this, for he appeared as "Becket" in the late Lord Tennyson's great play of that name. At the end of 1893 Mr. Irving gave numerous revivals of familiar pieces in his repertoire. He then took his company to America, and, on his return to the Lyceum in the spring of 1894, revived "Faust." In September 1894 he appeared at Bristol in a little play by Dr. Conan Doyle, in which he figured as a Waterloo veteran. In 1895 he appeared as King Arthur in a play of that name, and in 1896 he played in "Cymbeline," a Shakespearean revival. In April 1897 he appeared as Napoleon in a translation of "Madame Sans-Gêne." He received the honour of knighthood in May 1895, in the autumn of which year he again visited America. In June 1898 he delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge, on "The Theatre in its relation to the State," and on the 15th of that month received the LL.D. of the Cambridge University. After a long absence from the scene of his former triumphs and a period of serious ill-health, Sir Henry Irving returned to the Lyceum Theatre in April 1899, opening with the play of "Robespierre," specially written for him by M. Victorien Sardou. He received a welcome of unprecedented enthusiasm from his old admirers. In "Robespierre," now running (May 1899) he sustains the title-part, while Miss Ellen Terry plays the chief female character. Addresses: 15A Grafton Street, Bond Street, W.; and Athenæum.

ISABELLA II., Maria Isabella Louisa, ex-Queen of Spain, was born at Madrid, Oct. 30, 1830. Her father, Ferdinand VII., had been induced, by the influence of his wife, to issue the Pragmatic Decree, revoking the Salic law; and at his death, Sept. 29, 1833, his eldest daughter, then a child, was proclaimed Queen, under the regency of her mother, Maria-Christina. This event proved the signal for civil warfare, as the claims of the late king's brother were warmly supported by certain classes of the people. The war of succession lasted seven years, and the country was desolated by the struggle between the contending Carlist and Christina parties, until the Cortes confirmed the claims of Isabella by pronouncing sentence of exile on Don Carlos and his adherents. In 1840 the Queen-regnant, finding it impossible to carry on the government without making concessions to public feeling for which she was indisposed, retired to France, resigning her power into the hands of Espartero, whom she had been previously compelled to summon to the head of affairs. For the following three years, whilst that constitutional leader was able in great measure to direct her education and training, the young Queen was subjected to purer and better influences than she had before experienced. She was declared by a decree of the Cortes to have attained her majority, Oct. 15, 1842, and took her place among the reigning sovereigns of Europe. Maria-Christina returned to Madrid in 1845, and her restoration to influence was marked by the marriage of Isabella II. to her cousin, Don Francisco d'Assisi, the elder son of her maternal uncle, Don Francisco de Paula, which took place Oct. 10, 1846. Sacrificed to the intrigues of a party whose interests were based on this uncongenial union, Isabella II. never knew the beneficial influence of domestic happiness; estrangements and reconciliations having succeeded each other alternately in her married life. It deserves special mention, however, that during her reign Spain rose to take rank among the great powers of Europe, while the internal progress of the country advanced with rapid strides. On Sept. 16, 1868, a great revolution broke out in Spain, starting with the fleet off Cadiz, and gradually spreading over the whole peninsula. The speedy result was the formation of a Republican Provisional Government under Prim, Serrano, and others at Madrid, and the flight of Queen Isabella to France. On November 6 her Majesty took up her residence in Paris, where she remained during her exile, with the exception of an interval spent at Geneva during the Franco-Prussian War. On June 25, 1870, she renounced her claims to the Spanish throne in favour of her eldest son, the Prince of the Asturias. After eight years of exile she returned to Spain, and was received at Santander by her son, the late King Alfonso XII. (July 29, 1876). Queen Isabella has had five children: 1. Infanta Marié-Isabel-Françoise-d'Assise-Christine-de-Paule-Dominga, born Dec. 20, 1851. 2. Alfonso XII., late King of Spain. 3. Infanta Maria del Pilar, born June 4, 1861. 4. Infanta Maria della Paz, born June 23, 1862; and 5. Infanta Maria Eulalie, born Feb. 12, 1864.

ISLINGTON, Bishop of. See TURNER, THE RIGHT REV. CHARLES HENRY.

ISRAELS, Josef, a Dutch painter, was born at Groningen in 1824. He studied in Amsterdam, under Kruseman, and next in Paris, under Picot; and received Gold Medals of Honour in Paris, Brussels, and Rotterdam. He also had conferred upon him the Belgian Order of Leopold, and was nominated a member of the French Legion of Honour. His principal paintings are: "The Tranquil House," "The Shipwrecked," and "The Cradle," "Interior of the Orphans' Home at Katwyk," "The True Support," "The Mother," and "The Children of the Sea" (in the Queen of Holland's collection). In 1873 he exhibited at the French Gallery in Pall Mall, "Minding the Flock," and since that time has continually added to that long list of pictures in which he has recorded the sadder aspects of humbler life. Among his later pictures we may mention "The Little Sick-Nurse," and the "Sewer," 1888. At the Paris Exhibition of 1889 he obtained a grand prix. He was elected a correspondent of the Academy of Fine Arts in January 1885. Mr. Israels has resided in the Hague for many years. His brother, Mr. Lehman Israels, born at Groningen in 1833, went at an early age to the United States, where he acquired a considerable reputation as a journalist. He was for several years foreign editor of the New York World. A monograph of the work of Josef Israels has been written by Netscher, and translated into French by Zilleken.

ITO, High Admiral of the Japanese fleet during the war with China, was for ten years at the head of the Yokosha Arsenal. In the summer of 1894 he was put in command of the Japanese naval forces engaged against China off the coast of Korea, and quitted his post at the arsenal to go on board his flagship the Mutsushima. On Sept. 7, 1894, a great naval battle took place between the Chinese and Japanese fleets. Twelve Chinese cruisers and warships were conveying transports full of Hunanese soldiers to the scene of war, when twelve Japanese ironclads and cruisers and five torpedo-boats under Admiral Ito engaged them. The fight lasted some seven hours, and resulted in the sinking or destruction of four Chinese men-of-war, and the disablement of many others. Only one Japanese warship was disabled, but the troops had all been landed before the engagement. The Japanese fleet was again ordered to sea in October, after it had been refitted at Port Arthur. Admiral Ito explained the tardy progress of Japanese influence in Korea on the ground that it was necessary to restore order in that country, to crush the brigands swarming in the mountain districts, to erect works in order to keep open the line of communication with the Japanese armies, and to enrol and train the Koreans as soldiers. In November he co-operated with the land forces attacking Port Arthur. Towards the end of January 1895 he was reported to be narrowly watching Wei-hai-wei, the forts of which had fired upon his ships on the 21st. In February the whole place, together with the Chinese fleet, was surrendered to him by Admiral Ting, who subsequently committed suicide, together with three principal Chinese officers. Admiral Ito, in compliance with the dead man's request, allowed all the soldiers in Wei-hai-wei and all the sailors in the Chinese fleet to return home free, and even conceded them the honours of war. He has resumed his duties at the arsenal, and resides in the palace in the Park surrounding it.

IVEAGH, Lord, Edward Cecil Guinness, Bart., K.P., LL.D., J.P., D.L., of Castlenock, co. Dublin, born on Nov. 10, 1847, formerly a member of the great firm of brewers in Dublin, is the younger brother of Lord Ardilaun, and is well known as a munificent philanthropist, who has given a quarter of a million to be applied to the better housing of the poor, and also as a scion of a house whose wealth has been systematically employed for the promotion of schemes of public utility. His father, Sir Benjamin Lee Guinness, it will be remembered, rebuilt St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin; and even the most rigid of teetotalers, when they see the purposes to which the great fortune of the Guinness family has been devoted, may almost be expected to forgive the source from which it has been derived. In December 1898 Lord Iveagh made two munificent offers, the first of a sum amounting to £250,000 for the further endowment of the Jenner Institute of Preventive Medicine, which has been gratefully accepted, the second of a like amount for the improvement of an insanitary area in the heart of Dublin. This last offer requires the sanction of Parliament. It is a scheme for erecting workmen's dwellings, &c., in the Bull-Alley area of Dublin, and for otherwise improving the streets of that district. He was raised to the peerage on Jan. 1, 1891, and received the degree of Hon. LL.D., Dublin, in the same year. He was made a K.P. in February 1896. Sir Edward married, in 1873, Adelaide Maria, daughter of Richard Samuel Guinness, M.P. for Deepwell, co. Dublin. Addresses: Farnleigh, Castlenock, co. Dublin; and Elveden, Suffolk.

IZZET BEY, Ahmet, was born some forty years ago, and was educated for the law. In the later days of Mahmoud Nedim he was appointed a judge in the Tidjaret. After the accession of Abd-ul-Hamid (q.v.) he became a palace spy, in which position he greatly distinguished himself. From being a reporter, he rose to be a counsellor, and in 1895 became the Sultan's right-hand man. He caused the ruin of Kiamil Pasha and Kutchuk Said, and induced his master to seek Russian protection from British persecution. The Cabinet are nearly all his creatures. Naturally he has crowds of enemies; the old Turkish party hate him for his Russophil policy, while the advanced party dislike his despotic methods. He is in full command of the Palace police; and is in truth the Power behind the Throne.

JACKSON, Frederick George, Arctic explorer, born in 1860, is the eldest son of G. F. Jackson of Leamington. He was educated at Denstone College and Edinburgh University. He has travelled across the Australian deserts and across the Tundras of Siberia. In 1894 he was given the command of the Arctic Expedition sent out by Mr. A. C. Harnsworth (q.v.). He set out from London in the Windward, and fixed his headquarters in Franz Josef Land, in a small house which he called Elmwood, near Cape Flora. During the three years he spent there he mapped out the whole region, which he proved not to consist of a continuous mass of land, but of a number of islands. He also omits Gillies Land from his maps, of the existence of which there has been much controversy. He has brought home valuable collections, immense numbers of photographs, and most valuable meteorological and magnetic observations. In 1896 he came across Nansen off the north of Franz Josef Land, and his "Are you Nansen?" has become almost as famous as the "Dr. Livingstone, I presume!" of another well-known explorer. He returned to England in September 1897. Interviewed in December 1897, he announced his intention of starting upon another polar expedition as soon as possible. His ship, a whaler, will be left as far north of Coburg Island as possible, and he will push on in a sledge drawn by dogs or ponies, and accompanied by only one other explorer. He laments the apathy of British geographers with regard to the north polar area, where so much remains to do. He is an Hon. Corresponding Member of the Geographical Societies of America and Italy, received a knighthood of the first class of the Royal Order of St. Olaf from King Oscar in December 1898, and in February 1899 was awarded the Gold Medal of the Geographical Society of Paris in recognition of his recent exploration of Franz Josef Land. He published, in 1895, "The Great Frozen Land." He married, June 1898, Miss Mabel Dalrymple Bruce, daughter of Colonel Dalrymple Bruce. Address: Royal Societies Club.

JACKSON, Henry, Litt.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, eldest son of Henry Jackson, surgeon, was born at Sheffield, March 12, 1839. He received his early education at the Sheffield Collegiate School, and at Cheltenham College. He proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1858; graduated with Classical Honours in 1862; and was elected a Fellow of his College in 1864. He was appointed Assistant Tutor in 1866, and Prælector in Ancient Philosophy in 1875. In 1884 he was admitted to the degree of Doctor in Letters. In 1895 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from the University of Aberdeen. From 1882 to 1886, from 1888 to 1892, and from 1892 to 1896, he was a member of the Council of the Senate of the University. He has served upon several boards and syndicates; in particular, upon the boards for Classics and for Mediæval and Modern Languages, and the syndicates of the Library and the Press. He is a member of the governing body of Girton College. He took a part in the movement for the Education of Women which began in 1866; in the movement which led to the abolition of University tests in 1871; in the revision of the statutes of his College in 1870-72; in the comprehensive academic and collegiate reforms of 1877-83; and in the agitations in favour of degrees for women in 1887-88, and in 1895-97. He is a Progressive Liberal, and has been since 1882 a convinced Home Ruler. His chief published writings are: "The Fifth Book of the Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle," 1879; a series of articles on "Plato's Later Theory of Ideas," in the Journal of Philology, Nos. 19, 20, 22, 25, 26, 28, 30, 49; papers in the same periodical on subjects connected with the writings of Plato, Aristotle, and other ancient philosophers; and articles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica" on Thales, Xenophanes, Parmenides, Zeno of Elea, Sophists, Socrates, Speusippus, &c. Dr. Jackson married, July 1, 1875, Margaret Edith, fourth daughter of the late Canon F. V. Thornton. He resides during the University terms at Trinity College, Cambridge, and in vacation at Aldourie, Branksome Wood Road, Bournemouth. He is a member of the Athenæum Club.

JACKSON, Thomas Graham, R.A., M.A., F.S.A., is the son of Hugh Jackson, a solicitor, and was born at Hampstead, on Dec. 21, 1835. He was educated at Brighton College and Wadham College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar. He took honours at both Classical Moderations and the Final School of Lit. Hum.; graduated B.A. in 1858, and was elected a Fellow of his College in 1864. He vacated his Fellowship in 1880, but was elected an Hon. Fellow in 1882. Selecting the profession of an architect, he was a pupil of Sir George Gilbert Scott, R.A., from 1858 to 1861, was elected an A.R.A. in 1892, and became a full Academician in 1896. Mr. Jackson's name is closely connected with most of the recent buildings in Oxford, whether it be restoration, additions, or entirely new work; and the following buildings in the University and city may be cited as instances of his skill in design, and in blending new work with old: The New Examinations Schools of the University; restoration of the Bodleian Library, St. Mary's (the University), and All Saints' Churches; new additional buildings for Brasenose, Lincoln, Corpus, Trinity, Balliol, and Hertford Colleges; Somerville Hall; the City High School; and the High School for Girls. He has provided new buildings for some important public schools, viz.: Rugby, Harrow, Westminster, Uppingham, Radley, Brighton, Giggleswick, Cranbrook, &c., as also new buildings at the Inner Temple and at the Drapers' Hall. Amongst his churches may be mentioned those at Annesley, Hornblotton, Stratton, Wimbledon, Northington, &c. He has also furnished designs for numerous private houses. Mr. Jackson is the author of: "Modern Gothic Architecture," 1873; "Dalmatia, the Quarnero, and Istria," 1887; "Wadham College, Oxford: its History and Buildings" (with illustrations), 1893; "The Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Oxford: its History and Architecture"; and numerous articles on subjects connected with Architecture. Addresses: 14 Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.; and Eagle House, Wimbledon.

JACKSON, The Right Hon. William Lawies, M.P., J.P., eldest son of the late Mr. William Jackson, of Leeds, was born at Otley in 1840, and was educated privately and at a Moravian school. He is a Director of the Great Northern Railway Company, and a prominent figure in the leather and woollen trades. He represented Leeds from April 1880 until the dissolution in 1885, after having unsuccessfully contested the borough in 1876. In 1885, 1886, 1892, and 1895, he was returned for the Northern division of Leeds. In Lord Salisbury's first administration he received the important appointment of Financial Secretary to the Treasury, in succession to Sir Henry Holland, and in the Ministry of 1866 again held the same post. He was regarded as one of the strongest of the subordinate members of the administration, and in 1891-92 was Chief Secretary for Ireland. In 1890 he was made a Privy Councillor. He married, in 1860, Grace, daughter of G. Tempest. Addresses: 27 Cadogan Square, S.W., &c.; and Athenæum.

JACKSON, William Walrond, D.D., Rector of Exeter College, Oxford, eldest son of the late Right Rev. William Walrond Jackson, D.D., Bishop of Antigua, West Indies, was born in Trinidad on May 17, 1838, and educated at Codrington College, Barbadoes, and at Balliol College, Oxford; B.A. 1860 (first class Classics Moderations, 1858; second class Lit. Humaniores, 1860); M.A. 1863; D.D. 1892. Dr. Jackson was elected to an open Fellowship at Exeter College in 1863; he was Tutor of that Society from 1863 to 1883; Proctor of the University in 1872; Secretary of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board, 1876-80; Select Preacher before Oxford University, 1880-82; Censor of the Non-Collegiate Students, 1883-87; and was elected Rector of Exeter College in 1887. He is a Member of the Hebdomadal Council, and of various educational bodies within and outside the University. He has always taken an active part in educational questions in Oxford, and in all questions affecting the relations between the University and the education of the country at large. Address: Exeter College, Oxford.

JACOB, The Right Rev. Edgar, D.D., Bishop of Newcastle-on-Tyne, is a son of the late Archdeacon Jacob, and of Anna, eldest daughter of the late Hon. and Rev. G. T. Noel, Canon of Winchester. He was educated at Winchester and at New College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar. He took a first class in Classical Moderations in 1865, and a third class in Lit. Hum. in 1867. Ordained by the late Bishop Wilberforce in 1868, he was successively curate of Taynton and Witney, Oxfordshire. A year of parochial work in Bermondsey followed, after which he accepted the domestic chaplaincy to the late Dr. Milman, Bishop of Calcutta, remaining in India with that prelate until his death in 1876. In 1877 he had charge of the Wilberforce Memorial Mission in South London. In 1878 he was appointed by his old college of Winchester to the important parish of Portsea. During his long incumbency here the parish church was rebuilt by an anonymous donor, who afterwards was found to be the late W. H. Smith. Dr. Jacob was appointed an Hon. Canon of Winchester in 1884, Hon. Chaplain to the Queen in 1887, and Chaplain-in-Ordinary, 1890-96. He was Examining Chaplain to Bishop Browne of Winchester from 1876 to 1891; Chaplain to Bishop Thorold of Winchester, 1891-95; to Bishop Davidson of Winchester, 1895-96; Rural Dean of Landport, 1892-96; Proctor in Convocation for Hants and the Isle of Wight, 1895-96. He published in 1890 "The Divine Society" (Cambridge Lectures on Pastoral Theology). Addresses: Benwell Tower, Newcastle-on-Tyne; and Athenæum.

JACOBS, Joseph, was born in 1854, and educated at Sydney Grammar School and University, and thence came to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was senior in the Moral Science Tripos in 1876. He also took a scholarship at London. He has made his mark as editor, critic, anthropologist, and folklorist. He wrote in 1882 the article in the Times, on the persecution of the Jews, which attracted much attention. He has contributed to the Archæological Review, Journal of Anthropological Institute, and the principal magazines. He was philosophical critic of the Athenæum from 1878 to 1888, and also contributed to it the necrologies of George Eliot, Browning, Newman, Matthew Arnold, &c., which have since been collected in book form. Recently he did the necrologies of Tennyson and Renan in the Academy. He has been editor of "Folklore," and is now editing the "Jewish Year Book" and the "Literary Year Book," besides being Secretary of the Russo-Jewish Committee, and President of the Jewish Historical Society of England. Among the books he has edited, with volumes of Introductions and Notes, are "The Fables of Bidpai," "The Fables of Æsop," "Daphnis and Chloe," "The Palace of Pleasure," and "The Letters of James Howell." He has also translated Baltheasar Gracian's "Art of Worldly Wisdom," for the Golden Treasury series. He published "Celtic Fairy Tales" in 1890; "Indian Fairy Tales" in 1891; "Studies in Jewish Statistics" in 1892; "Tennyson and In Memoriam" in 1892; and the "Jews of Angevin England" and "More English Fairy Tales" in 1893. Amongst his more recent publications may be mentioned "Studies in Biblical Archaeology," 1894; "Sources of Spanish-Jewish History," 1894; "Jewish Ideals," 1896; "As Others saw Him" (a Jewish Life of Christ), 1895. In the winter of 1896 Mr. Jacobs visited America on a lecturing tour. Address: Merodelia, Grafton Road, Acton, W.

JACOBS, William Wymark, son of William Jacobs, was born on Sept. 18, 1863, in London, and was educated at a private school. He entered the Savings Bank Department of the Civil Service in 1883. As an author he has published "Many Cargoes," 1896; and "The Skipper's Wooing," 1897. His address is: 112 Manor Road, Stoke Newington, N.

JAMES, Lord, The Right Hon. Henry James, Q.C., Hon. LL.D. Cambridge, youngest son of Philip Turner James, Esq., of Hereford, by Frances Gertrude, third daughter of John Bodenham, Esq., of Presteign, Radnorshire, was born at Hereford, Oct. 30, 1828, and received his education at Cheltenham College. He was called to the Bar in the Middle Temple in 1852, and went the Oxford Circuit. He had already distinguished himself in his Inn, having been Lecturer's Prizeman at the Inner Temple in 1850, and again in 1851. Mr. James was nominated to the ancient order of "postman" of the Court of Exchequer in 1867; was made a Queen's Counsel in June 1869; and became a Bencher of his Inn in 1870. In March 1869 he obtained a seat in the House of Commons as one of the members for Taunton, unseating, on a scrutiny, his opponent, Mr. Serjeant Cox (who had been returned at the general election of the previous December), and continued to represent that borough in the Liberal interest until 1885, when he was returned for Bury (S.E. Lancashire). During the session of 1872 he took a prominent part in the debates on the Judicature Bill. In September 1873 Mr. Gladstone appointed him Solicitor-General in succession to Sir George Jessel, and in November of that year he became Attorney-General, and received the honour of knighthood. He went out of office with the Liberal party in February 1874. He was again appointed Attorney-General on the return of the Liberals to power under Mr. Gladstone in May 1880. During this second tenure of office he introduced and carried through Parliament the Corrupt Practices (Parliamentary Elections) Act. In Mr. Gladstone's administration of 1886 Sir Henry James (who had been offered the Lord Chancellorship) declined to take office, on the ground of disagreement with the Prime Minister's Home Rule policy. He was returned unopposed for Bury, as a Unionist Liberal, at the general election of 1886, and has since then been one of the fighting leaders of the Liberal Unionist party. He was one of the counsel for the Times in the action of O'Donnel v. Walter, and as one of the leading counsel for that paper in the Parnell Commission delivered an able address, forming a retrospect of the history of Ireland from his point of view. In 1892 he was again returned for Bury, and took a leading part in the discussion of the Home Rule Bill in 1893, moving several amendments which were adopted. He was one of the Chairmen of Standing Committees in that Parliament. He was raised to the Peerage in 1895 by the title of Lord James of Hereford. From 1892 to 1895 he was Attorney-General to the Prince of Wales as Duke of Cornwall, and since 1895 has been Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. In 1896 he was appointed a Member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In August 1898 the Royal Commissioners of the International Exhibition of 1851 elected Lord James of Hereford a member of their body, and placed him on the Board of Management. Addresses: 41 Cadogan Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

JAMES, Henry, American novelist and essayist, was born at New York City, April 15, 1843. He is the son of the late Henry James, a forcible writer on religious and philosophical topics (born 1811; died Dec. 18, 1882). In his eleventh year his family went abroad, and after some stay in England made a long sojourn in France and Switzerland. On their return to America in 1860 they first resided in Newport, Rhode Island, removing to Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1866. Mr. James attended the Harvard Law School for a year or two while his family were at Newport, but a few years after their removal to Cambridge, 1869, he went abroad, where he has since remained, with the exception of occasional brief visits home. He now lives in London, though he spends considerable time in Italy. He has been a contributor to most of the American magazines, but his celebrity rests mainly upon his novels, which usually deal with the American as found abroad. His published books are: "Watch and Ward," 1871; "A Passionate Pilgrim, and other Tales," 1875; "Roderick Hudson," 1875; "Transatlantic Sketches," 1875; "The American," 1877; "French Poets and Novelists," 1878; "The Europeans," 1878; "Daisy Miller," 1878; "An International Episode," 1879; "Hawthorne" (one of the English Men of Letters series), 1879; "A Bundle of Letters," 1879; "Confidence," 1879; "Diary of a Man of Fifty," 1880; "Washington Square," 1880; "The Portrait of a Lady," 1881; "Siege of London," 1883; "Portraits of Places," 1884; "Tales of Three Cities," 1884; "A Little Tour in France," 1884; "Author of Beltraffio," 1885; "The Bostonians," 1886; "Princess Casamassima," 1886; "Partial Portraits," 1888; "The Aspern Papers," &c., 1888; "The Reverberator," 1888; "A London Life," 1889; "The Tragic Muse," 1890; "The Real Thing," 1892; "The Private Life," 1893; "Essays in London," 1893; "Picture and Text," 1893; "The Album," "The Reprobate," "Tenants," "Disengaged," 1894; "Terminations," 1895; "Embarrassments," "The other House," 1896; "The Spoils of Poynton," "What Maisie Knew," 1897; and "In a Cage," 1898. He also produced in London, September 1891, a play founded on his novel "The American," and bearing the same title, and more recently, at the St. James's Theatre, London, "Guy Domville," a drama with an eighteenth-century hero. Address: c/o W. Heinemann, 21 Bedford Street, W.C.

JAMES, Rev. Herbert Armitage, D.D., Head-Master of Rugby School, was born on Aug. 3, 1844, at Kirkdale, Liverpool, being the second son of the Rev. Dr. James, then Incumbent of St. Mary's, Kirkdale. He was educated at Abergavenny Grammar School, and Jesus and Lincoln Colleges, Oxford, being a scholar of Lincoln College. He was President of the Oxford Union Society in 1871, took a first class in Classics in both Moderations and the final schools, and was elected a Fellow of St. John's College. He was an Assistant-Master at Marlborough College from 1872 to 1875, Head-Master of Rossall School from 1875 to 1886, Dean of St. Asaph from 1886 to 1889, Principal of Cheltenham College from 1889 to 1895, and in the latter year was appointed Head-Master of Rugby. He was Chairman of the Head-Masters' Conference in 1896-97. He is the author of "School Ideals" (sermons preached at Rossall School), 1887. Addresses: School House, Rugby; and Athenæum.

JAMES, The Rev. Sydney Rhodes, M.A., head-master of Malvern College, was born at Aldeburgh, on May 30, 1855, and is the eldest son of Rev. Herbert James, rector of Livermere, Suffolk. He was educated at Haileybury College, and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was elected Scholar in 1874. He obtained the Bell University Scholarship in 1875, and was eighth Classic in 1878, being in the same year honourably mentioned for the Chancellor's Medals. From 1879-97 he was assistant-master at Eton, and in 1897 was appointed head-master of Malvern. He was ordained deacon in 1883, priest in 1897. He has taken a keen interest in the Volunteer movement at Eton, and in 1878 was captain of the Cambridge University

Rugby football team. He is married to a daughter of H. Hoare, Esq., late of Staplehurst. Address: School House, Malvern College.

JAMESON, Surgeon-Major-General James, C.B., M.D., LL.D., Glasgow, Director of the Army Medical Department, was born at Kilbirnie, Ayrshire, on Aug. 15, 1837. He is the second son of W. Jameson, Esq., of Ladeside, and was educated at the High School and University of Glasgow, where he graduated in medicine in 1857; the same year he was admitted a Licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. He entered the Army Medical Staff as an assistant-surgeon in November 1857. He joined the 47th Foot (North Lancashire Regiment) and proceeded to Canada. He afterwards served in the West Indies, and while he was at Trinidad a severe epidemic of yellow fever occurred which led to his being specially promoted to Staff-Surgeon in consideration of his highly meritorious services. This start over many seniors was afterwards neutralised by an Army Order which made promotion to the relative rank of lieutenant-colonel contingent on 20 years' actual full-pay service. During the Franco-Prussian war of 1870 he commanded a division of the English Ambulance. He was promoted Brigade-Surgeon in 1883 and Surgeon-Major-General in 1893, and, for two years before succeeding to his present appointment, he served as professional assistant to Sir William Mackinnon. Surgeon-Major-General Jameson is a Knight of Grace of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem and an LL.D. of Glasgow University. He married, in 1864, Mary, daughter of the Rev. R. W. Cartwright, of Kingston, Ontario. Address: Newlands, Eltham, Kent.

JAMESON, Leander Starr, C.B., M.D., was born in Edinburgh in 1853. He is the son of the late Mr. R. W. Jameson, a Writer to the Signet and journalist. Deciding to enter the medical profession, he came to London in 1870 and joined the Medical School of University College Hospital. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and M.B. and B.S. of London University in 1875, taking a gold medal and first-class Honours in Forensic Medicine, and third-class Honours in Obstetric Medicine. He proceeded M.D. in 1877. Before qualifying he held a dressership under Sir John Erichsen, and also gained the Atkinson-Morley Scholarship at University College. After graduation he was appointed House Physician to Sir John R. Reynolds, and House Surgeon to John Marshall, F.R.S., and also Demonstrator of Anatomy to the Hospital. In 1878 he became Resident Medical Officer, but his period of office was interrupted by a voyage of some months to the United States, where he went in charge of a patient, and was cut short by the fact of a good opening presenting itself at Kimberley. About this time, too, his health broke down through over-work, and he decided to go to Kimberley in the hope that a complete change of climate and environments would quite restore him. He arrived in South Africa in 1878, entered into partnership with a Dr. Prince, and soon acquired a large practice. His success as a doctor was very remarkable, and among his patients on various occasions were President Krüger, President Brand of the Orange Free State, and the Matabele chief Lobengula, whom he treated for gout. His professional income at that time has been estimated at between £5000 and £6000 a year. It was at Kimberley that Mr. Rhodes and Dr. Jameson first met and formed that close friendship which has existed ever since. During 1888 the British South Africa Company experienced a great deal of difficulty in the negotiations for the opening up of Mashonaland, and it was at this stage in the history of the Chartered Company that Dr. Jameson first lent active assistance to his friend and abandoned a magnificent practice to undertake an arduous and dangerous mission. In order properly to develop Mashonaland and other adjacent territories it became necessary to obtain concessions from Lobengula, the Matabele chief, through whose country the pioneer force wished to pass. Dr. Jameson offered to carry out the mission and went to Buluwayo. Ultimately Lobengula agreed to all that was demanded of him. In 1889 the Home Government granted a Royal Charter to the British South Africa Company, entrusting it with the development of the extensive regions lying to the south of the Zambesi. An expedition was therefore decided upon, and Mr. Selous was instructed to make a road into Mashonaland. But a check was placed upon the operations owing to the renewed hostility of Lobengula and the aggressive attitude of the Matabele. Dr. Jameson again gave up his medical practice and undertook another mission to the wavering king, with a perfectly successful result. It now became more and more evident that his services were indispensable to the Chartered Company and to Mr. Rhodes. Dr. Jameson therefore relinquished altogether his medical practice, and joined the Pioneer Expedition. He accompanied it into Mashonaland and settled at Fort Salisbury as the representative of Mr. Rhodes. In a few months he started upon an exploring expedition through an unknown country to discover, if possible, a route leading to the East Coast of Africa, which might be constructed as a waggon road and ultimately converted into a railway. But as a wide belt of the country through which he passed is inhabited by the tsetse fly, whose bite is fatal to oxen, the idea of a waggon road was abandoned and the Beira Railway constructed, which has reduced freights into Mashonaland by one half. Dr. Jameson's next venture was a mission to Gungunhana, King of Gazaland, who had been defeated by the Portuguese and taken prisoner. Gungunhana had for years asked the British Government to assume a Protectorate over his country without avail; the Chartered Company therefore entered into negotiations with him with a view to granting him a subsidy for certain concessions. This arrangement was strongly resented by the Portuguese, who immediately asserted a suzerainty over Gazaland. Their claim was allowed by Lord Salisbury. Dr. Jameson then determined to undertake a journey to Gungunhana before the Portuguese could make final arrangements. In company with two other Englishmen he started his march over 600 miles of entirely unexplored and unhealthy country, and made the journey in 43 days. They endured great hardships and were nearly starved, and being constantly wet with wading through rivers and marshy ground, suffered severely from malarial fever. His two companions nearly died by the way, and he himself never fully recovered from the effects of that terrible journey. Dr. Jameson had no difficulty in getting a concession signed by the King, who was glad of the opportunity of throwing off the Portuguese yoke. Although no territory was ceded to the Chartered Company on that occasion, it was entirely owing to the prompt action of Dr. Jameson that the Portuguese were prevented from absorbing Gazaland. During 1891 the Administrator of the Chartered Territories resigned, and Dr. Jameson, at the instance of Mr. Rhodes, was appointed his successor. He had not been in office many months when a large body of armed Boers made an attempt to invade a portion of Mashonaland which borders the Transvaal. Dr. Jameson met them and explained that he would oppose their passage by armed force. He had a parley with the leaders, and persuaded some of them to trek into Mashonaland, where they would be welcomed and enjoy equal rights with the English settlers. Ultimately the remainder returned peaceably home. About this time signs of unrest became only too apparent among the Matabele, and to prevent a massacre of whites, Dr. Jameson determined to take the field, more especially as he discovered that the Matabele had for many months been secretly preparing for war. He made a plan of campaign, foresaw the duration of the war and the speedy collapse of the rebellion, and astonished his officers by his power of organisation and tactical ability. In a few months, after several successful engagements, he completely subdued the Matabele, and having been allowed a free hand in the business, he conducted the settlement with admirable skill. Towards the end of 1894 Dr. Jameson visited England, meeting with a very cordial reception. On Jan. 24, 1895, a dinner was given in his honour in Whitehall Rooms by his fellow students at University College, where he had been Resident Medical Officer for two years. Mr. Christopher Heath was in the chair, and many eminent members of the medical profession were present. A few days after he delivered an address in the Imperial Institute before the Prince of Wales and an audience of 2500 people. The past, present, and future of South Africa constituted the subject of the address. Before he left England a C.B., civil division, was conferred upon him in recognition of his splendid work in South Africa. Towards the end of 1896 the discontent and agitation of the Outlander population of Johannesburg took a serious turn, and they secretly armed and determined to force the Boer Government to grant them constitutional rights. On Dec. 28 a letter was sent to Dr. Jameson, who was at Mafeking, asking him to come and help them. On the following day he started to their assistance with the Bechuanaland Police, 600 strong. Major Sir John Willoughby was in command of the force, and they took with them eight Maxim guns. After having cut the telegraph wires, they crossed the Transvaal border and pressed on to Krugersdorp. As soon as the news reached England, Mr. Chamberlain ordered the High Commissioner of South Africa publicly to repudiate Dr. Jameson's act by proclamation. At the same time Sir Hercules Robinson sent a despatch to Jameson ordering his immediate return. Dr. Jameson, however, disregarded the message, and at Krugersdorp he was met by a force of 1000 Boers, and fighting ensued. He then pressed on to Doornkop, hourly expecting some promised assistance from Johannesburg. Meanwhile the Boer force had been considerably augmented, and Jameson at last hoisted a flag of truce and gave in on the condition that the lives of his followers were spared. They were taken to Pretoria, and he and his officers were sentenced to be shot; but it was afterwards arranged that the whole force should be given up to

Her Majesty's Government. The Queen at once telegraphed to President Krüger her satisfaction at the decision of the Transvaal Government. At this juncture in the crisis the German Emperor sent a telegram to the Boer President congratulating him upon successfully resisting the invasion of the Transvaal. This interference on the part of the German Emperor caused the most widespread indignation in England, and led to the commissioning of a Flying Squadron. In spite of the disastrous consequences of the illegal raid, Dr. Jameson upon his arrival in London met with a popular ovation. He was taken to Bow Street and charged before Sir John Bridge under the Foreign Enlistment Act, and with five of his officers was committed for trial. The trial was at bar before three judges, the Lord Chief-Justice presiding. The accused were all found guilty and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, Dr. Jameson receiving fifteen months, the heaviest term. As a result of the imprisonment his health was broken, and after a necessary operation the Home Secretary ordered his release. He had served about a year of his time. Dr. Jameson has since led a retired life, chiefly devoting himself to the reading of English and foreign scientific and professional literature. During the sitting of the South African Commission, which had been appointed to inquire into the causes of the raid, Dr. Jameson was called as a witness, and in his evidence made use of the expression, "If I had been successful, I should have been forgiven."

JANET, Paul, French philosopher, was born in Paris on April 30, 1823. He is a follower of Cousin, and has been a Professor at Bourges and Strassburg, and at the Lycée of Louis-le-Grand, Paris. In 1864 he became Professor of the History of Philosophy at the Sorbonne, and a member of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, which institution awarded prizes for his "La Famille," 1855; and "Histoire de la Philosophie dans l'antiquité et dans les temps modernes," 1858. Among his more recent works are: "Histoire de la Science Politique," 1871; "Problèmes du XIX. Siècle," 1872; "Philosophie de la Révolution Française," 1875; "Les Causes-Finales, 1876; "La Philosophie Française Contemporaine," 1879; "Les Maîtres de la Pensée Moderne," and "Les Origines du Socialisme Contemporain," 1883; "Histoire de la Philosophie," in collaboration with M. G. Séailles, 1887; a centenary history of the French Revolution, 1889; "La Philosophie de Lamennais," 1890. He has also contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes, Dictionnaire des Sciences Philosophiques, Le Temps, &c., and is a Commander of the Legion of Honour. He is also a member of the Higher Council of Public Instruction. His Paris address is 59 Rue de Grenelle.

JANSSEN, Pierre Jules César, French astronomer, was born at Paris, Feb. 22, 1824, and in 1860 gained his D.Sc. by a remarkable thesis on "L'Absorption de la Chaleur rayonnante obscure dans les milieux de l'Œil." In 1853 he was Assistant-Professor at the Lycée Charlemagne, and from 1865 to 1871 Professor at the School of Architecture. His chief work, however, has been done in connection with the numerous astronomical missions on which he has been sent. In 1857 he was sent to Peru to determine the magnetic equator, but the fever of the virgin forests incapacitated him. From 1861 to 1864 he was studying the solar spectrum in Italy. In 1867 he observed the annular eclipse at Trani, and the eruptions of Santorin. In 1868 he was charged to observe the eclipse of the sun at Guntoor, in India, one of the most important of modern times, which led to the discovery of the corona. The Academy of Sciences granted him the Lalande Prize, increased specially to five times its normal value. To observe the eclipse of 1870 in Algeria he escaped from Paris in a balloon, December 2, and travelled 300 miles in five hours, descending at Savenay. In 1874 he observed the transit of Venus in Japan with great success, and he accompanied an English expedition to Siam in 1875. In 1891 he ascended Mont Blanc to study the question of an observatory. His reports have been included in the "Annales de Chimie," and the "Archives des Missions Scientifiques." He is an honorary LL.D. of Edinburgh, and F.R.S. of England. He was granted the Rumford Medal in 1877. In 1875 he was appointed Director of the Government Observatory at Meudon. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and his Paris address is 63 Rue de Vaugirard.

JANVIER, Louis Joseph, born at Port-au-Prince, Hayti, May 7, 1855, son of Joseph Janvier, a retired infantry captain and district administrator, grandson of a cavalry colonel, was educated till fourteen years of age at the Wesleyan Primary School, founded at Port-au-Prince and conducted by English Wesleyan missionaries; then at the Lycée National, till he was eighteen; then at the School of Medicine and Military Hospital of Port-au-Prince, till he was two-and-twenty; then at the Faculty of Medicine of Paris. He is a Doctor of Medicine of the University of Paris, and was Prizeman of the same in June 1881. He entered the School of Political Sciences of Paris in October 1881; passed with success the examinations of the Administrative Section in July 1883; of the Diplomatic Section in July 1885; of the Political Economy and Finance Section in July 1887, and obtained the three separate diplomas. He was the delegate of the Haytian Government at the Conferences held from 1884 to 1887 for the Copyright Convention of Berne, and signed the Convention of 1886 and ratified it. He has been the correspondent in Paris during the Exhibition of 1889 of the Moniteur, the "journal officiel" of the Republic of Hayti. Appointed Secretary to the Haytian Legation in London in September 1889, he was specially detached by permission of the President of Hayti as representative of the Haytian Orthodox Apostolic Church of Hayti at the Congress of Old Catholics at Lucerne, in September 1892. He has been Chargé d'Affaires of Hayti at the Court of St. James since November 1892. Publications: "La Phthisie Pulmonaire; Causes, Traitement, Préventif," "La République d'Hayti et ses Visiteurs," "Les Détracteurs de la Race Noire et d'Hayti," "Les Antinationaux," "Les Affaires d'Hayti," "De l'Egalité des Races," "Les Constitutions d'Hayti," "Le Vieux Piquet," "Hayti aux Haïtiens," "Une Chercheur." He is married to an English-born subject, Miss Jane Maria Windsor. Addresses: 5 Albany Court Yard, Piccadilly; and Holmbury, Mitcham Road, Tooting Gravenay, Surrey.

JAPAN, Mikado of. See MUTSU-HITO.

JAPP, Francis Robert, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry, Aberdeen University, was born at Dundee, Feb. 8, 1848. He is the youngest son of James Japp, minister of the Catholic Apostolic Church, and was educated at schools in Dundee and St. Andrews, and at the universities of St. Andrews, Edinburgh, Heidelberg, and Bonn. In 1881 he was appointed Lecturer on Chemistry in the Normal School of Science (now Royal College of Science), South Kensington. From 1885 to 1890 he was Foreign Secretary of the Chemical Society, and in the latter year received from the Society the Longstaff Medal for Chemical Research. In 1890 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the University of Aberdeen. He has published, chiefly in the Journal of the Chemical Society, numerous researches (over 60) dealing almost exclusively with questions relating to organic chemistry, and is also joint author, with Sir Edward Frankland, of a Text-book of Inorganic Chemistry. Address: The University, Aberdeen.

JARVIS, Thomas Stinson, Canadian author, was born in Toronto, May 31, 1854; was educated at Upper Canada College, and when seventeen years old was sent away for a year's travel. He went through Europe, spent a winter in Italy, and visited various Oriental countries. He studied law from 1875 to 1880, and was called to the Bar. His first literary effort, "Letters from East Longitudes," was compiled from letters written to his parents while in the East; in 1890 he published "Geoffrey Hampstead." In 1891 he removed to New York, where he published "Doctor Perdue" as his second novel, and "The Ascent of Life" followed early in 1894. The remainder of the year he spent in Paris and London, whence he published in New York "She Lived in New York."

JAYNE, The Right Rev. Francis John, D.D., M.A., Bishop of Chester, was born Jan. 1, 1845, and is the son of John Jayne, J.P. He was educated at Rugby School and Wadham College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar. He took a first class in Moderations in 1866, and a double first class in the Final Schools, 1868, in which year he became a Fellow of Jesus College. He was ordained in 1870, and was for a year curate of St. Clement's, Oxford, afterwards becoming Tutor of Keble College, where he remained until 1879. In that year he was appointed Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, of which institution he greatly increased the efficiency. In 1886 he accepted the important vicarage of Leeds, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Gott, who became Dean of Worcester. In 1889 he was consecrated Bishop of Chester. In 1892 the Bishop initiated a discussion on public-house reform, and has since urged the necessity of temperance legislation on constructive lines. He is a warm advocate of what is known as the "Gothenburg System" of State-controlled liquor-traffic, and both on the platform and in the press has constantly advocated his views. He married in 1872 Emily, daughter of Watts J. Garland, of Lisbon. Addresses: The Palace, Dee Side, Chester; and the Athenæum.

JEBB, Professor Richard Claverhouse, LL.D., D.C.L., Litt.D., Regius Professor of Greek, Cambridge University, and M.P., Cambridge University, born at Dundee, Aug. 27, 1841, is the eldest son of Robert Jebb, Esq., formerly counsel for the Revenue in Ireland; grandson of the late Mr. Justice Jebb; and grand-nephew of Bishop Jebb; while, on the maternal side, he is great-grandson of Bishop Horsley. He was educated at St. Columba's College, co. Dublin; at Charterhouse School, London; and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated as senior classic in 1862, and was soon afterwards elected a Fellow. As a classical lecturer of his College he took a foremost part in organising at Cambridge the system of Inter-Collegiate Classical Lectures, and was the first secretary of an association of college lecturers for that purpose. Along with Professor E. B. Cowell, he was also instrumental in founding the Cambridge Philological Society, of which he was the first secretary. In 1869 he was chosen by the Senate to be Public Orator of the University. In 1871 he was nominated by the University as a Governor of Charterhouse School, a post which he ceased to hold from 1875 (when he went to Glasgow) till 1893, when he was re-elected to it; in 1872 he was elected Classical Examiner in the University of London; and was also appointed Tutor of Trinity College; but resigned these posts on being called, in 1875, to fill the chair of Greek in the University of Glasgow. In 1878 he received from the King of the Hellenes the order of the Saviour, in recognition of his services to Greek studies; and in the following year the University of Edinburgh conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. In 1882 he was instrumental in founding the British School of Archaeology at Athens, of which he was the first secretary. In 1884 he was elected a Corresponding Member of the Archaeological Institute of the German Empire; and, on visiting the United States, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Harvard University. In 1885 the degree of Doctor of Letters was conferred on him by the University of Cambridge; in 1888 he received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Dublin, and that of Ph.D. from the University of Bologna; in 1891 the degree of LL.D. from the University of Glasgow, and that of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford. In 1889 he was elected Regius Professor of Greek at Cambridge; and in 1890 he succeeded the late Bishop Lightfoot as President of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies. He is also a F.S.A. In 1891, on the death of the Right Hon. H. C. Raikes, he was elected M.P. for the University of Cambridge, and was re-elected at the general elections in 1892 and 1895. In 1897 he was appointed by the Crown a Fellow of the University of London. He is a Governor of Charterhouse School, and a Fellow of St. Columba's College, co. Dublin. He is the author of a work in 2 vols. on "The Attic Orators"; also of "Selections from the Attic Orators," with notes; "The Characters of Theophrastus," with notes and translation; "Modern Greece"; "A Primer of Greek Literature"; a "Life of Richard Bentley" (in English Men of Letters, which has appeared in a German translation); an "Introduction to Homer," which has been translated into German and Russian; "Lectures on Greek Poetry," given at the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore; "Translations" into, and from, Greek and Latin; the "Electra" and "Ajax" of Sophocles, with notes (in Catena Classicorum); a complete edition of Sophocles, with critical notes, commentary, and translation (Cambridge University Press), 1883-96; and important articles on classical literature, history, and archæology, in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Dict. of Nat. Biography," the Classical Review, and Journal of Hellenic Studies. He is engaged on a critical edition of the poems and fragments of Bacchylides discovered in 1896. He has taken an active part in promoting the study and teaching of Modern Greek. He was appointed in 1894 a member of the Royal Commission on Secondary Education; served in 1896-97 on a Departmental Committee on the Regulations of the Science and Art Department (South Kensington); and was nominated in 1898 a member of the statutory Commission on the University of London. He served in 1896-97 as Chairman of a Select Parliamentary Committee on Burial Grounds. Both in the House of Commons and elsewhere he has taken an active interest in questions relating to the Church of England and to national education. In October 1898 he was appointed a Commissioner under the London University Act. He married Caroline Lane, daughter of the late Rev. John Reynolds, D.D., and widow of General A. E. Glemmer, U.S.A., in 1874. Addresses: Springfield, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

JEFFERSON, Joseph, actor, was born at Philadelphia, Feb. 20, 1829. His grandfather and great-grandfather were distinguished actors, and his mother, Mrs. Burke, was a celebrated vocalist. He appeared on the stage at a very early age, and gradually rose to the front place as a comedian, and his merits are recognised in both England and America. His range of characters is very wide, covering almost the entire field of comedy and farce, without degenerating into burlesque. His most famous rôle is that of Rip Van Winkle in Mr. Dion Boucicault's play of that name, founded upon the story by Washington Irving; a character which Mr. Jefferson may be said to have created, as well as to have made his own. Perhaps he is equally successful as Bob Acres in "The Rivals," Dr. Pangloss in "The Heir at Law," and Caleb Plummer in "The Cricket on the Hearth." Besides playing in every city in the United States, he has made professional visits to England, Australia, and New Zealand.

JENKINSON, Francis John Henry, M.A., Librarian of the University Library, Cambridge, was born on Aug. 20, 1853, and is a son of John Henry Jenkinson. He was educated at Marlborough and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was Assistant-Tutor. He is a Fellow of his College. Address: 10 Brookside, Cambridge.

JENNER, George Francis Birt, Minister to the Republic of Central America, was born in Paris, May 26, 1840, and is the eldest son of Albert Lascelles Jenner, of Wenvoe Castle, Glamorgan. He was educated abroad, and entered the Diplomatic Service in 1857, receiving his first appointment to Washington in 1859, and accompanied Lord Lyons in attendance on the Prince of Wales during his travels in Canada and the United States, 1860. He was Acting Consul-General at Tabreez, 1868; Secretary of Legation in Mexico in 1884, and at Buenos Ayres, 1887. In 1892 he was appointed Minister at Bogota, and in 1897 to his present post. Club: St. James's.

JERMYN, The Most Rev. Hugh Willoughby, D.D., late Bishop of Brechin, Primus of Scotland, was born at Swaffham Prior, Cambridgeshire, in 1820, is the son of the Rev. G. B. Jermyn, LL.D., and was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge (B.A. 1841, M.A. 1847, D.D. 1872). Having accepted an appointment in the West Indies, he was made Archdeacon of St. Christopher. In 1858 he became Rector of Nettlecombe, Somersetshire, and in 1871 was appointed Bishop of Colombo, being consecrated in the chapel of Lambeth Palace, Oct. 28, 1871. He resigned this See early in 1875, and came home. Soon afterwards he was elected Bishop of Brechin, and was formally installed at Dundee, Jan. 18, 1876. In September 1886 he was elected Primus of the Episcopal Church of Scotland in succession to Bishop Eden, and resigned in March 1899. He married (2), in 1879, Sophia Henrietta, daughter of the late Rev. Edward C. Ogle. Address: Forbes Court, Broughty Ferry.

JERNINGHAM, Sir Hubert Edward Henry, K.C.M.G., J.P., Governor of Trinidad and Tobago, was born Oct. 18, 1842, and is the son of C. W. E. Jerningham, of Painswick, Gloucester. He is a Bachelor-ès-Lettres of the University of France, and entered the Diplomatic Service in 1866. He was M.P. for Berwick from 1881 to 1885. From 1887 to 1889 he was Colonial Secretary of Honduras, and of Mauritius from 1889 to 1892, when he became Governor, a post he held until he was appointed to his present post in 1897. He is a prolific writer, among his best-known works being: "Reminiscences of an Attaché," "Life in a French Château," "Diane de Breteuille," and "History of Norham Castle." He married, in 1874, Annie, widow of C. Mather and daughter of E. Liddell. Addresses: Longridge Towers, Berwick-on-Tweed; Government House, Port of Spain; Athenæum.

JEROME, Jerome Klapka, was born at Walsall, May 2, 1861, and is the son of a gentleman belonging to a west of England family, a colliery proprietor. He came to London when a child, and has lived there ever since. He was educated at the Philological School, Marylebone, served a good many callings, was clerk, schoolmaster, shorthand writer, reporter, actor, and journalist. In 1885 he published "On the Stage—and Off," a brief account of his own stage experiences; in 1886, "Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow," a book of essays; in the same year he produced at the Globe Theatre "Barbara," a one-act comedy. In 1888 he produced "Sunset," a one-act comedy; "Fennel," an adaptation of a poetical play from the French; "Wood Barrow Farm," a three-act comedy. In 1889 he wrote "Stageland," a skit on stage conventionalities, and "Three Men in a Boat," a humorous story which has had an immense success. In 1890 he produced a three-act farce, "New Lamps for Old," and "Ruth," a play. In 1891 he published "The Diary of a Pilgrimage," and in 1892 he started the Idler magazine in co-editorship with Robert Barr. In 1893 he produced, in America, "The Councillor's Wife," a three-act comedy, played in England under the title of "The Prude's Progress"; published "Novel Notes," and John Ingerfield"; and started the weekly magazine-journal To-Day, from all connection with which, however, he retired a few years later in consequence of political and other differences with his co-proprietors. In 1897 he published "Sketches in Lavender," a book of short stories, and produced "The MacHaggis" at the Globe Theatre, a three-act farce. His latest work is "Letters to Clorinda," 1898. He married, in 1888, Jenyina Henrietta Stanley, daughter of Lieutenant Nesya, of the Spanish army. Addresses: 5 Park Row, S.W.; and Gould's Grove, Wallingford.

JERSEY, Earl of, The Right Hon. Victor Albert George Child Villiers, G.C.M.G., D.L., J.P., was born March 20, 1845, and succeeded to the earldom in 1859.

He is eldest son of the sixth Earl and of his wife, the eldest daughter of the late Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Peel, Bart. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford; was Lord-in-Waiting to her Majesty, 1875-77; and Paymaster-General, 1889-90; and was appointed, on the retirement of Lord Carrington in 1890, to be Governor of New South Wales, where he was succeeded in 1893 by Sir R. W. Duff. He is Lord-Lieutenant, County Councillor, and J.P. for Oxfordshire; J.P. and D.L. for Warwickshire; and County Alderman for Middlesex; Chairman Light Railways Commission; principal proprietor of Child's Bank; and was formerly Cornet in the Oxfordshire Yeomanry Cavalry. The Earl married, in 1872, the Hon. Margaret Elizabeth Leigh, daughter of the second Baron Leigh, and has two sons and three daughters. Addresses: Hiddleton Park, Bicester; Osterley Park, Isleworth.

JERVIS-SMITH, The Rev. Frederick John, M.A., M.I.E.E., Mem. Phys. Soc. London, F.R.S., was born at Taunton on April 2, 1848, and is the only son of the late Rev. Frederick J. Smith, Vicar of St. John's, Taunton, and Prebendary of Wells. He was educated by tutors and at Pembroke College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1872. He was ordained Deacon in 1877, and Priest in 1880. He became Curate of St. John's, Taunton, and Vicar of the same church, 1885. He is patron of two livings. He was appointed Millard Lecturer in Mechanics at Trinity College, Oxford, in 1886, and University Lecturer in Mechanics in 1888. He was Public Examiner in 1887-88 and in 1892-93. He served on a committee appointed by the Home Secretary to inquire into the causes of explosions due to compressed gas (1895-96, at the Home Office). He has long been occupied in researches in Practical Mechanics and Physics, and is the inventor of dynamometric and integrating instruments, and of chronographic apparatus used in measuring the flight of projectiles, and in physiological research and the process known as Inductoscript. He is the author of many papers on physical subjects. In February 1897, by a Deed Poll in the High Court of Judicature, he changed his name from Smith to Jervis-Smith. Address: 28 Norham Gardens, Oxford.

JESSOP, Thomas Richard, F.R.C.S., J.P. for the West Riding of Yorkshire, received his medical education at Leeds. He was formerly resident medical officer at the Leeds General Infirmary, to which he is now Consulting Surgeon, and Professor of Surgery at Yorkshire College, and Hon. Surgeon to the Leeds Public Dispensary. He is a Member of Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Eng., and represents Yorkshire on the Council of the British Medical Association. In 1889 he delivered the presidential address as President of the Surgical Section of the British Medical Association. He has contributed important papers on surgical subjects to the Lancet, the British Medical Journal, and the Transactions of the Obstetrical Society. Address: 32 Park Square, Leeds.

JESSOPP, The Rev. Augustus, D.D., was born on Dec. 20, 1824, at Albury Place, Cheshunt, Herts, where his father was J.P. for the county and a Deputy-Lieutenant. His mother, née Elizabeth Tucker, was eldest daughter and co-heir of the Hon. Bridger Goodrich, of Bermuda. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he is M.A.; and he is D.D. of Oxford. He was appointed Head-Master of Helston Grammar School, Cornwall, 1855; Head-Master of Norwich School, 1859; and Rector of Scarning, Norfolk, 1879. He was select preacher before the University of Oxford in 1870 and 1897-98. He became Hon. Canon in the Cathedral of Norwich; and was elected to an Honorary Fellowship in St. John's College, Cambridge, and in Worcester College, Oxford, in 1895. Dr. Jessopp is the author or editor of "Donne's Essays in Divinity," with Life, 1855; "Tales by Émile Souvestre, with Notes and Life of the Author," 1860, which has passed through five editions; "Norwich School Sermons," 1864; "A Manual of the Greek Accidence," 1865 (third edit., 1879); "The Fragments of Primitive Liturgies and Confessions of Faith contained in the writings of the New Testament," 1872; "Letters of Father Henry Walpole, S.J.," from the MSS. at Stonyhurst College, 1873; "One Generation of a Norfolk House, a contribution to Elizabethan History," 1878 (second edit., 1879); "Husenbeth's Emblems of Saints," edited for the Norfolk Archaeological Society, 1882; "History of the Diocese of Norwich" (S.P.C.K.), 1884; and contributions to the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews, Nineteenth Century, and other serials. His volume of social papers entitled "Arcadia, for Better for Worse," which was first issued in 1887, is already in the fifth edition; and his "Coming of the Friars, and other Historical Essays," published in 1888, and treating of some important social and religious movements during the Middle Ages, have been widely read in England and in the American States, and three editions were absorbed within a year. In 1898 appeared his "Life of John Donne, Dean of St. Paul's," in the Leaders of Religion series. Dr. Jessopp has contributed some important articles to the "Dictionary of National Biography"; the most notable being the life of Queen Elizabeth, and lives of the Cecil and Lord Burghley. He has likewise contributed many papers on historical and antiquarian subjects in the Proceedings of the Norfolk and Norwich Archaeological Society, of which he is a Vice-President. Among his more recent works should be mentioned "Doris, an Idyl of Arcady," 1892; "Pity the Poor Birds," and "Studies by a Recluse," 1893; "Random Roaming and other Papers," 1894; and "Frivola," 1896. He married Mary Ann, daughter of Charles Cotesworth, R.A., of Liverpool. Address: Scarning Rectory, Dereham, Norfolk.

JEUNE, The Right Hon. Sir Francis Henry, K.C.B., President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, eldest son of a late Bishop of Peterborough, was born in 1843, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained firsts in Classical Moderations and Literæ Humaniores, 1863 and 1865. He also won University prizes for historical essays, the Stanhope in 1863 and the Arnold in 1867. He has been a Fellow of Hertford, but immediately after taking his degree in 1865 he came to London to read for the Bar. Called at the Inner Temple in November 1868, he was created a Queen's Counsel twenty years after. He was well known as an ecclesiastical lawyer, and has held several ecclesiastical appointments. He was also extensively engaged in commons and rights of way cases, and before Parliamentary committees, and was junior counsel for the Claimant in the historic Tichborne Case. In January 1891, Mr. Jeune was appointed a Judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division in succession to the late Sir James Hannen, who had been promoted to be a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. The late Justice Butt was at that time President of the Probate Division, and on his death, in 1892, Sir Francis Jeune was appointed to succeed him as President, and was also appointed a Privy Councillor. In the same year he was appointed Judge-Advocate-General, and was, in 1897, created a K.C.B. for his services in that capacity. Sir Francis, then Mr. Jeune, married in 1881 Mary Susan Elizabeth, elder daughter of Mr. Stewart Mackenzie of Seaforth, and widow of Colonel the Hon. John Constantine Stanley, brother of the present Lord Stanley of Alderley. Addresses: Arlington Manor, Newbury, Berks; 79 Harley Street; and Athenæum.

JEUNE, Lady (Mary), is the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Stewart-Mackenzie of Seaforth. She was married (1) to the Hon. Constantine Stanley, second son of Lord Stanley of Alderley, and (2), in 1881, to Mr. Jeune, Q.C., now the Right Hon. Sir Francis Henry Jeune, K.C.B. Lady Jeune is well known for her philanthropy, and for her social brilliancy. She has frequently contributed to the magazines and reviews on social questions, especially on the position of Woman, whom she regards from an enlightened conservative point of view. She has published a selection of her essays under the title "Lesser Questions." Addresses: 79 Harley Street, W.; and Arlington Manor, Newbury.

JEX-BLAKE, Sophia, M.D., is the daughter of Thomas Jex-Blake of Sussex Square, Brighton, and sister of the present Dean of Wells, and was born in January 1840. At the age of eighteen she became a mathematical tutor at Queen's College, London, where she remained for three years. After travelling on the Continent and in America, in order to study the education of girls, she entered on a course of medical training under Dr. Lucy Sewall, in Boston, U.S.A., in 1866. Returning to England two years later, she matriculated in the Medical Faculty of the University of Edinburgh. Being, however, not permitted to take her degree, she brought an action against the University in 1872, which she eventually lost in the Scotch Court of Appeal. She took the degree of M.D. at the University of Bern in 1877, and became a Licentiate in 1877, and a Member, in 1880, of the Irish College of Physicians. Leaving Edinburgh in 1874, she came to London, where she founded the London School of Medicine for women. She returned to Edinburgh in 1878, and in the same year opened a Dispensary for women and children, and a Cottage Hospital in 1885. In the following year she founded the Edinburgh School of Medicine for Women, which was recognised by the University of Edinburgh in 1894, and she is at the present time Dean of the school, and Lecturer on Midwifery. Dr. Jex-Blake is the author of "American Schools and Colleges," 1866; "Medical Women," 1872 and 1886; "Puerperal Fever," 1877; and "Care of Infants," 1884. Address: Brunsfield Lodge, Whitehouse Loan, Edinburgh.

JEX-BLAKE, The Very Rev. Thomas William, D.D., Dean of Wells, was born in London on Jan. 26, 1832, and is the only surviving son of Thomas Jex-Blake, J.P. for Norfolk, and Maria Emily, daughter of T. Cubitt, J.P. and D.L. for the same county. He was educated at Rugby, under Dr. Cotton, and at University College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar, and where he was placed in first class in Classical Moderations and Lit. Hum., and graduated B.A. in 1855. He took his M.A. in 1857, and D.D. in 1873. In 1855 he was appointed by Dr. Cotton Composition Master to the sixth form at Marlborough College, and was elected a Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in the same year. He vacated his fellowship on his marriage in 1857. Ordained Deacon in 1856 and Priest in 1857, he became an Assistant-Master at Rugby in 1858. In 1868 he was appointed Principal of Cheltenham College, and in February 1874 succeeded Dr. Hayman as Head-Master of Rugby at a difficult period of the school's history. In 1887 he resigned the Head-Mastership of Rugby, and was appointed to the Rectory of Alvechurch, Redditch, in the diocese of Worcester. He succeeded the late Dean Plumtre at Wells in February 1891, and is a Justice of the Peace for Worcestershire. He is the author of "Long Vacation in Continental Picture Galleries," 1858; of "Life and Faith," 1875; of "The Latin Sermon to the Clergy in St. Paul's," August 1892; and of "Higher Religious Education," 1896. He married Henrietta, daughter of John Cordery, of Hampstead, in 1857. Addresses: The Deanery, Wells; and Athenæum.

JOACHIM, Joseph, Mus. D. Camb. and Oxon., LL.D. Glasg., violinist, born at Kitsee, near Presburg, in Hungary, of Jewish parents, July 15, 1831, entered while very young the Conservatory of Music at Vienna, where he studied under Joseph Böhm. From the age of twelve years he attracted much attention at Leipzig by his rare skill on his instrument, and obtained an engagement, which he held for seven years, in the orchestra of the Gewandhaus. Meanwhile, however, he assiduously pursued his studies under the guidance of Ferdinand David, and also received lessons in the theory of music from Moritz Hauptmann. In 1850 he paid his first visit to Paris, and in the same year he was appointed Director of the Concerts at Weimar. In 1853 he became Master of the Chapel Royal at Hanover. After this he appeared in most of the capitals of Europe, and paid annual visits to London, where he gave several series of concerts. In 1869 he became a member of the Senate of the Berlin Academy, and was nominated Director of the School of Instrumental Music in the Conservatory of Music then recently established in the Prussian capital. He was created an honorary Mus. Doc. of the University of Cambridge, March 8, 1877. Herr Joachim's fame rests mainly on his extraordinary skill as an instrumentalist, but he is too great an artist not to keep his own wonderful technical ability always subordinate to the interpretation of the music he is playing. As a composer he belongs to the school of Schumann. The "Concert à la Hongroise" (Hungarian Concerto) is one of his chief compositions for violin and orchestra. In August 1882 he was appointed conductor of the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin, and Musical Director of the Royal Academy of Arts. He has frequently visited England since then, and has been principal violinist at the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall since they were first started. On March 17, 1889, the fiftieth anniversary of his first appearance in public was celebrated, he being presented with a magnificent violin by his admirers. Madame Amalie Joachim, his wife, the greatest of German ballad and oratorio singers, died in February 1899. Oxford University has conferred on him the D.C.L. degree, and Cambridge that of Mus. Doc. in 1877.

JOHNSON, Eastman, American artist, was born at Lovell, Maine, July 29, 1824. From the age of seventeen he devoted himself seriously to art work, and in 1849 went to Düsseldorf, where he studied two years, and afterwards resided for four years at the Hague, where, besides numerous portraits, he executed "The Savoyard" and "The Card-Players," his earliest elaborate pictures in oil. After visiting the principal European galleries, he established himself in Paris, but was soon after called home to Washington. In 1858 he settled at New York, where he still remains. His favourite subjects are American rural and domestic life, including the negro and other subjects, though of late he has devoted himself almost exclusively to portrait-painting. He revisited Europe in 1885. Among his best works, many of which have been reproduced in engraving and chromo-lithography, are: "The Old Kentucky Home," "Mating," "The Farmer's Sunday Morning," "The Village Blacksmith," "The Pension Agent," "The Maple-Sugar Camp," "Milton Dictating to his Daughters," "Consuelo," "A Light unto his Feet," "Corn-Husking Bee," "The Cranberry Harvest at Nantucket," and "The School of Philosophy at Nantucket." Among the portraits he has painted are those of Grover Cleveland, Chester A. Arthur, Dr. James M'Cosh, and William M. Evarts.

JOHNSON, The Most Rev. Edward Ralph, D.D., Hon. LL.D. Camb., late Bishop of Calcutta, fifth son of William Ponsonby Johnson, of Castlesteads, Cumberland, was born at Castlesteads, Feb. 17, 1828, and educated at Rugby, and at Wadham College, Oxford (B.A. 1850; M.A. 1860; D.D. 1876). He was ordained deacon and priest by the Bishop of Worcester—deacon, with a title to the curacy of Farnborough, in the county of Warwick—in 1851. He was appointed, in 1860, to a minor canonry in the cathedral of Chester, and to the curacy of the cathedral parish of St. Oswald. In 1866 the Dean and Chapter appointed him to the rectory of Northenden, in the county of Chester, where he succeeded the late Archdeacon Woolrough. He was selected by the Bishop of Chester, in 1871, to fill the post of Archdeacon of Chester, upon the resignation of the late Archdeacon Pollock. In October 1876 he was appointed to the Bishopric of Calcutta, vacant by the death of the late Dr. Robert Milman. He was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, Nov. 30, 1876, and was in 1898 succeeded by the Head-master of Harrow, Dr. Welldon.

JOHNSON, The Right Rev. Henry Frank, LL.B., D.D., Bishop Suffragan of Colchester, was born at Walbury, Essex, on Dec. 17, 1834, and is the son of Col. John Johnson. He was educated at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge. Entering the army, he was cornet in the 1st Dragoons from 1855 to 1856, but finding, like the Archbishop of York, that he had a vocation for the Church, he retired, and in 1858 was ordained. He has been successively curate of Richmond, Surrey; Sawbridgeworth, Herts, 1860-62; vicar of High Wych, Sawbridgeworth, 1862-80; rector of Chelmsford, 1880-94; Archdeacon of Essex, 1885-94; and of Colchester since 1894, in which year he became Bishop Suffragan of Colchester. He married, in 1857, Emily, youngest daughter of Thomas Perry of Moor Hall, Harlow. Address: Chelmsford Rectory.

JOHNSON, Lionel, poet and critic, is the eldest son of the late General Johnson, and was born at Broadstairs, Kent, on March 15, 1867. After a distinguished career at Winchester, he entered New College, Oxford, in 1886, and graduated in 1890 (B.A.), after obtaining a second class in Classical Moderations and a first class in Lit. Hum. Coming up to London, he commenced authorship, writing for Frederick Greenwood's brilliant and short-lived Anti-Jacobin, for the eccentric and admirable art quarterly, the Hobby Horse, to which he contributed poetry while still a schoolboy, and for the Academy and Daily Chronicle, &c. His scholarly criticisms in these two last-mentioned journals are the delight of many readers. Mr. Johnson is justly regarded as one of the late Walter Pater's leading disciples. We need only cite his "Letter to Sir Thomas Browne," and his critiques on the Celtic spirit and on Renan. Mr. Lionel Johnson has also made his mark as a poet of distinction, having published "Poems" and "Ireland and other Poems," besides contributing verse to the two books of the Rhymers' Club and to the Speaker, the Outlook, and other well-known papers. His "Art of Thomas Hardy" is a weighty prose contribution to the study of that novelist. Address: 8 New Square, Lincoln's Inn.

JOHNSON, The Right Hon. William Moore, Q.C., is the only son of the Rev. William Johnson, M.A., formerly Chancellor of Ross and Cloyne, and rector of Clenore, County Cork, by Elizabeth Anne, daughter of the Rev. William Hamilton, F.T.C.D., and was born in 1828. He graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, taking his Bachelor's degree in 1849, and that of M.A. in 1856. He was called to the Irish Bar in Michaelmas term, 1853, was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1872, and was Law Adviser to the Crown in Ireland from 1868 till 1874. Mr. Johnson was returned as M.P. for Mallow at the general election of April 1880; and on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Administration in the following month he was appointed Solicitor-General for Ireland, and re-elected M.P. for Mallow. He succeeded Mr. Law as Attorney-General for Ireland in November 1881, and was appointed Judge of the High Court of Justice in Ireland, Queen's Bench Division, 1883. He is a Bencher of the King's Inns, Dublin (1880), and was made a Privy Councillor (Ireland), 1881. He married, in 1884, Susan, daughter of R. D. Bayly, J.P. Address: 26 Lower Leeson Street, Dublin.

JOHNSTON, Sir Harry Hamilton, K.C.B., F.R.G.S., African traveller, born June 12, 1858, at Park Place, Kennington, Surrey, is the third son of John Brookes Johnston, Esq., and was educated at Stockwell Grammar School and King's College, London. He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, Zoological Society, Anthropological Institute, and Royal Colonial Institute, and was appointed H.M. Vice-Consul for the Cameroons and the Oil Rivers in October 1885. He was Acting-Consul for Bights of Benin and Biafra, 1887-88, and was promoted to be Consul for Portuguese East Africa, December 1888. He has written a great deal in the leading journals and reviews on subjects connected with natural history, travel, and political matters, and published, in 1884, a work entitled "The River Congo"; in 1886, "The Kilimanjaro Expedition"; in 1889, "The History of a Slave"; and in 1891, the "Life of Livingstone." He studied painting as a student of the Royal Academy of Arts in London, 1876-80, was a Medallist of the South Kensington School of Art in 1876, and has frequently exhibited pictures at the Royal Academy and in other galleries. In 1880 he travelled through Tunis and Algeria; in 1882-83 visited the river Congo and other parts of West Africa; and in 1884 conducted an expedition to Mount Kilimanjaro in East Africa. In 1887 he surveyed a portion of the Niger Delta, and in 1889-90 visited Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika, for the purpose of making peace between the Arabs and the African Lakes Company. In 1890 he was made a C.B., and in 1891 was appointed Commissioner and Consul-General in British Central Africa, and for some years administered the extensive territories of that protectorate. He visited England in 1894, and frequently lectured on the subject of Central Africa, and in the autumn of that year published, as a Government publication, a short and interesting account of his charge. This forms one of a series of blue-books and reports on Central Africa published by him between 1888 and 1896. In 1897 he was appointed Consul-General, Regency of Tunis. His last important work is "British Central Africa," published in 1897. He was created a K.C.B. in January 1896; was appointed Consul-General for the Regency of Tunis, July 1897; and received the Jubilee medal in 1897. In 1896 he married Winifred Irby, daughter of the 5th Lord Boston, and step-daughter of Sir H. Percy Anderson, K.C.B., Assistant Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs. Address: H.B.M. Consulate-General, Tunis, North Africa.

JOHNSTON, Richard Malcolm, American writer, was born in Hancock County, Georgia, March 8, 1822. He graduated at Mercer University, Georgia, in 1841, and, after teaching for a year, was admitted to the Bar. In 1857 he was offered a judgeship, but declined it to accept the Chair of Literature in the University of Georgia, where he remained until the outbreak of the Civil War. Retiring to his country home near Sparta, Georgia, he there opened a boarding-school for boys, which in 1867 he removed to Baltimore, Maryland, where he has since resided. He has published, in addition to contributions to periodicals, in conjunction with William Hand Browne, a "Life of Alexander H. Stephens," 2 vols., 1878, and "A History of English Literature," 1879; "Dukesborough Tales," 1883; "Old Mark Langston," 1884; "Two Gray Tourists," 1885; Mr. Absalom Billingslea and other Georgia Folk," 1888; "Ogeechee Cross-Firings," 1889; "Widow Guthrie," 1890; "The Pines and their Neighbours," 1891; "Studies Literary and Social" (1st series, 1891, 2nd series, 1892); "Mr. Fortner's Marital Claims," 1892; "Mr. Billy Downs and his Likes," 1892; "Widow Guthrie," 1893; "Little Ike Templin and other Stories," 1894; "Old Times in Middle Georgia," 1897; and "Pearce Amerson's Will," 1898.

JOHNSTON, William, M.P. (known as Mr. Johnston of Ballykilbeg), was born in Downpatrick, Feb. 22, 1829, is the eldest son of John Brett Johnston and Thomasina Anne Henriette Scott, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated B.A. in 1852, and M.A. in 1856. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1872. He was elected M.P. for Belfast, in the Protestant interest, in 1868, was re-elected in 1874, and sat for that borough till 1878, when he was appointed Inspector of Irish Fisheries. He held that office till 1885, when he was dismissed by Lord Spencer for a speech in the General Synod of the Church of Ireland. Mr. Johnston has been since 1848 a member of the Orange Institution, and was imprisoned for two months, in 1868, for taking part in an Orange procession at Bangor, co. Down, on July 12 in the previous year. He is the author of the novels: "Nightshade," 1857; "Freshfield," and "Under which King?" 1872. In 1885 he was returned for South Belfast by a large majority, and was again elected in 1886, 1892, and 1895. He has long been identified with Temperance movements, both of a social and a political character, and has been for many years a total abstainer. In 1898 he was unanimously elected President of the Irish Temperance League. In the House he is a leading representative of the Orange party. He married (3), in 1863, Georgiana Barbara, daughter of Sir John Hay, Bart. Address: Ballykilbeg, co. Down.

JOICEY, Sir James, Bart., M.P., was born on April 6, 1846, and is the son of Mr. G. Joicey, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was educated at Gainford School, near Darlington. As Chairman and Managing Director of James Joicey & Co., Ltd., and of the Lambton Collieries, Ltd., he is one of the most extensive coal-mine owners in the northern counties. He is principal proprietor of the important Newcastle Daily Leader, Director of the N.E. Railway, J.P. for Durham County, Northumberland, and Newcastle-on-Tyne, and D.L. for the county of Durham. Since 1885 he has sat in Parliament as Liberal member for Chester-le-Street, Durham. In 1884 he married (2) a daughter of the late Colonel Drever, H.E.I.C.S. Addresses: 58 Cadogan Square, S.W.; and Longhirst, Morpeth.

JÓKAI, Maurus (or Mór), the most productive and genial of Hungarian novelists, was born Feb. 19, 1825, at Komorn. His father was an advocate, of good and ancient family, and a strict Calvinist, so that his son was puritanically brought up, until his twelfth year, when he was left an orphan. For two years before his father's death he had been learning German at Presburg, but he was then left to teach himself, until in 1840 he went to the High School at Pápa, and in 1842 to that of Kecskemét, at both having the Hungarian poet Alexander Petöfi as his schoolfellow. In 1844 he went to Pesth, where he was articled to an advocate, and obtained his diploma, of which, however, he never availed himself; for in 1846 he was already editor of the then very famous Wochenblatt. In 1848 he proclaimed the "Twelve Points of Pesth," and in the same year he married Rosa Laborfalvi, the greatest of Hungarian tragedians. In 1849 he followed the Hungarian Government to Debreczin, where he edited the Arendblätter, and was present at the capitulation of Villagos, August 28. To escape being made prisoner, he resolved on suicide, but was hindered by the fortunate arrival of his wife from Pesth. She had converted all her jewels into gold, and the pair found their way on foot through the Russian army, reached a safe hiding-place in the wood of Bukk, and at last got safe to Pesth. Ten years followed, during which Hungarian literature became well-nigh extinct. Almost alone this young man created a new one, and since political journalism was impracticable he betook himself to fiction. He has published in 160 vols. 25 romances of several vols. each, 320 novelettes, and six dramas, of which more than half a million copies have been sold amongst six millions of Magyars, besides translations into various languages. Amongst his most popular romances are: "The Good Old Assessors," "A Hungarian Nabob," and its continuation, entitled "Zoltán Kárpáthy," "Sad Times," "Oceania," "The White Rose," "The Accursed Family," "Transylvania's Golden Age," "The Turks in Hungary," "The Last Days of the Janissaries in 1820," "Poor Rich Men," "The World Turned Upside down," "Madhouse Management," "The New Landlord" (translated into English by A. Patterson, London, 1865), "The Romance of the Next Century," "Black Diamonds," "Die Zonen des Geistes," "Beloved to the Scaffold," 1882; "The White Woman of Leutschan," &c.

Among his dramas may be mentioned: "King Koloman," 1858; "The Martyrs of Szigetvar," and "Milton," 1878. In 1863 Jókai established, as an organ of the Left, the Hon (Fatherland), the most widely circulated Hungarian journal, in which many of his romances appeared. He has also become chief editor of the Governmental journal, the Nemzet (Nation). In 1898 his novel, "Dr. Dumany's Wife," was translated into English.

JOLY, John, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., was born in 1858 in Hollywood, King's County, Ireland. He is the youngest son of the late Rev. J. P. Joly, M.A., Rector of Clonsast, and Julia, daughter of Frederick, Count de Lusi, Resident Prussian Minister in Greece. Owing to the early loss of his father his education and preservation during a delicate boyhood devolved upon his mother, to whose influence he ascribes what enthusiasm for science he possesses. He was partly educated, also, at the Rathmines School, Dublin; entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1876, and took the degree of Bachelor of Engineering in 1883. He received the degree of M.A. (Stip. Con.) in 1887, and of Doctor of Science in 1889. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1892. He is Honorary Secretary of the Royal Dublin Society, has occupied successively the posts of Assistant Lecturer in Engineering and in Experimental Physics in Trinity College, and is now Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin. He is author, among others, of the following papers: "On the Direct Experimental Determination of Specific Heats of Gases at Constant Volume," Phil. Trans. Roy. Soc., vol. 182; "On the Method of Condensation in Calorimetry," Proc. Roy. Soc., vols. 45 and 47; "On the Specific Heats of Minerals," ibid. vol. 41; "Observations on the Spark Discharge over the Surface of Dielectrics," ibid. vol. 47; "On the Steam Calorimeter," ibid. vol. 47; "On the Volcanic Ash of Krakatoa," Proc. Roy. Dublin Soc., vol. 4; "On a Method of Determining the Density of a Gas," Phil. Mag., 30, 5; "On the Uses of the Meldometer," Proc. Roy. Irish Ac., ii. 3; "On the Beryl and Iolite of Glencullen," Proc. Roy. Dublin Soc., iv.; "The Abundance of Life," ibid. vii.; "On the Formation of Crystals of Calcium and Magnesium Oxide," ibid. vi.; "On a Diffusion Photometer," Phil. Mag., 28, 5; "On the Thermal Expansion of Diamond," Nature, 49; "On the Bright Colours of Alpine Flowers," Proc. Roy. Dublin Soc., viii.; "A Speculation as to a Pre-material Condition of the Universe," ibid. vii.; "On a Method of Photography in Natural Colours," Trans. Roy. Dublin Soc., vol. vi.;

"On the Origin of the Canals of Mars," ibid.; "On the Volume-change of Rocks attending Fusion," ibid.; "On Submarine Geological Investigation," Proc. Roy. Dublin Soc., vol. viii.; and jointly with H. H. Dixon, Sc.D., "On the Ascent of Sap," Phil. Trans. Roy. Soc., vol. 186; "On the Path of the Transpiration Current," Annals of Botany, vol. ix. Address: 39 Waterloo Road, Dublin.

JONES, Lieut.-Col. Alfred Stowell, V.C., Assoc. M. Inst. C.E., was born at Liverpool, Jan. 24, 1832, and is the youngest son of the late Archdeacon J. Jones, M.A., and his wife Hannah, daughter of the late Thomas Pares, Esq., J.P., of Hopwell Hall, Derby. He was educated at the Liverpool College. While serving as a Lieutenant in the 9th Lancers he passed his examinations by the Public Works Department, India, 1857, for employment as a Civil Engineer, and graduated at the Staff College, 1860. Lieut.-Colonel Jones was present at the battle of Buddleekeseraï and at Delhi throughout the siege operations, including the assault and capture of the city, having been Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General to the Cavalry Brigade from August 8 to Sept. 23, 1857. He served with the 9th Lancers in Greathed's pursuing column, and was present in the actions of Bolundshuhur and Allyghur and battle of Agra, where he was dangerously wounded, having received a musket-shot wound and twenty-two sabre cuts. He was mentioned in the despatches of Sir Hope Grant on three different occasions (Brevet of Major, Victoria Cross, Medal with Clasp). He was awarded the V.C. for the following service: "The cavalry charged the rebels and rode through them. Lieutenant Jones of the 9th Lancers, with his squadron, captured one of the guns, killing the drivers, and, with Lieut.-Col. Yule's assistance, turned the gun upon a village occupied by the rebels, who were quickly dislodged. This was a well-conceived act, gallantly executed." As has been stated, he was Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General at the siege of Delhi, 1857, and held a similar Staff appointment at the Cape of Good Hope, 1861-67; Adjutant of the Staff College, 1869-70, when that appointment was abolished on his own evidence before a Royal Commission on Military Education, resulting in a saving of £400 per annum on the army estimates for the last twenty years, while the duties have been carried out efficiently as Lieut.-Colonel Jones had proposed. In civil matters he has been Consulting Engineer to the Borough of Wrexham for sewage disposal; Corporate Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, 1876; Membre de la Société Francaise d'Hygiène, 1877; Fellow of the Sanitary Institute, 1880; and Member of the Association of Municipal Engineers, 1883. He is the author of "Will a Sewage Farm Pay?" 1874 (third edit., 1885), and many papers on sewage disposal in the Transactions of the Society of Arts and of the Sanitary Institute, and in other professional publications. But Lieut.-Colonel Jones is perhaps best known in connection with the Canvey Island scheme, introduced by himself and other engineers, and approved and recommended by Lord Bramwell's Royal Committee on Metropolitan Sewage Discharge in their Final Report, 1884. This scheme has been elaborated and perfected by Lieut.-Colonel Jones and his partner, Mr. J. Bailey Denton, Member Inst. C.E., and has been under the consideration of the London County Council since 1889. In 1879 he was awarded one of the only two £100 prizes ever offered by the Royal Agricultural Society of England for the best-managed sewage farms.

JONES, David Brynmor, M.P., Q.C., J.P., was born at Pentrepoeth Morriston, near Swansea, Glamorganshire, on May 12, 1852, and is the eldest son of the Rev. Thomas Jones, of Swansea, sometime Chairman of the Congregational Unions of England and Wales and of Victoria. He was educated at University College School and at University College, London, where he was Hume Scholar in Jurisprudence in 1873. He graduated LL.B. (Lond.) in 1874, obtained a studentship of the Council of Legal Education in January 1875, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1876. After practising in London and on the South Wales Circuit from 1876 to 1885, he was appointed Judge of the Mid Wales County Court Circuit in the latter year, was transferred to the Gloucestershire Circuit in 1886, and resigned in 1892. Being made a Q.C. in February 1893, he resumed practice. He was elected M.P. for the Stroud division of Gloucestershire in July 1892 in the Liberal interest, and was elected for the Swansea District in 1895, likewise as a Liberal. He served as a member of the Royal Commission on Land in Wales and Monmouthshire, 1893-96. He is at present a member of the Court and Executive Committee of the University of Wales, and Hon. Standing Counsel of the University, a governor of the University Colleges of Wales (Aberystwyth), and of South Wales and Monmouthshire, and one of the Whips of the Welsh Liberal Parliamentary party. Mr. Jones has edited "The Divine Order and Other Sermons and Addresses," by Thomas Jones of Swansea, with an introduction by Robert Browning, 1884; he has also published an essay on "Welsh History and Recent Research," 1891; "Home Rule and Imperial Sovereignty," 1886; and divers magazine articles and papers on the Welsh laws. He is a vice-president of the Cymmrodorion Society, before which he has read several papers. He acted as Senior Counsel for the promoters of the Welsh University, and drafted the charter with Mr. Cadwaladr Davies, and defended it in the House of Commons in 1893. In 1895 he successfully acted as honorary arbitrator between masters and men in regard to the dispute and strike at Aber-gwynfe Collieries. He also took an active part in bringing together the Welsh National Liberal Convention at Cardiff in February 1898. He married in 1892 Florence, widow of A. de M. Mocatta, and daughter of Major Lionel Cohen. Addresses: 27 Bryanston Square, W.; and 12 King's Bench Walk, Temple.

JONES, Emily Elizabeth Constance, was born in 1848, at Langstone Court, Herefordshire, and is the eldest daughter of J. Jones, Esq., M.D., J.P., and his wife, Emily Edith, who was daughter of Thomas Oakeley, Esq., J.P., of Lydart House, Monmouth, and his wife, Elizabeth Pearce, co-heiress of Llanrumney Court, Monmouthshire, and was descended from the ancient Welsh families of Lewis of Llanthewy and Morgan of Llanrumney. Miss Jones was educated at Miss Robinson's, Alstone Court, Cheltenham, and at Girton College, Cambridge, and took a First Class in the Moral Sciences Tripos in 1880 (was bracketed with the Senior), and appointed Resident Lecturer in Moral Science at Girton College in 1884, and Librarian in 1889. She has retired from both offices. Miss Jones was joint translator with Miss Elizabeth Hamilton of "Lotze's Micro-cosmos," and editor of the translation, which was published in 1885, and reached a third edition in 1888. Miss Jones is also the author of "Elements of Logic as a Science of Propositions," published in 1890.

JONES, Henry Arthur, was born on September 28, 1851, at Grandborough, in Buckinghamshire, and is the son of Silvanus Jones. After receiving the middle-class education of that period at the Winslow School, he was sent into the world at thirteen to shift for himself. He was engaged in commercial pursuits for some years, devoting all his leisure to the study of literature and to writing, and it was not until Dec. 11, 1878, that his first play, "Only Round the Corner," was produced by Mr. Rousby at the Exeter Theatre. In the summer of 1879 he made his first appearance before a London audience as a dramatic author. This was in the comediotta "A Clerical Error," which was accepted by Mr. Wilson Barrett and produced by him at the Court Theatre. His next essay in dramatic writing was a play entitled "His Wife," an adaptation of Mark Hope's "Prodigal Daughter," which was written for and produced by Miss Bateman at Sadler's Wells Theatre, and was afterwards played in the provinces. In November 1882 "The Silver King" was produced by Mr. Wilson Barrett at the Princess's Theatre. This play ran for over a year, and has been since played without intermission in America, Australia, and the English provinces. In 1884 Mr. Henry Arthur Jones wrote the first of the series of plays of modern English life with which he has since become so closely identified. This play, "Saints and Sinners," was produced at the Vaudeville on September 25 of that year. The propriety of dealing with religious matters on the stage provoked a considerable amount of discussion, but the play ran for over 200 nights. After the production of "Saints and Sinners" Mr. Jones reverted for a time to melodrama, and wrote, amongst other plays, "Hoodman Blind," "The Noble Vagabond," "The Lord Harry," "Heart of Hearts," "Hard Hit," &c. But it was not until 1889 that he was able to devote himself to the class of work that was really congenial to his inclination. On Aug. 27, 1889, "The Middleman" was produced at the Shaftesbury Theatre with Mr. Willard in the leading part. This achieved an instantaneous success, and ran for over two hundred nights, and was followed on May 21, 1890, by "Judah," a psychological play which achieved equal popularity. Both these plays have been translated and produced in Germany, Austria, Holland, Belgium, and Denmark. On Jan. 15, 1891, "The Dancing Girl" was produced at the Haymarket Theatre, with Mr. Tree in the leading part. This ran for over a year. In the autumn of 1891 Mr. Jones went into theatrical management, and his new comedy, "The Crusaders," was produced by him at the Avenue Theatre, running for one hundred nights. "The Bauble Shop" was produced by Mr. Chas. Wyndham at the Criterion Theatre on Jan. 26, 1893, and in the following autumn "The Tempter," a four-act tragedy, was produced by Mr. Tree at the Haymarket Theatre. Nearly all of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's plays have been produced in America. In 1894 Mr. Jones wrote "The Case of Rebellious Susan," which achieved a great success with Mr. Wyndham and Miss Mary Moore in the leading parts. Recent dramas from his pen are: "Michael and his Lost Angel," produced at the Lyceum Theatre in 1896; a satire on the clerical career, with Mr. Forbes Robertson in the leading part. In the same year "The Rogue's Comedy" was produced at the Garrick Theatre, and this was followed in 1897 by "The Physician" and "The Liars," both at the Criterion Theatre. Address: Townshend House, North Gate, Regent's Park, N.W.

JONES, Capt. Henry Michael, V.C., late Minister at Lima and Quito, was born in 1830, and entered the army in 1849. He served through the Crimean war with great distinction, being severely wounded at the Alma and the Redan. Leaving the army in 1857, he entered the Diplomatic Service the next year. In 1868 he was Consul-General at Tabreez, and subsequently at Christiania and Philippopolis. In 1889 he was Minister at Bangkok and was promoted to Peru in 1894. He has retired.

JONES, Kennedy, part proprietor of the London Daily Mail, and Managing Director of the London Evening News, was born in Glasgow, on May 4, 1865, and was educated at the High School, Glasgow. In 1884 he began his career as a journalist by joining the editorial staff of the Glasgow Evening News, and in 1889 became assistant-editor of the Birmingham Daily Mail. He came to London a few years later. Address: Daily Mail Office, Carmelite Street, Temple, E.C.

JONES, Morris Charles, F.S.A., was born in Montgomeryshire, May 9, 1819, and educated at Bruce Castle School, Tottenham. He is the author of numerous genealogical and antiquarian articles and privately-printed pamphlets, and of "The Abbey of Valle Crucis: its Origin and Foundation Charter," 1866; and "The Feudal Barons of Powys," 1868. He is the founder and chief supporter of the Powysland Club, an archaeological society for Montgomeryshire, and also of the Powysland Museum and Library connected therewith. He has devoted much time to the illustration of the archaeology and history of his native country, and since 1867 has been the editor of "The Montgomeryshire Collections," issued by the Powysland Club, which contain elaborate and useful contributions to local topography and history, and afford complete and extensive materials for the history of the county of Montgomery. In 1876 his archaeological services were acknowledged by a testimonial raised by public subscriptions, which were devoted chiefly to the purchase of a fine life-size bronze group representing a scene in Welsh history, which, at his request, was placed in the Powysland Museum.

JONES, Thomas Rupert, F.R.S., F.G.S., late Professor of Geology at the Staff College, Sandhurst, naturalist, geologist, palæontologist, and antiquary, was born Oct. 1, 1819, at No. 6 Wood Street, Cheapside, London, and is the son of John Jones, silk merchant and silk throwster, of London and Taunton (descendant of the old Powys family of North Wales), and Rhoda Jones (née Burberry), of Coventry. He was educated at Foster's at Taunton, and the Rev. John Allan's at Ilminster; and was apprenticed to a surgeon (Hugh Norris) at Taunton, Somerset, in 1835; at his death he finished apprenticeship with Dr. Joseph Bunny, of Newbury, Berks, in 1842. After some years of desultory medical and scientific education, he was, in 1850, appointed Assistant-Secretary to the Geological Society of London; Lecturer on Geology at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, in 1858, and Professor in 1862, and subsequently at the Staff College until he "retired" in 1881. He is the author of "Monograph of the Cretaceous Entomostraca," in 1849; and of "The Tertiary Entomostraca in England," in 1856; "Monograph of the Fossil Estheriæ," 1862; article, "Tunicata," in Todd's "Cyclopædia of Anatomy," 1850; and of articles in Cassell's "Natural History," "Science for All," and "Encyclopædic Dictionary"; also of numerous articles and memoirs on Geology, Fossils, and Pre-historic Man, and especially on recent and fossil Foraminifera and Entomostraca, in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Natural History Review, Annals of Natural History, the Geologist, the Geological Magazine, Proceedings of the Geologists' Association, and many other periodicals, as well foreign as British. Particularly may be mentioned: "The Antiquity of Man," Croydon Nat. Hist. Soc., 1877; "The History of the Sarsens," Wilts Archaeol. Soc., 1886; "The Geology and the Mineral Wealth of South Africa," Mining Journal, 1886, and Imperial Colonial Instit., 1887; "The Coal-field of South Wales," Brit. Assoc. Report for 1891; "The Geology of the Plateau Implements of Kent," Natural Science, 1894; "Rockell and its Previous History," Trans. R. Irish Acad., 1897. These papers and essays are more or less characteristic of Professor R. Jones' wide range of research, and of his steady endeavours to bring together scattered information on many subjects of interest to geologists and of use to the public. Whether as lecturer, professor, author, or reviewer, Professor Rupert Jones has always aimed at the advancement of geological science, free from the prejudices of old or new phases of thought. He is joint-author of the "Monograph of the Arctic and North-Atlantic Foraminifera," 1865; the Forminifera of the Abroghos Bank," 1888; "Foraminifera of the Crag," 1866 and 1895; "Palæozoic Bivalves, Entomostraca," 32 Parts, 1855-95; "Nomenclature of the Foraminifera," 15 Parts, 1859-72; of the "Micrographical Dictionary," 1874 and 1882; "Monograph of the Carboniferous Cypridinadæ," 1874 and 1884; "Palæozoic Phyllopoda," 1888 and 1892; "Geology," Part I. Heads of Lectures, &c., 1870; and of numerous papers on Carboniferous and other Entomostraca. Mr. Jones was the editor of the "Arctic Manual," 1875; and the editor and joint author of the "Reliquiæ Aquitanicæ; or, Caves and Cave-Dwellers in Central France"; and of the second edition of "Dixon's Geology of Sussex," 1878; also of the "Supplement to the Monogr. Tertiary Entomostraca," 1889; and "Supplement to the Cretaceous Entomostraca," 1890. He was formerly Examiner to the London University, and to the Victoria (Manchester) University; and to the New Zealand University; now Examiner to the College of Preceptors; Assistant-Examiner to the Civil Service Commission, to the Department of Science and Art, and to the Royal College of Science. He was President of the Geologists' Association, 1879-81; Vice-President of Section C, British Association, at Montreal, in 1884; and President of Section C, at Cardiff, in 1891. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, and of the Geological Society of London; Honorary Member of numerous scientific societies, British and foreign; Recipient of the Murchison Geological Fund in 1882; and Lyell Medallist of the Geological Society in 1890. Address: 17 Parson's Green, Fulham, S.W.

JONES, Rev. William, Primitive Methodist minister, was born at Hales-owen, Worcestershire, July 6, 1834. He received a fair modern education. His first appointment of special importance was to Tunstall, the mother church of the Primitive Methodist connection. His next special appointment was to Birmingham, in 1867. It was while here that his fame as a preacher and lecturer became universally known. His name became a household word not only in his own denomination, but in Nonconformist churches generally. He was a familiar figure and speaker on many great occasions in the famous Town Hall. From Birmingham he returned to Tunstall. During his term of ministerial service he was instrumental in building, at a cost of £9000, the Jubilee Memorial Schools opposite the church. At the same time he rendered important service to the denomination by preaching and lecturing up and down the kingdom in behalf of its various interests. He was a constant contributor to the denominational newspaper. His own church, large as it is, was always crowded with persons eager to listen to him when he was at home. He was elected chairman of the first School Board for Wolstanton. When, in 1877, Surrey Chapel was taken over from Rev. Newman Hall by the Primitive Methodist Conference, Mr. Jones was appointed pastor, and to him belongs the honour of founding the first Primitive Methodist church in the historic building. From Surrey he removed to Derby, where another special task awaited him. The Central Church was in course of building, and as soon as it was finished he commenced his labours there, and succeeded in drawing together a large congregation and building up a powerful church. Mr. Jones's next appointment was to Stepney Green Tabernacle, London. He laboured subsequently at Grays, Lincoln, and Sunderland. At the Conference of 1896 he was elected to the office of President of the denomination. On his retirement he was presented with the thanks of the Conference. He is now for the third time stationed at Tunstall, and for the second time holds the position of Chairman of the School Board, besides being President of the Free Church Council for Tunstall and District. He is now in the sixty-fourth year of his age. Address: The Manse, Forster Street, Tunstall, Staff.

JONES, The Most Rev. William West, D.D., Archbishop of Cape Town, was born in 1838, and is the sixth son of Edward Henry Jones, of Hackney. He was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, of which he was a Foundation Fellow from 1856 to 1859. He obtained a second class in Classical Moderations in 1858, and a fourth in the Final Honours School of Mathematics in 1860; B.A. 1860; M.A. 1864; B.D. 1869; D.D. 1874. He was appointed Dean of Arts in 1864, and Vice-President of his College in 1872. He was Vicar of Summertown from 1864 to 1874, and Whitehall Preacher in 1870-72. He was appointed Bishop of Cape Town in 1874, and Archbishop in 1897. He is married to a daughter of Mr. John Allen, of Altrincham, Cheshire. Address: Bishop's Court, Claremont, Cape Town.

JORDAN, John Newell, C.M.G., Chargé d'Affaires in Corea, was born in 1857, and in 1876 became a student-interpreter in China. Having been Acting-Consul at Kiungchow and Amoy, he was attached to the Legation as Accountant in 1886, Assistant Chinese Secretary in 1889, and Chinese Secretary in 1891. In 1896 he was promoted to be Consul-General for Corea, to reside at Seoul, and in 1897 he was made a C.M.G.

JOUBERT, Petrus Jacobus, General-in-Chief of the Transvaal, was born about 1831, and first distinguished himself by his defeat of Sir George Colley at Majuba Hill, 1881. In 1893 and 1898 he allowed himself to be nominated for the Presidency of the South African Republic, but was easily defeated by President Krüger (q.v.). In 1896 he was the chief factor in causing the surrender of Dr. Jameson. As a tactician, he acts severely on the defensive, concealing his men behind earthworks and obstacles, and trusting to their marksmanship to prevent their position being rushed. In political matters he is entirely subservient to Krüger's domination.

JOY, George William, painter, was born at Dublin in 1844, and is the son of W. Bruce Joy, M.D. He received his education at Harrow, and afterwards studied art as a Royal Academy student and in Paris under Bonnat and Charles Jalabert. His principal works, exhibited at the Royal Academy, are "Domenica," his first picture, 1871; "Nelson's First Farewell," "Wellington at Angiers," "Danais," "Truth," "The King's Drum shall never be beaten for Rebels"; in 1894, the "Death of General Gordon"; "The Bayswater 'Bus' and "Joan of Arc," 1895; "Patience," 1897; and "Christ and the Little Child," 1898; "A Merchantman Seeking Goodly Pearls," and "Mary of Bethany," 1899. He has won medals at the Paris Salon and at the Chicago World's Fair. Mr. George Joy is well known as a volunteer, and has shot several times in the Irish Volunteer team at Wimbledon. He married in 1877 Florence, daughter of Thomas Masterman. Address: The Red Lodge, 51 Palace Court, Paddington, W.

JOYCE, Thomas Heath, F.R.G.S., editor of the Graphic and Daily Graphic, was born in London on July 9, 1850, and is the son of Thomas Joyce, of Freshford, Somerset. He received the principal part of his education on the Continent, and has been on the staff of the Graphic since the first issue of that important weekly in 1869. He has translated Victor Hugo's "History of a Crime," besides writing articles on various subjects in journals and magazines. Address: Freshford, South Hill, Bromley, Kent.

JOYNT, Miss Maud, M.A., is the second daughter of Deputy Surgeon-General Christopher Joynt, Indian A.M.D., and entered Alexandra College, Dublin, in 1881. In 1883, at the intermediate examinations, she gained an exhibition in the middle grade and three gold medals; at the same examinations in 1884 she gained highest marks of all Ireland, two gold and three silver medals. She matriculated at the Royal University in 1886, taking first honours in Latin, first place and first honours in German, first place and second honours in English, first honours in Experimental Physics, and later in the same year the scholarship of Modern Literature. She obtained first class exhibitions in 1887-88; gained in the latter year the Henry Hutchinson Stewart scholarship (Mod. Literature), a very distinguished honour. Her B.A. was obtained in 1889, with first exhibition honours in modern literature, and the degree of M.A. was conferred on her on Oct. 29, 1890.

JUDD, Professor John Wesley, C.B., LL.D., F.R.S., geologist, was born at Portsmouth, Feb. 18, 1840; but when he was only eight years of age his family removed to the neighbourhood of London. During his earlier years he was engaged in teaching, first in London and afterwards in Lincolnshire, but his taste for science, and especially for geological studies, led him, in 1863, to become a student in the Royal School of Mines. In the following year he accepted the post of Analytical Chemist in one of the great iron and steel works at Sheffield, but while there he met with a railway accident that interrupted his work and studies for a considerable period. Upon his recovery, he determined to devote himself entirely to his favourite studies, and commenced a geological survey of the county of Lincolnshire, the results of his investigations being published in a number of memoirs on the Neocomian formation, which he showed to be admirably developed in that and the adjoining counties. In 1867 he was invited to join the staff of the Geological Survey and to continue his work in connection with that body. During a period of four years he was engaged in working out the relations between the Jurassic rocks of the Midland district as compared with those of the Northern and Southern areas in England, and his book on the Geology of Rutland, &c., deals with this very important question. In 1871 he was induced by his friend the late Matthew Arnold, to act with him for a time as a School Inspector, and to assist in the work of preparing the way for the operation of the Education Act of 1870 in the north-eastern suburbs of London. After a year of this work, however, he returned to his geological studies, and commenced the execution of a long-cherished project, that of unravelling the complexities of the whole of the Secondary Strata of the Scottish Highlands. Not only was he able to show what are the true relations of the great series of Triassic and Jurassic rocks in that area, but he also discovered and studied very interesting deposits of Carboniferous and Cretaceous age, the existence of which in the district had been previously overlooked. These studies led him to the investigation of the relics of the great Tertiary Volcanoes of the Western Isles of Scotland; and during several years he was engaged in travelling in various volcanic regions, and making comparisons between these and the districts in the British Isles in which igneous action was rife during past geological times, a long series of memoirs being published as the result of these researches. In 1877 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in the same year, upon the retirement of Sir Andrew Ramsay, became Professor of Geology in the Royal School of Mines; in 1881 he accepted the same position in the Royal College of Science. From 1877 to 1885 Professor Judd was Secretary to the Geological Society, and during the years 1886 and 1887 held the office of President of that Society. In 1891 the Geological Society awarded Professor Judd the highest honour in their gift—the Wollaston Medal. In 1895 Professor Judd succeeded Professor Huxley as Dean of the Royal College of Science, and in the same year he was created a Companion of the Bath (Civil Division). He is the author of "Geology of Rutland," 1875; "Volcanoes: what they are and what they teach," 1878; "The Student's Lyell," 1896. He has, besides, published many papers in the Trans. Roy. Soc., and other scientific periodicals. He married Jeannie Frances, daughter of John Jeyes, in 1878. Addresses: 22 Cumberland Road, Kew; and Athenæum.

K

KASSON, John Adams, American statesman, was born near Burlington, Vermont, Jan. 11, 1822. He graduated from the University of Vermont in 1842; studied law in Massachusetts, and was admitted to the Bar. He practised law in St. Louis, Missouri, until 1867, when he removed to Des Moines, Iowa. In 1861 he was appointed First Assistant Postmaster-General by President Lincoln; resigned in 1862, and was elected to Congress, 1863-67. He was United States Postal Commissioner to Paris in 1863, and again in 1867, when he negotiated postal conventions with Great Britain and other nations. He was a member of the lower house of the Iowa Legislature from 1868 to 1873, when he was again elected to Congress, serving until 1877. In that year he was appointed Minister to Austria, serving till 1881, when he was again sent to Congress, until he went as Minister to Germany, 1884-85. In 1898 he was appointed on the Joint Commission to settle matters in dispute between Canada and the United States.

KATO, Takaaki, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Emperor of Japan at the Court of St. James's, was born in 1860, and was educated in the Imperial University of Tokio, where he obtained the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1881. He was Private Secretary to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Chief of the Political Bureau in the Foreign Office at Tokio, from 1887 to 1890. In the latter year he became Director of the Banking Bureau, and of the Revenue Bureau, in the Finance Department, and held these posts till 1894, when he was appointed to the Foreign Office and Directorship of the Political Affairs Bureau, with the rank of Minister Plenipotentiary. He was ordered to proceed to London as Envoy Extraordinary in November 1894, and has remained in that position since 1895. In recognition of his services during the Chino-Japanese War of 1894-95, he was decorated by the Emperor of Japan with the third class of the Rising Sun of the Empire of Japan. Address: Japanese Legation, 8 Sussex Square, Hyde Park, W.

KAWASÉ, Viscount Masataka, late Japanese Minister at the Court of St. James's, was born in 1839, and belongs to a family who in former times were vassals of the Prince of Choshu, in Japan. During the disturbed period preceding the restoration of the Mikado, Kawasé experienced many vicissitudes, but his first important appearance was in command of a force raised to defend the territory of Choshu from the army of the Shogun. The latter was completely defeated, and terms of peace were arranged. Kawasé then visited Europe, and resided for some time in England, being one of the first Japanese who devoted themselves to the study of Western institutions with the view of engrafting such as appeared suitable on those of their own country. On his return to Japan he was appointed Vice-Minister of Public Works by the present Emperor, and subsequently Vice-Chamberlain of the Imperial Household. In 1874 he was sent to Italy to represent Japan. He then successively filled the position of Senator and Vice-Minister of Justice, and in 1884 was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of St. James's, a post which he filled until the beginning of 1894, when he was succeeded by Viscount Aoki. He was created Viscount in 1887, and is the holder of numerous decorations.

KAYSERLING, M., born in Hanover, Germany, June 17, 1829, was educated there and at the University of Berlin. He was appointed by the Government of Aargau, in 1861, Rabbi of the Swiss Jews, and in September 1870, Rabbi and Preacher of the Jewish Community in Pesth, Hungary. In 1861 he married a daughter of the celebrated Dr. Ludwig Philippson. Dr. Kayserling is the author of "Sephardim : Romanische Poesien der Juden in Spanien," Leipzig, 1859; "Ein Feiertag in Madrid, zur Geschichte der Spanische Portugiesischen Juden"; "Geschichte der Juden in Spanien und Portugal," 1859-61; "Menassie Ben Israel, sein Leben und Werke," Berlin, 1867; "Geschichte der Juden in England," Berlin, 1861; "Der Dichter Ephraim Kuh, ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Deutschen Literatur," Berlin, 1867; "Moses Mendelssohn, sein Leben und Werke," Leipzig, 1852; "Zum Siegesfeste, Dankpredigt und Danklieder von M. Mendelssohn," Berlin, 1866; "Die Rituale Schlachtfraße, oder Ist Schächten Thierquälerei?" Aarau, 1867; "Schlachten Bibliothek Jüdischer Kanzelredner," Berlin, 1870, 1871. He also published a volume of Sketches of Distinguished Jewish Women; a biographical work on Jewish diplomatists and statesmen: several series of historical and literary articles in the Deutsche Museum of Prutz, Frankel's Monatsschrift, Jahrbuch für Israeliten in Wien, Steinschneider's Hebr. Bibliographie; and some sermons. Among his most recent works we may mention: "Biblioteca Española-Portuguesa-Jud-aica," 1890; "The First Jew in America," and "Gedenblätter," a book on prominent Jews of the nineteenth century, 1892.

KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH, Right Hon. Sir Ughtred James, Bart., M.P., J.P., D.L., is the eldest son, born Dec. 18, 1844, of the late Sir James Phillips Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., D.C.L. (for many years Secretary of the Committee of Council on Education), by Janet, his wife, only child and heiress of R. Shuttleworth, Esq., of Gawthorpe Hall, Lancashire. Sir Ughtred was educated at Harrow, at home, and at the London University, and is the author of the "First Principles of Modern Chemistry" (the second edition of which was published in 1870). At the invitation of the Liberal party in North-East Lancashire, he contested that division in 1868, and was defeated by a majority of 131. In October 1869 he became Member for Hastings. His maiden speech in Parliament was delivered on the second reading of the Elementary Education Bill in 1870. In 1871 he called the attention of the House to the subject of the London water supply. In 1874 he was re-elected Member for Hastings, and brought before the House the state of the dwellings of working people in London, eliciting the promise of Mr. Secretary Cross which resulted, in 1875, in the passing of the Artisans' Dwelling Act. In 1878 he moved resolutions on the Government of London. At the next general election, 1880, he lost his seat for Hastings, and having failed at a by-election in 1881, at Coventry, he was out of the House of Commons till he was returned by a majority of 2359, in 1885, for the Clitheroe Division of North-East Lancashire. During the time he was not in the House he served for two years on the London School Board. He was also a Member of the Royal Commission on Reformatory and Industrial Schools. He became Under-Secretary for India when Mr. Gladstone's third administration was formed in 1886, and subsequently was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and a Privy Councillor. At the general election of 1886, Sir U. Kay-Shuttleworth was returned unopposed for North-East Lancashire, as a Gladstonian Liberal. He has been Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons, and Vice-President of University College, London. In 1892, at the general election, he was again returned for the Clitheroe Division of Lancashire, and in August was appointed Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty, and held that office till July 1895. At the general election of 1895 his constituents again returned him unopposed. He married, in 1871, Blanche Marion, youngest daughter of Sir Woodbine Parish, K.C.H. Addresses: 28 Princes Gardens, S.W.; Gawthorpe Hall, Burnley, Lancashire, &c.; and Athenæum.¹

KEANE, Right Rev. John Joseph, American Roman Catholic prelate, was born at Ballyshannon, county Donegal, Ireland, Sept. 12, 1839. He went with his family to America in 1846, and was educated at St. Charles's College, and at St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, and in 1866 was ordained to the priesthood. He was assistant pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Washington, until 1878, when he was consecrated Bishop of Richmond, Virginia. In 1887 he was appointed Rector of the Catholic University of America, which was formally opened at Washington in 1889. In that year he received the degree of D.D. from Laval University, Quebec, and in 1893 that of LL.D. from Harvard University. At the request of the Catholic Archbishops of the United States, he organised and superintended the representation of the Catholic Church in the World's Parliament of Religions held during the Columbian Exposition in Chicago, 1893. In 1897 he resigned as Rector of the Catholic University of America, and went to Rome.

KEBBEL, Thomas Edward, M.A., youngest son of the late Rev. Henry Kebbel, Vicar of Wistow and Kilby, in the county of Leicester, was born at Kilby Nov. 23, 1828, and graduated at Oxford in 1849. He was called to the Bar in 1862. Mr. Kebbel's first introduction to journalism was in 1855, when he was invited to join the staff of the Press newspaper, then newly established by the late Lord Derby and Mr. Disraeli as the weekly organ of the Tory party. In 1867, when the Day newspaper was founded, representing the views of the "Cave," Mr. Kebbel was engaged as the leading political writer in support of the Conservative Reform Bill. Since that time he has been a contributor to the principal publications of the day—the Quarterly, Edinburgh, Fortnightly, Nineteenth Century, and National Reviews, Blackwood's, the Cornhill, Fraser, and Macmillan's Magazine, and, under Mr. Delane, he was a frequent contributor to the literary columns of the Times. In 1873 he joined the staff of the Standard, on which he has continued ever since. In 1864 he published "Essays on History and Politics"; and in 1881, on the death of Lord Beaconsfield, he was employed to edit a collection of his speeches published in two volumes by Messrs. Longman. In 1886 he published "Tory Administrations from the Accession of Mr. Pitt to Power in 1783 to the death of Lord Beaconsfield in 1881." In 1887 he brought out "The Agricultural Labourer," an account of the English peasantry, pronounced by the Edinburgh Review to be the best of its kind. A new edition of this work came out in 1893. In 1888 he contributed a life of the poet Crabbe to the series of Eminent Writers. He is also the author of lives of Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Derby in the Statesmen series, and has recently published "The Old and the New," a comparison between the country life of 1890 and 1840 (1891); and "Sport and Nature" (1893). He is a contributor of articles to the "Dictionary of National Biography." Address: 54 Cathcart Road, West Kensington, W.

KEENE, The Most Rev. James Bennett, Bishop of Meath, was born in Dublin on Oct. 25, 1849, and is the youngest son of A. Bennett Keene, M.A. He was educated at Rathmines School and Trinity College, Dublin, where his academic career was phenomenally brilliant. He was first Honour-man and Prize-man in Classics in 1867; first of the First Honourmen in Science in 1867, 1868, and 1869; first Primate's Hebrew Prize-man in the same year, and winner of scholarships in Mathematics, Hebrew, Syriac, and Chaldee, and of several theological prizes. He became Rector of Navan in 1879, and has been Prebendary of Tipper and Canon of St. Patrick's, Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Meath, Head-Master of Navan College, and Diocesan Nominator and Secretary of the Board of Education. He is a member of the Senate of Trinity College, Dublin. Address: Bishops court, Ardbraccan, Navan.

KEKEWICH, The Hon. Sir Arthur, late Standing Counsel to the Bank of England, was born in 1832, and is the second son of Samuel Trehawke Kekewich, Peamore, Exeter, at one time M.P. for South Devon. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained a first class in Lit. Hum., and a second class in Mathematics, afterwards, in 1854, becoming Fellow of Exeter. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1858; made Q.C. in 1877; Benchet of his Inn in 1881; and was raised to the Judicial Bench (Chancery Division) in 1886. He married Marianne, daughter of F. W. Freshfield, in 1858. Addresses: 19 Park Crescent, Portland Place, W.; and Athenæum.

KEKEWICH, Sir George William, K.C.B., D.C.L., Secretary to the Education Department, is the third son of the late Samuel Trehawke Kekewich, M.P., and a younger brother of the Judge, and was born in 1842. He was educated at Eton, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a first class in Classical Moderations, and a second class in Lit. Hum. In 1864 he entered as a student at Lincoln's Inn. He was appointed Examiner to the Education Department, the central authority for primary education, in 1867; Senior Examiner in 1871, and Secretary in 1890. In 1897 he was made Hon. D.C.L. of Durham. Address: Meadhurst, Sunbury Common, Middlesex.

KELLOGG, Clara Louise, American vocalist, was born at Sumterville, South Carolina, July 1842. In 1843 her parents returned with her to Connecticut, where they remained until 1856, when they went to New York. At an early age she gave evidence of musical talent, and after some years of careful study made her first appearance at the Academy of Music in New York in 1861. After four more years of study she appeared as Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust," in the season of 1864-65. Her success was not less complete, within the next two years, in "Crispino," as Linda di Chamounix, in the "Barber of Seville," "La Sonnambula," "Lucia di Lammermoor," and other operas. On Nov. 2, 1867, she made a successful début in London as Marguerite in "Faust." She returned to the United States in 1868. In 1872 she again visited England, appearing at the Drury Lane Opera. In the winter of 1873-74 she organised an English Opera Company, continuing until 1876. Returning to Europe once more in 1879, she sung at Her Majesty's in London, and at the Imperial Opera Houses of Vienna and St. Petersburg, and has since that time appeared in opera and concerts in the principal cities of the United States. She was married some years ago to Mr. Strakosch.

KELLY, Rev. Charles Henry, President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, 1889, was born at Salford, Manchester, Nov. 25, 1833, and educated at the School of the Society of Friends, and the Wesleyan College, Didsbury. He spent the first eleven years of his ministry as Chaplain to Methodist troops; and was actively engaged during that time in securing the recognition of the religious rights of Nonconformists in the British Army and Navy. For fourteen years he was at the head of the Wesleyan Sunday School Department as the Connexional Secretary; and he was appointed to the superintendence of the great Book Concern of Methodism in 1889. Mr. Kelly was the Delegate from the British Conference to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church which met in New York in 1888. Mr. Kelly holds the degree of D.D., although he does not use it. Address: Wesleyan Conference Office, City Road, London.

KELLY, The Right Rev. James Butler Knill, Bishop of Moray, Ross, and Caithness, N.B., was born in 1832, and educated at Clare College, Cambridge, where he took his B.A. in 1854, M.A. in 1858, and D.D. in 1867. He was consecrated Coadjutor-Bishop of Newfoundland in 1867, and succeeded as Bishop of that See in 1876. He was appointed Bishop-Commissary to the Bishop (Jacobson) of Chester in 1879; Archdeacon of Maccolesfield in 1880; Bishop-Commissary to Bishop Moberly of Salisbury in 1884; and was elected Bishop-Coadjutor of Moray, Ross, and Caithness in 1885; and succeeded to that see in 1886. Address: Eden Court, Inverness.

KELLY, Colonel James Graves, C.B., A.D.C., was born in November 1843. He joined the West India Regiment as an Ensign in September 1863, and shortly afterwards exchanged into the 94th Foot, the Connaught Rangers. He was promoted Captain in the Indian Staff Corps in September 1875, and Major in 1883, and for several years was the Brigade-Major of the Bengal Command. He first saw active service with the Hazara Expedition in 1891, and obtained a medal with clasp. In the same year he also served in the Miranzai Expedition. In March 1895 he was appointed in charge of the Gilgit troops, which, in co-operation with the force under Sir Robert Low, effected the relief of Chitral. Colonel Kelly's troops were made up of Bengal infantry, Cashmere sappers and miners, and a small body of levies from various frontier tribes, with two guns. They marched a distance of 200 miles over a country presenting very great physical difficulties, crossed the Shandur Pass, which is 12,000 feet high, in deep snow, relieved the Mastuj garrison, and twice defeated the enemy posted in strong natural positions. After a most arduous and difficult march they reached Chitral on the 20th of April. Colonel Kelly was especially mentioned in despatches, and received the thanks of the Government of India. He was appointed Aide-de-camp to the Queen, and Officiating Colonel of the Staff at Sealkote in the Punjab Command.

KELVIN, Lord, The Right Hon. William Thomson, G.C.V.O., M.A., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., P.R.S.E., D.L., Professor of Natural Philosophy, Glasgow University, was born in Belfast on June 26, 1824. His father, the late James Thomson, LL.D., was Professor of Mathematics at the Royal Academical Institute in Belfast, but on his appointment to the Professorship of Mathematics in the University of Glasgow in 1832 he removed thither with his family. At the early age of ten William entered the Glasgow College, and after a distinguished course there, he entered Peterhouse, Cambridge, where in 1845 he graduated as Second Wrangler and First Smith's Prizeman, and was elected to a Fellowship in his College. While at Cambridge he did not confine himself to his books, but took a great interest in outdoor sports. He was a keen oarsman, and won the Colquhoun sculls. He was also President of the University Musical Society. In 1846 he was elected to the Professorship of Natural Philosophy in Glasgow University, a post which he has now held for fifty-three years. At the early age of seventeen, while yet an undergraduate of Cambridge University, he attracted the attention of the scientific men of the country by his paper "On the Uniform Motion of Heat in Homogeneous Solid Bodies, and its Connection with the Mathematical Theory of Electricity." The method of this paper was quite original, and later proved of the greatest importance in the discussion of problems in electrostatics and magnetism. This paper was soon followed by others showing the same remarkable scientific insight and mathematical ability, and it was at once manifest that Thomson was destined to take a foremost place as a scientific worker. In 1845 he became the first editor of the Cambridge and Dublin Mathematical Journal, and held that office for nearly seven years. In its predecessor, The Cambridge Mathematical Journal, his article mentioned above had appeared, and several others of later date, of which we may note that "On the Linear Motion of Heat." From among the articles of later years, which have appeared in the various scientific periodicals or as communications to the learned societies, only a few of the most important can be selected for mention here. By his paper "On Electrical Images" he introduced an idea which has led to great advances in the mathematical theory of electricity. The value of his paper "On an Absolute Thermometric Scale" is shown by the universal use that is now made of that conception in calculations in thermodynamics. Many of his papers deal with the theory of heat—"On the Dynamical Theory of Heat"; "On the Thermal Effects of Fluids in Motion" (Joule and Thomson); "Compendium of Fourier Mathematics for the Conduction of Heat in Solids"; "Elasticity and Heat"—and his work in this department is worthy of special notice; for some of it was carried out in conjunction with Joule, and the warm friendship which existed between these two workers is a noteworthy feature in the lives of both. Other papers worthy of special mention are the following: "On a Universal Tendency in Nature to the Dissipation of Mechanical Energy"; "On the Theory of the Electric Telegraph"; "On the Use of Observations of Terrestrial Temperature for the Investigation of Absolute Dates in Geology"; "On the Electro-Dynamic Qualities of Metals." These papers, with others, have all been collected and published in 3 vols. under the title of "Mathematical and Physical Papers." The third volume was published in 1890, but since then many valuable papers have been published, of which the most recent are a lecture to the Victoria Institute "On the Age of the Earth," and a lecture to the Royal Institution "On Volta-Contact Electricity." His papers on "Electrostatics and Magnetism" up to 1872 were published in collected form in that year. In addition to these books Lord Kelvin has published 3 vols. of "Popular Lectures and Addresses," and a standard text-book on Natural Philosophy (conjointly with Professor Tait). Thomson's researches in Electrostatics soon led him to the invention of those beautiful measuring instruments which are now so well known in laboratories and electric installations. His chain of electrometers affords a means of accurately measuring electric potentials ranging from exceedingly small to exceedingly high values. His portable electrometer is largely used for the determination of the electric state of the atmosphere. In Electromagnetism again his ammeters and electric balances cover a wide range in the measurement of electric currents, while his supply meter has been found useful in electric installations. Perhaps, however, to the general public Lord Kelvin is best known by his inventions in the field of telegraphy and by those which form aids to navigation. By the invention of the mirror galvanometer and of the siphon recorder he has made it possible to receive and record accurately telegraphic signals over the longest cables. When the Atlantic cable was successfully laid in 1866 he received the honour of knighthood for the part he had taken in that undertaking. Sir William Thomson was always an enthusiastic yachtsman, and it is therefore not surprising that he should have directed his attention to devising aids to navigation. His magnetic compass and his sounding machine are familiar to all seamen. The former gives complete and perfect correction against disturbance by the ship's magnetism; by the latter instrument soundings can be readily taken without slackening the speed of the ship. In 1892 Sir William Thomson was raised to the Peerage as Baron Kelvin of Largs, in the county of Ayr. The appreciation and esteem in which Lord Kelvin is held by scientific men generally were well manifested in 1896, when his Jubilee as Professor of Natural Philosophy was celebrated in Glasgow University. To that celebration came many of the most distinguished British and foreign men of science to offer their congratulations, and the brilliant gathering was an event to be long remembered. A short time afterwards the Queen made him a Knight of the Grand Cross of the Royal Victorian Order. Besides this, Lord Kelvin has at different times received decorations from foreign countries. He is Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour of France, Knight of the Order "pour le Mérite" of Germany, Commander of the Imperial Order of the Rose (Brazil), and Commander of the Order of Leopold (Belgium). From Glasgow, where he has laboured so long, he received the freedom of the city after the laying of the Atlantic cables in 1866, and is now Deputy-Lieutenant of the County of the City of Glasgow. The degree of LL.D. has been conferred on him successively by the Universities of Dublin, Cambridge, Edinburgh, Montreal (McGill), Columbia, Glasgow, Princeton, and Toronto. Oxford gave him the degree of D.C.L., and he holds honorary degrees from the universities of Ticino, Heidelberg, Bologna, Padua, Budapest, and Moscow. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society of London, which has presented him with the Copley and the Royal Medals, and made him President from 1890 to December 1895. He is now President for the fourth time of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and holds the Keith Medal of that Society. He delivered the Rede Lecture in Cambridge in 1866, was President of the British Association in 1871, and President of the Geological Society of Glasgow from 1872 to 1894. In October 1872 he was elected a Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge (his first fellowship there was resigned on his marriage), under the provisions of the College Statutes empowering the Master and Fellows to elect men eminent in science or learning. He has been five times President of the Mathematical and Physical Section of the British Association, viz.: at Belfast, 1852; Dundee, 1867; Glasgow, 1876; York, 1881; Montreal, 1884. Of the learned societies of foreign countries there are few which have not entered the name of Lord Kelvin among their Foreign Members. From the Institut de France he received the "Prix Poncelet" (2000 francs) in 1874, and the Arago Medal in 1896. He is one of its eight Foreign Associates. In 1892 he received the Helmholtz Medal from Germany. He married (1) Margaret, daughter of Walter Crum, Thornliebank, in 1852 (died 1870); (2) Frances, daughter of Charles R. Blandy of Madeira, 1874. Addresses: the University, Glasgow; Netherhall, Largs, Ayrshire; and Athenæum.

KEMBALL, General Sir Arnold Burrowes, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., J.P., D.L., born in 1820, was educated for his profession at Addiscombe, and received his first commission as Second Lieutenant in the Bombay Artillery, Dec. 11, 1837. His battery formed part of the army of the Indus under Lord Keane, and with it he served in the first campaign in Afghanistan, 1838-39, including the siege and storming of Ghuznee and subsequent occupation of Cabul, for which he received the medal. His real field of utility, however, was determined by his appointment as Assistant Political Resident in the Persian Gulf in 1842, where he was employed in various political duties for 28 years, and acquired a special and valuable experience of Turkish and Persian affairs, and mastery of the Turkish, Persian, and Arabic languages. He was made Political Resident in the Persian Gulf in 1852, and Consul-General of Bagdad and Political Agent in Turkish Arabia in 1855, after having acted in both capacities at various times during the absences of previous incumbents. He took part in the Persian Expedition in 1857, under Sir James Outram, and was present at the capture of Mohumrah and subsequent operations in the field. He was specially mentioned several times in the despatches of both the General and the Commodore commanding the land and sea forces, for his valuable assistance, advice, and gallantry. Lord Canning, in his notification of June 18, 1857, publicly thanked him for his zealous services, "afforded on every occasion of difficulty and danger, and especially in the brilliant expedition against Ahwas." For his services in the Persian War, Captain Kembell was rewarded with the medal and clasp, a Brevet Majority, and the C.B. In 1866 he was nominated to the second class of the Star of India, and in 1874 was promoted to General Officer's rank. He was in attendance upon the Shah of Persia during his Majesty's first visit to England in 1873; was her Majesty's Commissioner for demarcating the frontier of Turkey in Asia between the Turks and Persians when these countries demanded the mediation of England and Russia in 1875; Military Attaché at her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople and at Headquarters of the Turkish army during the Servian campaign in 1876; and British Commissioner in Armenia during the Turco-Russian War. He is now on the Retired List. He is a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Sutherland, and a Director of the East Africa Company. He married Anna, daughter of A. N. Shaw, in 1868. Addresses: 62 Lowndes Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

KEMPE, Alfred Bray, M.A., F.R.S., is the third son of the Rev. John Edward Kempe, Rector of St. James, Piccadilly. He was born on July 6, 1849, at Kensington, and was educated at St. Paul's School and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was a Scholar. He graduated B.A. in 1872 as 22nd Wrangler, was called to the Bar in 1873 at the Inner Temple, and joined the Western Circuit. In 1881 he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone to be the Secretary of the Royal Commission on the Ecclesiastical Courts which sat during the years 1881-83. In January 1887, he was appointed Chancellor of the Diocese of Newcastle, in October of the same year Chancellor of the Diocese of Southwell, and in 1891 Chancellor of the Diocese of St. Albans. He was the junior counsel for the Bishop of Lincoln in the historical trial of that prelate before the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1889-90, and has been engaged in a number of other important ecclesiastical cases. Mr. Kempe is the author of a number of papers on mathematical subjects, the value of which has been recognised by his election to a Fellowship of the Royal Society in 1881. The earlier of these papers were mainly about "linkages"; the most important being one published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for 1875, "On a general method of producing exact rectilinear motion by linkwork," and a little book, "How to Draw a Straight Line," published in 1877. Later papers related to some interesting theorems as to the movement of a plane (Nature, vol. xviii. p. 149), the colouring of maps (id. vol. xxi. p. 399); the graphical representation of invariants and covariants (Proc. Lond. Math. Soc., vol. xvii. p. 108, and vol. xxiv. p. 97); the connection between logic and geometry (id. vol. xxi. p. 147) and knots (Proc. Roy. Soc. Edinburgh, 1886). In 1886 Mr. Kempe communicated to the Royal Society an important paper on the nature of the subject matter of exact thought, entitled "A Memoir on the Theory of Mathematical Form," which was printed in the Philosophical Transactions for that year. He has taken an active part in the management of the London Mathematical Society, of which body he was for some years the Treasurer, and was in 1893 and 1894 the President. He has served as a Manager of the Royal Institution in Albemarle Street, and is now (1898) on the Council of the Royal Society. He married (2), in 1887, Ida, daughter of his Honour Judge Meadows White, Q.C. Addresses: 10 Porchester Square, Hyde Park, W.; 2 Paper Buildings, Temple; and Athenæum.

KEMPE, The Rev. John Edward, M.A., son of A. J. Kempe, Esq., F.S.A., a distinguished antiquary, was born March 9, 1810; educated at St. Paul's School and Clare College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1833 as a Senior Optime, and first class in Classics; and M.A. in 1837. He was appointed Curate of Tavistock, Devon, in 1833, and elected a Fellow of his College in 1841. He became Curate of Barnet, Herts, in 1844; incumbent of St. John's, St. Pancras, on the presentation of Bishop Blomfield, in 1846; of St. Barnabas, Kensington, in 1848; and Rector of St. James's, Piccadilly, on the presentation of Lord Aberdeen, as Premier, 1853. In 1861 he was appointed by Bishop Tait to the Prebendal Stall of Chamberlainwood, in St. Paul's; in 1864 he became one of her Majesty's Chaplains; and in 1868 he was elected one of the Proctors in Convocation for London, being re-elected in 1874. In 1880 he retired from Convocation, and in 1895 resigned the Rectory of St. James. He was a rural Dean of the Diocese, and is considered to have rendered great services to the Anglican Church in general, and especially to its cause in London, by having established, and conducted as President for many years, monthly conferences, at which clergy and laity met for the discussion of Church questions. Mr. Kempe has published lectures on the Book of Job, and on Elijah; occasional sermons and prefaces to lectures delivered in St. James's Church on "The Use and Abuse of the World," "Companions for the Devout Life," and "Classic Preachers of the English Church," besides an adaptation of Bishop Andrewes' "Devotions," &c. Mr. Kempe is also the founder of the St. James's Diocesan Home for Female Penitents; and he was one of Bishop Tait's principal counsellors and coadjutors in the origination and earlier working of the Bishop of London's Fund. In 1868 Mr. Kempe was offered the Bishopric of Calcutta by Lord Cranborne (now Marquis of Salisbury), who was then Indian Minister, but declined it for family reasons. In 1843 he married Harriet, daughter of the Rev. R. Wood, of Osmington House, Dorset, by whom he has a daughter and four sons, of whom one is Chancellor of the Diocese of Newcastle, Southwell, and St. Albans. His present address is 14 Montague Place, W.

KENDAL, Mr., the stage name of Mr. William Hunter Grimston, was born in London on Dec. 16, 1843. He was educated at a private school and under a tutor, and went on the stage in Glasgow in 1862. Here he remained for several years, supporting Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean, Helen Faucit, &c., and in 1866 appeared for the first time in London, at the Haymarket Theatre, the play being "A Dangerous Friend." He played many important parts at the Haymarket, at the Court, and at the Old Prince of Wales's Theatre. From 1879 to 1888 he was lessee and manager, together with Mr. John Hare, of the St. James's Theatre, and with that distinguished player produced "The Queen's Shilling," "The Squire," "Impulse," "The Ironmaster," "A Scrap of Paper," &c., &c. He married the well-known actress, Miss Madge Robertson, in 1869, and has acted with her ever since. The Kendals' Canadian and American tours, undertaken between the years 1889 and 1895, were exceptionally successful. Address: 12 Portland Place, W.

KENDAL, Mrs. (Mrs. William Hunter Grimston), née Margaret Brunton Robertson, was born at Great Grimsby, Lincolnshire, March 15, 1849. Her grandfather, her father, and her uncle were all actors. Her brother was the dramatist T. W. Robertson. Miss "Madge" Robertson's début in London was made on July 29, 1865, when she appeared at the Haymarket as Ophelia to the Hamlet of Walter Montgomery. On March 14, 1868, she made her first decided success in the metropolis as Blanche Dumont in Dr. Westland Marston's "Hero of Romance," which was performed for the first time on that occasion at the Haymarket Theatre. On Aug. 7, 1869, Miss Robertson was married to Mr. William Hunter Grimston, who on the stage and in society is known by his assumed name of Kendal. In the ensuing five years she appeared at the Haymarket in various characters. The creation of the character of Lillian in "New Men and Old Acres" gave Mrs. Kendal a position among the leading comédiennes of the day. In January 1875 she began a short engagement at the Opera Comique, and in the same year joined the company organised by Mr. Hare for the Court Theatre. Afterwards she joined the Prince of Wales's Theatre, then under the management of Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft. In January 1879 Mrs. Kendal returned to the Court Theatre. In 1879 she joined the company at the St. James's Theatre, under the joint management of Mr. Kendal and Mr. Hare. In September 1889 Mr. and Mrs. Kendal went to America, where they made several tours up to 1895, when they finally returned to England, having obtained an extraordinary success. Mrs. Kendal has contributed to Murray's Magazine a series of gossip articles, chiefly autobiographical, entitled "Dramatic Opinions." Addresses: 12 Portland Place, W.; and The Lodge, Filey, Yorks.

KENMARE, Earl of, The Right Hon. Valentine Augustus Brown, Bart., K.P., was born on May 16, 1825, and is the eldest son of the 3rd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1871, and Catherine, daughter of Edmund O'Callaghan, of Kilgory, co. Clare. As a Liberal he sat in Parliament for co. Kerry from 1852 to 1871, was Comptroller of the Household from 1856 to 1858, Vice-Chamberlain from 1859 to 1866 and 1868-72, Lord-in-Waiting, 1872-74; Lord Chamberlain, 1880-86; has been Lord Lieutenant of co. Kerry since 1866, and since the same year has been Hon. Colonel of the 4th Battalion of the Royal Munster Fusiliers. He married in 1858 Gertrude, only daughter of Lord Charles Thynne. He owns immense estates. Address: Killarney House, Killarney.

KENNAN, George, American traveller, son of John Kennan and Mary Ann Morse, was born at Norwalk, Ohio, Feb. 16, 1845. He received an academic education, completing his studies at the Columbus (Ohio) High School, while working as a night telegraph operator. Having risen to be assistant chief operator at Cincinnati, he was sent, in December 1864, by the Russo-American Telegraph Company to superintend the location and construction of lines in Siberia, and spent three years in travelling through the north-eastern part of that country on this mission. He returned to the United States in 1868, and two years later published an account of his Arctic experience in a volume entitled "Tent Life in Siberia." In 1870 he went again to Russia, and spent some months in an exploration of Daghestan and the mountains of the eastern Caucasus, returning to America in 1871 by way of the Black Sea, Constantinople, and the Danube. In 1885-86 he made a third journey to the Russian empire, this time for the especial purpose of investigating the Siberian exile system. The results of his observations on this trip, during which he travelled 15,000 miles in Northern Russia and Siberia, were published in a series of twenty-eight articles in the Century Magazine, between the years 1887 and 1890, and were republished in book form in 1891, under the title, "Siberia and the Exile System." This work attracted wide attention, and was translated into most of the European languages, including Russian, Polish, Bohemian, Bulgarian, German, Swedish, and Dutch. Since then he has been a frequent contributor, as in the past, to leading American magazines. In 1879 he married Emmeline, daughter of J. R. Weld. Club: Authors', New York.

KENNAWAY, The Right Hon. Sir John Henry, Bart., M.P., was born in 1837, and is the eldest son of the late 2nd Baronet and Emily, daughter of Thomas Kingscote, of Kingscote. He was educated at Harrow and Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained a First Class in the Law and Modern History School (M.A. 1862). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1864. He sat in the House of Commons from 1870 to 1885 as Conservative member for East Devon, and since 1885 has represented the Honiton Division of Devon. He succeeded his father in 1873. He is President of the Church Missionary Society and of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, has been since 1894 Colonel of the 3rd Volunteer Battalion of the Devon Regiment, and is J.P. and D.L. for Devonshire. He married in 1866 Fanny, daughter of Archibald F. Arbuthnot. Addresses: Escot, Ottery St. Mary, Devon; and Athenæum.

KENNEDY, Emeritus Professor Alexander Blackie William, Vice-President of the Inst. of Mechanical Engineers, LL.D., F.R.S., &c., born March 17, 1847, at Stepney, is the son of Rev. J. Kennedy, D.D., late President Congregational Union, and Helen Stodart Blackie, sister of the late Professor Blackie, and was educated chiefly at the City of London School, and afterwards, for a year, at the School of Mines, Jermyn Street. He served as an engineering pupil for four and a half years with Messrs. J. & W. Dudgeon, Engineers and Shipbuilders, Millwall; in 1868 became leading draughtsman at Palmer's Engine Works, Jarrow; in 1871 chief draughtsman to Messrs. T. M. Tennant & Co., Ltd., Leith; in 1872 became consulting engineer in Edinburgh with Mr. H. O. Bennett, as Bennett & Kennedy. In 1874 he was appointed Professor of Civil and Mechanical Engineering at University College, London, the title of the Chair being changed later to that of Engineering and Mechanical Technology. In 1875 he established the Engineering Laboratory at University College, which was the precursor of the similar Laboratories now to be found at nearly all the colleges in the country where Engineering is taught. In 1889 he resigned his chair, but received the honorary title of Emeritus Professor of Engineering from the Council of University College. In 1876 he translated and edited Reuleaux's "Theoretische Kinematik," under the title of "Kinematics of Machinery." In 1886 he published the "Mechanics of Machinery" (second edit., 1898). He has been connected with the Research Committees of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers since their foundation, and as Reporter of the Committee on Riveted Joints, carried out an elaborate series of experiments, which are published in the Proceedings of the Institution, 1881, 1882, 1885, and 1888. As Chairman of the Committee on Marine Engine Trials he has carried out a number of extended trials at sea, the results of which have been published in the Proceedings of the Institution of Mechanical En- gineers, 1889 and 1890. He contributed a paper on "Engineering Laboratories" to the Institute of Civil Engineers (Proceedings, vol. lxxxviii., 1887), and has published many papers in the professional journals. Among other structural work he designed the iron and concrete internal structure of the present Alhambra Theatre, probably the first building in which all the floors were simply flat concrete slabs, made in situ and carried by a wrought-iron skeleton, and also the Promenade Pier at Trouville, the first purely arched steel structure of the kind which has been built. He has been Engineer in Chief to the Westminster Electric Supply Corporation, Ltd., since its formation in 1890. He has also designed and carried out systems of electric lighting for the Corporations of Glasgow, Aberdeen, Oldham, Belfast, Edinburgh, Sunderland, Chester, Croydon, Carlisle, York, West Hartlepool, and many other places, in connection in several cases with systems of electric traction. He is Joint Engineer, with Mr. W. R. Galbraith, to the Waterloo and City Railway, is one of the engineers for the Brompton and Piccadilly Railway, &c. He is an Hon. Life Member and a Past President, 1894-96, of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers. He is a Member of Council of the Institute of Civil Engineers. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1887. In 1874 he married Elizabeth Veralls, eldest daughter of the late William Smith, LL.D., Edinburgh. Addresses: 1 Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Square; and 17 Victoria Street, S.W.

KENNEDY, Captain Alexander William Maxwell Clark, F.R.G.S., F.L.S., was born at Rochester, Sept. 26, 1851, being the eldest son of the late Colonel John Clark Kennedy, C.B., of Knockgray, N.B. He was educated at Eton, where at the age of sixteen he published "The Birds of Berkshire and Buckinghamshire, a Contribution to the Ornithology of the two Counties," 1868, by "an Eton Boy." He entered the Coldstream Guards as Ensign in 1870, became Lieutenant in 1872, and Lieutenant and Captain in 1874, and retired the same year. He is the author of various verses and poems, and of a work of travels, "To the Arctic Regions and Back in Six Weeks," being travels in Lapland and Norway, 1878. He has contributed articles to the Ibis, Zoologist, Land and Water, the Field, and other natural-history periodicals; and is a fellow of several learned societies. He is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Kirkcudbrightshire, for which county he came forward as Conservative candidate at the general election of 1874, but retired.

KENNEDY, Gilbert George, Magistrate of the Metropolitan Police Courts at Greenwich and Woolwich, was born on May 9, 1844, and is the fourth son of the late John Kennedy, of the Diplomatic Service. He was educated at Harrow, and Trinity College, Cambridge, was called to the Bar in 1870, and was appointed Recorder of Grantham in 1889, in which year also he was appointed to his present post. He is author, in conjunction with J. S. Sandars, of a work on "The Law of Sewers," and is joint editor of Roscoe's "Criminal Evidence." He married, in 1874, a daughter of the late Edward Lyon, of Johnson Hall, Staffs. Address: 6 Linden Gardens, Bayswater, &c.

KENNEDY, John Gordon, Minister to Roumania, was born in 1838, and is the eldest son of John Gordon Kennedy, of Naples. He entered the Diplomatic Service in 1857, having been educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. He filled minor appointments at Vienna and Washington, and became Second Secretary at Constantinople in 1886, where he was Private Secretary to Sir Henry Elliott, whom he accompanied in 1869 when representing her Majesty at the opening of the Suez Canal. In 1878 he was Secretary at Yeddo, and then at St. Petersburg and Rome. He became Minister to Chili in 1888, a post which he exchanged for his present post in August 1897.

KENNEDY, Robert John, C.M.G., D.L., J.P., Minister to Montenegro, was born in 1851, and is the son of Robert Stewart Kennedy of Cultra. He was educated at Harrow and University College, Oxford, and entered the Diplomatic Service in 1870. He has been Secretary of Legation in Russia, Bulgaria, Roumania, and Persia, and was appointed to his present post in 1897. He married Bertha, daughter of the fifth Viscount Bangor, in 1883. Addresses: British Legation, Cettinge; Cultra, co. Down, &c.

KENNEDY, The Hon. Sir William Rann, K.B., eldest son of the Rev. W. J. Kennedy, Vicar of Barnwood, was born in 1846, and received his education at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge, of which he was subsequently a Fellow, and at Pembroke College in the same University. In 1863 he was Senior Classic. After leaving Cambridge he entered at Lincoln's Inn, was called to the Bar in 1871, and joined the Northern Circuit. He enjoyed a large practice at the Bar, and in 1885 was made a Q.C. He was Private Secretary to the President of the Poor Law Board from 1870 to 1871, and a Member of the Bar Committee from 1883 to 1892. In the latter year he was appointed a Judge of the High Court (Queen's Bench Division), and was made a K.B. He unsuccessfully contested St. Helen's in the Gladstonian interest at the 1892 general election. In 1874 he married the daughter of George Richmond, R.A. Addresses: 94 Westbourne Terrace, W.; and Athenæum.

KENNETT-BARRINGTON, Sir V. H. See BARRINGTON, SIR V. H. K.

KENNION, The Right Rev. George Wyndham, D.D., Bishop of Bath and Wells, born in 1845, is the son of George Kennion, M.D., of Harrogate. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1867; M.A. 1871). He was ordained Deacon in 1869 by the Bishop of Tuam, and Priest in the following year by the Archbishop of York. He was Domestic Chaplain to the Bishop of Tuam, 1869-70; Curate of Doncaster, 1870-71; York Diocesan Inspector of Schools, 1871-73; Vicar of St. Paul's, Sculcoates, Kingston-on-Hull, 1873-76; and Vicar of All Saints', Bradford, from 1876 until his advancement to the episcopate. On Nov. 30, 1882, he was consecrated, in Westminster Abbey, Bishop of Adelaide, in succession to Dr. Short, who had resigned the See, which comprises the whole of South Australia. He was made Bishop of Bath and Wells in 1894, in succession to the late Lord Hervey, and arrived in England in the autumn. He married, in 1882, Henrietta, daughter of Sir Charles Dalrymple Ferguson, Bart. Addresses: The Palace, Wells; and Athenæum.

KENNY, The Right Hon. William, Q.C., Judge of the High Court of Justice, Ireland, was born in Dublin on Jan. 14, 1846, and is the only son of the late Edward Kenny, solicitor, of Ennis. He was educated privately and at Trinity College, Dublin, of which he is M.A. He was called to the Irish Bar at the King's Inns in 1868, and rose to be the leader of the Irish Chancery Bar (Q.C. 1885; Bench, King's Inns, 1890). After the defeat of the Home Rule Bill of 1886 he laboured to organise Liberal Unionism in Ireland, and for a time was Secretary to the Liberal Union of Ireland. He arranged for the famous visit to Dublin of Lord Hartington and Mr. Goschen in 1887. He was Liberal-Unionist member for St. Stephen's Green from 1892 to 1897. He was Solicitor-General for Ireland from 1895 to 1897. On his appointment to this office he had again to contest his seat, and he thus held a hitherto impregnable Nationalist stronghold at three successive elections. In 1897 he was appointed Judge of the High Court of Justice, Ireland. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of David Caffey, Master in Chancery. Addresses: 72 Chester Place, S.W.; 35 Fitzwilliam Place, Dublin.

KENT, William Charles Mark (known as Charles Kent), poet and journalist, was born in London, on Nov. 3, 1823, and was educated at Prior Park and Oscott Colleges. His father, William Kent, R.N., who was born on Dec. 23, 1799, in the Government House at Sydney in Australia, when his great-uncle, Captain (afterwards Admiral) Hunter was Governor of New South Wales, and who, on Aug. 27, 1816, was a midshipman on board the Leander frigate at the battle of Algiers under Viscount Exmouth, was the only son of Captain William Kent, R.N., the discoverer of Kent's Group and the Gulf of St. Vincent, and who died in 1812, while in command, during the great Napoleonic War, of H.M.S. Union, 98 guns, then stationed off Toulon. Mr. Kent's mother, Ellen, was the only daughter of Judge Baggs, of the Court of Vice-Admiralty in Demerara, by a lady of good Irish family. At an early age Mr. Charles Kent adopted literature as a profession. When 19 he had written and published, in three series, more than forty Essays and Stories. When 22 he began, in the Christmas of 1845, his twenty-five years' editorship of the Sun daily newspaper, of which journal, during the last eight years of that quarter of a century, he was both editor and sole proprietor. Beginning with 1874 he was for seven years editor of the Weekly Register. He is the author, among other works, of "The Vision of Cagliostro, a tale of the Five Senses," 1847; "Aletheia, or the Doom of Mythology, and other Poems," 1850; "Dreamland, or Poets in their Haunts, and other Poems," 1862; "Footprints on the Road," 1864; his "Poems," in a collected edition, 1870; a "Mythological Dictionary" (virginibus puerisque), 1870; "Charles Dickens as a Reader," published simultaneously in London and Philadelphia, 1872; "Corona Catholica," in fifty languages, in which work he was translated by the chief linguistic scholars of Europe, Asia, and Africa, among them being Professor Paley into Greek, Professor Max-Müller into Sanskrit, Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte into Basque, Professor Mir Aulad Ali into Persian, Professor Dillmann into Ethiopic, Professor Sayce into Assyrian, Professor Nöldeke into Syriac, and Professor Novalevsky into Russian. He has written, besides this, "The Modern Seven Wonders of the World," profusely illustrated, in 1890. He has also published under various assumed names such entirely different productions as "Catholicity in the Dark Ages," by an Oscotian, 1847;

"The Derby Ministry," by Mark Rochester, 1858; and "The Gladstone Government," by a Templar, 1869. He edited in 1875 "The Centenary Edition of Charles Lamb," which has been frequently reprinted and has had a very wide circulation. Besides this, he edited, in 1879, "The Centenary Edition of Thomas Moore." Prefixed to these two last-mentioned works, he wrote a Memoir, embellished with facsimiles, in which he brought together a mass of entirely new facts, especially in regard to Charles Lamb, from sources until then wholly overlooked by preceding biographers. In a similar way he edited also, in 1874, "The Works of Robert Burns." in 1881, those of "Father Prout," and, in 1888; those of his own personal friend, Leigh Hunt. Under his supervision the miscellaneous works of the first Lord Lytton, including his poems, plays, essays, and minor romances, were added, in 12 volumes, to the Knebworth Edition of his more famous Novels and Romances. In 1879 he presented to the British Museum the "Last Letter of Charles Dickens," and in 1887 the "First Letter of Lord Lytton," both addressed to himself, and both now permanently displayed there, under glass, in the Manuscript Department. Beyond this, he published, in 1883, "The Wit and Wisdom of Lord Lytton"; and, in 1884, "The Humour and Pathos of Charles Dickens." He has contributed largely for years to many of the leading periodicals, such as the Westminster Review, Blackwood's Magazine, Household Words, and All the Year Round; writing besides a great number of memoirs in the "Dictionary of National Biography," the Illustrated Review, and the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He was called to the Bar on June 10, 1859, at the Middle Temple, and was awarded in 1887 a Pension from the Crown of £100 a year on the Civil List, in recognition of his contributions to literature as poet and biographer.

KEPPEL, Admiral The Hon. Sir Henry, G.C.B., D.C.L., fourth son of the late 4th Earl of Albemarle, and Elizabeth, daughter of the late Lord de Clifford, born June 14, 1809, entered the navy at an early age, was made Lieutenant in 1829, and Commander in 1833. In command of the Childers, 16 guns, he served on the south coast of Spain during the civil war of 1834-35, afterwards on the west coast of Africa, was made Captain in 1837, and commanded the Dido from 1841 till 1845, during which time he was employed in the China war of 1842, and afterwards in the suppression of piracy in the Eastern Archipelago. From November 1847 till July 1851 he commanded the Meander, 44 guns, on the China and Pacific stations; in May 1853 was appointed to the command of the St. Jean d'Acre, 101 guns; served in the Baltic and in the Black Sea, and having in July 1855 exchanged into the Rodney, 74 guns, obtained command of the Naval Brigade before Sebastopol. After the fall of that stronghold he returned to England, and was appointed to the Colossus. In September 1856 he hoisted his pennant as Commodore on board the Raleigh, 52 guns, and proceeded to China, where his ship was lost by striking on an unknown rock. He commanded a division of boats at the destruction of the Chinese war fleet in the Fatsan Creek, June 1, 1857, for which service he was made a K.C.B., and on attaining flag-rank he returned to England. In 1859 he was made Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen, which office he relinquished in May 1860, on being appointed to the Cape of Good Hope as Naval Commander-in-Chief, from which he was transferred to the Brazilian station. In January 1867 he hoisted his flag on board the Rodney, as Vice-Admiral Commander-in-Chief on the China and Japan station. He returned to England in December 1869, on attaining the rank of full Admiral, and was made D.C.L. of Oxford in 1870. He was created a G.C.B. in 1871, and he became an Admiral of the Fleet in 1877. He retired in 1879. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and Medjidieh of the second class. Sir H. Keppel has written "Expedition to Borneo, with Rajah Brooke's Journal," published in 1847, "Visit to the Indian Archipelago," and "Reminiscences," 1898. He married (2) Jane, daughter of Martin J. West, barrister-at-law. She died in 1895. Address: 8 Albany, W., &c.

KER, William Paton, M.A. Oxon., LL.D. (Hon.) Glasgow, son of William Ker, a Glasgow merchant, was born in 1855. He was educated at the Glasgow Academy, at Glasgow University, and at Balliol College, Oxford, of which latter foundation he was Snell Exhibitioner. At Oxford he also gained the Taylorian Scholarship in 1878, and was elected a Fellow of All Souls' College, in 1879. After assisting for some time the Professor of Humanity in the University of Edinburgh, he was, in 1883, appointed Professor of English Language, Literature, and History in the University College of South Wales at Cardiff. In 1889, on the resignation of Professor Henry Morley, he became Professor of English Language and Literature in University College, London. He has contributed an Essay on the "Philosophy of Art" to "Essays in Philosophical Criticism," edited by A. Seth and R. B. Haldane, 1883; and papers to Oxb's

"English Prose Selections." He is besides the author of "Epic and Romance"; and "Essays on Mediæval Literature," 1897. His address is: 95 Gower Street, W.C.

KÉRATRY, Émile, Comte de, was born in Paris, March 20, 1832, of an ancient Breton family, his father being Count Auguste Hilarion Kératry, who died in 1859. Having completed his studies at the Lyceums of St. Louis and of Louis-le-Grand, he entered as a volunteer the 1st Regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique, in 1854, went through the Crimean campaign, removed successively to the 1st Regiment of Spahis and of Cuirassiers, and, in 1859, was appointed Sous-Lieutenant in the 5th Regiment of Lancers. In 1861 he exchanged into the 3rd Regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique, in order that he might make the campaign in Mexico; and in 1864 he was detached as Captain commanding the second squadron of Colonel Dupin's famous counter-guerrilla. In this dangerous service he distinguished himself by his bravery and decision, and afterwards he was appointed Officer of Ordnance to Marshal Bazaine. The Comte de Kératry was several times mentioned in the "Order of the Day" in Africa and Mexico. In 1865 he was recommended for a Lieutenant's commission, but he sent in his resignation and retired from the service. At this period he had received the Legion of Honour, and had been decorated with several foreign Orders. On his return to France he devoted himself to literary pursuits, and contributed to the Revue Contemporaine a remarkable series of articles on the Mexican expedition, in which he severely attacked the Government and the conduct of Marshal Bazaine. Soon afterwards he became editor of the Revue Moderne, in which periodical he continued his accusation. In 1869 he was returned by the electors of Brest to the Corps Législatif, when he associated himself with the new Liberal Tiers-Parti. On the establishment of the Government of the National Defence in September 1870, he was made Prefect of Police; but in the following month he escaped in a balloon from Paris, then besieged, and proceeded on a diplomatic mission to Madrid, where, soon afterwards, he was succeeded by M. Edmond Adam. On October 22 he was appointed General of Division, commanding the mobilised forces in Brittany, and recruited a number of old sailors, but shortly afterwards resigned his command. When M. Thiers came to power he was appointed Prefect of the Bouches-du-Rhône, but his severe repression of disorder excited the hostility of the Republican press, and he eventually retired. After several unsuccessful attempts to get into Parliament he retired into private life, and has latterly devoted himself to the question of international copyright. He is the author of "Le Contre-Guerrilla," 1867; "La Créance Jecker," 1867; "L'Élévation et la Chute de Maximilien," 1867; a work on French events entitled "Le 4 Septembre et le Gouvernement de la Défense Nationale," 1871; "Armée de Bretagne, 1870-1," published in 1874; "Mourad V., Prince, Sultan, Prisonnier d'État," 1878; and "À travers le passée Souvenirs Militaires," 1887. In 1872 he was promoted to be a Commander of the Legion of Honour.

KERNAHAN, Coulson, son of Dr. James Kernahan, M.A., F.G.S., born at Ilfracombe, Aug. 1, 1858, was educated at St. Albans, and privately by his father. He was for many years literary adviser to Ward, Lock & Co., now to James Bowden. He has contributed to the Nineteenth Century and the Fortnightly, and most of the principal English and American reviews. His first book, "A Dead Man's Diary," 1890, was published serially in Lippincott's Magazine, of which Mr. Kernahan was at one time English editor. Then followed "A Book of Strange Sins," 1893; "Sorrow and Song," a volume of literary essays, 1894. His two most widely circulated publications, "God and the Ant," and "The Child, the Wise Man, and the Devil," were issued in 1895 and 1896 respectively. The combined sale of these two booklets exceeds 100,000 copies. In 1897 he issued "Captain Shannon," which ran first as a serial in the Windsor Magazine. The stories contained in "A Book of Strange Sins" has been re-issued by the publishers (whose copyright the work is) in separate booklets, some of which, especially "A Literary Gent," have had large circulations. Mrs. Coulson Kernahan, the widow of the late Professor Bettany, of Caius College, Cambridge, is the author of several successful volumes: "The House of Rimmon," "A Laggard in Love," "Trewennot of Guy's," &c., and is a contributor to Temple Bar, the Aryosy, and other magazines. Mary Kernahan, whose book of "Nonsense Verse" was published by Bowden in 1898, and who is also a contributor to the magazines, is Mr. Coulson Kernahan's sister. Address: Thrams, Westcliff-on-Sea, Essex.

KERR, Robert, architect, Emeritus Professor, King's College, London, was born at Aberdeen, Jan. 17, 1823, and became a pupil of John Smith, city architect of Aberdeen. He was the first President of the Architectural Association in 1847, was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1857, and was appointed Professor of the Arts of Construction at King's College, London, in 1861, retaining that post until his retirement in 1890. He is the author of "The English Gentleman's House," 1864, and other works, and amongst other buildings, has designed and executed Bearwood, Berkshire, the residence of the late Mr. John Walter, of the Times. He is the consulting architect to various professional papers. Address: 22 Old Burlington Street, W.

KERR, Robert Malcolm, LL.D., D.L., J.P., Judge of the City of London Court, was born in Scotland in 1821, went to the Scottish Bar in 1843, and was called to the English Bar, at Lincoln's Inn in 1848, and at the Middle Temple in 1860. Mr. Commissioner Kerr is well known for his just administration of the law for the protection of the victims of unscrupulous usurers; and has edited several valuable legal works. He twice unsuccessfully contested Kilmarnock in the Liberal interest. Addresses: 7 Chester Terrace, N.W.; and Athenæum.

KERSHAW, S. Wayland, M.A., F.S.A., Librarian of the Archbishop's Library, Lambeth, is the youngest son of the late Rev. John Kershaw, M.A., and was born in 1837, and educated at King's College, London, and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree. On leaving the University, he engaged in library and journalistic work, and was officially connected with the Royal Institute of British Architects for eleven years. In 1870 he was appointed by Archbishop Tait as Librarian of Lambeth Palace, which position he still holds. He is an Hon. Member of the Guernsey Antiquarian and of the Société des Antiquaires, Picardy, also one of the first members of the Huguenot Society of London, founded in 1885. He has contributed papers on Art and Archaeology to the Art Journal, Architect, &c., as well as to several antiquarian societies, especially on subjects relating to Surrey and Kent. For some time he was joint editor of the late Herbert Fry's "Handbook to London," and has published an illustrated manual on the "Art Treasures of Lambeth Library," 1873, and a work on "Protestants from France in their English Home," also chapters to some of the series of "Bygone" County Histories lately issued by the Hull Press, as well as occasional essays on ecclesiastical matters, in Church and other periodicals. Address: Archbishop's Library, Lambeth Palace.

Rev. George James Cornish, of Salcombe Hill, Sidmouth, Devon, Prebendary of Exeter, was born in 1824, and educated at Winchester School, and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford (B.A. 1846; M.A. 1849; D.D. 1874). He was vicar of Coleridge, Devon, 1856-61; of Revelstoke in the same county, 1861-66; and Rector of Landkey, Barnstaple, from 1866 till 1874, when he was appointed the first Bishop of Madagascar, retiring in 1896. In 1897 he became Rector of Down St. Mary, Bow, North Devon. In 1871 he assumed the additional name of Kestell, as the sole surviving representative of the ancient family of Kestell of Kestell, Cornwall. Address: Rectory, Down St. Mary, Bow, N. Devon.

KIDD, Benjamin, was born in 1858, and entered the Civil Service (Inland Revenue Department, Somerset House) by open competition in 1877. He has been engaged for many years in the study of practical biology. He was Hon. Secretary from 1882 to 1886 to the Committee of the Second Division of the Civil Service, the work of which was one of the principal causes leading to the appointment of the Ridley Commission, and ultimately to the reorganisation of the Home Civil Service. He has contributed, from 1884 onwards, many articles to reviews and periodicals mainly on subjects scientific (biological), helping with others in England to direct attention to the importance of the theories being enunciated in Germany by Professor August Weismann, whom he visited at Freiburg in 1890. He published, in 1894, "Social Evolution," upon which he had been at work for a period of ten years. The book immediately attracted wide attention in England, and later in foreign countries; in England and America it has gone through a large number of reprints and editions, the nineteenth English edition being issued by Messrs. Macmillan in February 1898. It was soon translated into German (with introduction by Professor Weismann); Swedish (introduction by Professor Rydberg); Russian (introduction by Mikhailovsky); French and Italian. Mr. Kidd resigned his appointment in the Inland Revenue Department in 1897, and is now engaged in the further development of the system of social philosophy outlined in "Social Evolution." Address: c/o Messrs. Macmillan, St. Martin's Street, London, W.C.

KILMOREY, Earl of, Charles Francis Needham, K.P., D.L., J.P., was born on Aug. 2, 1842, is the eldest son of the late

Viscount Newry and Mourne, and succeeded his grandfather, the 2nd Earl, in 1880. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and graduated B.A., 1864; M.A., 1867. As Viscount Newry he sat for Newry in the House of Commons from 1871 to 1874. In 1881 he became a representative peer for Ireland, K.P. in 1890. He was appointed, in 1895, Hon. Colonel of the Shropshire Yeomanry Cavalry, and in 1871 was High Sheriff of Down. He married, in 1881, Ellen Constance, daughter of Edward H. Baldock, Esq., M.P. KIMBERLEY, Earl of, The Right Hon. John Wodehouse, K.G., D.C.L., Bart., born Jan. 7, 1826, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1847, taking a first-class in classical honours. He is the eldest son of the Hon. Henry Wodehouse and his wife, daughter of Theophilus Thornhagh Gurdon, Letton, Norfolk, and succeeded his grandfather as 3rd Baron Wodehouse, May 29, 1846, and was raised to the earldom of Kimberley, June 1, 1866. In December 1852 he accepted the post of Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, which he held under Lords Aberdeen and Palmerston until 1856, when he was appointed Envoy at St. Petersburg. He returned from Russia in 1858, and resumed his post as Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Lord Palmerston's second administration, June 19, 1859, retiring Aug. 14, 1861. In 1863 he was sent on a special mission to the north of Europe, with the view of obtaining some settlement of the Schleswig-Holstein question; and in 1864 he was appointed Under-Secretary for India. In October of the same year he succeeded the late Earl of Carlisle in the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland, resigning that post on the fall of Lord Russell's second administration, in July 1866. He held the office of Lord Privy Seal in Mr. Gladstone's administration from December 1868 to July 1870, and that of Secretary of State for the Colonies from the latter date until the retirement of Mr. Gladstone in February 1874. In February 1878 he was nominated Chairman of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the working of the Penal Servitude Acts. He was reappointed Secretary of State for the Colonies on Mr. Gladstone's return to power in May 1880; and in June 1882 he was also appointed to hold provisionally the seals of the office of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, resigned by Mr. Bright. On December 16, 1882, he received from the Queen the seals of the office of Secretary of State for India, which he held till June 1885, and to which he was reappointed on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's third Government in February 1886. In August 1892, on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's fourth Government, he again received the seals of the Secretary of State for India, and was at the same time appointed Lord President of the Council. These offices he held until March 1894, when, on Lord Rosebery becoming Premier, he received the seals of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and resigned that post on the fall of that administration in June 1895. In 1885 he was made a Knight of the Garter. He is a member of the Senate of the University of London, and was President of University College, London, resigning in 1887. In March 1899 he was appointed Chancellor of the University of London, to succeed the late Lord Herschell. He married Florence, eldest daughter of the 3rd Earl of Clare, in 1847. She died in 1895. Addresses: Kimberley House, Wymondham, Norfolk; 35 Lowndes Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

KINCAIRNEY, Lord, William Ellis Gloag, Senator of the College of Justice, Edinburgh, was born in Perth on Feb. 7, 1828, and is the son of William Gloag, of Greenhill, banker. He was educated at Perth Grammar School, and at Edinburgh University, became an advocate in 1853, and has been Sheriff of Stirlingshire and of Perthshire. Address: 6 Heriot Row, Edinburgh, &c.

KING, The Right Rev. Edward, D.D., Bishop of Lincoln, was born in the year 1829, and is the son of the late Archdeacon King, of Rochester. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1851; M.A. 1855). He was ordained deacon in 1854, and priest 1855, by the Bishop of Oxford, and became curate of Wheatley. In 1858 he was appointed Chaplain and Assistant-Lecturer of Cuddesdon College, and from 1863 to 1873 he was Principal of the College. In 1873 he became Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Pastoral Theology, in which position he exercised a wide influence throughout the University. On the death of Dr. Christopher Wordsworth in 1885, Dr. King was appointed to the Bishopric of Lincoln, and was consecrated in Lincoln Cathedral. Dr. King is a High Churchman, and at Lincoln carried ritualistic practices to such a point that he was cited before the Archbishop of Canterbury for nonconformity to the Rubric; the result being that he promised to obey the Archbishop's injunctions, and abstain from certain forms which gave offence. He has published "Meditations on the Last Seven Words," &c. Address: Old Palace, Lincoln.

KING, Lieut.-Col. Sir George, LL.D., F.R.S., K.C.I.E., superintendent of the Royal Botanic Gardens at Calcutta, was born in Scotland, April 12, 1820, and was educated at Aberdeen University. In 1866 he became a Surgeon at the Hospital of Calcutta, and in 1871 was appointed Superintendent of the Botanical Gardens, Professor in Botany at the Calcutta Medical College, and Superintendent of the Government cinchona plantations at Darjeeling. In 1891 he became, in addition, Director of the Botanical Survey of India. He is the author of "Manual of Cinchona Cultivation in India," and other botanical works, and he is the editor of the "Annals of the Royal Botanic Gardens of Calcutta." He was made a C.I.E. in 1890, and promoted to knighthood in the same Order in 1898. Address: Geepore, Calcutta.

KING, Yeend, R.I., was born in London on Aug. 21, 1855, and is the only son of Henry King. He was educated at the Temple Choir School and the Philological School, and then became apprentice to Messrs. O'Connor, the glass painters. He stayed here three years, and then began to study painting under William Bromley, R.B.A., and afterwards under the great French painters Bonnat and Corinon. He is well known as a painter of landscape with figure, and has exhibited constantly for some twenty years in the Royal Academy. Among his well-known pictures of earlier date should be mentioned "Green and Gold," which was bought for Liverpool, "The Lass that Loves a Sailor," "The Miller's Daughter," and "Sweet September." In 1895 his landscapes were "Sleeping Waters" and "On the Ouse"; in 1896, "At Sunset" and "Hay in September," purchased for New South Wales by the R.A.; in 1897, "The Garden by the River" and "The Windmill"; and in 1898, "Blackmore Vale" and "Milking Time." He is Hon. Treasurer of the R. Inst., and has obtained medals at Paris, Berlin, and Chicago. Address: 103 Finchley Road, N.W.

KING-HARMAN, Charles Anthony, C.M.G., M.A. Cantab., Administrator and Colonial Secretary of St. Lucia, is the fifth son of the Hon. Lawrence King-Harman, of Roscommon, and was born in 1851. He was educated at Cheltenham and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his degree in 1872. He became Private Secretary to the Governor of the Bahamas in 1874, and to the High Commissioner of Cyprus in 1879, where he also acted as Assistant Commissioner. In 1883 he became Auditor-General of Barbadoes, and ten years later Colonial Secretary of Mauritius, where he often took the place of the Governor. He obtained his present post in 1897. He married in 1888, Constance, daughter of General Sir R. Bid-dulph, G.C.M.G. Address: Government House, St. Lucia.

KINGSBURGH, Lord. See MACDONALD, THE RIGHT HON. JOHN HAY ATHOLE.

KINGSFORD, William, Canadian historian, was born in London in 1819, and entering the army came to Canada with the 1st Dragoon Guards. He left that regiment in 1841, and entered the City Surveyor's Office at Montreal, becoming later Deputy City Surveyor. He resigned that position in 1844 to become co-editor of the Montreal Times. In 1846 the Times ceased to exist, and he entered the Department of Public Works, surveying the Lachine Canal. He aided in the construction of the Hudson River Railway, the Panama Railway, and on returning to Canada was appointed Surveyor of the Grand Trunk Railway. In 1860 he returned to England, and did not revisit Canada until 1866, when he became Engineer of Harbours, and Surveyor of the Canadian Pacific Railway, 1880. On retiring from this work he turned to literature, and in 1887 produced the first volume of his "History of Canada from the Earliest Times until the Union of Upper and Lower Canadas in 1841." This great work was finished in 1897 in ten volumes, and has earned the encomium of every writer. He was made an honorary LL.D. of Queen's and Dalhousie Universities, and he is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada. Address: 310 Chapel Street, Ottawa.

KINGSLEY, Mary H., explorer, is a daughter of Dr. G. H. Kingsley, brother of the late Canon Kingsley. In 1893 she went out to St. Paul de Loanda to study botany and zoology, and after collecting many specimens visited Cabenda, where the Portuguese authorities gave her great assistance. She travelled through regions hitherto untraversed by Europeans, and had a long struggle with the difficulties encountered in swamps and dense bush, but the results of her adventurous expedition were most satisfactory. In November 1896 she returned to Africa, visited Old Calabar and the rivers of the Niger Coast Protectorate, and collected some rare specimens of plants, &c., which may eventually form articles of export. Afterwards she travelled, and had more than one hairbreadth escape in the elephant and gorilla countries. She was once nearly drowned in her desire to view the rapids above N'Ojole near Talaguga. She returned to her friends at the French Protestant Mission of Talaguga, then visited Lambarene, afterwards made a courageous journey across country to Ogongou, on the Rembwe River, where no white man had ever set foot, and then came to Gaboon. In Dr. Nassau's boat, the Lafayette, she next made a thorough exploration of the island of Corisco, obtaining rare specimens. Thence she visited the Cameroons, the branches of the Old Calabar River, &c. Miss Kingsley doubtless derives her passion for travel and natural-history studies from her father, long familiar to the scientific society of Cambridge. She has published the results of her journeys in two books, "Travels in West Africa," 1896, and "West African Studies," 1898, the latter a very important contribution to our knowledge of the Crown Colonies on the Gold Coast.

KINGSTON, The Right Hon. Charles Cameron, Q.C., LL.D., D.C.L., Prime Minister of South Australia, was born at Adelaide, Oct. 22, 1850, and is the younger son of the late Sir George Strickland Kingston, one of the pioneers who came to the province with Colonel Light in the Cygnets in 1836 before the foundation of the colony. He was educated at Adelaide Educational Institution, and was then articled to Mr. S. J. Way, now Chief-Justice of South Australia. He was called to the Bar in 1873, and became a Q.C. in 1889. In 1881 he entered political life, and was returned for West Adelaide, which district he has represented ever since. Having been three times Attorney-General, he formed a government in 1893. Among the measures passed during his premiership have been the extension of the franchise to women, the establishment of the State Bank of South Australia, factory legislation, and progressive income taxation. Address: West Adelaide, South Australia.

KINNEAR, Lord, Alexander Smith Kinnear, Scotch Lord of Session, was born in Edinburgh on Nov. 3, 1833, and is the son of John Kinnear, and Mary, daughter of Alexander Smith, an Edinburgh banker. He was educated at the universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and was called to the Bar in Edinburgh in 1856. He was appointed a Q.C. in 1881, and in 1882 was raised to the Bench. In 1881 he was Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, and in 1897 was created first Baron Kinnear. Address: 2 Moray Place, Edinburgh.

KINTORE, Earl of, The Right Hon. Algernon Keith - Falconer, G.C.M.G., F.R.S.E., was born in Edinburgh on Aug. 12, 1852, and was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A., LL.D.). He succeeded his father, the 8th earl, in 1880. He was appointed First Government Whip in the House of Lords in 1885; was Lord-in-Waiting in 1885-86, and has served in that position since 1895; was Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard from 1886 to 1889, when he was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of South Australia, a position he held until 1895. He is an hon. Colonel of Militia. He married in 1873 Lady Sydney Charlotte Montagu, daughter of the 6th Duke of Manchester. Addresses: 13 Lower Berkeley Street, Portman Square; and Keith Hall, Inverurie, &c.

KIPLING, Rudyard, who has been described as the "Tyrtæus of the conquering Saxon," was born in Bombay, Dec. 30, 1865, and is the son of John Lockwood Kipling, C.I.E., late Head of the Lahore School of Art, author of "Beast and Man in India," 1891. He was educated at the United Services College, Westward Ho, North Devon; returned to India in 1882 as sub-editor of the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette, and was special correspondent for that paper and for the Pioneer of Allahabad, on the frontier, at Rajputana and elsewhere. He published, in India, "Departmental Ditties," and "Plain Tales from the Hills," followed by six small books of military, native, and social life in India, of which "Soldiers' Three" deserves special mention. He left India in 1889, and travelled in China, Japan, and America, and thence to England. He has written the following books in recent years: A one-volume novel, "The Light that Failed," published in 1891; "Life's Handicap," a collection of tales, mostly Oriental, in the same year; "Ballads and Barrack-room Ballads," 1892; "Many Inventions," "The Jungle Book," 1894; "The Second Jungle Book," 1895; "The Seven Seas," 1896; "Soldier Stories," 1896; "Captains Courageous," 1897; "The Day's Work," 1898. He has also published stories and poems in the Pall Mall Gazette, and poems in the Daily Chronicle and Times. These journalistic poems may be said to mark an epoch in modern English literature. They have appeared, backed by the immense advertising power of the London journals in which they have been printed, and have at once become household words. We need only mention "The Flowers," "Our Lady of the Snows," and "Recessional." The last-mentioned appeared in the Times, and was the chosen poem of the Jubilee celebrations in June 1897. It was a somewhat Hebraic warning to the Anglo-Saxon race, only too prone to worship merely material aggrandisement, and, as such, it compares curiously with Mr. George Meredith's sonnet on Empire, which appeared at about the same time. Despite criticism, the belief is growing that Mr. Kipling is one of the few brilliant men of genius who carry on the tradition of English letters in the times that have succeeded the deaths of Tennyson and Browning. Whatever may be thought in 1950 of "The Gadsbys," there can be no doubt that the twentieth century will admire this author's masterly pictures of the ancient life of those whom the Anglo-Saxon is tending to obliterate. His tales, "Without Benefit of Clergy," "Beyond the Pale," "Mohamed Din," and many others dealing with Hindoo life, will place him among the immortals of another century, when many of his more English stories will have been forgotten. In the spring of 1899 Mr. Kipling passed through a very dangerous attack of pneumonia, contracted by him while staying in a New York hotel. He was devotedly nursed by Mrs. Kipling, and his recovery was marked by the enthusiastic rejoicings of Americans and English.

KIPPING, Professor Frederic Stanley, F.R.S., was born in 1863, at Manchester, and is the eldest son of James Stanley Kipping. He was educated at Manchester Grammar School, at Owens College, and at Munich University, of which he is Ph.D. He is also D.Sc. of London. After completing his chemical studies in Germany, he for some years assisted Professor Perkin in Edinburgh. He has been Lecturer in the Chemical Department of the Central Technical College, and was appointed Professor of Chemistry at University College, Nottingham, in 1897, in which year he was also elected F.R.S. In conjunction with Prof. Perkin he has written a work on "Organic Chemistry," and has published many papers in the Journal of the Chemical Society, chiefly on Bromocamphoric Acids, &c. He is married to a daughter of W. T. Holland, J.P., of Bridgwater. Address: The College, Nottingham.

KIRK, Sir John, M.D., G.C.M.G., K.C.B., F.R.S., LL.D. (Honorary) Edinburgh, Sc.D. Cambridge, was born at Barry, near Arbroath, Forfarshire, on Dec. 19, 1836, and is the second son of the Rev. John Kirk, Arbirlot, Forfarshire. He graduated M.D. in the University of Edinburgh in 1854, and early distinguished himself in botany and other departments of natural history. He served on the Civil

Medical Staff during the Crimean War, and subsequently, for five years, February 1858 to July 1864, as Chief Officer and Naturalist to the late Dr. Livingstone's second exploring expedition, sent out by the British Government. In 1866 he was Vice-Consul and Assistant Political Agent at Zanzibar. In 1873 he was appointed her Majesty's Consul-General, and in 1880 her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar. He accompanied the Sultan of Zanzibar in his visit to England in 1875, having previously, by his great influence with that potentate, induced him to enter into a treaty for the abolition of the slave-trade in his dominions. By his own exertions, and the aid he has afforded to other explorers, Dr. Kirk has materially assisted the progress of geographical discovery in East Africa, for which he received the Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society of London; but his great achievement is the almost complete suppression of the slave-trade in the greater part of Eastern Africa. In 1875 he was appointed Consul in the Comoro Islands, in addition to his other duties. In 1889 and 1890 he was her Majesty's Plenipotentiary at the Slave-Trade Conference at Brussels; H.M. Commissioner on the Niger in 1895; and became Vice-Chairman Uganda Railway, 1896. He was made a C.M.G. in August 1879; K.C.M.G. in September 1881; G.C.M.G., Feb. 16, 1886; and a K.C.B. in 1890. He married Helen Cooke in 1867. Addresses: Wavertree, Sevenoaks; and Athenæum.

KIRKPATRICK, Professor the Rev. Alexander Francis, D.D., is the son of the late Rev. F. Kirkpatrick, who was descended from a younger branch of the family of the Kirkpatricks of Closeburn in Scotland, and was born at Lewes on June 25, 1849. He received his education at Haileybury College, under the Rev. A. G. Butler, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a Minor Scholarship in 1867, and a Foundation Scholarship in the following year. He was elected Bell Scholar and Porson Scholar in 1868, and Craven Scholar in 1870; and graduated B.A. in 1871, as second in the first-class of the Classical Tripos. In the same year he was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College. He was placed in the first class of the Theological Examination in 1872, obtaining the Evans Prize, and being equal for the Scholefield and Hebrew Prizes, and in 1874 was elected Tyrwhitt Hebrew Scholar. He was ordained deacon in 1874, and priest in 1875, by the Bishop of Ely. He held the office of Assistant-Tutor of his College from 1871 to 1882; served as Junior Proctor and Examiner for the Classical and Theological Triposes; was Whitehall Preacher, 1878-80, and Lady Margaret's Preacher, 1882 and 1893; and has also been University Preacher upon other occasions. In 1882 he succeeded Prof. Jarrett as Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge, an office to which a Canonry in Ely Cathedral is attached, and in 1898 was appointed to the Mastership of Selwyn College. He has been a member of the Council of the Senate of the University, and is on various Boards and Syndicates. He was Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Winchester (Harold Browne) from 1878 to 1890, and was Warburtonian Lecturer at Lincoln's Inn, 1886-90. Since 1891 he has been Examining Chaplain to Bishop Randall Davidson, in the Diocese of Rochester (1890-95) and Winchester. Prof. Kirkpatrick has written commentaries on the First and Second Books of Samuel and the Book of Psalms in "The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges," and is the general editor of the Old Testament in that series. He has contributed to the Church Quarterly Review and the Expositor. He has also published "The Divine Library of the Old Testament," 1891, and "The Doctrine of the Prophets," 1892, being the Warburtonian Lectures for 1886-90. He married, in 1884, Mary, eldest daughter of the Rev. J. Pemberton Bartlett. Addresses: Selwyn College Lodge, Cambridge; and The College, Ely.

KITCHENER OF KHARTOUM, Lord, Major-General Sir Horatio Herbert, R.E., G.C.B., K.C.M.G., Sirdar of the Egyptian army, and Pacha, eldest son of the late Lieut.-Colonel H. H. Kitchener of the 13th Dragoons, was born in June 1850, and educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He entered the army as a Lieutenant of Royal Engineers in January 1871, and was promoted Captain in January 1883, Major in October 1884, and Colonel in April 1888. During the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 he saw some service on the French side as a volunteer. The eight years between 1874 and 1882 were spent in civil employment. In 1874 he joined the survey of Western Palestine under Major Conder, but after the attack on the party at Safed, in 1875, he returned to England, and for two years was engaged in laying down the Palestine Exploration Fund's map. Returning to the Holy Land in 1877, he executed the whole of the survey of Galilee. In 1878 he was sent to Cyprus to organise the Courts. He was next appointed Vice-Consul at Erzeroum. Subsequently he returned to Cyprus and made a survey of the entire island. In 1882, hearing that an Egyptian army was being organised by Sir Evelyn Wood, he volunteered for the service, and was appointed one of the two Majors of the cavalry. Major Kitchener soon acquired a knowledge of the Egyptian character, so that he was often entrusted with missions of some delicacy, which were always carried out in a most satisfactory manner. In June 1884 he was appointed Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General of the Intelligence Department under Sir Chas. Wilson, and took part in the Nile Expedition. He also drew up a scheme for the relief of Khartoum and the rescue of Gordon. It was to have been effected by a small brigade of infantry, led with confidence and moved with celerity, but the plan was overruled. For his services he was several times mentioned in despatches, and was promoted Brevet Lieut.-Colonel. In August 1886 he succeeded General Watson as Governor of the Red Sea Territories, and the judicious advice he then gave the Arabs enabled them to overthrow Osman Digna at Tamai with great slaughter. Subsequently he succeeded Colonel Chermiside as Governor-General of the Red Sea Littoral, and Commandant at Suakin. At the action of Hlandoub he commanded the Egyptian troops, and was severely wounded. In May 1888 he left for England, being succeeded at Suakin by Lieut.-Colonel Hotted Smith. Upon his arrival he was nominated Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, which appointment carries with it the rank of Colonel; he was also awarded the Medjidie of the second class. Towards the end of the year Colonel Kitchener again left for Egypt, and was appointed to command a Brigade of the Egyptian army in the Soudan. He was present at the action of Gamaizah, and was mentioned in despatches. At the battle of Toski, in August 1889, he was in command of the mounted troops. He was again mentioned in despatches, and received a C.B. In 1892 he succeeded Sir Francis Grenfell as Sirdar of the Egyptian army, with the local rank of Ferik or Lieut.-General. Colonel Kitchener had been, since 1888, Adjutant-General and second in command of the army, and also Inspector-General of Police at Cairo. His next achievement was the re-capture of Dongola. In the summer of 1896 an expeditionary force, composed of English and Egyptian troops, advanced into the Soudan with the object of retaking from the Dervishes the lost province of Dongola, and after several successful engagements the whole province was subdued. Sir Herbert Kitchener was promoted Major-General and created a K.C.B. for distinguished service in the field. The Khedive also conferred upon him the Medjidie of the first class, and the Osmanieh of the second class. The victory enabled him to extend a railway to Berber, and was the first decisive blow struck at the power of the Mahdi. The brilliancy of the action, however, was eclipsed by the crushing defeat inflicted at the battle of Atbara on Good Friday of 1898. A force of Dervishes, numbering about 20,000 men, under the command of the Emir Mahmoud and Osman Digna, were strongly entrenched in a zareba at Atbara, but in spite of the strength of their position the Anglo-Egyptian army utterly routed the Dervishes, who fled, leaving over 3000 dead and nearly 4000 prisoners. Sir Herbert Kitchener, who had been under fire throughout the fight, received congratulatory telegrams from the Queen and the House of Commons, and most of the crowned heads of Europe. The climax of the Soudan campaign of 1898 was reached at the battle of Omdurman and the capture of Khartoum on September 2nd, when the army of the Khalifa was annihilated. Among the results of the brilliant victory were the extinction of Mahdism, and the submission of the whole of the country formerly under Egyptian authority. The Sirdar, upon arriving at Fashoda, found a French force entrenched, but he claimed the territory for England and Egypt, and left the settlement of the affair to diplomacy. On October 21st he was raised to the peerage as Lord Kitchener of Khartoum and of Assall in Suffolk, and was promoted to a G.C.B. He arrived in England in November, and met with a most enthusiastic reception. The Lord Mayor entertained him at the Mansion House, and presented him with the freedom of the city and a sword of honour. At the same time he asked the public to raise a fund of £100,000 for the founding and endowment of a college to be built at Khartoum as a memorial of Gordon, for the education and training of Egyptians and Soudanese. The scheme met with universal approval, and when he returned to Egypt he took with him the whole of the sum required for the purpose. The foundation-stone of the Gordon College was laid by Lord Cromer in the presence of a large number of Sheiks and other notables. In December Lord Kitchener was appointed Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief of the Soudan. Address: Cairo.

KITCHIN, The Very Rev. George William, D.D., F.S.A., Dean of Durham, and Warden of the University of Durham, was born Dec. 7, 1827, at Naughton Parsonage, Suffolk, being the son of the Rev. I. Kitchin, Rector of St. Stephen's, Ipswich, by his wife, a daughter of Rev. W. Bardgett, Rector of Melmerby, Cumberland. He was educated at Ipswich Grammar School, King's College, London, and Christ Church, Oxford, Student of Christ Church, 1846 (B.A., double first-class, 1850; M.A., 1853; D.D., 1883). He was appointed Tutor of Christ Church in 1853; Head-Master of Twyford School in 1855; Censor and Tutor of Christ Church in 1861; Proctor of the University in 1863; Tutor to H.R.H. the Crown Prince of Denmark in 1863; Censor of Non-collegiate Students, 1868-83; History Lecturer at Christ Church, and History Tutor at Christ Church in 1882; Dean of Winchester in 1883, in succession to Dean Bramston, who retired, and Dean of Durham in 1894. He was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1863 and 1864; and Whitehall Preacher in 1866 and 1867. He was a Member of the Hebdomadal Council of the University of Oxford, 1879-83; Governor of Ipswich and Portsmouth Endowed Schools; also Chairman of the Cheltenham Ladies' College; and was formerly Examining Chaplain to Dr. Jacobson, Bishop of Chester. His works include editions of Bacon's "Novum Organum," 2 vols., 1855; Bacon's "Advancement of Learning" and "Twyford Prayers," 1860; Spenser's "Faery Queene," i., ii., 1867, 1869; "Catalogue of MSS. in Christ Church Library," 1867; translations of "Brachet's French Grammar," 1869; and of the same author's "French Dictionary," 1873. Dr. Kitchin is the translator of part of Ranke's "Englische Geschichte," and author of a "History of France," 3 vols. (Clarendon Press), 1873, &c.; "Life of Pope Pius II.," for the Arundel Society, 1881; and of "Winchester," 1890, for Messrs. Longman's series of Historic Towns. He has also edited "Winchester Cathedral Records, No. I.," being a Consuetudinary of the Refectory of St. Swithin's Priory, 1886, and No. II., being the "Charter of Edward III. for the St. Giles' Fair, Winchester," 1886; also 3 vols. of the publications of the Hampshire Record Society, "Documents relating to the Foundation of the Chapter of Winchester, A.D. 1541-47," 1889; "Rolls of the Obedientiaries of St. Swithin's Monastery," 1893; and "The Manor of Manydown," 1895; also "Edward Harold Browne, D.D., Bishop of Winchester," a Memoir, published by Messrs. Murray, 1895. He married, in 1863, Alice Maud, daughter of Bridges Taylor, Elsinore, Denmark. Addresses: The Deanery, Durham; and Athenaeum.

KITSON, Sir James, Bart., M.P., was born at Leeds on Sept. 22, 1835, and is the second son of the late James Kitson, of Elmet Hall, Leeds. He was educated at University College, London, and is a very wealthy and well-known iron and steel manufacturer. In one of his two huge workshops engines only are manufactured, which are famous at home and abroad. He is Chairman of the Yorkshire Banking Company, Director of the North-Eastern Railway Company; was from 1888 to 1890 President of the Iron and Steel Institute; has been President of the Leeds Chamber of Commerce, and was Lord Mayor of Leeds from 1896 to 1897. In 1892 he was returned to Parliament for the Colne Valley Division of Yorks., which he represents in the Liberal interest. He is J.P. for the West Riding and Leeds, and was created a baronet in 1886. He married (2), in 1881, Mary, daughter of E. Fisher Smith. Addresses: 105 Pall Mall, S.W.; and Gledhow Hall, Leeds.

KITTO, John Fenwick, M.A., was born Dec. 31, 1837, in Islington, and is the eldest son of John Kitto, D.D., F.S.A., the well-known author on biblical subjects, who died in 1854, and whose eminence is the more remarkable from the fact that he had become totally deaf whilst he was a boy. Mr. Kitto was educated at the North London Collegiate School in Camden Town, where his father was then living, and in 1856 proceeded to St. Alban Hall, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in June 1860, having been placed in the second class in Mathematics by the moderators, as well as in the final schools. He took the M.A. degree in 1870. In the year 1862 he was ordained by Bishop Tait to the Curacy of St. Pancras, then under the care of the Rev. Canon Champreys, who afterwards became Dean of Lichfield. Whilst he was still a Curate of St. Pancras, he was invited to join the Committee of the Church of England Sunday-School Institute, being the first clergyman who had occupied that position. He is still a Member of the Committee, although he resigned the office of Chairman after he had held it for twenty-one years. In 1866 he was invited by the Bishop of London to take charge of the new parish of St. Matthias, Poplar, of which the chapel belonging to the East India Company was to be the Parish Church, and the chaplain's home the new Vicarage. The distress which followed the outbreak of cholera, and the collapse of Messrs. Overend and Gurney, affected the whole of the East End, and Mr. Kitto was at once actively engaged in means of relief. He assisted in starting the East End Emigration Fund as a means of relief, and thousands were by this means enabled to seek a brighter prospect in Canada. He acted for some years as Hon. Secretary to the Poplar Hospital for Accidents, and started a convalescent home for the East End poor, which is still maintained at Reigate. After nine years at Poplar, he was presented by Bishop Jackson, in 1875, to the important rectory of Whitechapel. At the time of his entrance on this work, it had been determined to rebuild the Parish Church in consequence of a munificent offer from Mr. Octavius Coope, who had been born in Whitechapel, and had been asked to contribute to its repair. He arranged that as part of this church an open-air pulpit should be erected at the corner of the tower as a memorial to Dean Champreys, who had been for many years Rector of Whitechapel. This pulpit, which is in constant use for services and meetings, is, we believe, the first open-air pulpit erected in England since the Reformation. The church, which was opened and consecrated in February 1877, was burned down in August 1880, after Mr. Kitto had accepted the Rectory of Stepney, the mother parish of the whole of East London, to which he had been appointed by Bishop Walsham How. He remained at Whitechapel long enough to make arrangements for the rebuilding of the church, and to secure better acoustical properties. At Stepney he remained until 1886, when he was appointed by Bishop Temple to the living of St. Martin in the Fields. Whilst at Stepney he was appointed Select Preacher to the University of Cambridge, and after coming to St. Martin's, he became, in 1889, Chaplain to the Queen. In 1896 he was made by Bishop Temple a Prebendary of St. Paul's. In each parish which he has held there has fallen upon him the duty of restoring or repairing, or rebuilding the Parish Church; in each parish he has had the gratification of throwing open the churchyard for the use of the public; and in each parish he has been closely associated with hospital work—the Poplar Hospital for accidents, the London Hospital, and Charing Cross Hospital. He has been a Member of the Hospital Sunday Fund from its formation. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Adam Symon, of Dundee. Address: St. Martin's Vicarage, St. Martin's Place, W.C.

KLEIN, Edward E., M.D., F.R.S., Lecturer on Anatomy and Physiology at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, was born in 1849. He is one of our chief authorities on bacteriology, and his advice has been much sought by the Local Government Board. His chief works are: "The Anatomy of the Lymphatic System," 1873; "Researches into the Smallpox of Sheep," 1875; "Atlas of Histology," 1880; "Micro-organisms and Disease," 1884 (4th edition, 1896); "Bacteria in Asiatic Cholera," 1889; and "Etiology of Grouse Disease," 1892. Address: 19 Earl's Court Square, S.W.

KNAUS, Ludwig, Hon. R.A., a celebrated German genre-painter, was born at Wiesbaden, Oct. 10, 1829, and entered the Academy at Düsseldorf, where he studied under Sohn and Schadow. He then went to Paris, and, with a break of one year in Italy, lived there for eight years, perfecting himself in the technical part of his art by close study of modern French masters. His first important pictures were "The Golden Wedding," 1858, and "The Christening," 1859. In the following year he returned to Wiesbaden, but in 1861 went to Berlin, in 1866 to Düsseldorf, whence in 1874 he once more returned to Berlin, in order to fill an important post in the Academy. Besides the above-named works may be mentioned "Funeral in a Hesse Village," 1871; "His Excellency Travelling," "The Village Musician," and "The Inn," 1876; "The Refractory Model," 1877; "Solomon's Wisdom," 1878; and "A Peep Behind the Scenes," 1880. He was promoted to be an officer of the Legion of Honour in 1867.

KNIGHT, Francis Arnold, field naturalist and writer on country life, was born in 1852 at Gloucester, and now resides at Weston-super-Mare, in Somersetshire, where he has a school. Since 1888 Mr. Knight has been a regular contributor, mainly on Natural History subjects, to the leader columns of the Daily News, and he has also written for the Contemporary Review, the Speaker, the Spectator, the Globe, and various provincial journals. He has published several volumes of essays, chiefly on Natural History and Country Life, entitled, "By Leafy Ways," "Idylls of the Field," "Rambles of a Dominic," and "By Moorland and Sea," which appeared in the autumn of 1893, and was illustrated by himself. In 1896 he published an illustrated work, "In a West Country." His literary style suggests that of the late Richard Jefferies.

KNIGHT, Joseph, R.I., R.P.E., &c., only son of Joseph Knight, was born in Manchester on Feb. 27, 1838, was educated at an ordinary day school until thirteen years of age, and was put to most uncongenial employment until twenty-four years of age. He is self-taught as an artist, paints in oils and water-colours, and is an engraver in mezzotint. He is a Member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours; a Member of the Royal Society of Painters, Etchers, and Engravers; a Member of the newly formed Society of Mezzotint Engravers; and a Member of the Royal Cambrian Academy. Amongst his pictures may be mentioned: "A Tidal River," bought by the Council of the R.A., out of the Chan-trety Bequest, and now in the Tate Gallery; a water-colour picture called "A Welsh Moorland," bought for the nation, and now in the South Kensington Museum; an oil picture called "Lifting Mist," bought by the corporation of Manchester; an oil picture, "Showery Weather," bought by the corporation of Liverpool; and also other oil pictures bought by the corporations of Oldham, Salford, and Blackburn, and now in their galleries. He was represented at the Paris International Exhibition in 1889, and was awarded a bronze medal; also at the Brussels International Exhibition in 1897 he exhibited five works. Address: Min Afon, Tywyn, near Llandudno.

KNIGHT, Professor William Angus, LL.D., was born in Scotland on Feb. 22, 1836, and is the second son of the late Rev. George Fulton Knight, of Berwickshire. He was educated at the High School and University, Edinburgh, and was appointed Professor of Moral Philosophy at the University of St. Andrews in 1876. He has been Examiner to Victoria University, and is Examiner to the University of London, to that of New Zealand, and to the Civil Service Commissioners. He has published voluminously, his works on Wordsworth and on his poetry being particularly well known. Among these, mention should be made of his edition of Wordsworth's works, with life, 1881-89; "Selections from Wordsworth," 1889; an edition of "The White Doe of Rylstone," 1891; "Wordsworth's Prose," 1893; "The English Lake District as interpreted in the Poems of Wordsworth," 1872; "Through the Wordsworth Country," 1892; "The Works of William and Dorothy Wordsworth," &c. He has also interested himself extensively in philosophical questions, has edited the "Philosophical Classics for English Readers," and has written on Theism, Christian Ethics, the Beautiful, &c. In the summer of 1898 he made a munificent gift to the trustees of Dove Cottage, Grasmere, the Wordsworths' old house, of all the editions of Wordsworth's poems in his possession, of many Wordsworth relics, portraits, sketches, and engravings, as well as Wordsworth MSS. and letters, &c., all of which will in future be housed in Dove Cottage. Addresses: Castle House, St. Andrews; and Athen-

KNIGHTON, William, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., born in Dublin, the son of Richard Ingham Knighton, is of the same family to which belonged Henry de Knyghton, Canon of Worcester, and Chronicer of English History about A.D. 1400, and Sir William Knighton, Bart., Keeper of the Privy Purse in the reign of George IV. He was educated in Glasgow, and appointed Head-Master of the Normal School of Colombo, Ceylon, before he was twenty years of age. He was partner in a coffee plantation in the interior of the island, and wrote the "History of Ceylon," from native chronicles, and "Forest Life in Ceylon," from his own experience. He was the first Hon. Sec. of the Ceylon Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society. He was subsequently appointed Professor of History and Logic in the Calcutta University; and in 1860 was transferred as Assistant Commissioner to Oudh by Lord Canning. His "Private Life of an Eastern King," published before the great Indian Mutiny broke out, gave a faithful account of the career of Nussir-ood-deen, King of Oudh, and incidentally of the state of that country before its annexation. This work was translated into most of the languages of Europe, and was referred to in Parliament by supporters of the Government of the day as proving the necessity for the annexation of Oudh to the British dominions in India. In Fraser's Magazine, when edited by Mr. Froude, Mr. Knighton published his "Village Life in Oudh," and, in 1864, he issued his "Private Life of an Eastern Queen." Mr. Knighton retired from the Oudh Commission in 1878, and has since devoted himself to literature. In 1887 he was elected a Vice-President of the Royal Society of Literature in London, and of the International Literary and Artistic Association of Paris. In 1889 he erected a statue of Shakespeare on the Boulevard Haussmann, in Paris—a statue in bronze, modelled by Paul Fournier, the eminent French sculptor. Mr. Knighton is a Master of Arts, a Doctor of Philosophy, and a Doctor of Laws of the Giessen University in Germany. These degrees were granted to him when Baron Liebig was Dean of the Philosophical Faculty in that University. His most recent work, "Struggles for Life," was translated into French by M. Léon Delbos, under the title of "Les Luttres pour la Vie," and has been very popular in Paris, in London, and in Berlin. Of Mr. Knighton's contributions to the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature the most remarkable are "Early Roman History," "Cleon the Democrat," "The Philosophy of Epicurus and Modern Agnosticism," and "Greek and Latin Wit." He married, in 1883, Charlotte, daughter of Sir W. Drake, K.C.B. Address: Tileworth, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

KNOLLYS, Sir Courtenay, K.C.M.G., Colonial Secretary of Trinidad, was born in 1849, and is the fourth son of Canon Erskine Knollys. He was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he took a second class in the Final Schools. He rowed for Oxford in the boat race in 1872 and 1873; won the Diamond Sculls at Henley in 1872, and the Goblets in 1873. In 1874 he was appointed Sub-Receiver of Trinidad; from 1879 to 1894 he was Auditor-General and Colonial Secretary of Barbadoes, and in the latter year was appointed to his present post. He married in 1874 Ellen May, daughter of P. H. de la Motte, and in 1897 was created a K.C.M.G. His address is: Port of Spain, Trinidad.

KNOLLYS, Sir Francis K., K.C.M.G., K.C.B. (Civil), was born in the thirties, and is the second son of the late General the Right Hon. Sir W. T. Knollys, K.C.B., and Elizabeth, daughter of the late Sir J. St. Aubyn. He is well known as Private Secretary and Groom-in-Waiting to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. He received the honour of knighthood in 1897. He married in 1887 a daughter of the late Sir H. Tyrwhitt, Bart., and of the Baroness Berners. Official address: St. James's Palace, S.W.

KNOWLES, James, F.R.I.B.A., born in 1831, was educated as an architect at a private school, at University College, in his father's office, and in Italy. He is a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and has executed many architectural works, chiefly in London and its neighbourhood—amongst which may be mentioned Aldworth, the Surrey residence of Lord Tennyson; Kensington House, with its gardens and adjuncts; the Thatched House Club, St. James's Street; the public garden and fountain in Leicester Square; Albert Mansions in Victoria Street; and St. Saviour's, St. Philip's, and St. Stephen's churches at Clapham. Mr. Knowles has also been engaged in literature from an early age, contributing many articles to journals and reviews, and in 1860 compiling (from Sir Thomas Malory) "The Story of King Arthur," which reached a sixth edition. In 1869 he originated the Metaphysical Society, a club consisting of forty members, being chiefly eminent representatives of the most various forms of belief and contemporary thought on speculative subjects—Anglican, Roman Catholic, Nonconformist, Positivist, Agnostic, and Atheistic—and constituted for the full, free, and confidential discussion of philosophical questions. The list of members included Lord Tennyson, Mr. Gladstone, Dr. Martineau, Cardinal Manning, the Archbishop of York, Prof. Huxley, Prof. Tyndall, Prof. W. K. Clifford, Father Dalgavious, Mr. John Morley, Mr. Arthur Balfour, Dr. Ward, Mr. Froude, Mr. Ruskin, the Duke of Argyll, the Bishop of St. David's (Thirlwall), the Bishop of Peterborough (Magee), the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol (Ellicott), Mr. Frederic Harrison, Sir J. Fitzjames Stephen, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Lord Selborne, Sir F. Pollock, Mr. R. H. Hutton, Prof. Seeley, Prof. Henry Sidgwick, Sir M. E. Grant Duff, Mr. Robert Lowe (Lord Sherbrooke), Lord Arthur Russell, Mr. Shadwack Hodgson, Mr. James Hinton, Mr. St. George Mivart, Sir Andrew Clark, Sir John Lubbock, Prof. Pritchard, Dean Stanley, Sir William Gull, the Dean of St. Paul's (Church), the Rev. F. D. Maurice, Prof. Sylvester, Mr. Walter Bagehot, Mr. Mark Pattison, Rev. Dr. Mozley, Mr. Croom Robertson, &c. In 1870 he succeeded Dean Alford in the editorship of the Contemporary Review, which, by enlisting the aid of the members of the Metaphysical Society, he raised to a position of influence and importance. In 1877, owing to a change in the proprietorship of the Contemporary Review, a separation took place between it and Mr. Knowles, when—supported by more than one hundred writers of celebrity (mostly members of the Metaphysical Society, and contributors to the Contemporary Review)—he established the Nineteenth Century, a monthly review, in which, as his own property, the principle of the unfettered and unbiassed discussion of all topics of public interest, by authors signing their own names, might be preserved without interference. The Nineteenth Century immediately attained, and still preserves, a very wide circulation. The introductory sonnet was written by Lord (then Mr.) Tennyson, who had become intimately acquainted with Mr. Knowles, consulting with him upon all matters of business, &c., and sharing rooms with him, for several years, as a joint-tenant, in Victoria Street, Westminster. A very influentially-signed protest against the proposed Channel Tunnel Scheme which appeared in the Review largely assisted in defeating that project, Mr. Gladstone often reproaching the editor that "he had stopped the Channel Tunnel," and another important protest signed by hundreds of women of all ranks against "Female Suffrage" helped to hinder that scheme. Mr. Knowles is a collector of works of art, a member of the Burlington Fine Arts Club, and a frequent contributor to the Winter Exhibition of the Old Masters at the Royal Academy and to other exhibitions. Permanent address: Queen Anne's Lodge, St. James's Park, S.W.

KNOWLES, Lees, D.L., M.P., eldest son of the late John Knowles, Esq., J.P., C.A. and D.L. (High Sheriff of Lancashire, 1892–98), of Westwood, Pendlebury, by Elizabeth, daughter of the late James Lees, Esq., of Green Bank, Oldham, was born Feb. 16, 1857, and was educated at Rugby and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degrees of M.A. and LL.M., and was president of the Cambridge University Athletic Club in 1878. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1882, joined the Northern Circuit in 1883, and is joint-editor of the 2nd edition of Greenwood's "Real Property Statutes." Appointed unpaid private secretary to Mr. Ritchie, President of the Local Government Board, in 1887, he received the same appointment again in 1895, whilst he had formerly been hon. sec. of the Guinness Trust, a member of the Select Committee on Town Holdings, and chairman of the Select Committee on the Plumbers' Registration Bill. He was appointed a Church Estates Commissioner in 1895, and he is a trustee for two church livings. Mr. Knowles is a D.L. for Lancashire; hon. secretary to the Lancashire Conservative M.P.'s Association, and has been successful in passing five Acts of Parliament, dealing chiefly with sanitation. In 1885 he unsuccessfully contested the Leigh Division of Lancashire, but was elected for Salford (West) in 1886 as a Conservative member. Addresses: 4 New Square, Lincoln's Inn, W.C., &c.; and Westwood, Pendlebury.

KNOX, The Right Rev. Edmund Arbuthnott, D.D., Bishop Suffragan of Coventry, son of the late Rev. George Knox, Vicar of Exton, Rutland, was born on Dec. 6, 1847, at Bangalore, India. He was educated at St. Paul's School, and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which he was elected a scholar in 1865. He took a first class in Moderations, a first class in Lit. Hum., and a first class in Law and Modern History, proceeding to the degree of B.A. in 1868, and to that of M.A. in 1872, whilst the hon. degree of D.D. was conferred upon him in 1894. At Oxford he was a Fellow of Merton from 1868 to 1875, and held the appointments of Vicar of St. John Baptist from 1874 to 1879; tutor of Merton College, 1875 to 1885; and chaplain of Merton, 1879 to 1885. He became rector of Kibworth Beauchamp, Leicester, in 1888; vicar of Aston, Birmingham, and examining chaplain to the Bishop of Worcester in 1891. Mr. Knox was in 1894 appointed Hon. Canon of Worcester, rector of St. Philip's, Birmingham, Archdeacon of Birmingham, and Bishop Suffragan of Coventry (for Diocese of Worcester). He married (1), in 1878, Ellen Penelope, daughter of the Rt. Rev. Thomas Valpy French, Bishop of Lahore (she died in 1892); (2) in 1895, Ethel Mary, daughter of the Rev. Canon Newton, vicar of Redditch. Address: St. Philip's Rectory, Birmingham.

KNOX, Mrs., née Isa Craig, was born in Edinburgh, Oct. 17, 1831. At an early age she began to contribute anonymously to several periodicals, and at last her poetical contributions to the Scotsman, under the signature "Isa," attracted attention, and led to her employment in the literary department of that journal. In 1856 she published a collection of her poems. In 1857 she came to London, and her services were engaged by Mr. Hastings in organising the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, to which she acted as secretary and literary assistant, until her marriage with her cousin, Mr. John Knox. In 1859 she won the first prize for her Ode (against 620 competitors), recited at the Burns Centenary Festival, and in 1865 published "Duchess Agnes," and other poems. Among later works from her pen may be mentioned "Songs of Consolation," 1874, and "Esther West," a story, which in 1880 was in its fifth edition. In 1892 selections of her poetry were edited by Dr. Japp.

KNUTSFORD, Viscount, The Right Hon. Henry Thurstan Holland, Bart., G.C.M.G., Knight of Justice of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, eldest son of Sir Henry Holland, the famous physician, and President of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, and Emma, daughter of James Caldwell, Limley Wood, Staffordshire, was born on Aug. 3, 1825, and educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his University degree in 1847. After the usual preliminaries he was called to the Bar in 1849 by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, and joined the Northern Circuit. Undertakings of a difficult and delicate nature soon devolved upon him, and he was frequently employed by the Treasury, in conjunction with Sir W. Stephenson, the late Mr. George Hamilton, then Secretary to the Treasury, and the late Mr. George Arbuthnot, also attached to the same office, to revise and reorganise the establishment of various public offices, among the number being the Ecclesiastical Commission, the Poor Law Board, and the Woods and Forests Commission. In 1851 he was appointed by the then Lord Chancellor to the onerous duty of drawing up the Bill which, in 1852, became law under the title of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852. This task he carried out under the direction of the late Mr. Justice Willes, one of the Royal Commissioners. The Common Law Procedure Act of 1854

which followed the measure just mentioned, was the next work upon which Sir Henry Holland was engaged as draftsman. He was next employed by Lord Chief Baron Sir Fitzroy Kelly in drafting two of the criminal measures which became law in 24th and 25th Vict. The County Court Judgeship of Northumberland was offered him by Lord Campbell when Lord Chancellor, but the appointment was declined. Sir Henry continued to practise at the Bar until the beginning of the year 1867, when Lord Carnarvon selected him to fill the office of legal adviser to the Colonial Office. In 1870 he was promoted to an assistant under-secretaryship, and remained in that office until August 1874, when he resigned in order to stand for the borough of Midhurst; he was elected without a contest, and took his seat in the House of Commons in the following session. In 1885, after the borough of Midhurst was disfranchised, Sir H. T. Holland stood for the new borough of Hampstead, and beat his opponent, the Marquis of Lorne, by a large majority. In June 1885, when Lord Salisbury took office, Sir H. T. Holland accepted the post of Financial Secretary to the Treasury, and held that post till the September following, when he was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, and became a Privy Councillor. He was again returned for Hampstead in 1886, and again appointed Vice-President of the Council on Education. In January 1887 he was appointed Secretary of State for the Colonies, continuing in office till 1892, and as Secretary of State presided over the Colonial Conference which was held in London in 1887. In 1888 he was raised to the peerage, and took the title of Knutsford. In 1889 he carried through the House of Lords a Bill for giving a constitutional government to Western Australia, but it was rejected in the House of Commons. It was, however, passed in 1890 by both Houses. In 1895 he was created a Viscount. Lord Knutsford is a Bencher of the Inner Temple, a Deputy-Lieutenant of Middlesex, and a magistrate for the counties of Surrey and of the county of London. He is also a Trustee of the National Portrait Gallery. He married (1), in 1852, Elizabeth Margaret, daughter of Mr. N. Hibbert of Watford, and (2), in 1858, Margaret Jean, daughter of the late Sir Charles Trevelyan. Addresses: Pinewood, Witley, Godalming, Surrey; and Athenæum.

KOCH, Professor Dr. Robert, the eminent bacteriologist, was born at Klausthal, in Hanover, on Dec. 11, 1843. He studied medicine at the University of

Göttingen from 1862 to 1866, and having taken his degree was appointed assistant-surgeon in the General Hospital at Hamburg, and afterwards practised privately at Langenhagen in Hanover, and at Rackewitz in Posen. In 1872, when District Surgeon at Wallstein, he began his bacteriological investigations, and consequently was appointed in 1880 a member of the Imperial Board of Health. About that time he discovered a method of colouring microscopical preparations, by means of which he in 1882 isolated the tubercle bacillus, and produced tuberculosis by its inoculation in animals. In 1883 he was appointed a Privy Councillor, and given the direction of the German Cholera Commission, which visited Egypt and India. He then discovered the so-called "comma" cholera bacillus, and for his services received a gift of 100,000 marks (£5000). Two years later he went to France to make further investigations in regard to the cholera bacillus, and on his return was appointed Professor in Berlin University and Director of the Institute of Hygiene in Berlin. In 1891 he became an honorary Professor and Director of the New Institute for Infectious Diseases. At the beginning of the year 1890 he became famous for his discovery of the phthisis bacillus, and for a specific agent which arrests the ravages of the same. Invalids crowded to Berlin to be inoculated with Dr. Koch's lymph, of which the secret was closely kept. The German Government even sought to obtain a monopoly of its sale. The lymph was sent to various hospitals in Germany and abroad, notably to King's College, London. A committee of French doctors, however, visited Berlin in 1890 in order to study the newest Koch method, and announced, as a result of their investigations, that in several cases the lymph had aggravated the disease it was meant to cure. The celebrated Virchow also maintained that the injected lymph tended to produce centres of irritation. During the six years (1890-1896) work on the Koch cure and bacteria-caused disease has been going on steadily. In 1897 he said that, on the whole, his experiments led him to believe that perfect immunity from tuberculosis was brought about in two or three weeks after using the larger doses of his newer tuberculin; but he uttered an emphatic warning against unrealisable expectations. A patient who, in the natural course of things, has only a few more months to live can gain no benefit from his treatment; but with suitable cases he has had no failure. In 1896 he was summoned to Cape Colony to study the cattle plague (rinderpest) then raging in South Africa. In the next year he visited India to study the bubonic plague, whence he went to German East Africa and discovered that this plague was really a rat disease, and claimed that the centres were Mesopotamia, Hunan in China, Tibet, Mecca, and Kissiba, close to the Victoria Nyanza. He anticipated that, within a measurable distance of time, the last plague centres would disappear. He has written works on splenic fever and wound poison.

KOHLRAUSCH, Friedrich, F.R.S., German physicist, was born at Rinteln, Oct. 14, 1840, and is the son of Rudolf Kohlrausch, Professor of Physics at Erlangen. He was educated chiefly by his father, and at an early age he was appointed to the chair of Physics at Göttingen. He was promoted in succession to Zürich, Darmstadt, Würzburg, Strasburg, and finally appointed President of the Imperial Physical and Technical College at Charlottenburg. His chief works have been: "Leitfaden der praktischen Physik," of which the eighth edition was published at Leipzig in 1896; "Das Leitvermögen der Elektrolyte" (Leipzig), 1898, in conjunction with L. Holborn. He also contributes greatly to the Annalen der Physik. He is a member of the scientific societies of Berlin, Munich, St. Petersburg, Upsala, and Haarlem, and of the Royal Society of London. Address: 25B Marchstrasse, Charlottenburg.

KÖLLIKER, Rudolph Albert von, F.R.S., German physiologist and anatomist, was born at Zurich, July 6, 1817, and became Professor of Physiology at his native town in 1845. He was promoted to the chair of Anatomy at Würzburg in 1847. Among his chief works are: "Manual of Human Histology," 1852, which was translated into English in 1854; and the Challenger report on Pentalida, 1880.

KOLTZOFF - MASSALSKY, Princess von, whose literary pseudonym is the "Princess Dora d'Istria," was one of the daughters of Michael Ghika, and niece of Prince Gregory IV., who was the first to spread among the people of Wallachia the liberal institutions of civilisation. She was born at Bucharest in 1829, and was married in 1849 to the Russian Prince Koltzoff-Massalsky. Disliking the absolutist system of government in Russia, she quitted that country in 1855. She spent five years in Belgium and Switzerland, carefully studying the customs and laws, and, having made a tour through Greece, she went to Italy in 1861. At this period Garibaldi addressed to her a letter, requesting her to exert her influence over the Roumanians, to induce them to rise in rebellion against Austria. The Princess, who resides in Florence, is said to be thoroughly acquainted with the Italian, German, French, Roumanian, Greek, Latin, Russian, and Albanian languages, and has written much on the essential and vital questions affecting the political and social future of the Greeks, the Albanians, and the Slavs of Southern Europe. She is an enthusiastic advocate of "Women's Rights," and an indefatigable champion of oppressed nationalities. Since 1850 she has been a contributor to the Revue des deux Mondes; and she has written many articles in the French, Belgian, Greek, German, Italian, English, and American journals. Among her works are: "La Vie Monastique dans l'Eglise Orientale," Brussels, 1855 (2nd edit., Paris and Geneva, 1858); "La Suisse Allemande et l'Ascension du Mönch," 4 vols., Paris and Geneva, 1856, translated into English and German; "Les Femmes en Orient," 2 vols., Zurich, 1858; "Excursions en Roumélie et en Morée," 2 vols., Zurich, 1863; "Des Femmes, par une Femme," 2 vols., Paris and Brussels, 1865; "La Nazionalità Albanese secondo i canti popolari," Cosenza, 1867; "Discours sur Marco Polo," Trieste, 1869; "Venise en 1867," Leipzig, 1870; "Gli Albanesi in Rumenia," a history of the Princesses Ghika in the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, published in the Rivista Europea, 1871-73; "Eleonora de Hallingen," and "Ghizlaine," two novels, 1871; "La Poésie des Ottomans," 2nd edit., Paris, 1877; and "The Condition of Women among the Southern Slavs," 1878. A detailed list of her works is given in the "Bibliografia della Principessa Dora d'Istria," 6th edit., Florence, 1873.

KOTZE, ex-Chief-Justice of the South African Republic, is a Cape Dutchman by birth, has been called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and has always been much in favour of an English system in matters legal. He has translated into English, and annotated Van Lieuwen's well-known Roman-Dutch text-book. He is now editing the Transvaal Law Reports in 1881. Chief-Justice Kotze first came into notoriety for condemning to death two highway robbers who had shot at a policeman. The men were reprieved after the sentence had been everywhere protested against. He was dismissed by President Krüger (q.v.) in February 1898 for refusing to comply with the law of 1897, by the 4th section of which the judges were directed to treat the resolutions of the Volksraad as laws. He declared this to be a trespass on the liberties of the people and an attack on the independence of the country, and more particularly of the voteless Uitlanders, whose property would depend absolutely on the pleasure of the majority of the Volksraad for the time being. He claimed for the Bench the so-called "Testing Right," i.e., the right to see whether laws passed by the Volksraad are in accordance with the provisions of the Grondwet, or written constitution. Mr. Kotze came to England in June 1898 to lay his case before the Colonial Secretary, by whom he was received most sympathetically.

KOUROPATKIN, Major-General, of the Russian army (sometimes spelled Koropatkin and Kuropatkin), is said to have been born in 1843, and was first famous as the chief of the staff to General Skobelev. He was left for dead at the Shipka Pass. After the Russo-Turkish war he wrote a book upon its operations. Although Skobelev's right-hand man, he held the rank of Captain only during the Russo-Turkish war; after which, however, he obtained the command of the light troops in Turkestan. He was again with Skobelev at the attack on Geok Tepe, where he had the rank of Colonel.

KOWALEWSKY, Alexander, F.R.S., embryologist, was born at Dunaburg, Nov. 19, 1840, and became Professor at St. Petersburg. He is known for his researches on the embryology of invertebrates, which led to Haeckel's (q.v.) "Theory of the Gastræa"; for his discovery of the true position of the Ascidians; and for investigations of the development of the Brachiopoda. He was elected a Foreign Member of the Royal Society, and is now Professor at Odessa.

KRANTZ, Camille, French statesman, was born at Épinal in 1848. His father was a life Senator and Commissioner-General of the 1878 Exhibition. He studied at the Ecole Polytechnique, and became an engineer. In 1893 he was elected deputy for his native town, Épinal, and acted as reporter on the last French Budget. In religious matters M. Camille Krantz is a Protestant. He entered official life on the offer of M. Dupuy, made in October 1898, to accept the portfolio of Minister of Public Works in the new Government which succeeded that of M. Brisson, and in May 1899 he succeeded M. de Freycinet on his resignation.

KREHL, Ludolf, is Professor of Arabic at Leipzig, and Chief Librarian of the University. For the past forty-eight years he has been editor of the Zeitschrift, the organ of the German Oriental Society, and has contributed many important papers to its pages. His principal work is the edition of Bukhary's "Corpus of Mohammedan Traditions." Other works by Professor Krehl are "The Religion of the Pre-Islamic Arabs," 1863; "Essays on the Koranic Doctrine of Predestination and Faith," 1877; "The Life of Mohammed," 1884, &c.

KROPOTKIN, Prince Petr Alexeievitch, a Russian revolutionist and geographer, was born at Moscow, Dec. 9, 1842. At the age of fifteen he entered the Corps of Pages at St. Petersburg, and was promoted Lieutenant in 1862. Attracted by the desire of travelling, he joined a regiment of Cossacks of the Amur, and spent five years in Eastern Siberia; first as Aide-de-Camp to the Military Governor of Transbaikalia, and, after 1863, as Attaché for Cossacks' Affairs to the Governor-General of Eastern Siberia. During these five years he thrice visited the Amur and Usuri, and made extensive journeys in Siberia and Manchuria. In 1863 he crossed North Manchuria from Transbaikalia to the Amur, via Merghen; in the same year he took part in the first steamer expedition up the Sungari to Ghirin. Accounts of these journeys, and several others, are published in the Memoirs of the Russian and the Siberian Geographical Society, from the former of which he received the Gold Medal. Promoted Captain in 1865, he returned in 1867 to St. Petersburg, and studied four years at the Mathematical Faculty of that University, and acted as Secretary to the Physical Geography Section of the Geographical Society. He then published the reports of his chief expeditions to the Olekma and Vitim Highlands, as well as a general sketch of the Orography of Eastern Siberia. In 1871 he was sent by this society to explore the glacial deposits in Finland and Sweden, the account of which is embodied in a larger work on the Glacial Period, the first volume of which was published by his brother Alexander, in the Memoirs of the Geographical Society, while he was confined in prison. In 1872 he paid a visit to Switzerland and Belgium, and became acquainted with the International Working-Men's Association, and joined the most advanced anarchist section of it. He returned to Russia and became a member of the widely-spread organisation of the Tohaykovtzy; was arrested in March 1874, and confined to the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul, where he continued to write on the Glacial Period. He was transferred to the prison of the Military Hospital, and escaped on July 12, 1876, and went to England. The next year he rejoined, in Switzerland, the Jura Federation of the International Working-Men's Association, and in February 1879 founded at Geneva the anarchist paper La Révolte, now published in Paris. Expelled from Switzerland in September 1881, he stayed first for a few months at Thonon, while his wife passed her examination of B.Sc., and then went to reside in England, where he roused an agitation against the Russian Government both in the press (Newcastle Chronicle, Fortnightly Review, and Nineteenth Century), and by a series of lectures at Newcastle and in Scotland. In October 1882 he went again to stay at Thonon, where he was arrested Dec. 20, 1882. On Jan. 19, 1883, he was condemned by the Police Correctionnelle Court at Lyons to five years' imprisonment for participation in the International Working-Men's Association. He was liberated on Jan. 15, 1886, by decree of the President of the French Republic. His anarchist papers contributed to La Révolte have been collected by his friend Elisée Reclus, and were published in October 1885, in a separate volume, under the title "Paroles d'un Révolté," parts of which have had a wide circulation in the shape of pamphlets, in English, German, &c. His review articles on prisons were published in book form, in 1887, under the title "In Russian and French Prisons." In 1892 appeared in French one of his latest nihilistic utterances, entitled "À la Recherche du Pain." He has written the article on Russia in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and in "Chambers's Encyclopædia." In 1896 he issued "L'Anarchie, son philosophie, son idéal," which was translated into English in 1897. In 1898 appeared his "The State: its Part in History." Address: Bromley, Kent.

KRÜGER, Stephanus Johannes Paulus, President of the South African Republic, was born at Rastenburg in Cape Colony, Oct. 10, 1825. With his father, family, and fellow-Boers he took part in the Great Trek of 1836-37, and successively trekked to Natal, the Orange Free State, and the Transvaal. When quite young he was a spectator of the battles in which the advancing Boers drove the Matabele under Moselikatse, father of Lobengula, across the Limpopo. In his youth he was renowned as a fine game shot and splendid runner. He shot great quantities of wild animals in the uncultivated countries traversed by the Boers. He became a "Dopper" or member of the strictest sect of the Dutch Reformed Church, and even distinguished himself, like the Puritans of old, as a preacher. The Bible was his sole education, and considering what the Boer ideals were, he needed no other.

He became a Field Cornet, District Commandant, and Commandant, and in 1872 he became a Member of the Executive Council under President Burgers, and was even then distinguished for coolness, courage, and common-sense. In the war against England in 1881 he was chosen Head of the Provisional Government, and this post was made permanent in 1883, when he was elected President of the South African Republic for five years. He was re-elected in 1888 and 1893. On the occasion of Jameson's Raid and the abortive insurrection in Johannesburg (1896), by a masterly display of what his enemies call finesse, and what many good judges regard as diplomacy, he succeeded in preventing the Uitlanders, or what he considered money-hunting foreigners, from acquiring equal rights with the Boers, his old pastoral confrères. He was humane and moderate on more than one occasion during the days succeeding the Raid. In 1897 the Transvaal demanded an indemnity for the Raid of £600,000 for material damage and £1,000,000 for "moral damage," besides a small sum of odd shillings and pence, which excited the mirth of those who failed to see the satire involved in this scrupulously accurate bill of costs. In February 1898 he was re-elected for the fourth time by an overwhelming majority, obtaining more than 12,800 votes, while Mr. Schalk Burger polled only 3700, and General Joubert 2001. As the white population numbers 180,000, and the total number of votes polled was only 18,600, this gives an idea of the oligarchic character of what is really a seventeenth-century Dutch republic. A statue has been erected to President Krüger at Pretoria. It is characteristic of the man and his friends that Mrs. Krüger's especial wish should have been respected, and that the hat, an ugly chimney-pot, should have been left roofless, so that rain-water may collect there and afford solace to thirsty birds. He is called "Oom Paul" by his adoring subjects, and is a typical Boer in appearance and mind. His supporters regard him as a strong, sincere man, a type out of seventeenth-century Holland, who has struggled successfully against usurping hands, and retained the independence of his little fatherland against overwhelming odds. His official income is £7000 per annum, besides innumerable allowances. Like Hazelrigg of old, he has already amassed a very large fortune, but the simplicity of his life and surroundings renders wealth a superfluity.

KWANG-HSU, Emperor of China, who may be likened to Joseph II. of Austria, was born on Aug. 15, 1871, and is a cousin of the late Emperor Tung-Chih, and nephew of his predecessor Hsien-Feng, and succeeded to the throne on Jan. 12, 1875, previously, in accordance with Chinese custom, having taken the name of Tsai-t'ien. His Kwo Hao, or reigning name, is, however, the above. Until he was twenty-one he was under the regency of his aunt, Tze-hsi (q.v.), the Empress-Dowager, who, although sprung from the dregs of the people, is admitted to be a woman of great energy and ability. She has often been compared to Catherine the Great, and the analogy is not infelicitous, in regard to her greed of power, extravagance, and other characteristics. In July 1898 the German Emperor presented Kwang-Hsu with the Order of the Black Eagle set in diamonds. For some time past he had been much influenced by one of his advisers, Kang-Yu-Wei, the Cantonese reformer, who persuaded him to issue a decree ordering his people to cut off their pig-tails, assume foreign dress, and adopt a curious form of Christianity which he had evolved from the teaching of the English missionaries, and had afterwards corrected in accordance with the teachings of Confucius. The Emperor's reforming decrees amount to some two hundred perhaps, and evince a sincere desire for the reform of a corrupt bureaucracy. One of the most important edicts was issued in August 1898, and abolished the time-honoured system of literary essays in ancient subjects which constitute the examinations for governorships, &c. The essays, the edict provided, were in future to deal with practical modern subjects, and the highest examination of all was to be held in the Emperor's presence. Calligraphy, which in China implies a scholar's knowledge of words, was in future not to be insisted on on the ground of its being "an empty accomplishment." Another very important reform, promulgated in June, provided that members of the Imperial family should in future be sent abroad to travel and study. A college of foreign literature and science at Peking was also projected, and education was in many ways to be popularised. In April 1898 the Empress-Dowager openly threatened to dethrone him if he persisted in these schemes of reform. However, in July, he promulgated a decree, the effect of which was to close about two-thirds of the Buddhist temples throughout the Empire. The Empress warned him that he was going too fast, throwing thousands of officials into idleness, and getting himself detested by the old Manchu aristocracy. On Sept. 21, 1898, by a coup d'état, in conjunction with Li Hung Chang (q.v.), she seized the reins of power, arrested the young Emperor's reforming advisers, and sequestered him within the precincts of the Summer Palace at Peking. It was even reported that the young Emperor had been assassinated, and that the Empress wished to place Prince Kung's grandson on the throne. Kang escaped to Shanghai in a British steamer. His character has been sketched thus: "The Emperor appears to be a sickly youth with a melancholy, but not unattractive countenance, given to violent fits of passion, which he gratifies in a relatively harmless way by smashing his furniture. In the self-imposed seclusion of his palace, within whose precincts only women and eunuchs are allowed to dwell, he holds no communication with the outside world except through the high State officials, who approach him on bended knee to present reports upon public affairs in which the necessities of truth are largely subordinated to the considerations of courtly expediency. When he goes forth to sacrifice in one of the Imperial temples, the streets through which he passes are carefully cleared and guarded, the houses on either side are shut off with heavy hangings, the ground is strewn with yellow sand, and everything removed which might offend the sensitiveness of Imperial eyes or nostrils. Through the deserted thoroughfares the Son of Heaven flits, generally in the stillness of night, like a ghost borne in a lofty palanquin" (Valentine Chirrol). The Emperor is a keen student of English. He is married, but childless.

KYLACHY, Lord, William Mackintosh, M.A., LL.D., J.P., D.L. Edinburgh and Inverness-shire, was born in Inverness on April 9, 1842, and is the eldest son of the late William Mackintosh, of Inshes House, Inverness-shire. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and the University of Edinburgh, and passed as Advocate in 1866; was Procurator of the Church of Scotland, 1880; Sheriff of Ross, Cromarty, and Sutherland, 1881; Dean of Faculty, 1886; and was appointed Judge of the Court of Session, 1889. In 1869 he married Jane, daughter of David Stevenson, C.E., Edinburgh. Addresses: Kyllachy, Tomatin, Inverness-shire; and 6 Randolph Crescent, Edinburgh.

LABORI, Fernand Gustave Gaston, French lawyer, was born at Reims, Aug. 18, 1860, and was brilliantly successful in the law school of Paris, being prizeman in 1881 and 1883. He was called to the Bar, Nov. 11, 1881, and in 1887 was Secretary to the Bar Committee. His chief cases have been in defence of the assassin Duval, the anarchist Pini, and the dynamiter Vaillant. Civilly, he has defended

Deputy Gabriel Compayré in his famous libel action against Numa Gilly. He has also defended several literary cases, such as those of La Plume and the Théâtre Réaliste. But his European reputation has been founded on his masterly defence of M. Zola (q.v.) when accused of libelling the President and the French army. His final appeal to the jury lasted two days, but was, of course, of no avail. He also defended the editor of the Aurore and Colonel Picquart in subsidiary actions, and he is now looking forward to the triumph of his client M. Zola's cause.

LABOUCHERE, Henry, M.P., eldest son of the late John Labouchere, of Broome Park, Surrey, and nephew of the late Lord Taunton, was born in 1831, and educated at Eton. He entered the diplomatic service in 1824, and was successively Attaché at Washington, Munich, Stockholm, Frankfurt, St. Petersburg, and Dresden; he was appointed Third Secretary in 1862, Second Secretary at Constantinople in 1863, and retired in 1864. In 1865 he entered Parliament as Liberal member for Windsor; but in April 1866 he was unseated on petition, and from 1867 to 1868 sat for Middlesex. In February 1874 he unsuccessfully contested Nottingham, but in 1880 was returned at the head of the poll for Northampton, and has since sat for that borough, his fellow-member for some years being the late Charles Bradlaugh. Mr. Labouchere was returned at the last general election as a strong Gladstone Liberal, and was one of the most energetic supporters of Mr. Gladstone. In February 1893 he took part in drafting a simple Bill providing that after Jan. 1, 1895, all members of Parliament should be elected by popular vote. Had this Bill become law, it would have had the effect of putting an end to the existence of a hereditary House of Lords. In March 1894 Mr. Labouchere was conspicuous in his opposition to Lord Rosebery's being appointed Premier. He headed a "cave" of some twenty members who are understood to have been in favour of Sir William Harcourt's premiership, but he eventually withdrew his opposition. He is proprietor and editor of Truth, and was part-proprietor of the Daily News. He sat on the Jameson Raid Royal Commission, and the extreme pertinence of his questions was not a little perplexing to the Rhodesian party. Address: 5 Old Palace Yard.

LAFARGE, John, landscape and ecclesiastical painter, best known by his mural and stained-glass work, was born in New York, March 31, 1835. He established his reputation as a brilliant colourist and idealist. He was one of the first admirers of Japanese art, visiting that Empire in 1866. In his stained glass he has almost performed the still impossible task of rivaling the colours of the finest mediæval windows, and has, like many other glass-painters, perfected a method of "leading" by which the mechanical means are made to contribute to the rendering of details and general effect. In 1869 he was elected a member of the National Academy, and he is also a member of the Society of American Artists. An account of his work appeared in the Portfolio for May 1896.

LAFFAN, The Rev. Robert Stuart de Courcy, M.A., Principal of Cheltenham College, was born on Jan. 18, 1853, and is the eldest son of the late Lieutenant-General Sir Robert Michael Laffan, K.C.M.G. He was educated at Winchester and at Merton College, Oxford, of which college he was an exhibitor. He took a first class in Moderations and in Lit. Hum. (B.A. 1878; M.A. 1884). He took orders in 1882; was Senior Classical Master, and afterwards Chaplain of Derby School, 1880-84; Head Master of Edward VI.'s School at Stratford-on-Avon, 1884-95; and in 1895 was appointed to his present post at Cheltenham. He announced his intention of retiring from the Principalship in August 1899. Mrs. de Courcy Laffan, whom he married in 1883, has been on the staff of All the Year Round since 1878, and has published a number of novels, of which "Madelon Lemoine" is well known and now in its fourth edition. Address: Montpellier Lodge, Cheltenham.

LAGDEN, Sir Godfrey Yeatman, K.C.M.G., Commissioner of Basutoland, is the son of the late Rev. R. Dowse Lagden, of Balsham House, and was born in 1851. From 1869 to 1877 he was a clerk in the General Post Office in London, but in 1878 he was appointed clerk to the Secretary to Government of the Transvaal under British protection, and later Private Secretary to Sir O. Lanyon, Sir W. Bellairs, and Sir Evelyn Wood while administering the Government. In 1881 he was Secretary to the Transvaal Royal Commission for compensation claims, and he then served as war correspondent in Egypt during 1882. The next year he became Colonial Secretary of Sierra Leone, but in 1884 he returned to South Africa as Secretary and Accountant of Basutoland. He was promoted to be Assistant Commissioner in 1885, acting Commissioner of Swaziland in 1892, and Resident Commissioner of Basutoland, 1893. He married, in 1881, Frances, eldest daughter of Bishop Bousfield, of Pretoria. Address: British Residency, Maseru.

LAKING, Sir Francis Henry, K.C.V.O., M.D. Heidelberg, M.R.C.P., L.S.A., was born in 1847, and received his medical education at Heidelberg, where he obtained the M.D. degree in 1869, and at St. George's Hospital, London, where he was House Physician from 1869 to 1870 and Medical Registrar from 1871 to 1874. He is the Surgeon-Apothecary to the households or persons of the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Dukes of York, Saxe-Coburg, and Connaught. He attended the Prince of Wales in the summer of 1898, when his Royal Highness was suffering from fracture of the patella, and at the same period was sent to visit the late Queen of Denmark. He is "Visiting Apothecary" to St. George's Hospital; Consulting Physician to the Gordon Hospital for Fistula; Assistant Physician to the Victoria Hospital for Children, &c., and a Member of the Royal Institution. He was appointed K.C.V.O., September 1898. He is married to Emma, daughter of Joseph Mansell. Addresses: 62 Pall Mall, S.W.; and 13 Addison Road, W.

LAMB, Horace, M.A., F.R.S., son of the late John Lamb, of Stockport, was born on Nov. 27, 1849, at Stockport, and educated at Stockport Grammar School, Owens College, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was second Wrangler and second Smith's Prizeman in 1872; Fellow and Assistant-Tutor of Trinity in 1872; Professor of Mathematics in the University of Adelaide, South Australia, in 1875; and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1884; and Professor of Mathematics in Owens College, Victoria University, Manchester, 1885. He is the author of a treatise on "Hydrodynamics," and of various papers on Applied Mathematics, principally on Hydrodynamics, Elasticity, and Electro-magnetism. In the year 1890 he was awarded the Hopkins Prize of the Cambridge Philosophical Society "for his various important contributions to Mathematical Physics." In 1897 he published a work on the Infinitesimal Calculus. In 1875 he married Elizabeth, daughter of the late Simon Foot, of Dublin. Address: 6 Wilbraham Road, Fallowfield, Manchester.

LAMBER, Juliette. See ADAM, MME. EDMOND.

LAMBERT, George, M.P., is the son of the late George Lambert, of Spreyton, Devonshire, and was born in 1866. He was educated at North Tawton Grammar School. He has represented the South Molton Division of Devonshire as a Liberal member of the House of Commons since 1891. Mr. Lambert is Lord of the Manor of Spreyton, and himself farms part of his own estate. He has acted as a Guardian of the Poor, and is a member of the Devon County Council. In 1893 he moved the Address in reply to the Queen's Speech, and in the same year he served as a member of the Royal Commission on Agriculture. Addresses: 6 Upper Belgrave Street, S.W.; and Spreyton, Bow, North Devon.

LAMINGTON, Lord, Charles Wallace Alexander Napier Cochrane-Baillie, K.C.M.G., D.L., J.P., F.R.C.I., Governor of Queensland, was born on July 29, 1860, and is the son of the first Baron and of Annabella, daughter of Andrew R. Drummond, of Cadlands, Hants, and grand-daughter of the fifth Duke of Rutland. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where he was in the fourth class of the Modern History School in 1880 (B.A. 1881). In 1885-86 he was Assistant Private Secretary to the Premier, the Marquis of Salisbury, and from 1886 to 1890 he represented North St. Pancras in Parliament in the Conservative interest. He succeeded his father in 1890, and in 1895 he was appointed Governor of Queensland. In the same year he married the youngest daughter of Sir William Hozier. Addresses: Government House, Brisbane, Queensland; 26 Wilton Crescent, S.W., &c.

LAMONT, Hon. Daniel Scott, American statesman, was born at Eastlandville, N.Y., Feb. 9, 1851, and was educated at the McGrawville Academy and Union College, Schenectady, N.Y. He was English reporter and managing editor for some years of the Albany (N.Y.) Argus; Private Secretary and Military Secretary to Mr. Cleveland during his Governorship of N.Y. State, 1883-85; and Private Secretary of President Cleveland during his first term of office, 1885-89. At the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's second term of the Presidency (March 1893), Mr. Lamont entered the Cabinet as Secretary of War, a position retained by him till March 1897.

LAMOUREUX, Jean, French musician, was born at Bordeaux of poor parents, and at the age of twelve played the violin at the Grand Theatre of his native town. Two years later he came to Paris and studied under Girard and Chauvet. He became one of the orchestra at the Church of La Trinité, and in 1854 carried off the first prize for violin-playing at the Conservatoire. Until 1872 he was the second Chef d'Orchestre at the Conservatoire Concerts, when he founded the Société de l'Harmonie Sacrée. In 1875

he performed the "Messiah" for the first time in Paris, and he introduced Handel and Bach to French audiences. In 1880 he was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and the next year his concerts raised quite a furore in Paris. Although he was unable to force Wagner upon the attention of his public in 1887, he did not despair, and succeeded in 1891. His Musical Festivals are one of the features of the Parisian season, and when he visited London in 1896 and 1897 he gained a great success.

LANCASTER, Albert Benoit Marie, was born at Mons, Belgium, on May 24, 1849, and is Meteorological Inspector and Librarian of the Royal Observatory, Brussels; Director of the journal Ciel et Terre; and Associate of the Liverpool Astronomical Society. M. Lancaster has written many articles on meteorology, earthquakes, and astronomy, in various Belgian scientific publications, and many separate works, e.g. "Instructions pour les Stations météorologiques belges" (two editions); "Discussion des Orages en Belgique"; "La Pluie en Belgique"; "Quatre Mois au Texas, de la Nouvelle Orléans à la Havane"; also, jointly with the late M. Houzeau, the "Traité élémentaire de Météorologie" (two editions); "Catalogue des ouvrages d'Astronomie et de Météorologie qui se trouvent dans les principales bibliothèques de la Belgique"; and the colossal "Bibliographie générale de l'Astronomie," now completed.

LANDOR, A. Henry Savage, artist and explorer, was born at Florence, and is the grandson of Walter Savage Landor. He was educated at the Liceo Dante, Florence, and at Julian's in Paris. For several years he travelled in the East, through Japan, China, and Corea, but he first made his name by his book "Alone with the Hairy Ainos," an account of his stay with the primitive inhabitants of the Kurile Islands. He subsequently published "Corea, or the Land of the Morning Calm," and "A Journey to the Sacred Mountain of Siao-on-tai-shan." Early in 1897, Mr. Landor set out from England with the avowed object of making an entry into Tibet, a region hitherto inaccessible to travellers. His adventures on this expedition, which was one of particular danger, were recorded in part in the Daily Mail, but his letters suddenly ceased, and horrifying rumours of an untimely fate reached this country. The full story of these days came to be written when Mr. Landor, after suffering almost indescribable tortures, was released and made his way across the Indian frontier. In a letter which he sent to Bombay, Mr. Landor stated that after proceeding for no less than 56 marches with only one bearer and a sick coolie (28 out of his original company of 30 deserted him a few days from starting), he lost his provisions, and, by an act of treachery, was made prisoner after a desperate struggle for liberty. He and his two men were put in chains and sentenced to death, but the Tibetans seeing that firing and inhuman torture did not frighten him, Mr. Landor's execution was ordered. The preparations for this act were of an agonising description. However, at the last moment, the Grand Lama commuted the sentence of decapitation to the torture of the "stretching log"—a kind of rack which injured the unhappy prisoner's spine, legs, feet, arms, and hands. The effect of these barbarities on Mr. Landor can be estimated by comparing the two portraits of him, one taken in February and the other in November of the same year (1897). Mr. Landor remained chained up for eight days, and his two servants were kept in fetters and manacles for eighteen days. The prisoners were subsequently released, and Mr. Landor reached India, physically ruined for life, and with 22 wounds. These unparalleled adventures were afterwards recounted in "The Forbidden Land," published in September 1898. The volume was illustrated from photographs, and from sketches made by the author on the spot, except on certain readily-imagined occasions. Naturally, the book in question aroused a high feeling amongst Englishmen, which was equalled only by the universal sympathy for the narrator. Mr. Landor is, at the time of going to press, engaged on a lecturing tour through England. His address in England is the Grosvenor Club, New Bond Street.

LANE, Richard Ouseley Blake, Q.C., J.P., Metropolitan Police Magistrate for West London, was born in 1842, and is the eldest son of the Rev. J. Lane of Killashee. He went to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1870, was made Q.C. in 1890, and was appointed a Police Magistrate for North London in 1893, and for West London in 1895. He married, in 1867, Sophia, daughter of P. M. Burke. Addresses: 2 Westgate Terrace, South Kensington, S.W.; and 1 Temple Gardens, E.C.

LANE-POOLE, Stanley, born in London, Dec. 18, 1854, eldest son of E. S. Poole, of the Science and Art Department (who died in 1867), was educated under the direction of his great-uncle, E. W. Lane, the Orientalist, and proceeded to

Corpus Christi College, Oxford, whence he took his B.A. degree in 1878, M.A. 1895. As early as 1870 his studies had been turned towards numismatics by his uncle, R. S. Poole, the Keeper of Coins in the British Museum, and in 1872 he published his first treatise on Arabic Coins in the Chronicle of the Numismatic Society. In 1874 he was appointed by the Trustees of the British Museum to write the official "Catalogue of the Oriental Coins" in the national collection; the work appeared in 8 vols., 1875-83, and was couronné by the French Institute. Three volumes of a subsequent "Catalogue of Indian Coins" were published in 1884-92, and 2 vols. of "Additions to the Oriental Collection" in 1890. A "Catalogue of the Arabic Glass Weights in the British Museum," making the fourteenth volume of catalogue, followed in 1891; and a "Catalogue of the Mohammedan Coins in the Bodleian" was published in 1888. He has also printed 4 vols. of collected papers on Arabic Numismatics, 1875-93. On the death of Mr. Lane, in 1876, the duty of completing his great Arabic Lexicon devolved on his grand-nephew, who brought out vols. 6-8, between 1877 and 1893, and published a "Life of E. W. Lane" in the former year. In 1883 he was sent to Egypt by the Science and Art Department, for which he wrote a handbook of the "Art of the Saracens," 1886. With a view to collecting materials for a Corpus of Mohammedan numismatics, he visited Russia in 1886, and examined the coin cabinets of Stockholm, St. Petersburg, and Constantinople. In 1888 he published in 3 vols. the "Life of Stratford Canning, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe," from the ambassador's private and official papers, of which a popular edition appeared in 1890; and in the latter year he edited the despatches of Sir G. F. Bowen, the colonial governor, and published a memoir of Sir Richard Church, the generalissimo of the Greeks in the War of Independence. His next biography (1894) was the "Life of Sir Harry Parkes, late Minister to China and Japan," in which Mr. F. V. Dickins collaborated; and his latest is a "Life of Saladin," now at press. He is at present engaged upon a "History of Mohammedan India" and a biography of the Emperor Bābar. His chief works, besides those already mentioned, are "Speeches and Table-talk of the Prophet Mohammed" (Golden Treasury Series); and "Le Koran, sa Poésie et ses Lois" (Bibliothèque Elzévirienne), 1882; "Arabian Society in the Middle Ages," "Studies in a Mosque," 1883 (2nd edit., 1893); "Picturesque Egypt" (edited by Sir C. Wilson), and "Social Life in Egypt," 1883; "Prose Writings of Jonathan Swift," 1884; "Swift's Letters and Journals," "Coins and Medals: their Place in History and Art," 1885 (3rd edit., 1895); "The Moors in Spain," 1886; "Turkey," 1888; "The Barbary Corsairs," 1890; "History of the Mogul Emperors," 1892; "Cairo," 1892 (3rd edit., 1897); "Auran-zib" (Rulers of India), 1893; "The Mohammedan Dynasties," 1893. In all, he has published about sixty volumes. He also contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Chambers's Encyclopædia," the "Dictionary of National Biography," and weekly critical reviews; and is a member of the Russian Archaeological and other learned societies, and an honorary member of the Egyptian Commission for the preservation of the monuments of Arab art. During two visits to Cairo in 1895 and 1897 he wrote a "Catalogue of the Coins in the Khedivial Library" there, and was instrumental in obtaining, through Lord Cromer's influence, a large increase in the Egyptian grant for the preservation of the Arab monuments, on which his report was presented to Parliament in the Egyptian Bluebook for 1896. He married, in 1879, Charlotte Bell, second daughter of the late David Wilson, of Ballymoney, co. Antrim, and niece of Gen. Fr. R. Chesney, R.A. Addresses: 3 Newnham Road, Bedford; and Athenæum.

LANG, Andrew, M.A., Hon. LL.D., critic, poet, and anthropologist, son of John Lang and Jane Plenderleath Sellar, was born at Selkirk, Mar. 31, 1844, and educated at the Edinburgh Academy, St. Andrews University, and Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained first classes in Classical Moderations and the Final Schools. In 1868 he was elected a Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. In 1888 he was appointed Gifford Lecturer at St. Andrews University on Natural Religion, and delivered his inaugural address on Jan. 17, 1889. He has published, in verse, "Ballades in Blue China," 1881; and "Helen of Troy," 1882; "Rhymes à la Mode," 1884; and "Grass of Parnassus," 1888; and, in prose, "Custom and Myth," 1884; "Myth, Ritual, and Religion," 1887. He has published also a prose translation of the "Odyssey" (with Prof. Butcher), and of the "Iliad" (with Messrs. E. Myers and Walter Leaf), and of "Theocritus," "Aucassin and Nicolette," "Perrault's Popular Tales," "The Gold of Fairnilee," 1888; "Lost Leaders" (a reprint of Daily News articles), 1889; "Prince Prigio," "Blue Fairy Tale Book," "Red Fairy Tale Book," "True Stories"; and, in collaboration with Mr. Rider Haggard, in 1890, "The World's Desire"; also "The Life, Letters, and Diaries of Sir Stafford Northcote, the First Lord Idlesleigh," 1890; a volume of verse, entitled "Ban et Arrière Ban"; and a discussion of the spiritualist controversy, entitled "Cock-Lane and Common Sense," 1894. Among other recent works of his may be mentioned: "Angling Sketches," "The Blue Poetry Book," and "Essays in Little," 1891; his introductory essays and notes to numerous books, including the Border Edition of the Waverley Novels, 1892, and "The Natives of Sarawak"; his series of "Fairy Books," including "My Own Fairy Book," 1895; "Life of John Gibson Lockhart," 1896; "Pickle the Spy," an exhaustive study of Jacobite affairs in Scotland subsequent to '45; "The Book of Dreams and Ghosts," "The Pink Fairy Book," 1897; "The Companions of Pickle," and "The Making of Religion," 1898. Mr. Lang writes literary articles for the Daily News, and is a frequent contributor to periodical literature. The monthly causeries "At the Sign of the Ship," in Longmans' Magazine, are from his pen. Addresses: 1 Marloes Road, W.; and Athenæum.

LANGE, Fräulein Helene, was born at Oldenburg in 1848. She stands in the foremost ranks of those who represent the new ideas of women's education in Germany. After the death of her father, when she was sixteen, a wish began to make itself felt in her to lead a useful life, to test her strength and capabilities, to create for herself a world with which she could feel in sympathy, and this at last induced her to take up the life of a teacher, a choice which proved a happy one in every way. In 1870 she settled permanently at Berlin, and, after duly qualifying for the profession, she was called to the head of a training college for teachers, which, under her distinguished leadership, very soon established her reputation. Her position brought her into contact with colleagues of all shades of opinion, and she felt that something must be done to stop the mischief of a system which leaves girls' education in the hands of men. She consulted, and earnestly deliberated with, women whom she knew to be thoroughly of one mind with herself, and in 1887 a petition was laid before the Prussian House of Deputies, signed by Fräulein Lange and others, praying for a reform of the obnoxious system, and for institutions where women might qualify for appointments as Oberlehrerinnen. The petition was accompanied by a pamphlet, written by Fräulein Lange, in which she thoroughly exposed the hollowness and mischievous tendency of girls' education as then carried on, and at the same time warmly vindicated the right of women to educate their own sex. The plain truth had never been told so plainly before, and it was enough to set public opinion on fire even outside the profession. Although the petition was unsuccessful, the Government, in curious contrast to their previous uncompromising attitude, soon after sanctioned the opening of classes for history, German, and literature for women students at the Victoria Lyceum, which was to be equivalent to university study, and by which the capacities of women for serious study were to be tested. A further step towards a realisation of Frl. Lange's plans was the opening of an institution where women might receive instruction in those branches of science which are the indispensable basis for any profession. These classes, called Real-kurse (comprising mathematics, chemistry, natural sciences, national economy, and languages), were opened in October 1889, in the presence of the Empress Frederick, on which occasion Frl. Lange delivered an address on the necessity of training women's faculties, which is greater in our day than it has ever been before. The advancement of women's education and culture is Frl. Lange's one aim and object, to which she makes every other interest subservient. She is identified with every movement tending to strengthen the capacities of women and to widen their spheres of influence and usefulness. The small band of those who are working for a near solution of the Woman's Question in Germany is increasing rapidly, and their eyes are fixed with hope and confidence on Frl. Lange, who has shown ability and courage to take initiative where it is necessary.

LANGEVIN, The Hon. Sir Hector Louis, Q.C., K.C.M.G., C.B., LL.D., born in Quebec, Aug. 25, 1826, was educated at the Seminary in his native city, studied law at Montreal, and was called to the Bar in 1850. He was created Q.C. March 30, 1864. He was for some time chief editor of the Mélanges Religieux, Montreal; was afterwards one of the editors of Le Courrier du Canada, Quebec, and wrote "Droit Administratif des Paroisses, or Parochial Laws and Customs of Lower Canada," 1862 (second enlarged edition, 1875). Mr. Langevin, elected Mayor of Quebec in December 1857, was re-elected in 1858 and 1859, has filled the chair of the Institut Canadien, and has been President of the St. Jean Baptiste Society of Quebec. He was elected January 2, 1858, member of the Provincial Parliament, by the county of Dorchester, and has always supported the Conservative party. In March 1864 Mr. Langevin became Solicitor-General for Lower Canada, with a seat in the Cabinet in Sir E. P. Tache's Administration, and exchanged the former post for the Postmaster-Generalship in November 1866. He was one of the Canadian delegates to the conference at Prince Edward Island on the question of the Confederation of the British North American Provinces in the summer of 1866, and afterwards to the Quebec Conference, and repaired to London with other commissioners towards the end of that year, in order to complete the arrangements. On the organisation of the Dominion Cabinet in 1867, Mr. Langevin became a Privy Councillor, Secretary of State of Canada, Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, and Registrar-General; and in November 1869 exchanged that office for that of Minister of Public Works, which he retained until the fall of the Macdonald Government in 1873. At the General Elections of 1878 he was returned for Three Rivers (which he still represents), and was sworn in as Postmaster-General in the Liberal-Conservative Government of that year. This portfolio he resigned, in May 1879, for that of the Ministry of Public Works, which he continued to fill until he resigned the office in August 1891. He was made a C.B. after the arrangements for the organisation of the Dominion Government, and in 1881 had the order of K.C.M.G. conferred upon him. He is also a Knight Commander of the Roman Order of St. Gregory the Great, and LL.D. of Laval University. In 1851 he married Justine, daughter of Colonel Fetu.

LANGFORD, John Alfred, LL.D., was born at Birmingham, Sept. 12, 1823, and was educated at the Mechanics' Institute, but in 1851 took private lessons in classics and mathematics from Prof. Lund, at Queen's College in that town. His first public work was to take a very active part in securing Aston Hall and Park for the people, for which he was presented to the Queen, when her Majesty performed the opening ceremony on June 15, 1858. He was an original Fellow of the Royal Historical Society, a post which he resigned in 1877. He was a Member of the Birmingham Free Libraries Committee, 1864-74; and teacher of English Literature in the Birmingham and Midland Institute, 1868-74. In 1875-76 he visited Australia and the United States, and the results of his travels were published in a series of articles in the Birmingham Weekly Post in 1876. He was elected a Member of the Birmingham School Board in 1874, and re-elected in 1876, 1879, 1882, 1885, and 1888. In 1891 he retired, having been a Member of the Board for seventeen years. In 1892 he was elected a Member of the Yardley School Board, and was appointed Chairman of the Attendance and Appeals Committee, but was not a candidate for re-election in 1895. He has been a Member of the Old Library Committee since 1871, and was elected President in 1880. He has been local editor of the Birmingham Daily Gazette and the Birmingham Morning News. Dr. Langford is the author of "Religious Scepticism and Infidelity," 1850; "A Drama of Life and Aspiranda," and "Religion and Education in Relation to the People," 1852; "English Democracy," 1855; "The Lamp of Life: a Poem," 1856; "Poems of the Fields and Town," 1859; "Shelley and other Poems," 1860; "Prison Books and their Authors," 1861; "Pleasant Spots and Famous Places," 1862; "A Century of Birmingham Life," 2 vols. 1868; "Modern Birmingham," 2 vols., 1874-77; "Staffordshire and Warwickshire, Past and Present," 2 vols., 1874; "Birmingham: a Handbook," 1879; "The Praise of Books," 1880; "Child-Life as Learned from Children," 1884; "On Sea and Shore," 1887; "Heroes and Martyrs," 1890; "Pattie's Christmas Tree," 1892; "Pleasant Spots and Famous Places," second series, 1898. He has contributed to the last edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica"; read a number of papers at the meetings of the Birmingham Archæological Society, published in its Transactions; and is the author of several pamphlets on current topics. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Greenvile and Tusculum College in 1869. Address: Astley House, Fernley Road, Sparkhill, Birmingham.

LANGLEY, John Newport, M.A. D.Sc., F.R.S., was born at Newbury on Nov. 10, 1852. He is the second son of John Langley, by his wife, Mary Groom, eldest daughter of Richard Groom, formerly Assistant Secretary in the Tax Department, Somerset House. Mr. Langley's earlier education was carried on partly at home and partly at the Exeter Grammar School. In October 1871 he entered at St. John's College, Cambridge; was elected a Foundation Scholar in May 1874; and obtained a first class in the Natural Science Tripos in December of the same year. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College in October 1877, and a Fellow of the Royal Society in June 1883. In 1884 he was appointed a Lecturer in Natural Sciences in Trinity College, and a Lecturer in Histology in the University. On the lapsing of his Fellowship in 1885 he was re-elected. In 1892 he received one of the Royal medals for original research awarded on the recommendation of the Royal Society. In 1897 he was elected to serve on the Council of the Royal Society, and in 1899 was elected a member of the Athenæum under Rule 2. Most of Mr. Langley's papers have been published in the Journal of Physiology, the Proceedings or Transactions of the Royal Society. His observations have for the most part been concerned with one of two fields of research. In the first place he has investigated the microscopical changes which take place in glands during secretion and the physiological conditions of secretion. On this subject he has written on the "Salivary Glands," 1879, 1886, 1889; on the "Gastric Glands," 1879, with Dr. Sewall, 1881, 1882; on "The Liver," 1882, 1885; and a series of six papers on the "Physiology of the Salivary Secretion," 1878-90. And in connection with this subject he has written on the "Destruction of Ferments in the Alimentary Canal," 1882; with Miss Eves on the "Amyolytic Action of Saliva," 1882; with Dr. Eddins on "Pepsinogen and Pepsin," 1886; with Dr. Fletcher on the "Secretion of Salts in Saliva," 1888. In the second place, he has investigated the connections and functions of the sympathetic nervous system. He has written with Prof. Sherrington on "Pilo-Motor Nerves," 1891; on the "Origin, Course, and Connection of the Sympathetic Fibres for the Head," 1892; for the "Limbs and Trunk," 1891-94; and for the "Lower Abdominal and Pelvic Viscera," 1895-96, the latter in conjunction with Dr. Anderson; with Dr. Anderson on the "Movements of the Iris," 1892; with Dr. Anderson on "Reflex Action from Sympathetic Ganglia," 1894; on the "Regeneration of Sympathetic and other Similar Nerve-Fibres," 1895, 1897, 1898; on "White and Grey Rami Communicantes," 1896; and on the "General Arrangement of the Sympathetic System," 1893, 1895, 1896. Mr. Langley has also made observations with regard to the physiological action of poisons and the structure of the central nervous system. On the former subject may be mentioned: "Pilocarpin," 1876; "The Antagonism of Poisons," 1880; "Piluri and Nicotin," with Dr. Dickinson, 1890; "Poisonous Action of Alkaloids on Nerve Cells," with Dr. Dickinson, 1890; "Nicotin in the Ciliary Ganglia," with Dr. Anderson, 1892. On the latter subject, "The Structure of the Dog's Brain," 1883; "Secondary Degeneration," with Prof. Sherrington, 1884, and with Dr. Grünbaum, 1890. He has written also on Hypnotism. Mr. Langley is the joint author with Prof. Foster of a "Practical Physiology and Histology," now in its sixth edition; and editor with Prof. Foster of the Journal of Physiology. Addresses: Trinity College, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

LANGLEY, Samuel Pierpont, Ph.D., LL.D., D.C.L., American astrono-

mer, was born at Roxbury, Boston, Mass., Aug. 22, 1834. Upon graduating from the Boston Latin School he devoted himself at first to civil engineering, and then for a time to architecture, but soon abandoned these professions for astronomy. In 1863 he went to Europe, and upon his return to America in 1865 became an assistant in the Harvard Observatory. He remained there, however, only for a few months, being called to the professorship of Mathematics in the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis. From 1867 to 1887 he was Director of the Observatory of the Western University of Pennsylvania (at Allegheny); and in January 1887 was appointed Assistant-Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, succeeding to the full secretaryship in November 1887. Secretary Langley has accompanied many of the parties sent out by the U. S. Government to observe eclipses of the sun in various parts of the world, the study of that body being the work to which he has largely devoted himself, and by which he is best known. Besides his lectures and addresses in America, he in 1885 lectured before the Royal Institution in London, and in 1882 made an address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Southampton. He received, in 1886, the first Henry Draper medal awarded by the National Academy of Sciences, and in 1887 the Rumford medals from both the Royal Society of London and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He is a member of many scientific societies, American and European, and a correspondent of the Institute of France. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by Harvard University in 1888, as well as by other institutions of learning, and that of D.C.L. by Oxford in 1894. In addition to his numerous strictly scientific papers, he published in 1884-85 in the Century Magazine some more popular articles on "The New Astronomy."

LANGTON, John, F.R.C.S., received his medical education at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and became M.S. in 1861, and Fellow in 1865. He is a Member of Council, and has been Vice-President and Hunterian Professor of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and a Member of its Court of Examiners. He is Surgeon and Lecturer on Clinical Surgery at his own hospital, and surgeon to a number of other important institutions. He is Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical and the Royal Medical Societies of London, &c. To the "St. Bartholomew's Hospital Reports" and the Transactions and Journal of the Clinical Society he has contributed important papers on "Hernia," &c. He is also a contributor to Heath's "Dictionary of Surgery," and has edited Holden's "Manual of Dissection." Address: 62 Harley Street, W.

LANGTRY, Lillie, actress, is the daughter of the Rev. W. C. Le Breton, Dean of Jersey, and was born in 1852. In 1874 she was married to Mr. Langtry, a native of Belfast, and about 1881, after having been for some years celebrated for her beauty in London society, determined to go on the stage. Mrs. Langtry made her first public appearance on Dec. 15, 1881, at the Haymarket Theatre, in "She Stoops to Conquer." In January of the following year Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft engaged Mrs. Langtry to play at the Haymarket Theatre, and she appeared in the character of Blanche Hays in Robertson's play of "Ours." She appeared as Rosalind in "As You Like It," at the Imperial Theatre, on Sept. 23, 1882, and subsequently went to America. Mrs. Langtry has twice leased the Prince's Theatre (now the Prince of Wales's Theatre). At the end of the summer season of 1885 she went once more to America, and in 1887 became a naturalised citizen of the United States. In 1891 she leased the Princess's Theatre in London, and appeared as Cleopatra in "Antony and Cleopatra." Her husband died under melancholy circumstances in 1897.

LANKESTER, Professor Edwin Ray, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., eldest son of Edwin Lankester, M.D., F.R.S., coroner for Middlesex, was born May 15, 1847, at 22 Old Burlington Street, London, and was educated at St. Paul's School, London, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was appointed Fellow and Lecturer of Exeter College, Oxford, in 1872, and Professor of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy in University College, London, in 1874. He is an Honorary LL.D. of the University of St. Andrews (1885), Examiner in the Universities of Cambridge, London, and New Zealand, and one of the Honorary Fellows of Exeter College, Oxford, his colleagues being the late Lord Chief-Justice, Mr. Froude, Sir E. Burne-Jones, Mr. William Morris, and the Regius Professor of Divinity. He is a corresponding member of the Imperial Academy of Science, St. Petersburg, &c. In 1878 the professorship in London held by Mr. Lankester was selected by Mr. Jodrell for endowment, with the interest of £7000, and subsequently large laboratories and a museum, adapted both to class teaching and to the pursuit of original investigations in the field of natural history, were placed at his disposal by the Council of the College. Professor Lankester was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875. He has published more than a hundred scientific memoirs (dating from 1865), mostly on comparative anatomy and palæontology, the chief of which are "A Monograph of the Fossil Fishes of the Old Red Sandstone of Britain," Part I., 1870; "Comparative Longevity," 1871; "Contributions to the Developmental History of the Mollusca" (Philos. Trans. Royal Society), 1875; "Degeneration, a chapter in Darwinism," 1880; "Limulus an Arachnid," 1881; "Rhabdopleura and Amphioxus," 1889; and the English editions of Haeckel's "History of Creation," and of Gegenbaur's "Comparative Anatomy." Besides these he has published numerous shorter memoirs, and has constantly contributed reviews and articles to the pages of the Athenæum, the Academy, and Nature, and is the author of the articles Hydrozoa, Mollusca, Polyzoa, Protozoa, Vertebrata, and Zoology in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Since 1869, when he joined his father, the late Dr. Edwin Lankester, in that work, he has been chief editor of the Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science. During the years 1870-74 he was one of the sectional secretaries of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and organised the annual museum which has become a feature of the meetings of that body. In 1883 he was President of the Biological Section of the Association when it met at Southport. In the autumn of 1876 Professor Lankester prosecuted the spirit-medium Slade, and procured his conviction by Mr. Flowers at Bow Street as "a common rogue and vagabond." He has also taken a prominent part in the defence of scientific experiment on live animals and in the discussion of University Reform. In April 1882 the Regius chair of Natural History in the University of Edinburgh was, on the death of Sir Wyville Thomson, offered by the Home Secretary to Professor Lankester, and accepted by him. This had been the most coveted post to which a naturalist could aspire, on account both of its pecuniary value and of its educational importance. It was, however, intimated by the Government, at the moment of making the appointment, that the division of the chair and the alteration of the curriculum in such a way as greatly to reduce the professor's income from students' fees were in contemplation. Finding that he would be unable in these circumstances to develop the museum and laboratories of the University in a satisfactory manner, on account of the general uncertainty as to the contemplated changes, Professor Lankester resigned the Regius Professorship a fortnight after his appointment, and was immediately re-elected to the Jodrell Professorship in London. In November of the same year he was elected by the Royal Society to be a member of the Council of that body, and for a second term of service in November 1888. In 1884 Professor Lankester founded the Marine Biological Association, of which he is President. The Association has erected at Plymouth, on a site granted by the War Office, a large laboratory and aquarium for the study of marine fishes and shell-fish. The Association has obtained support from the Fishmongers and other City Companies, and from the Government, so that it has been able to spend £12,000 on the laboratory, and has an income of £1000 a year to maintain it. In 1885 the Council of the Royal Society awarded to Professor Lankester one of the Royal Medals in recognition of his discoveries in the field of Zoology and Palæontology. In 1891 Professor Lankester was appointed to the Linacre Professorship of Human and Comparative Anatomy at Oxford. In August 1898 he was appointed by the principal trustees of the British Museum to succeed Sir William Flower as Director of the Natural History Department of the British Museum. This was a popular appointment, which put an end to the fear at that time expressed by scientific men, that the powers of the Director would in future be greatly curtailed. In 1890 he published "The Advancement of Science," and in 1891 issued in book-form his zoological articles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," ed. 9. Addresses: Natural History Museum, South Kensington, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LANSDSELL, The Rev. Henry, D.D., is known as author, editor, traveller, and divine. He was born at Tenterden, Kent, on Jan 10, 1841, received his early education from his father, and subsequently studied at St. John's College of Divinity, Highbury, whence he was ordained in 1867 to the Curacy of Greenwich. In 1869 he was appointed Metropolitan Association Secretary to the Society for Irish Church Missions, and during the following ten years preached and spoke on its behalf in twelve countries, forty counties, three hundred churches, &c. In 1873 he planned and, as honorary secretary, was the principal worker in founding the Church Homiletical Society, which had for its object the improvement in preaching and pastoral work of the younger clergy and candidates for Holy Orders, and which brought within its membership or influence about one-fifth of the English clergy. In connection with the foregoing society he originated, and for twelve years was editor of, the Clergyman's Magazine, of which about 300,000 copies were circulated. He edited also about the same time a volume of "Homiletical and Pastoral Lectures," and "Three Lectures on Preaching, delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral." Dr. Lansdell is widely known as a traveller and author. It occurred to him to make his holidays a means of philanthropic and religious usefulness, partly by the visitation of hospitals and prisons, and partly by the distribution therein, and elsewhere, of religious literature. Accordingly he visited in 1874 prisons in Scandinavia, Finland, Russia, and Poland; in 1876 Norway, Sweden, and both shores of the Gulf of Bothnia; in 1877, during the Russo-Turkish War, Austria-Hungary, Roumania, and Sclavonia; and in 1878 St. Petersburg and Archangel. The foregoing were tours, each of a few weeks only, after which he was asked whether he could not do something for Siberia. This led in 1870 to his traversing the Eastern Hemisphere in a tolerably straight line from Calais to the Pacific, crossing America, and in seven months finishing the circuit of the world. Another journey of five months took him, in 1882, through Russian Central Asia, including Kuldja, Bokhara, and Khiva; and this was followed by a tour of three months, in 1885, through eight of the kingdoms of Europe. Among the results of these journeys may be mentioned in gross the distribution in public institutions and elsewhere of about 150,000 publications, in twenty languages, and in particular the providing at least one copy of some portion of Holy Scripture for each room of every hospital and prison throughout Siberia, Russian Central Asia, Finland, and, less completely, the Caucasus and certain parts of European Russia. Accounts of these travels have appeared in some 100 newspapers and magazine articles, also in two vols., published 1882, entitled "Through Siberia" (now as one volume in its fifth edition), and translated into German, Swedish, and Danish; also, in 1885, "Russian Central Asia," in two vols., translated likewise into German, and abridged into one volume, published in 1887, and entitled "Through Central Asia; with an Appendix on the Russo-Afghan Frontier." As a parochial clergyman, in addition to his curacy at Greenwich, Dr. Lansdell served as Assistant Minister of St. German's, Blackheath, in 1880-82; and in 1885-86 was in sole charge of St. Peter's, Eltham; after leaving which he was asked whether he would "come out and lead the way" by a Pioneer Mission through Mongolia towards Tibet. This led to the last and greatest of his honorary missionary journeys, namely, of 950 days, through five of the kingdoms of Europe, four of Africa, and every kingdom of Asia, in the course of which he distributed Scriptures in eleven languages through five new countries, and also came in contact with about 400 missionaries, residing at 170 mission stations, in 110 localities, and working under fifty societies. He also collected some few thousands of specimens of the fauna of Russian and Chinese Turkistan. In 1892 Dr. Lansdell was appointed by the trustees Chaplain of Morden College, Blackheath, S.E. In the same year he married Mary Ann, eldest child of Charles and Mary Ann Colyer, of Farningham and Greenhithe, and proceeded on a tour to Spain and Portugal, thereby completing his visits to every kingdom of Asia and Europe. In 1893 he published another considerable work, in two volumes, entitled "Chinese Central Asia: a Ride to Little Tibet," a record of part of his last journey in Asia. Dr. Lansdell was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society in 1876, and in 1880 became a member of the General Committee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, before the annual meeting of which, at Swansea, he read a paper. In 1882 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Archbishop of Canterbury, confirmed by Her Majesty's letters patent. He is, by invitation of the Council, member of the Victoria Institute, member of the Royal Asiatic, and sundry other societies. Address: Morden College, Blackheath, S.E.

LANDSDOWNE, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Henry Charles Keith Petty-Fitzmaurice, K.G., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., G.C.M.G., D.C.L., LL.D., late Viceroy and Governor-General of India, eldest son of the 4th Marquis of Lansdowne, K.G., by his second wife, the Hon. Emily Jane, eldest daughter of the Comte de Flahault and the Baroness Keith and Nairne, was born Jan. 14, 1845. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford (M.A. 1884; Hon. D.C.L. 1888; Hon. LL.D. Camb.; Hon. LL.D. McGill University, Canada, 1884), and was formerly a Captain in the Wilts Yeomanry Cavalry. He succeeded his father in the Marquisate and other titles in 1866. Lord Lansdowne was a Lord of the Treasury from 1868 to 1872, and Under-Secretary for War from the latter date till 1874. He was appointed Under-Secretary for India when Mr. Gladstone took office again in 1880, but retired two months afterwards (July 8), owing to a disagreement with the Government on the subject of the Compensation for Disturbance (Ireland) Bill. In May 1883 the Queen approved the appointment of Lord Lansdowne as Governor-General of Canada, in succession to the Marquis of Lorne, who retired in October of that year, on the completion of the period for which he was appointed. Lord

Lansdowne was created G.C.M.G. a few months later. At the expiration of his term of office as Governor-General of Canada (the chief events of which were the suppression of Riel's rebellion in the North-West, the execution of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the satisfactory settlement of the long-standing controversy concerning the North American Fisheries), Lord Lansdowne was appointed by her Majesty Viceroy and Governor-General of India. His Excellency took his seat at Calcutta on Dec. 10, 1888. In December 1893 he was succeeded by the Earl of Elgin. He was appointed a Trustee of the National Gallery in 1894. In July 1895 he was appointed Secretary of State for War. His lordship is a magistrate for Wiltshire, and also for the county of Kerry. He married, in 1869, Lady Maud Evelyn Hamilton, youngest daughter of the first Duke of Abercorn. Addresses: Lansdowne House, Berkeley Square, W.; Bowdow Park, Calne, Wilts; and Athenæum.

LA RAMÉE, Mdlle. Louise de, commonly known to her readers as "Ouida," was born at Bury St. Edmunds in 1840. At a very early age she commenced authoress, and contributed to Colburn's New Monthly. She has written a large number of popular novels, some of which possess high literary charm. Of these the principal are "Held in Bondage," 1863; "Chandos," 1866; "Idalia," 1867; "Under Two Flags," 1867; "Kolle Farine," 1871; "In a Winter City," 1876; "In Maremma," 1882; "Bimbi" (stories for children), 1882; "Wanda," 1883; "Othmar," "Guilderoy," 1889; "Signa," 1875; "Moths," 1880; "Syrin," "Ruffino," "Santa Barbara," "The Tower of Taddeo," "Two Offenders" (tales), 1894; "Le Selve," 1896; "The Massarenes," and "Toxin, an Altruist," 1897. "Ouida" lives in Florence, and is a well-known figure in Anglo-Florentine circles. Her novels deal with all phases of European society, and the scenes of many of them are laid in Italy.

LARMOR, Joseph, M.A. (Camb.), D.Sc. (Univer. Lond.), D.Sc. (Roy. Univer. Ireland), F.R.S., was born in 1857, being the eldest son of the late Hugh Larmor of Magheragall, Lisburn, Co. Antrim, and was educated at the Royal Belfast Academical Institution, at Queen's College Belfast, and at St. John's College Cambridge. He has been a Fellow of St. John's College Cambridge since 1880, and University Lecturer in Mathematical Physics since 1885. From 1880 to 1885 he filled the chair of Natural Philosophy in Queen's College Galway, and in the Queen's University in Ireland, and for some years he was a Fellow of the Royal University. He is at present Examiner in Mathematics, and Natural Philosophy, in the University of London; a Governor of Mason College Birmingham; Treasurer, and lately Vice-President of the London Mathematical Society; Vice-President, and lately (1886-95) Secretary of the Cambridge Philosophical Society; and a member of Council of the Royal Society. Mr. Larmor has published memoirs on various branches of mathematics, and natural philosophy, in the publications of these Societies, and in other journals. Address: St. John's College, Cambridge.

LASCELLES, The Right Hon. Sir Frank Cavendish, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., Ambassador to Germany, is the son of the late Right Hon. William Sebright Lascelles, M.P., third son of the 2nd Earl of Harewood, and of Lady Caroline Georgiana Howard, daughter of the 6th Earl of Carlisle. Born in 1841, he entered the Diplomatic Service at the age of 20, and was soon afterwards appointed Attaché at Madrid. Until 1878 he filled many subordinate posts in Paris, Berlin, Copenhagen, Rome, Washington, and Athens, and in all these varied positions gained the character of an able, painstaking diplomatist, especially when he acted as Chargé d'Affaires. In 1878 and 1879 he, on three occasions for several months, was Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, and in that capacity convinced his official superiors of his fitness for higher and more independent spheres of action. Accordingly he was sent to Bulgaria in November 1879, and displayed in that difficult position so much ability and discretion that in 1886 he was made a K.C.M.G., and on Jan. 1, 1887, was appointed to the vacant post of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Bucharest. From thence, in July 1891, he was transferred to the Court of Teheran, succeeding Sir Henry Drummond Wolff there as Minister Plenipotentiary. His activity and vigilance in Persia caused him to be so much appreciated by the Foreign Office that they appointed him to one of the most important posts in the Diplomatic Service. He was made Ambassador to St. Petersburg at the close of 1893, in succession to the late Sir Robert Morier. In 1895 he was appointed to Berlin. He married, in 1867, Mary, daughter of the late Sir J. F. Olliffe, M.D. Lady Lascelles died suddenly at Berlin in April 1897. Address: British Embassy, Berlin.

LASKER, Emanuel, chess champion of the world and of England, was born on Dec. 24, 1868, at Berlinchen, in Germany, and received a university education at Berlin and Göttingen. When only fifteen years of age he entered seriously on the study of chess, and won a first prize in 1889 at a Berlin tournament. He won a third prize at the Graz International Tournament in 1890. He gave exhibition performances in London in 1891, and in 1892 won the first prize at the National Master Tournament. In the now celebrated quintangular match against Messrs. Blackburne, Bird, Gunsberg, and Mason, he obtained the first prize with 6½ games out of eight. He toured in America from September 1892 onwards, and beat Steinitz in 1894 by ten games to five, of which four were drawn. He studied mathematics in his student days, and has won three important chess championships, that of England in 1892, of America in 1894, and of the chess-playing world in 1897. He has also won many first prizes in chess tournaments, and has published several works on chess and on mathematical subjects. Address: 71 Chiswell Street, E.C.

LASSALLE, Jean, French baritone, was born in 1859, and was educated as an artist, but gave up that career and entered the Paris Conservatoire. His success was immediate, for he is a consummate actor, as well as a singer of high rank. He takes infinite pains with a part, ransacking every library to study Hamlet, becoming a classicist to play Polyeucte, and studying Egyptology before undertaking Aida. He is a frequent performer at Covent Garden, and is a great favourite with English audiences.

LATEY, John, F.J.I., editor of the Penny Illustrated Paper, was born in London on Oct. 30, 1842, and is the only son of the late John Lash Latey, who for many years edited the Illustrated London News. Both his parents were Devonians, and he received his early education at Barnstaple. He has been practically all his life a journalist. He joined the Penny Illustrated Paper when it was started by the proprietors of the Illustrated London News in October 1861, and has worked for it ever since, latterly as art and literary editor. To the columns of the Illustrated London News, to which his paper is still affiliated, he has contributed largely, having succeeded the late Mr. Spellen as writer of the Parliamentary sketch for that paper. During the rise of the Parnellite party in the House of Commons, he was well known in the Gallery as "The Silent Member," under which pseudonym he composed his Parliamentary articles. For several years he contributed to the Penny Illustrated Paper a series of articles, signed "The Showman." These were in great part bright and amusing satires on the follies and vices of the age. "Bird's-eye Views," in the same paper, were also devised by him, in collaboration with Mr. Harry Furniss. Mr. Latey has been a busy novelette writer, the Christmas Annuals of the Penny Illustrated Paper having been largely the work of his pen. He has also written a comedietta, "The Rose of Hastings," a "Life of General Gordon," and translations of Dumas' "Mohicans of Paris" (Routledge), and Paul Féval's "Fils du Diable," which in its English dress appeared as "The Three Red Knights." Mr. Latey was one of the founders of the London Press Club, and is a Fellow of the Journalists' Institute. Address: 10 Milford Lane, Strand, W.C.

LATHAM, Rev. Henry, M.A., J.P., was born on June 4, 1821, at Dover, being the son of John Henry Latham, for many years one of the Paymasters of Exchequer bills, and Harriet, only child of E. Broderip, M.D. He was educated privately and at Trinity College, Camb., of which College he was a Scholar. He was 18th Wrangler in 1845, and was appointed Tutor of Trinity Hall in 1847, becoming a Fellow in 1848. He was ordained Deacon in 1848, and Priest in 1850. He was appointed Master of Trinity Hall in 1888. He is the author of "Problems in Geometrical Conic Sections," 1848 and 1882; "On the Action of Examinations," 1877; "Pastor Pastorum," 1888; "A Service of Angels," 1895. He is a Justice of the Peace for Cambridgeshire. Address: Master's Lodge, Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

LATHAM, Peter Wallwork, M.A., M.D., F.R.C.P., the eldest son of Mr. John Latham, a physician practising in Wigan, Lancashire, was born Oct. 21, 1832. He was educated at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, and took the B.A. degree in 1858 as 19th Wrangler, and in 1859 was placed first, with distinction in five subjects, in the Natural Science Tripos. In 1860 he was elected into a Medical Fellowship at Downing College. He studied Medicine at Cambridge, Glasgow, and at St. Bartholomew's, London; graduated as M.A. and M.B. in 1861, and as M.D. in 1864. In 1866 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London, where he has held the offices of Councillor 1886-87, and Censor 1887-89; and in 1886 delivered the Croonian Lectures, and in 1888 the Harveyian Oration. In 1868 he was appointed Deputy for the Downing Professor of Medicine in the University of Cambridge, and succeeded Dr. Fisher in the Professorship in 1874. He has twice been an Examiner for the Natural Science Tripos, and on several occasions for Medical Degrees at Cambridge. He is Senior Physician to Addenbrooke's Hospital, and has published several works and papers relating to medicine: "On Nervous or Sick Headache," 1873; "On the Formation of Uric Acid in Animals," 1884; "On some Points in the Pathology of Rheumatism, Gout, and Diabetes," Croonian Lectures, 1886; articles in "Quain's Dictionary of Medicine," and the Harveian Oration for 1888. Dr. Latham resigned the Downing Professorship in 1894, having discharged the duties of the office for twenty-six years. Address: 17 Trumpington Street, Cambridge.

LA THANGUE, H. H., A.R.A., was educated at Dulwich College, the Academy Schools, and the Ecole des Beaux Arts, Paris. His methods are rather French than English, and his broad realistic manner marks him out as one of the future leaders of a new school of English landscape art. He was elected A.R.A. in 1898, and of late years has exhibited the following Royal Academy pictures: "The Last Furrow" and "Cleaning the Orchard," 1895; "A Little Holding," "In a Cottage Garden," and "The Man with the Scythe" (a most noteworthy allegorical picture), 1896; "A Summer Morning," "Travelling Harvesters" (a very fine painting), and "Gleaners," 1897; "Nightfall," "Bracken," "Harvesters at Supper," and "A Sussex Cider-Press," 1898; "Cider Apples," "Cutting Bracken," "Harrowing," and "Love in the Harvest Field," 1899. Address: Graffham, Petworth, Sussex.

LAUGHTON, John Knox, M.A., was born in Liverpool on April 23, 1830, and was educated at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool, and at Caius College, Cambridge. Appointed a Naval Instructor in 1853, he was present in the Baltic during the Russian War of 1854-55, and served in China during the second war of 1856-59, where he obtained a medal and three clasps. He subsequently served in the Mediterranean and the Channel, and was in 1866 appointed Mathematical and Naval Instructor at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth. In 1873 he was transferred to Greenwich in the same capacity, where he also lectured on Meteorology; and in 1876 he became Lecturer on Naval History at the same institution. Professor Laughton was in 1885 elected to the chair of Modern History at King's College, London, and in 1895 became an Hon. Fellow of Caius College, Cambridge. He acted as President of the Royal Meteorological Society from 1882 to 1884. He is the author of "Physical Geography in its Relation to the Prevailing Winds and Currents," 1870; "A Treatise on Nautical Surveying," 1872; "Studies in Naval History," 1887; "Nelson" (English Men of Action Series), 1895; "Nelson and his Companions in Arms," 1896; and has edited "Memoirs relating to the Lord Torrington," 1889; "Letters and Despatches of Lord Nelson," 1886; "Defeat of the Spanish Armada" (Navy Records Society); "Memoirs of Henry Reeve," 1898. Address: King's College, London.

LAURIER, The Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid, Canadian statesman, was born at St. Lin, Quebec, Nov. 20, 1841. He was educated at L'Assomption College, graduated in law at McGill University in 1864, and was admitted to the Bar in 1864. From 1871 to 1874 he was in the Quebec Assembly. He then entered the Dominion Parliament, and in 1877 was appointed Minister of Inland Revenue in the Mackenzie Government, a position which he held until the resignation of the Ministry in 1878. M. Laurier at one time edited Le Défricheur. On the retirement of Mr. Blake from the Liberal leadership in 1887, M. Laurier, who had already been recognised as the head of the French-Canadian wing of that party, was unanimously chosen to succeed him. At the general election in 1896 his party was successful, and he was sworn into office as President of the Privy Council, July 9 of that year. Notwithstanding powerful opposition he was able to settle the Manitoba School question in such manner as to remove it from the domain of politics, and in 1897 he took part in London at the Diamond Jubilee, being received in the Mother Country in almost regal manner, his fine and romantic presence as he headed the Colonial statesmen in the Jubilee Procession being all in his favour. As an orator he took first place everywhere. He advocated a closer union between Great Britain and her colonies and preferential trade arrangements, predicting that the time was approaching "when Canadian pride and aspiration would develop a claim to demand as a right their share in that broader citizenship which embraces the whole empire, and whose legislative centre is the Palace of Westminster." He was also received with unusual honours by the President of France and His Holiness the Pope. On his return to Canada he had splendid receptions in all the chief cities of his native land, where great enthusiasm was shown. He was (1898) one of the Joint Commissioners for the settlement of matters in dispute between Canada and the United States. He was sworn of the Privy Council and created a Knight Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George in 1897, and in the same year the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by Toronto University and also by Queen's University of Kingston. Honorary degrees were also conferred by Oxford and Cambridge Universities in England, and he was appointed a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour in France.

LAVEDAN, Henri Léon Émile, French dramatist, is the son of a famous Republican journalist under the Second Empire, and was born at Orleans in April 1859. He was educated at the Lycée Louis le Grand, and immediately took up letters as his profession. He started by writing Chroniques to several smart Parisian papers, such as L'Echo de Paris, Le Gil Blas, and Le Figaro, in which he displayed talents of keen observation and mordant satire. These articles have been since reprinted in a dozen volumes, with the titles "Mam'selle Vertu," "Lydie," "Petites Fêtes," &c. But his chief success has been on the stage. He made a brilliant début at the Théâtre Français with a comedy in four acts, entitled "Une Famille" (May 1890), for which he was given the Thoirac prize of £160 by the French Academy. Two years later he offered a satirical drama, "Les Descendants," to the same theatre, in which play his object was to contrast the present decadence of the great aristocratic families with the glorious past of their ancestors. There it was refused, but, under a fresh title, "Le Prince d'Auree," it was played at the Vaudeville (Paris) with immense success, thanks to its continual play of sparkling epigram. In April 1894 he wrote "Deux Noblesses" for the Odéon, and in November 1895 his "Viveurs" was presented at the Vaudeville. On Dec. 8, 1898, he was elected a Member of the French Academy. He is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and his Paris address is 15 Rue d'Astorg.

LAVISSE, Ernest, French historian, was born at Novion-en-Thiérache, Dec. 17, 1842, and was educated at the Church Schools of St. Roch at Paris. He entered the École Normale in 1862, and in 1865 he passed his agrégé in History. After having been a teacher at the Lycées of Versailles and Henri IV., he became a docteur ès lettres in 1875, and a Professor of Modern History at the Sorbonne in 1888. He was elected a Member of the French Academy in June 1892 in the place of Admiral Jurien de la Gravière, having been created an officer of the Legion of Honour in 1887. M. Lavissee is remarkable both for the clearness of his elementary historical text-books and for the depth of his historical researches. His chief study has been the history of Germany and the close relationship of its present policy with its past. His chief works are: "Études sur l'Histoire de Prusse," 1879; "Essais sur l'Allemagne Impériale," 1887; "La Jeunesse du Grand Frédéric," 1891; "Trois Empereurs d'Allemagne," 1888; studies of William I., Frederick III., and William II. Amongst his historical text-books may be cited: "Sully," 1880; "Histoire de France," 1890; and "La Première Année d'Histoire de France," 1876. He wrote an introduction to a translation of Professor Freeman's "Historical Geography of Europe," and he has written essays on university questions. He is a frequent writer in the Revue des Deux Mondes and the Revue de l'Enseignement Supérieur. His Paris address is 5 Rue de Médicis.

LAW, William Arthur, dramatist, was born on 22nd March 1844 at North Repps Rectory, near Cromer, Norfolk, his father being the Rev. Patrick Comerford Law, Rector of North Repps, and his mother Frances, daughter of the Right Rev. Alexander Arbuthnot, Bishop of Killaloe. His family is the Irish branch of the Scotch family of the Laws of Lauriston, which branch went over to Ireland with "Strongbow" in 1166, and his ancestor, Sir Michael Law, fought under William of Orange at the battle of the Boyne in 1690; and another ancestor, Lord Danganmore, fought on the opposite side for James, his title and estates being afterwards forfeited for high treason. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and in 1864 obtained a commission in the 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, in which regiment he served at home and in Burma for eight years. In 1872 he went on the stage, his first engagement being at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh. After acting in the provinces and at the Surrey Theatre for two years he joined Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's Company in 1874, and was connected with it for five years. In 1877 he married Miss Fanny Holland of the same company, and from 1879 to 1881 he and his wife gave an entertainment of their own throughout the country. In 1881 Arthur Law was engaged at the Savoy Theatre, when he retired from the stage and devoted himself solely to writing plays. His first piece, "A Night Surprise," was produced at the German Reeds' entertainment on Feb. 12, 1877. He wrote 19 plays for the German Reeds, and up to the present has also produced 20 plays in the London theatres. At German Reeds' we may mention: "A Night Surprise," "A Happy Bungalow," "An Artful Automaton," "Enchantment," "£100 Reward," "Castle Botherem," "A Flying Visit," "A Merry Christmas," "All at Sea," "Cherry Tree Farm," "A Bright Idea," "The Head of the Poll," "Nobody's Fault," "A Strange Host," "Treasure Trove," "A Moss Rose Rent," "A Terrible Fright,"

"Old Knockles," and "A Peculiar Case." At the London theatres: "Hope," "Mr. Guffin's Elopement," "The Happy Return," "Uncle Samuel," "A Mint of Money," "The Great Tay-kin," "Chirrupers's Fortune," "After Long Years," "Gladys," "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," "John Smith," "All Abroad," "Dick Venables," "The Judge," "Culprits," "In Three Volumes," "The Magic Opal," "The New Boy," "The Ladies' Idol," and "The Sea Flower." Address: Cromer House, 223 Elgin Avenue, Maida Vale, W.

LAWES, Sir John Bennet, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L. Oxon., D.Sc. Camb., LL.D. Edin., son of the late Mr. John Bennet Lawes, of Rothamsted, Hertfordshire, by Marianne, daughter of Mr. John Sherman of Drayton, Oxfordshire, and widow of the Rev. D. G. Knox, was born at Rothamsted, Dec. 28, 1814, and succeeded to his estate there in 1822. He was educated at Eton and at Brasenose College, Oxford. On leaving the University he spent some time in London for the purpose of studying in a practical manner the science of chemistry. In October 1834 he started regular experiments in agricultural chemistry on taking possession of his property and home at Rothamsted, and from that date up to the present time he has unceasingly been applying his scientific knowledge to the solution of questions affecting practical agriculture. Among his earliest experiments, the effect of bones as a manure on land occupied his attention for some time. Mr. Lawes afterwards established large works in the neighbourhood of London for the manufacture of superphosphate of lime, by which name the manure is known which has produced quite a revolution in the science of agriculture. In 1843 Mr. Lawes engaged the assistance of Dr. Gilbert, the present director of Rothamsted Farm, and undertook with him a systematic series of agricultural investigations in the field, the feeding-shed, and the laboratory. Mr. Lawes was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1854, and in 1867 the Royal Medal was awarded to him conjointly with Dr. Gilbert by the Council of the society. He also received a gold medal from the Imperial Agricultural Society of Russia. In June 1881 the Emperor of Germany, by Imperial decree, awarded the Gold Medal of Merit for Agriculture to Mr. Lawes and Dr. Gilbert jointly. In 1893 the Society of Arts awarded the Albert Medal to Sir John Lawes and Professor Gilbert for their joint services to scientific agriculture. The results of the Rothamsted investigations are to be found in the Journals of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, the Reports of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, the Journal of the Chemical Society of London, the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society of London, the Journal of the Society of Arts, the Journal of the Horticultural Society of London, the Edinburgh Veterinary Review, the Reports of the Royal Dublin Society, the Philosophical Magazine, the Agricultural Gazette, the Chemical News, and in official reports and scattered pamphlets and newspaper letters. In 1870 he published his views on the valuation of unexhausted manures; and in 1873 wrote an interesting pamphlet on the same subject with reference to the Irish Land Act of 1870. In 1892 he published a work on the Rothamsted Farm. He has recently collected his papers on Agriculture, published from 1847 to the present, and has made them into three quarto and six octavo volumes, which he has presented to various national institutions in different countries. He was created a baronet in May 1882. Address: Rothamsted, St. Albans.

LAWRANCE, The Hon. Sir John Compton, J.P., D.L., one of the Justices of the High Court, is the only son of Mr. T. M. Lawrance, late of Dunsby Hall, Lincolnshire, and was born in 1832, was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, was created a Queen's Counsel in 1887, and was elected a Bencher of his Inn in 1879. He had been for some years the leader of the Midland Circuit. He has held the appointment of Recorder of Derby (1879); represented South Lincolnshire in the Conservative interest from 1880 until 1885; and sat, until 1890, for the Stamford division of the county, his return being opposed in 1886. He was made one of the Justices of the High Court in February 1890. He married, in 1861, Charlotte, daughter of Major Smart. Addresses: 7 Onslow Square, S.W.; and Dunsby Hall, Bourne, &c.

LAWRENCE, The Right Rev. William, S.T.D., D.D., son of Amos A. and Sarah E. Lawrence, was born in Boston, Mass., May 30, 1850. He was graduated from Harvard in 1871, studied for the ministry at Andover, the Divinity School in Philadelphia, and the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, taking the degree of B.D. at the latter place in 1875. He was ordained deacon in 1875, and entered the priesthood in 1876. On April 1, 1876, he entered upon the duties of assistant-minister of Grace Church, Lawrence, Mass., and accepted the position of Rector of the same church in March 1877. In 1884 he became Professor of Homiletics and Pastoral Care in the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Mass., and accepted the office of Dean in addition to the above Chair in 1889. From 1888 to 1893 he was preacher to Harvard University. In 1888 he published the "Life of Amos A. Lawrence," and also a pamphlet on "Proportional Representation in the House of Deputies of the General Convention." The degree of S.T.D. was conferred upon him in 1890 by Hobart College, and that of D.D. by Harvard in 1893. He was consecrated seventh Bishop of Massachusetts, Oct. 5, 1893.

LAWSON, Sir Edward Levy-, Bart., D.L., J.P., is the eldest son of J. M. Levy, and was born in London on Dec. 28, 1833. He was educated at University College, London, and in 1875 he assumed the name of Lawson, by royal license, in accordance with the will of his uncle, Mr. Lionel Lawson. He served the office of High Sheriff of Buckinghamshire in 1886, and in the same year was President of the Royal Institute of Journalists. Sir Edward Lawson, who was created a Baronet in 1892, is the principal proprietor of the Daily Telegraph, is a Deputy-Lieutenant for the City of London, and a County Alderman and a Justice of the Peace for Buckinghamshire. Addresses: 12 Berkeley Square, W.; and Hall Barn, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

LAWSON, Harry Lawson Webster, eldest son of Sir Edward Lawson, Bart., of Hall Barn, Beaconsfield, Bucks, by Harriette Georgiana, only daughter of Mr. Benjamin Webster, author, manager, and actor, was born in St. Pancras, Middlesex, Dec. 18, 1862. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxon, where he obtained a first class in the Final School of Modern History. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1891; he is a J.P. for Bucks; and a Major in the Royal Bucks Hussars. He sat as M.P. for West St. Pancras from 1885 to 1892, and for East Gloucestershire, 1893-95. He was a Member of the London County Council for West St. Pancras, 1889-92; was elected for Whitechapel in 1897, and was re-elected in 1898. He was also a member of the Royal Commission on Civil Establishments from 1887 to 1891. Since 1892 he has been a member of the Colonial Office Committee of the Emigrants' Information Department. While in the House of Commons he served on nearly every Select and Hybrid Committee appointed to consider Metropolitan questions, and was a member of the Town Holdings Committee, 1886-92. He has acted as special correspondent for the Daily Telegraph in South Africa and India, and has contributed topical articles to the monthly periodicals. He married, in 1884, Olive, second daughter of General Sir Henry Percival de Bathe, 4th Baronet. Addresses: 37 Grosvenor Square, London, W.; and Orkney Cottage, Taplow, Bucks.

LAWSON, John Grant, M.P., J.P., D.L., is the son of the late Andrew Lawson of Aldborough, Yorkshire, and was born in Yorkshire on July 28, 1856. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. in 1882. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1881, and has represented the Thirsk and Malton Division of Yorkshire as a Conservative member of the House of Commons since 1892. He is a Parliamentary Charity Commissioner, and one of the Deputy-Chairmen of Committees of the House of Commons. Addresses: 14 Arlington Street, S.W.; and Elm Bank, York.

LAWSON, Sir Wilfrid, Bart., M.P., eldest son of the late Sir Wilfrid Lawson of Aspatria, Cumberland, and of Caroline, daughter of Sir James Graham of Netherby, was born Sept. 4, 1829, and succeeded to the title and estates on his father's death in 1867. From an early age he has been an enthusiastic advocate of the temperance movement, and is now the leader and President of the United Kingdom Alliance, and is its spokesman in Parliament. At the general election of 1859 he stood, in conjunction with his uncle, the late Sir James Graham, as a candidate for the representation of Carlisle, and succeeded by a narrow majority over his opponent, Mr. Hodgson. In March 1864 he first moved for leave to introduce the measure now so well known as the Permissive Bill, the main principle of which is the giving to two-thirds of the inhabitants of any parish or township an absolute veto upon all licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors granted within their districts. It was supported by forty members. In 1865 he was displaced at the general election by his former opponent, Mr. Hodgson; but, at the general election of 1868, on appealing to the enlarged constituency as a supporter of Mr. Gladstone he was returned at the head of the poll. Sir Wilfrid Lawson succeeded, on June 18, 1880, in carrying his Local Option resolution by a majority of 26, and in 1881 and 1883 he again got it passed. In 1885 he stood for the new Cocker mouth division of Cumberland, but was defeated by a Conservative majority of ten. In 1886, as a Gladstonian Liberal, he gained the seat by a large majority, and was again returned in 1892 and 1895. Sir Wilfrid is an advanced Radical, and is in favour of the disestablishment of the Church, and of the abolition of the House of Lords and of standing armies. He is married to a daughter of J. Pocklington Senhouse of Netherhall, Cumberland. Address: Brayton, Carlisle.

LEA, Arthur Sheridan, M.A., Sc.D., F.R.S., was born in New York, of English parents, on Dec. 1, 1853. He came to England in 1859, where he has since resided, and was educated in a private school, and at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in October 1872, reading at first for Honours in Mathematics. In his second year he turned his attention to Natural Science, and was elected to a Foundation Scholarship in May 1875, being placed in the first class of the Natural Science Tripos in December of the same year. Immediately after taking his degree he proceeded to Germany and worked with Professor W. Kühne, of Heidelberg, in conjunction with whom he published his first paper, "Beobachtungen über die Absonderung des Pankreas" (Untersuch. Physiol. Inst. Heidelb., vol. ii.). After his return to England he acted as head-assistant to Professor Michael Foster, during which time he lectured on Chemical Physiology. He was appointed Lecturer to Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, in 1881, and University Lecturer in 1884. In October 1885 Gonville and Caius College elected him to a Fellowship, whereupon he migrated to this Society from Trinity. While actively engaged in teaching and in endeavouring to promote the progress of science he published a short series of papers, dealing chiefly with enzymes or soluble ferments, which appeared in the Journal of Physiology and in the Proc. Roy. Soc., the most important being "A Comparative Study of Artificial and Natural Digestions" (Jour. Physiol., vol. xi., 1890). He has further been responsible for the Appendix to the several editions of Foster's "Text-book of Physiology," publishing it in an enlarged and extended form as a separate volume in 1892. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1890. Address: Caius College, Cambridge.

LEADER, Benjamin Williams, R.A., C.E., was born at Worcester, March 12, 1831, and is the son of E. Leader Williams, M.Inst.C.E. He received his earliest instruction in art at the School of Design in his native city. In 1854 he was admitted a student in the Royal Academy, and in the same year exhibited his first picture, "Cottage Children Blowing Bubbles," which was bought for £50 by an American gentleman. Two years later Mr. Leader visited Scotland, having till then seen no hills higher than the Mal-verns. Since then he has become a popular delineator of mountain scenery, Wales and Switzerland being his favourite sketching grounds. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, Jan. 16, 1883, and R.A., Feb. 2, 1898, and has exhibited pictures in the Royal Academy since 1856. His most important pictures since then are: "A Moated Grange," 1868; "The Streams through the Birch Wood," 1871; "Mountain Solitude," 1873; "Wild Waters," 1875; "Barges passing a Lock on the Thames," "An English Hayfield," and "A November Evening after Rain," 1876; "The Valley of Clear Springs," and "Lucerne," 1877; "View of the Wetterhorn," 1878; "The Last Gleam," 1879; "A Gleam in the Storm," 1880; "February fill Dyke," 1881; "In the Evening there shall be Light," 1882; "Parting Day," "Green Pastures and Still Waters," and "An Autumn Evening," 1883. In 1886 he exhibited three pictures, one of them "With Verdure Clad," being the largest he has yet painted. Since then he has painted "An April Day," 1887; "Sands of Aberdovey," and "A Summer's Day," 1888; "Sabrina's Stream," "Cumbria's Coast," and "The Dawn of an Autumn Day," 1889; "The Sandy Margin of the Sea," "The Silent Evening Hour," 1890; "The Manchester Ship Canal Works in Progress" (a large picture), 1891; "Conway Bay" and "Across the Common," 1892; "By Mead and Stream," "An Old Country Church," and two Surrey scenes, 1893; and "Worcester Cathedral," 1894; "Evening," "English Cottage Homes," "A Sunny Morning: Surrey," and "Evening Glow," 1895; "A Golden Eve," "The Skirts of a Pine-Wood," "A Silvery Morn," and "Hill-side Pines," 1896; "The Breezy Morn," "Fast Falls the Eventide," "An Autumn Gleam," and "On a Surrey Common," 1897; "In a Welsh Valley," "Where Peaceful Waters Glide," "The Silver Sea," and "Surrey Sheep Pastures," 1898; "The Sand-Pit, Burroughs Cross" (Diploma Work), "Evening's Last Gleam," "Where Brook and River Meet," and "Summer Eve by Haunted Stream," 1899. Several of his pictures have been very successfully etched by Chauvel and Brunet-Desbaines (q.v.). He received the Gold Medal at the Paris Exhibition, 1889, and was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. He married, in 1877, Mary Eastlake, of Plymouth. Address: Burroughs Cross, Shere, Guildford.

LEAF, Walter, was born in 1852, at Norwood, and is the eldest son of Charles John Leaf, F.L.S., F.S.A., and Isabella Ellen, daughter of the late John Tyas, of the Times. He was educated at Harrow, 1866-69, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, 1870-74; Minor Scholar, 1869; Scholar, 1871; Craven University Scholar, 1873; B.A. Senior Classic (bracketed), 1874; Chancellor's Medallist, 1874; Fellow of Trinity, 1875; M.A. 1877; Doctor of Letters (Litt. D.), 1888. He entered the firm of Leaf, Sons, & Co., wholesale warehousemen, in 1877, and became Chairman of Leaf & Co., Limited, in 1888, retiring in 1892. He was one of the founders and first members of the Council of the London Chamber of Commerce; Deputy Chairman of the Council, 1885-86; Chairman, 1887; and is now Vice-President of the Chamber. He is a Director of the London and Westminster Bank, and member of the Senate of the University of London, of the Governing Body of Harrow School, Marlborough College, the Central Foundation Schools of London, and the Warehousemen, Clerks', and Drapers' School; of the Councils of the Society for Psychical Research, and the Hellenic Society, and Treasurer of the British School at Athens. He is author of "The Story of Achilles" (with J. H. Pratt), 1880; "The Iliad of Homer translated into English Prose" (with Messrs. A. Lang and E. Myers), 1882; "The Iliad, Edited with English Notes and Introduction," 1886-88; "Companion to the Iliad," 1892; "A Modern Priestess of Isis" (translated from the Russian), 1894; "Versions from Hafiz; An Essay in Persian Metre," 1898; and of numerous papers in the Journal of Philology, the Journal of Hellenic Studies, the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, and elsewhere. He married, in 1894, Charlotte Mary, daughter of the late John Addington Symonds, of Clifton Hill, Bristol, and Am Hof, Davos.

LEAN, Mrs. Francis. See MARRYAT, FLORENCE.

LEATHES, Professor the Rev. Stanley, D.D., Prebendary of St. Paul's, was born March 21, 1830, at Ellesborough, Bucks, being the son of the Rev. Chaloner Stanley Leathes, rector of that parish. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge (B.A. 1852, Tyrwhitt University Scholar, 1853, M.A. 1855), was ordained in 1856, and became curate successively of St. Martin's, Salisbury; St. Luke's, Berwick Street; and St. James's, Westminster. Mr. Leathes succeeded Dr. M'Caul as Professor of Hebrew in King's College, London, in 1863. He was appointed Boyle Lecturer in 1867, and held this office from 1868 to 1870. He became minister of St. Philip's, Regent Street, 1869. He was elected Hulsean Lecturer in the University of Cambridge for the year 1873, Bampton Lecturer at Oxford for the year 1874, and was appointed Warburtonian Lecturer at Lincoln's Inn in 1876. The University of Edinburgh conferred on him the honorary degree of D.D., March 2, 1878. He was appointed Prebendary of St. Paul's, 1876; Rector of Cliffe at Hoo, 1880; and Rector of Much Hadham, Herts, 1889. In 1885 he was elected Honorary Fellow of his College. Dr. Leathes, who was invited by Convocation to join in the revision of the Authorised Version of the Old Testament, is the author of "The Witness of the Old Testament to Christ," being the Boyle Lectures for 1868; "The Witness of St. Paul to Christ"; "The Witness of St. John to Christ"; a "Hebrew Grammar"; "Structure of the Old Testament," a series of popular essays, 1873; "The Gospel its Own Witness," 1874, being the Hulsean Lecture delivered in the preceding year; "Religion of the Christ" (Bampton Lecture), 1874; "The Christian Creed; its Theory and Practice: with a Preface on some present Dangers of the English Church," 1878; "The Law in the Prophets," 1890; and Introductions to the Books of Ezekiel and Daniel. Addresses: Much Hadham, Herts; and Athenæum.

LEBRET, M., French statesman, was born at Étampes in October 1853. After passing with distinction through the School of Law, he was in 1879 entrusted by the then Minister of Education with a mission to England and Scotland for the purpose of reporting on leases and agricultural legislation and usages. He published, on his return, a treatise enumerating the conclusions arrived at during his journey, and soon afterwards was appointed Professor of Law at the University of Caen. He was elected Deputy for the town of Caen in 1893, and at the general election in the summer of 1898 was re-elected. In October of the same year he was offered and accepted the portfolio of Minister of Justice in M. Charles Dupuy's Cabinet. M. Lebret is new to ministerial work. He is Mayor of Caen, and, in his professional capacity, stands in considerable repute. He is probably one of the highest authorities on technical jurisprudence.

LECKY, The Right Hon. William Edward Hartpole, eldest son of John Hartpole Lecky, Longford Terrace, Dublin, and Maria, daughter of W. E. Tallents, Newark-on-Trent, was born at Newtown Park, near Dublin, March 26, 1838, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated B.A. in 1859 and M.A. in 1863. Devoting himself to literature, he soon gained distinction as an author. His acknowledged works are "The Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland," published anonymously in 1861, and republished in 1871-72; "History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe," 2 vols., 1865 (fifth edit., 1872); "History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne," 2 vols., 1869; "History of England in the Eighteenth Century," vols. i. and ii. 1878, vols. iii. and iv. 1882, vols. v. and vi. 1887, vols. vii. and viii. (completing the work), 1890. A Cabinet Edition of the History in twelve volumes was published in 1892, the last five being devoted to Ireland and Irish affairs down to the Addington Ministry. Mr. Lecky published a small volume of poems (1891), and an important work on contemporary politics, called "Democracy and Liberty," in 1896, a second edition of which was published in 1899, and created some stir through its adverse comments on Mr. Gladstone. His first three works and a large part of his History of England have been translated into German, and some of them into other languages. Most of his works have gone through many editions in England. Mr. Lecky has received the honorary degree of LL.D. from his own University of Dublin, and from the Universities of St. Andrews and Glasgow; the degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford, and the degree of Litt.D. from the University of Cambridge. In 1894 he was elected Corresponding Member to the Institute of France. He is also an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy. In November 1895 he was elected member of Parliament for the University of Dublin, and is a prominent figure in the debates of the House. In 1897 he was made Privy Councillor. He has contributed occasionally, but not frequently, to periodical literature; and since the division in the Liberal party, in 1886, he has been an active member of the Unionist party. He married, in 1871, Elizabeth, Baroness de Dedem. Addresses: 38 Onslow Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LECOCQ, Charles Alexandre, a celebrated French composer of popular operatic music, was born in Paris in 1832, and studied under Halévy, entering the Conservatoire in 1849, where he gained several prizes and became Professor of Music. His first operetta was produced in 1867 at the Bouffes Parisiens, and was entitled "Le Docteur Miracle." This was followed by "Le Myosotis," 1866; "Fleur de Thé," 1868; "Fille de Madame Angot," his most popular achievement, 1873, which ran 500 nights after having been coldly received on its first appearance. This work has been revived in France and in other parts of the world more frequently than any other of its class. This was followed by "Giroflé Girofla," 1874; "La Marjolaine," 1877; "Le Petit Duc," 1878; "Le Jour et la Nuit," 1882; "La Princesse des Canaries," 1883; "Plutus," 1885; "Les Grenadiers de Montcornette," 1887; "La Volière," 1888; "Ali-Baba," ballet at the now defunct Eden, 1889; and "L'Égyptienne," 1890. He has also written a number of melodies and chansonnettes under the title of "Miettes musicales." His most recent work has been "Ruse d'Amour," which was produced at the Bodinière in June 1897. He is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and his Paris address is 27 Rue du Mont Thabor.

LE CONTE, Joseph, M.D., LL.D., born in Liberty County, Georgia, Feb. 26, 1823, graduated at Franklin College in 1841, and the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1845, and practised his profession at Macon, Georgia. In 1850 he went to Cambridge, Massachusetts, where he studied under Agassiz. He subsequently held several professorships, and since 1869 has been Professor of Geology and Natural History in the University of California. He has published many essays on Education and the fine arts, and on philosophical subjects, a work on "The Mutual Relations of Religion and Science," 1874; "Elements of Geology," 1878; "Sight," 1881; "A Compend of Geology," 1884; and "Evolution and its Relation to Religious Thought," 1888. Among his strictly scientific publications are papers on "The Agency of the Gulf Stream in the Formation of the Peninsula of Florida," "On the Correlation of Vital Force with Chemical and Physical Forces," "On the Phenomena of Binocular Vision," "A Theory of the Formation of the Great Features of the Earth's Surface," "On some of the Ancient Glaciers of the Sierras," "On the Great Lava Flood of the North-west," "On the Structure and Age of the Cascade Mountains," "Critical Periods in the History of the Earth and their Relation to Evolution," "Genesis of Sex," "Psychical Relation of Man to Animals," "Structure and Origin of Mountains," "Genesis of Metalliferous Veins," "Interior Condition of the Earth," "Flora of the Coast Islands of California in relation to recent Changes in Physical Geography," "A Post-tertiary Elevation of Sierra Nevada, as shown in the River Beds," "Tertiary and Post-tertiary Changes on the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts," "The Mutual Relations of Land Elevation and Ice-accumulation during the Glacial Period," "Evolution and Human Progress," "The Relation of Philosophy to Psychology and to Physiology," "The Race Problem in the South from a Scientific Point of View," "Theory of the Origin of Mountains," Presidential Address before the Am. Assn. Adv. of Sci. (1893).

LEDOCHOWSKI, His Eminence Mieczslas, Cardinal of the Roman Church, Archbishop of Gnesen and Posen, and Primate of Poland, was born at Gork, of an illustrious Polish family, Oct. 29, 1822. He began his theological studies under the Lazarists in the College of St. John, Warsaw, and at the age of eighteen received the ecclesiastical tonsure and habit from the Bishop of Sandomir. After some studies at Vienna he proceeded to Rome, where he joined the "Academia Ecclesiastica," founded by Pius IX. to impart a special training to young ecclesiastics distinguished by their acquirements. His Holiness named Ledochowski Domestic Prelate and Protonotary Apostolic, and also sent him on a diplomatic mission to Madrid and as Auditor of the Nunciature to Lisbon, Rio de Janeiro, and Santiago de Chili. He was nominated Archbishop of Thebes, in partibus infidelium, on his appointment, Sept. 30, 1861, to the Nunciature of Brussels, where he remained four years. In January 1866 he was translated to the archbishopric of Gnesen and Posen, and as the occupant of that See he possesses the title of Primate of Poland. In consequence of his resistance to the laws enacted in Prussia against the Church, he was, in 1874, cast into prison, and he was actually incarcerated in the dungeons of Ostrowo when he was proclaimed a Cardinal by the Pope in a secret consistory held in Rome, March 15, 1875. He was released from captivity, Feb. 3, 1876. Being banished from his diocese, he proceeded to Rome, where he took possession of his "title," the church of Santa Maria in Araceli (May 11). He was cordially received by Pius IX., and lived in the Vatican, whence he continued administering the affairs of his diocese. Legal proceedings were several times taken against him by the Prussian Government, and at last he was condemned in default to seventy days' imprisonment and to the payment of a large fine for having excommunicated one of his lesser clergy. He was closely confined in the Vatican for fear of being handed over by the Italian to the Prussian Government, who, however, denied that they had asked for his extradition (1883). In 1884 the Pope appointed the cardinal Secretary of Memorials, which necessitated his living in Rome and resigning his archiepiscopal seat. This concession to the Prussian authorities put an end to the attacks on Cardinal Ledochowski, who in January 1892 was appointed Prefect of the Propaganda.

LEE, Fitzhugh, American soldier and statesman, was born at Clermont, Fairfax County, Virginia, Nov. 19, 1835. He is a nephew of the late General Robert E.

Lee. He graduated from the Military Academy at West Point in 1856. On the outbreak of the war between the States in 1861 he resigned from the United States Army, and entered the Confederate service. He became Lieutenant-Colonel of the First Virginia Cavalry and later was made Colonel and participated in all the campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia. In July 1862 he was made Brigadier-General, and in September 1863 Major-General. In March 1865 he was put in command of the whole cavalry corps of the Army of Northern Virginia, and a month later he was compelled to surrender to General Meade and retired to his home in Stafford County, Virginia. In 1885 he was elected Governor of Virginia, serving four years; in June 1896 he was appointed United States Consul-General to Cuba, which position he held until the opening of the war between the United States and Spain, when he returned home and was made a Major-General and given command of an army corps in the United States Army.

LEE, The Rev. Frederick George, D.D., born Jan. 6, 1832, at Thame Vicarage, Oxfordshire, is the eldest son of the late Rev. Frederick Lee, M.A., rector of Easington, in that county. He was educated at the Grammar School, Thame, and at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he graduated S.C.L., and became both a University and a College prizeman in 1854. His Newdigate Prize, "The Martyrs of Vienne and Lyons," has passed through five editions. He was afterwards a student of Cuddesdon Theological College, and was ordained deacon in 1854, and priest in 1856, by the Bishop of Oxford. He has been curate of Sunningwell, Berks, assistant-minister of Berkeley Chapel, and incumbent of St. Mary's, Aberdeen. He was created hon. D.D. of the Washington and Lee University at Lexington in Virginia in June 1879. At present he is vicar of All Saints', Lambeth. He was F.S.A. from 1857 to 1892. Dr. Lee founded and edited the Union Review from 1863 to 1869, and was hon. secretary of the Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom from 1857 to 1869. He was likewise one of the originators and officers of the Order of Corporate Reunion, established in 1877. This body, confined exclusively to members of the Church of England, has exercised considerable influence, acquired rather by construction than reform, and has at the same time successfully perpetuated the best traditions of the Oxford Tractarians. Its special organ, The Reunion Magazine (1877-79) embodies its fundamental principles, set forth very clearly. He is the author of "Poems," 2nd edit., 1855; "The Gospel Message," 1860; "The King's Highway, and other Poems," 2nd edit., 1872; "The Martyrs of Vienne and Lyons, an Oxford Prize Poem," 5th edit., 1894; "The Message of Reconciliation," 2nd edit., 1868; "Petronilla, and other Poems," 2nd edit., 1869; "The Beauty of Holiness," 4th edit., 1869; "Parochial and Occasional Sermons," 2nd edit., 1873; "Death, Judgment, Heaven and Hell," 3rd edit., 1870; "The Christian Doctrine of Prayer for the Departed," 2nd edit., 1875; "Memorials of the Rev. R. S. Hawker," 1876; "A Glossary of Liturgical and Ecclesiastical Terms," illustrated by A. W. Pugin, &c., 1877; "The Sinless Conception of the Mother of God, a Theological Essay," 1881; "A Manual of Politics," 1889; "The Validity of the Holy Orders of the Church of England Maintained and Vindicated," 1870; "The Bells of Botteville Tower," 1874; "The Words from the Cross," 3rd edit., 1880. As editor, Dr. Lee has issued two series of "Sermons," and one of "Essays on the Reunion of Christendom" (with a Prefatory Essay by Dr. E. B. Pusey), "Lyrics of Light and Life," 2nd edit., 1878. He wrote "Order out of Chaos," 1881; and has published "Altar Service Book of the Church of England," "The Book of Epistles," "The Book of Gospels," "Directorium Anglicanum," 4th edit. He has also written "Glimpses of the Supernatural," 2nd edit., 1877; "More Glimpses of the World Unseen," 1880; "Glimpses in the Twilight," 1885; and "Sights and Shadows; being Examples of the Supernatural," 1894. His work, "The History and Antiquities of the Prebendal Church of the B. V. Mary of Thame," an illustrated folio of considerable size, was published in 1883, and brought about the restoration of that church under Mr. J. Oldrid Scott. His studies in History, chiefly bearing on the Tudor changes in the sixteenth century, have resulted in the issue of "Historical Sketches of the Reformation," 1879; "The Church under Queen Elizabeth," 3rd edit., 1897; "Edward the Sixth, Supreme Head," 2nd edit., 1889; and "Cardinal Reginald Pole, Archbishop of Canterbury," 1888. In all of the above, numerous original MSS. have been largely made use of, and fresh light thrown upon past events. A metrical "Litany of the Faithful Departed," by Dr. Lee, approved for use by several Catholic dignitaries, used in various convents and religious communities, has had a very extended circulation in England, America, and Australia. Dr. Lee has likewise been a contributor to the Nineteenth Century, the Christian Remembrancer, the Contemporary Review, Archæologia of the Society of Antiquaries, the National Review, and other similar serials. Address: All Saints', Lambeth.

LEE, Rev. Richard, M.A., born Sept. 5, 1846, at Odogh, near Kilkenny, is the son of the late Rev. Richard Lee, B.A., Scholar of Trinity College, Dublin, and Curate of Odogh (died May 1850, aged 28). He was educated 1853-65 at Christ's Hospital; 1865-69 at Jesus College, Cambridge, of which College he was a Foundation and Rustat Scholar. He took the degree of B.A. in 1869; first (bracketed) of second class of Classical Tripos, and M.A. in 1872; and M.A. (ad eundem) Trinity College, Dublin, 1882. He was admitted to Holy Orders by the late Dr. Jackson, Bishop of London, in 1873, and ordained Priest in 1874. In 1873 he became Curate of Holy Trinity, Finchley; Lecturer in 1875 of St. Benet's, Paul's Wharf; and Curate of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, in the Diocese of London. He was appointed Assistant-Master in Christ's Hospital in 1871; and became Head-Master in 1876. Address: Christ's Hospital, E.C.

LEE, Sidney, editor of the "Dictionary of National Biography," and biographer of Shakespeare, born in London on Dec. 5, 1859, was educated at the City of London School. Proceeding to Balliol College at Michaelmas 1878, he obtained there an Exhibition in Modern History, and graduated B.A. with a second class in the Final School of Modern History at Midsummer 1882. From an early age, Mr. Lee interested himself in Elizabethan literature, and, while an undergraduate, he contributed to the Gentleman's Magazine two articles entitled respectively "The Original of Shylock," in February 1880, and "A New Study of Love's Labour's Lost," in October 1880. New facts were there brought together from an examination of State papers and contemporary literature, and new light was thrown on the circumstances under which two plays of Shakespeare were written. The papers attracted the favourable attention of Shakespearean scholars, and Mr. Lee's views on the questions at issue have been generally adopted by commentators. In 1882 Mr. Lee edited for the Early English Text Society a reprint of Lord Berners's early sixteenth-century translation of the French medieval romance of "Hauon de Burdeux." At the end of 1884 he published an original work entitled "Stratford-on-Avon from the Earliest Times to the Death of Shakespeare," which reached a new edition in 1890. In 1886 he edited, with many valuable additions, the autobiography of Lord Herbert of Cherbury; when in the summer of 1892 a bookseller who had purchased of the original publisher some unsold copies of this work tried to sell them in a garbled form as a new work by Mr. Lee, application was made for an injunction to the Court of Chancery, and although the application failed, Mr. Lee exposed the evil principle of the transaction in letters to the Athenæum, which were privately printed as a pamphlet, entitled "Lee versus Gibbings." Meanwhile, in March 1883, Mr. Lee had become sub-editor, under Mr. Leslie Stephen, of the "Dictionary of National Biography," the great storehouse of biography, projected in 1882 by Mr. George Smith (Smith, Elder & Co.). After taking a large share in the work of editing the undertaking for seven years, Mr. Lee was officially appointed, in the spring of 1890, joint-editor with Mr. Stephen, and a year later, on Mr. Stephen's retirement owing to ill-health, he became sole editor. Thirty volumes have been issued at quarterly intervals under his sole supervision. In June 1894 Mr. Lee presided at a public dinner given by the contributors to Mr. George Smith, the proprietor of the "Dictionary," and on 8th July 1897 he was the principal guest at a public banquet which was given by the publisher to the editor and contributors, and was attended by many eminent persons. In January 1896 he gave at the Royal Institution a Friday evening discourse on "National Biography," which was printed in the Cornhill Magazine for March and circulated privately in pamphlet form. Besides fulfilling very actively his part as editor of the "Dictionary," Mr. Lee has been a voluminous contributor, and nearly 800 articles are from his pen. Each of the later volumes of the "Dictionary" contain memoirs by him of the first importance, chiefly on Elizabethan authors or statesmen. His chief contribution is the elaborate life of Shakespeare in the fifty-first volume, published in June 1897, which was welcomed as the first endeavour to state clearly, and co-ordinate coherently, all the varied facts about the great dramatist's career and works which antiquaries had accumulated during the past two centuries. Mr. Lee has since gone further in his efforts as a succinct, yet coherent, biographer of Shakespeare, and has based on his article in the "Dictionary" a full and elaborate biography of the poet, containing many newly-discovered facts. This book was published in an independent volume in this country and in America, and is likely to rank as the standard work on the subject. The Academy crowned it in January 1899 as one of the three best books of 1898. Address: 108 Lexham Gardens, Kensington, W.

LEE, Vernon. See PAGET, VIOLET.

LEEDS, Duke of, George Godolphin Osborne, late Treasurer of the Household, was born on Sept. 18, 1862, and is the second son of the 9th Duke and Fanny, second daughter of the 4th Baron Rivers. He succeeded to the title in 1895, having been, as Marquis of Carmarthen, Conservative member for the Brixton Division of Lambeth from 1883 to 1895, and Assistant Secretary to the Colonial Secretary from 1887 to 1888. He was Treasurer of the Household from 1895 to 1896. He was at one time a Lieutenant in the Yorkshire Hussar Yeomanry Cavalry. He is a Prince of the Holy Roman Empire, a descendant of Charles II.'s famous minister, and of Sir Edward Osborne, Lord Mayor of London in 1582, who, as legend has it, rose to prosperity through jumping from his master's house on old London Bridge to save his master's daughter from drowning in the rapids between the arches beneath. He married, in 1884, Katherine, daughter of the 2nd Earl of Durham. His heir is Lieut. Lord Francis Osborne, R.N., born in 1864. Addresses: 11 Grosvenor Crescent, S.W.; and Hornby Castle, Bedale, Yorkshire.

LEES, The Very Rev. James Cameron, D.D., LL.D., Dean of the Order of the Thistle and of the Chapel Royal of Scotland, and Chaplain to the Queen, was born in London on July 24, 1834, and is the eldest son of the Rev. John Lees, A.M., Minister of Stornoway. He was educated in London, and at the Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen. He was minister of Carmock, Ross, from 1856 to 1859, of the Abbey of Paisley from 1859 to 1877, and has been minister of St. Giles' Cathedral, Edinburgh, since the latter year. He was appointed Dean of the Order of the Thistle and of the Chapel Royal of Scotland in 1886. He has published histories of the Abbey of Paisley (1878), of St. Giles, Edinburgh (1889), and of the County of Inverness (1897), besides other works. Address: 33 Blacket Place, Edinburgh.

LEESE, Sir Joseph Francis, Q.C., M.P., is the second son of Joseph Leese, of Manchester, and was born in 1845. He was educated privately, and at Cambridge, and is a B.A. of the London University. Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1868, he practised on the Northern Circuit, was appointed a Q.C. in 1891, and became Recorder of Manchester in 1893. He has been a Liberal member of the House of Commons since 1892, representing the Accrington Division of Lancashire. He was knighted in 1895, and is married to Mary, daughter of William Hargreaves. Addresses: 2 King's Bench Walk, Temple, E.C.; and 80 Queen Anne's Mansions, S.W.

LEFEBVRE, Jules Joseph, a French painter, born at Tournan in 1836, was a pupil of Léon Cogniet. He gained the Grand Prix de Rome in 1861 for "The Death of Priam," and in 1870 exhibited at the Salon "Truth," which is now hanging in the Luxembourg at Paris. These were followed, amongst others, by "The Grasshopper," 1872; a portrait of "The Prince Imperial," 1874; "Mary Magdalene," 1876; "Pandora," 1877; a portrait of "M. Poppel," 1880; "Fiametta," and "Ondine," 1881; "La Fiancée," 1882; "Morning Glory," 1887; "Lady Godiva," one of his most elaborate works; and "Une Fille d'Eve," 1892. M. Lefebvre has obtained three medals (in 1865, 1868, and 1870), and a first-class medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, and a Grand Prize in 1889. He was decorated with the insignia of the Legion of Honour in 1870, and made an officer in 1878. He was elected a member of the Academy of Fine Arts in November 1891. He is one of the leading painters of his school and style, an excellent example of which is the beautiful "Psyche," at one time exhibited in London, and engraved by François. His Paris address is 5 Rue La Bruyère.

LEFEVRE, The Right Hon. George John Shaw. See SHAW-LEFEVRE.

LEFROY, The Right Rev. George Alfred, M.A., was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a first class in the Theological Tripos in 1878, graduating B.A. in the same year. He was ordained in 1879, and forthwith went out to India to superintend the Mission at Delhi on behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and of the Cambridge University Missions. He was appointed Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Lahore in 1885, and in February 1899 he was consecrated Bishop of Lahore.

LEFROY, The Very Rev. William, D.D., Dean of Norwich, was born in Dublin in 1836, and is the eldest son of Isaac Lefroy and Isabella his wife. He was educated at St. Michael-le-Pole School, Dublin, and under a private tutor. He graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, as B.A., M.A., B.D., and D.D. The Dean as a young man was a journalist, but took orders and became curate of Christ Church, Cork, in 1864. In 1866, on the advice of the late Dr. Magee, he accepted the incumbency of St. Andrew's, Liverpool. During this period of his life he busied himself in training young men for the Church. He has been a prominent church-builder, having raised large sums of money for that as well as other church purposes. He has built several churches in Liverpool and in the Alps, and makes a yearly stay for climbing purposes at the Riffel Alp, where is a church of his founding. In co-operation with the late John Torr, M.P., he was instrumental in founding the Bishopric of Liverpool. He was Donnellan Lecturer at the University of Dublin in 1888; Hon. Canon of Liverpool, 1880; Proctor for Liverpool Archdeaconry, 1887-89; Rural Dean of Liverpool (South), 1884-87; Archdeacon, 1887-89; and was appointed Dean of Norwich in 1889. He is well known as a lover of music, and has, since 1892, raised a large fund for the restoration of his cathedral. The Clergy Sustentation Fund is held to have been originated by Dean Lefroy. His writings include, besides books on Norwich Cathedral and on the Christian Life, "A Plea for the Old Catholic Movement," 1875, and Lectures on Ecclesiastical History. He married (2) Mary, second daughter of the late Charles MacIver, of Calderstone, Liverpool, and Roxanstones, Malta. Address: The Deanery, Norwich.

LE GALLIENNE, Richard, poet, man of letters, and journalist, was born in Liverpool on Jan. 20, 1866. His family came originally from Guernsey, but his father had for some time been settled in England. He was educated at Liverpool College, and at the age of sixteen entered the office of a chartered accountant. Here he privately printed his first volume of poetry, "My Ladies' Sonnets" (1887). In February 1889 he became literary secretary to Mr. Wilson Barrett, and stayed with him some months, though ill-health prevented him accompanying Mr. Barrett to America. In 1889 he returned to Liverpool, and in Feb. 1891 joined the Star in London, becoming literary critic to that journal, and writing thenceforth a series of cultivated and kindly appreciations of contemporary literature over the signature "Logroller." Shortly after becoming critic to the Star he joined the staff of the Daily Chronicle and of the Speaker. Mr. Le Gallienne is the author of the following volumes of prose and verse: "My Ladies' Sonnets," 1887; "Volumes in Folio," "The Book Bills of Narcissus," and "George Meredith: some Characteristics," 1889; "English Poems," 1892; "The Religion of a Literary Man," 1893; "Prose Fancies," 1894; "Robert Louis Stevenson, an Elegy and Other Poems," 1895; "Retrospective Reviews," 1896; "Prose Fancies," second series, 1896; "The Quest of the Golden Girl," 1897; "If I were God: a Conversation," 1897; "Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, a Paraphrase," 1897; "The Romance of Zion Chapel," 1898; and "Young Lives," 1899. He has contributed to "The Book of the Rhymers' Club," 1892 and 1894, and to the Nineteenth Century, the New Review, and other leading magazines and weekly journals. In February 1893 he engaged in a newspaper controversy with Mr. Robert Buchanan on the question "Is Christianity played out?" which led to the publication of the "Religion of a Literary Man." He has delivered lectures at South Place Chapel and elsewhere on such subjects as "The Influence of the Press upon Society," "The Nonconformist Conscience," "The Revolt of the Daughters," and "The World, the Flesh, and the Puritan." Mr. Le Gallienne married, on Oct. 22, 1891, Mildred, daughter of Alfred Lee, of Liverpool. She died on May 21, 1894, their child, Hesper, having been born on Dec. 6, 1893. On Feb. 12, 1897, Mr. Le Gallienne married Julie Norregard, a Danish literary woman resident in London. Mrs. Le Gallienne is the London correspondent of "The Politiken," Copenhagen, writing under the name of "Eva," a pseudonym by which she is well known in her own country. Mr. and Mrs. Le Gallienne paid a visit to America during the spring of 1898, Mr. Le Gallienne lecturing and reading from his own writings. Address: Moorcroft, Hindhead, Haslemere.

LEGGE, Hon. and Right Rev. Augustus, Bishop of Lichfield, was born in 1839, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a second class in Law and History in 1861, and at Lichfield College, B.A. 1861, M.A. 1864, D.D. 1891. He is the sixth son of the 4th Earl of Dartmouth and of Frances, daughter of the 5th Viscount Barrington. Ordained in 1864, he was Curate of Handsworth in Staffordshire from that year till 1866, Curate of St. Michael's, Bryanston Square, from 1866 to 1867, Vicar of St. Bartholomew's, Sydenham, from 1867 to 1879, and Vicar of Lewisham from 1879 to 1891, when he was promoted to the See of Lichfield. He was Rural Dean of Greenwich from 1882 to 1886, and of Lewisham between 1886-91, and Proctor of the Diocese of Rochester between 1885-91. In June 1891 he succeeded Dr. MacLagan as Bishop of Lichfield. In 1891 he published "In Covenant with God." In 1877 he married Fanny, second daughter of the late W. B. Stophord, Drayton House, Thrapston. Permanent addresses: The Palace, Lichfield; Club, Athenæum.

LEGOUVÉ, Ernest Wilfred, a French dramatist, the son of Gabriel Legouvé, author of "Mérites des Femmes," was born in Paris, Feb. 14, 1807. At an early age he wrote novels, plays, and poems, and his lectures on "L'Histoire Morale des Femmes" were published in 1848. In 1849, in conjunction with Scribe, he produced "Adrienne Lecouvreur," which gained great popularity through the personation of the heroine by Rachel. She, however, paid a fine of 5000 francs rather than perform in his "Médée," a play which in Montanelli's Italian version was in 1856 very successful with Ristori. In 1856 he succeeded Ancelot as a member of the Academy. Among his works are "Beatrice," 1861; "La Croix d'Honneur et les Comédiens," 1863; "Miss Suzanne," 1867; "Messieurs les Enfants," 1868; "La Bataille de Dames," 1873; "Études et Souvenirs de Théâtre," 1880; "Le Mérite des Femmes," 1882; "La Lecture en Action," 1883; "Une Éducation de Jeune Fille," 1884; "Soixante Ans de Souvenirs," 2 vols., 1886-87; "Fleurs d'Hiver," &c., and "Une Élève de Seize Ans," 1890. His collected plays were published in three volumes in 1887-90. He rose to the rank of Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1887, and has since been promoted a Grand Officer. He is by far the oldest member of the Academy, and may be styled the Grand Old Man of French Drama. His Paris address is 14 Rue St. Marc.

LEHMANN, Rudolf, artist, was born Aug. 19, 1819, at Ottensen, near Hamburg, and educated at Hamburg. His art education he received in Paris, Munich, and Rome, where he afterwards resided for some time, and where his studio was much frequented. He has lived in London since 1866. He obtained three Gold Medals at three Paris Exhibitions, and was created a Knight of the Order of the Falcon by the Grand-Duke of Saxe-Weimar. His portrait, painted by himself at the request of the Director of Public Galleries in Florence, is placed in the Galleria degli Uffizi of that city, in the room set apart for portraits of distinguished artists painted by themselves. M. Lehmann's chief pictures are "Sixtus V. Blessing the Pontine Marshes," bought by the French Government for the Museum at Lille (this is his largest work); a "Madonna," and a "St. Sebastian," ordered by the French Government for two churches in France; "Graziella," from Lamartine's "Confidences"; "Early Dawn in the Pontine Marshes"; numerous pictures of modern life and costume in Italy; numerous portraits of distinguished persons in England, amongst whom are the late Duchess of Northumberland, Countess Percy, Duke and Duchess of Leinster, Earl and Countess Stair, Countess of Clanwilliam, Countess Radnor, Lady Enfield (Countess Strafford), the Rt. Hon. Mr. and Mrs. Goschen, Earl and Countess Beauchamp, Lord Houghton, Lord Revelstoke, Viscount Galway, Helen Faucit (Lady Martin), Lady Herschell, Lord and Lady Herries, Lady Elizabeth Bultiel, Sir William and Lady Priestley, Sir William Fergusson, Sir Spencer Wells, Sir Andrew Clarke, Sir Henry Bessemer, Sir William Siemens, Emily Davies, James Payn, Wilkie Collins, Baron and Baroness Reuter, Mr. T. J. Morgan, Sir Charles and Lady Trevelyan, Dr. Collingwood Bruce, Hon. Mrs. Pitt-Rivers, Mr. Browning, the Earl of Clanwilliam, Admiral of the Fleet (1899), &c.; and a collection of pencil sketches, portraits of distinguished contemporaries, with their autographs, over one hundred in number. He has published his reminiscences, and more recently a reproduction in album form of his collection of pencil drawings of contemporary celebrities, under the title "Men and Women of the Century" (George Bell & Sons). He married a daughter of Robert Chambers in 1861. Of his four daughters the eldest, Liza, is well known in the musical world through her singing and her compositions. She is married to Mr. Bedford. The second one married Mr. Heron Allen, the translator of Omar Khayyam; and the third, Mrs. Barry Pain, has recently published a successful novel, "St. Eva." Address: 28 Abercorn Place, N.W.

LE HUNTE, George Ruthven, C.M.G., Lieut.-Governor of British New Guinea in succession to Sir William Macgregor (q.v.), August 1898. He was born in 1853, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1881. In 1875 he was appointed Private Secretary to the Governor of Fiji, and after filling other offices became Acting Colonial Secretary in 1880. He was Judicial Commissioner to the West Pacific Islands in 1883, and in 1894 became Colonial Secretary in Barbadoes, whence he was promoted to Mauritius in 1897.

LEICESTER, Earl of, Thomas William Coke, K.G., D.L., J.P., was born at Holkham on Dec. 26, 1822, and succeeded his father as 2nd Earl in 1842. He was educated at Eton. He has been Lord-Lieutenant of Norfolk since 1846, and he was in 1870 appointed Keeper of the Privy Seal to the Prince of Wales, K.G. He was married in 1875 to Georgiana Caroline Cavendish, daughter of the 2nd Lord Chesham (his second wife). Address: Holkham Hall, Wells, Norfolk.

LEIGH, The Rev. Augustus Austen, M.A., Provost of King's College, Cambridge, was born, July 17, 1840, at Scarlets in Berkshire, and is the son of the Rev. J. E. Austen-Leigh. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which latter College he was Scholar, Fellow, and, from 1868 to 1881, Tutor. He has been Provost of the College since 1889; and was Vice-Chancellor of the University, 1893-95. He is a member of Council of Senate and of the governing bodies of Eton and Winchester, and President of the Cambridge University Cricket Club. He married, in 1889, Florence Emma Lefroy, great-niece of Sir John Franklin. Address: The Lodge, King's College, Cambridge.

LEIGH, The Hon. and Very Rev. James Wentworth, D.D., third son of the late Lord Leigh, was born in Paris on Jan. 21, 1838, and was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was ordained Deacon in 1862, and Priest in 1863, by the Bishop of Worcester. He began his clerical work as Curate of Bromsgrove, and then became Vicar of the agricultural village of Stoneleigh, where he remained for nine years. In 1872 he took an active part in the labourers' agitation, started by Joseph Arch in Warwickshire; in the same year he also resigned his living, and went to reside in America, where he worked among the negroes on Butler's Island, had a church built for them, and was publicly thanked by the Bishop of Georgia for the interest he had taken in their spiritual welfare. Returning to England in 1877, he was for a time in charge of St. James', Stratford-on-Avon, but in the same year he was appointed to the important living of Leamington. In 1879 he was made an Hon. Canon of Worcester, and during his stay in Leamington was Chaplain of the South Warwickshire Hospital, Chairman of the Warwick Board of Guardians, and Chairman of the first Leamington School Board. Canon Leigh was in 1883 appointed Rector of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, where he remained until 1894, when he was preferred by Lord Rosebery to the Deanery of Hereford. He has taken an active part in questions of social reform; introduced the boarding-out of pauper children in the Warwick Union thirty years ago; and has published papers and pamphlets on various temperance and social subjects. In fact, the Dean is known throughout the land as a leader of the Temperance Reform Movement, and at the Shrewsbury Church Congress he read a paper on the duty of the Church towards the liquor traffic. He is married to Frances, daughter of Pierce Butler, Georgia, U.S.A., and Frances A. Kemble. Address: Deanery, Hereford.

LEIGH, Lord, The Right Hon. William Henry, LL.D., J.P., was born at Addlestrop House on Jan. 17, 1824, and succeeded his father as 2nd Baron in 1850. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He has been Lord-Lieutenant of Warwickshire since 1856, acted as High Steward of Sutton Coldfield from 1859 to 1882, and is a Governor and Trustee of Rugby School. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1895. Lord Leigh was married, in 1848, to Lady Caroline Amelia Grosvenor, daughter of the 2nd Marquis of Westminster, K.G. Address: Stoneleigh Abbey, Kenilworth.

LEIGHTON, John, F.S.A., artist, descended from the Leightons of Ulysses-haven, Forfarshire, was born in St. James's, Westminster, Sept. 15, 1822, became a pupil of Mr. Howard, R.A., and was one of the pioneers of industrial and technical art education, aiding by example the formation of the Department of Science and Art, by the foundation of the "Suburban Artisan Schools," of which the Prince Consort was the Patron. His first published work, a series of outlines, came out in 1844, but he had previously contributed to cartoon exhibitions. In 1848-50 he published several serio-comic brochures, satires on art principles (then little appreciated), under the name of "Luke Limner." In 1851 Mr. Leighton aided Owen Jones in arranging the first International Exhibition, about the same time publishing a series of twenty-four outlines, entitled "Money," and at the same time a book, "Suggestions in Design," which was greatly enlarged in 1881, and was the first ever issued in all styles. With Rossetti and several members of the advanced school, he promoted a free exhibition of pictures, and with Roger Fenton founded the Photographic Society, of which the President of the Royal Academy was the first Chairman. He was a member of the Copyright Committee of the Society of Arts that met in 1858-59 and codified the law as it now stands, and has since been at the International Copyright Congresses, at Antwerp, 1877, and Paris, 1878, under the chairmanship of M. Meissonnier. Mr. Leighton has had great bibliographical and typographical experience. He has lectured on "Libraries and Books," "Oriental Art," and "Binocular Perspective"; the "Advantages of a System of a Postal Ballot," and "Pictorial Advertising, its Use and Abuse"; and has also travelled in Russia, Caucasasia, and Georgia, for the purpose of studying the Byzantine art of the Greek Church. In 1869 it was at Mr. Leighton's suggestion that Earl Sydney, the Lord Chamberlain, modified the Court costume at St. James's, making it more dignified than of yore. He has illustrated "Moral Emblems," "Lyra Germanica," "The Life of Man Symbolised," and "Madre Natura." In 1871 he edited, with illustrations, "Paris under the Commune." He is one of the original proprietors of the Graphic, and a founder of the Ex-Libris Society, and a Vice-President. Mr. Leighton served on the Commissions of the Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862, also in Paris, 1855 and 1867, and Philadelphia, 1867, and was a Juror in Paris in 1878, where he first exhibited his scheme for the "Unification of London," preserving the City, the map now being in Spring Gardens. Mr. Leighton is also a herald, and it was at his suggestion that Wales desired to adopt an emblem for the Principality on the Royal Standard, and the Cross of St. David on the Union Jack, a plea for which he put forth in his "Book-Plate Annual." He has three times contested the Borough of North St. Pancras in the Liberal Unionist interest, and once retired when an Unionist was returned. Mr. Leighton is a life member of the Society of Antiquaries, the Society of Arts, the Royal Institute, the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, the London Archaeological Society, the Zoological Society, the Corporation of the Artists and Literary Fund, the Ex-Libris, and many other kindred associations. He has recently published an important little work on a large subject, "The Unification of London: the Need and the Remedy" (with maps and plans). Address: Ormonde, Regent's Park, N.W.

LEIGHTON, Mrs. Marie Connor, novelist and critic, is the daughter of the late Captain James Nenon Connor, 87th Royal Irish Fusiliers, and was born in Clifton in 1869. She began to devote herself to literary work at a very early age, and was educated mainly at Marquise, Pas de Calais, France. At the age of fifteen she wrote and published "Beauty's Queen," a three-volume novel, which was followed by "A Morganatic Marriage" in 1885; and "The Heart's Awakening." 1893. In 1889 she married Robert Leighton, with whom in 1891 she joined the literary staff of the Messrs. Harmsworth, and has written for Answers and others of the Harmsworth journals some thirty serial novels, including "Convict 99," "In the Shadow of Guilt," "Michael Dred" (these three done in collaboration with her husband), and "The Harvest of Sin." Since 1896 Mrs. Leighton has been on the literary staff of the Daily Mail, while she is a prominent member of the Pioneer Club, and takes an active interest in all branches of women's work. Address: Vallombrosa, Abbey Road, N.W.

LEIGHTON, Robert, author, editor, and critic, was born in Ayr, Scotland, June 5, 1858, being the eldest son of the late Robert Leighton, Scotch poet, and his wife, Elizabeth Campbell. He was educated in Liverpool, and at the age of fourteen entered the office of the Liverpool Porcupine under the late Hugh Shimmmin. Coming to London in 1879, he was appointed editor of Young Folks, in which he wrote many stories and articles for young readers; in 1886 he became editor of the Bristol Observer, occupying this position for a year. He was married, in 1889, to Marie Connor, and in collaboration with her wrote "Convict 99," "Michael Dred, Detective," "In the Shadow of Guilt," and other stories which appeared serially in Answers and others of the Harmsworth periodicals. He was a Director of Answers, Limited, from 1893 to 1896, and has been literary editor of the Daily Mail since the appearance of its first number in May 1896. He has published the following books for the young: "The Pilots of Pomona," 1892; "The Thirsty Sword," 1893; "In the Grip of the Algerine," 1893; "The Wreck of the Golden Fleece," 1894; "Olaf the Glorious," 1895; "Under the Foeman's Flag," 1896; "The Golden Galleon," 1897; "The Splendid Stranger," 1898. Address: Vallombrosa, Abbey Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

LEISHMAN, The Rev. Thomas, D.D., was born on May 7, 1825, and is the eldest son of the Rev. Matthew Leishman, D.D., Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1858. He was educated at Glasgow High School and at the University, where he graduated M.A. Since 1855 he has been minister of Linton, Roxburghshire. From 1894 to 1895 he was President of the Scottish Church Society, and in 1895-96 and 1896-97 was General Assembly's Lecturer on Pastoral Theology in Scottish Universities. He was Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland for 1898. He has, in collaboration with others, edited "The Book of Common Order and Westminster Directory," 1868; "May the Kirk keep Pasche and Yule?" 1875; and "The Ritual of the Church of Scotland," 1891.

He married, in 1857, Christina B. Fleming, who died in 1868. Address: Linton Manse, by Kelso.

LE JEUNE, Henry, A.R.A., of Flemish extraction, was born on Dec. 12, 1819. In early life he was sent to study at the British Museum, and in 1841 obtained the Gold Medal of the Royal Academy, for a picture of "Samson Bursting his Bonds." He was Head-master of the Government School of Design from 1845 to 1848, when he became Curator of the Painting School at the Royal Academy; from which post he retired in 1864. He has been a frequent exhibitor since 1841; was chosen an A.R.A. in 1863, and retired in 1886. His last exhibited picture is "Idleness," 1894. He married in 1844. Address: 155 Goldhurst Terrace, Hampstead, N.W.

LELAND, Charles Godfrey, Hon. F.R.L.S., M.A. Harvard, Fellow of the American Philosophical Society, American author, eldest son of Charles Leland, merchant, was born at Philadelphia, Aug. 15, 1824. He graduated at Princeton College in 1846, and subsequently studied at the Universities of Heidelberg and Munich, and in Paris. He was admitted to the Bar in 1851, but soon relinquished law for literature, and contributed largely to periodicals. For several years he resided at New York, and edited the Illustrated News, but returned to Philadelphia in 1885, and for three years was connected with the Evening Bulletin. In the early part of the Civil War he established at Boston the Continental Magazine. On the conclusion of the war he travelled through a portion of the Southern States, in connection with real estate business. He was for a short time a soldier, and at the battle of Gettysburg in 1864. Later he became editor of the Philadelphia Press. In 1869 he went abroad, and remained, chiefly in London, until 1880. On his return to America he introduced, and for a number of years supervised, a system of industrial-art education in the public schools of Philadelphia. Mr. Leland has taken part in and read papers before the Social Science Congresses of Great Britain, the British Philological Society, and the Oriental Congresses of Florence, Vienna, Stockholm, and London. He co-operated with Mrs. R. Jebb in founding the Home Arts and Industries Association of Great Britain, originated the Rabelais Club of London, and has been from the first the President of the Gypsy Lore Society of Great Britain and Hungary. It was at his instance that the Folk-Lore Societies of Hungary and Italy were established, and he was one of the first institutors and Hon.

President of the first European Folk-Lore Congress, Paris, 1889, where he was deputed to organise and direct the Second Congress, held in London in 1891. He was Hon. and Vice-President at the establishment of the Italian Folk-Lore Society in 1893. His works, many of which are of a humorous or burlesque character, include "The Poetry and Mystery of Dreams," and "Meister Karl's Sketch-Book," 1855; "Pictures of Travel," a translation of Heine's "Reisebilder," 1856; "Sunshine in Thought," 1862; "Legends of Birds," 1864; "Hans Breitmann's Ballads," 1867-70; "The Music Lessons of Confucius, and other Poems," 1870; "Gaudemus," a translation of the humorous poems of Scheffel, 1871; "Egyptian Sketch-Book," and "The English Gypsies and their Language," 1873; "Fu-Sang, or the Discovery of America by Chinese Buddhist Priests in the Fifth Century," and "English Gipsy Songs," 1875; "Johnnykin and the Goblins," and "Pidgin-English Sing-Song," 1876; "Abraham Lincoln," 1879; "The Minor Arts," 1880; "The Gipsies," 1882; "The Algonquin Legends of New England," 1884; "Twelve Art-Work Manuals," 1885; "Gipsy Sorcery and Fortune-Telling," "Practical Education," "Brand New Ballads," "Manual of Design," "Manual of Wood-Carving," "Metal Work," "Etruscan-Roman Remains in Popular Tradition," 1892; "The Book of One Hundred Riddles," 1892; "The Book of Copperheads," 1863; "Memoirs," 1893; "Dictionary of English Slang," (with A. Barrère, 2 vols., 1889; "The Art of Conversation," 1863; "Snooping," 1888; "France, Alsace, and Lorraine," 1870; "Centralisation versus State Rights," 1868; "Three Thousand Miles in a Railway Car," 1868; and "Industrial Art Education," 1882. Also, "Mending and Repairing," 1896; "Legends of Florence, as Told by the People," 2 vols., 1896; and a translation of all the works of Heinrich Heine. His projected or most recently published works are "Have You a Strong Will?" (1898), "One Hundred Acts" (1897), "The Simplest Musical Instruments," "Wayside Wanderers," "Songs of Sorcery and Witchcraft," the third series of the "Florentine Legends," "Aradia, or the Gospel of the Italian Wizards," "Unpublished Legends of Virgil gathered in Tuscany," "Tales and Traditions of Tuscany," "Proverbial Tales," and in French "La Lutin du Château." Among his officially-published works are the papers in English, German, French, and Italian, read at different Congresses. He was on the staff of Appleton's Cyclopædia, to which he contributed 200 articles, and was subsequently the European editor or agent for Johnson's Cyclopædia. In a series of articles recently published, J. R. Gilmore, author of "Among the Pines," and formerly an editor of the New York Tribune, attributes entirely to Mr. Leland the so-called "Emancipation movement," during the Civil War, by means of which the Union men, who were still opposed to the Abolitionists, were reconciled to freeing the slaves, and he adduces the highest authority to prove that this emancipation policy, as conducted by Leland in the Continental, induced Abraham Lincoln to advance the emancipation by many months, a movement which, it is now generally conceded, perhaps saved the Union by greatly abridging the war. Even Lincoln and all his Cabinet deemed the act premature. He has of late lived chiefly in Italy. Address: Messrs. Baring Brothers and Co., 8 Bishopsgate Within, E.C.

LEMAIRE, Mme. Jeanne Madeleine, née Coll, French artist, born in 1850, at St. Rossoline, near Cannes, was brought up by her aunt, Mme. Herbelin. She from her earliest years imbibed a love of art from that eminent miniaturist. There was never any doubt as to what the pursuit of her life would be. As soon as the little girl could move about, a pencil was her greatest joy, so that even at the age of five or six the childish mind dictated attempts in imitative art. It is unfortunately but too seldom that the first efforts of those who afterwards become eminent in their profession are preserved, and we are not aware that any of Mme. Lemaire's juvenile artistic productions are in existence. Those, however, having charge of the child were, luckily, most careful not to neglect any evidence of unusual talent, so that at the age of nine the child was placed with a Mme. Cavé to learn drawing, this being followed by four years' instruction at M. Chaplin's school. In 1865, and when but fifteen years of age, the artist exhibited her first picture at the Salon—a portrait in oils of her grandmother—the talent in which was so fully recognised by the judges, that it was only the extreme youth of the artist that prevented a prize being adjudged for the work. Then followed a succession of pictures at the Salon—most of them being in oils—"A Columbine," an exceedingly clever work that was greatly admired, and one that at once foreshadowed the artist's future fame; "Diana Vernon," and another fancy figure in "Corinne," showed a sense of beauty of form and colour that fairly took the public by surprise. Rapidly developing into a facile and productive painter, the artist's works became as numerous as they were diversified in manner. Season after season her works were to be seen at the exhibitions of the Société d'Aquarellistes Français, of which she was a member, her subjects embracing flowers, genre, and portraits. Mme. Lemaire also engaged somewhat extensively in book illustration, producing a series of forty water-colour drawings for the édition de luxe of "L'Abbé Constantin," by Ludovic Halévy, and a large number for the novel "Flirt," by Paul Hervieu. In 1890 the artist had two oil paintings—"Ophelia" and "Sommeil,"—at the exhibition of the Société Nationale des Beaux Arts, in the Champ de Mars. In 1891 she exhibited "Five," and, in 1892, "Le Char des Fées," &c. In addition to all this, Mme. Lemaire has entered the field as a pastellist, for which branch of art French painters are noted. She is a member of the Société des Pastellistes Français, and a series of her drawings were at one time on view at the Goupil Gallery. Her Paris address is 31 Rue de Monceau.

LEMAÎTRE, François Élie Jules, French poet and critic, was born at Vennecy, April 27, 1853, and began his education at the seminary of the Chapelle St. Mesmin, near Orleans. He entered the École Normale in 1872, and became an assistant-master at the Lycée of Havre in 1875. In 1880 he passed to Algiers, then to Besançon; but in 1884 he deserted the ill-paid paths of professional work, to devote himself entirely to literature. He became the editor of the Revue Bleue, in which several of his articles attracted much attention, especially one on Flaubert. But it is above all as a dramatic critic that he has earned his European reputation. Succeeding Weiss on the Journal des Débats in 1886, he has since then given to the world a weekly article on the drama that may be said to have revolutionised the methods of criticism; and, at any rate, to have created a new school of dramatic critics in England, of whom Mr. A. B. Walkley is the chief representative. He was elected to the Academy in 1895 in succession to Duruy. His first work of any size was "Les Contemporains," 1886-89, of which the studies on Zola, Ohnet, and Victor Hugo created a great impression. His dramatic criticisms have been collected into volumes entitled "Impressions du Théâtre," of which the tenth volume was published in July 1898. Although a critic of peculiarly sarcastic power, he has been unable to keep from writing plays himself. His first was "Révoltée," which was played at the Odéon in 1889. This was followed by "Le Député Leveau" (1890), and by "Le Mariage Blanc," which was played at the Théâtre Français in 1891; as have been "L'Âge Difficile" and "Le Pardon." His plays are noted for their advanced views, and are appreciated best by intellectual audiences. He now writes for the Revue des Deux Mondes, and his work has become less impressionist and more good-humoured. As a playwright he deals very severely with his own class. He is an officer of the Legion of Honour. His Paris address is: 39 Rue d'Artois.

LE MARCHANT, Francis Charles, was born in 1844, and educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a first in Lit. Hum. 1866. He proceeded to India as a member of the Civil Service; and in 1896 was appointed a member of the Council of the Secretary of State.

LEMONNIER, Antoine Louis Camille, Belgian critic and novelist, was born at Ixelles, near Brussels, March 24, 1835. He first attracted public attention by his criticisms on the salons of Brussels in 1863-66. In 1887 he obtained the quinquennial Grand Prize given by the Belgian Government for a standard work of art by his "La Belgique." M. Lemonnier is, however, best known as a novelist of the naturalistic school, affecting crudity and brutality in his methods. His chief works are "Contes Flamands et Wallons," 1873; "Les Charniers," 1881; "Un Mâle," 1881; "Les Concubins," 1885; and "Madame Lupanar," 1886. In 1889 his novel in the Gil Blas, entitled "L'Enfant du Crapaud," was stopped by the authorities, and he had to pay a fine of £40. He is a frequent contributor to the Figaro, Le Journal, L'Echo de Paris, and other French papers.

LENBACH, Franz, a distinguished German portrait-painter, was born at Schrobenehausen in Bavaria, Dec. 13, 1836. He at first followed the trade of his father, a master-mason, but on his father's death in 1856 he entered the Munich Academy to study painting, and afterwards was a pupil of Grüffe and Piloty. He first confined himself to genre painting, and his "Peasant Family in a Storm" excited much interest. In 1858 he went with Piloty to Rome, and there painted a picture of the Forum, which by its realism and colour created a great sensation in Munich. He then turned to portrait-painting, taking the old masters, especially Rembrandt, as his models. In 1860 he received an appointment at the School of Art at Weimar, but left it soon in order to pursue further studies in Rome. In 1867 he exhibited a masterly portrait of the artist, Von Hagn; and after further travels in Italy and Spain, he returned to Munich, and soon became renowned for his portraits. Commissions came to him from all parts, and for two years he worked in Vienna, but in 1874 settled again in Munich, where, when not travelling in Greece and Egypt, he has since resided. He is an honorary Professor at the Munich Academy. Amongst his most celebrated pictures are portraits of Paul Heyse, Frans Lachner, Moltke, Bismarck, Dr. Döllinger, Wagner, Liszt, the late King of Bavaria, Gladstone, the Emperor Francis Joseph, and William I. of Germany.

LENG, Sir John, D.L., J.P., Senior Member of Parliament for the city of Dundee, was born in Hull on April 10, 1828. He is the second son of the late Mr. Adam Leng, by Mary, daughter of Mr. Christopher Luccock, land surveyor, Malton, Yorkshire, and is the younger brother of Sir William Christopher Leng, of Sheffield. Sir John was educated at the Hull Grammar School under the Head-mastership of Mr. J. D. Sollit. In 1847, when only nineteen years of age, he was appointed sub-editor of the Hull Advertiser, and thus began a very successful career as journalist. Four years afterwards (1851) he went to Dundee to fill the position of editor and general manager of the Dundee Advertiser. That journal had then passed its jubilee, having been founded in 1801, but although advocating advanced Liberal principles in politics, in consonance with the prevailing sentiment in the locality, it was so handicapped by the heavy paper stamp and advertisement duties that its bi-weekly circulation was very limited, and its condition languishing. Sir John set vigorously to work to improve and infuse new life into the Dundee Advertiser, which has since become a power of considerable magnitude, not only locally but throughout Scotland. About ten years after he undertook the management—that is, as soon as “the taxes on knowledge” were abolished—the Advertiser was changed from a bi-weekly to a daily journal, the price being reduced to one penny. In 1858 Sir John established the People's Journal, a weekly paper whose circulation is now over 250,000, there being twelve separate editions, specially adapted to the several districts of Scotland. Another enterprise which has proved successful was the founding by Sir John, in 1877, of the Evening Telegraph, a daily halfpenny newspaper, the several editions of which have a very large circulation. Some years before he had founded a literary journal named the People's Friend, which was begun as a monthly, but was received with so much favour that it was changed into a weekly. This publication has been the means of introducing many new writers to the public, such popular novelists as Annie S. Swan and Adeline Sergeant having first appeared in print as contributors to its columns. In addition to the journalistic work, an extensive business in commercial printing and lithography is conducted under Sir John's management; and the small office which was sufficient for the Dundee Advertiser in 1851 has now developed into a very extensive establishment. The Liberal principles which Sir John professed in 1851, when he undertook the editorship of the Dundee Advertiser, have been consistently maintained and advocated by him in his various journals. He has from the first been an adherent of Mr. Gladstone; an advocate of Home Rule for Ireland, Scotland, England, and Wales; and a supporter of measures calculated to bring about conciliation between Capital and Labour; while on temperance questions he has striven to introduce measures whereby the liquor traffic would be controlled by the people. The prominence given to his political convictions on popular questions naturally suggested that he would be found of great service in Parliament, but he was reluctant to abandon his journalistic career, and it was after he had declined no fewer than fifteen invitations that he at length consented to enter the field of politics. The death of Mr. Firth in September 1889 caused a vacancy in the representation of Dundee, and Sir John was induced to become a candidate. On that occasion he was elected without opposition. At the general election in 1892 Sir John was returned at the top of the poll as representative for Dundee in conjunction with Mr. Edmund Robertson, Civil Lord of the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's fourth administration. On the distribution of birthday honours in 1893 he received a knighthood, and this dignity was accepted by him chiefly as an honour to the Press, and to the city of his adoption. He is a Magistrate for the counties of Forfar and Fife, Deputy-Lieutenant for Dundee, and President or Vice-President of numerous societies. Besides his journalistic work, Sir John has published a number of books and pamphlets, amongst which are the following: “Impressions of America,” 1876; “The Electric Light Recommended to Gas Companies and Corporations,” 1878; “Scottish Banking Reform,” 1881; “American Competition and British Agriculture,” 1881; “Practical Politics,” 1885; “How Best to Deal with the Unemployed,” 1886; “Trip to Norway,” 1886; “Home Rule all Round,” 1890; “Excessive Patent Fees,” 1891; “Canadian Cattle Importation,” 1893; “Disestablishment in Scotland,” 1894; “Nationalisation: the Dream of the Labour Party,” 1895; “Letters from India and Ceylon,” 1896; “Some European Rivers and Cities,” 1897. He married (1), in 1851, Emily Cook, of Beverley, who died in 1894; and (2), in 1897, Mary Low, of Dundee. Address: Kinbrae, Newport, Fife.

LEONCAVALLO, Ruggiero, composer, was born in Naples on March 8, 1858. He enjoyed the friendship of Wagner, and for a long period of time lived in Paris, where he composed songs and occasional pieces, and planned his trilogy of Italian history, of which the "Medici" constitutes the first part. In May 1892 he produced his short dramatic opera, "I Pagliacci," at Milan, and in November 1893 his "Medici" was first performed in the same city. The success of Mascagni's short operas may be said to have paved the way for his own. His works have often been heard at Covent Garden.

LEOPOLD II. (Leopold-Louis-Philippe-Marie-Victor), King of the Belgians, son of the late King Leopold I., upon whose death, which occurred Dec. 10, 1865, he succeeded to the throne as Leopold II., was born in Brussels, April 9, 1835, and married, Aug. 22, 1853, the Archduchess Marie of Austria, by whom he has had three children—two daughters and one son, the Duke of Brabant, who died in January 1869 at the age of ten. In 1855, in company with the Duchess of Brabant, he made a lengthened tour through Europe, Egypt, and Asia Minor. As Duke of Brabant, he took a prominent part in several important discussions in the Senate, especially in that relating to the establishment of a maritime service between Antwerp and the Levant. His Majesty has visited this country very frequently. General Gordon was his friend, and was in his service until ordered to leave Brussels for the Soudan. His "silver wedding" was celebrated with great rejoicing in August 1878. His Majesty takes a great interest in the development of the Congo Free State, was practically the founder of it, and is now its ruling sovereign. He has lately been zealously advocating the claims of his country in China, but without success. Having no son living, and daughters being excluded from the succession by the Belgian Constitution, the elder son of his brother, the Comte de Flandre, was heir-presumptive to the throne until his death, Jan. 23, 1891, aged twenty-two. Now Prince Albert, the only brother of the late Prince Baldwin, is heir-presumptive.

LEO THE THIRTEENTH, The Pope, is the son of Count Ludovico Pecci, by his wife Anna Prosperi. He was born at Carpineto, in the diocese of Anagni, in the State of the Church, March 2, 1810, and was baptized by the names of Vincenzo and Gioacchino. His mother always called him by his first name, which was also used by himself up to the termination of his studies, when he began to use his second name, Gioacchino. In 1818 his father sent him, along with his elder brother Giuseppe, to the Jesuit College of Viterbo. There he was taught grammar and humanities under Father Leonardo Giribaldi, a man of great learning, until the year 1824, when, on his mother's death, he was sent to Rome to the care of an uncle, and took up his residence in an apartment of the palace of the Marchese Muti. In November 1824 he entered the schools of the Collegio Romano, then restored to the Jesuits, and had for his teachers Fathers Ferdinando Minini and Giuseppe Bonvicini, both distinguished for eloquence and virtue of no common order. Three years later he began to study mathematics. He had for instructors Father Giovanbattista Pianciani, nephew of Leo XII., and Father Andrea Carafa, a mathematician of renown. Young Pecci signalled himself by his assiduity and talent, and in 1828 got the first prize in Physico-Chemistry, and the first accessit in mathematics. Then he passed to the course of philosophy, and in the four years of that curriculum he attended the lectures of Fathers Giovanni Perrone, Francesco Manera, Michele Zecchinelli, Cornelius Van Everbroeck, and Francesco Xaverio Patrizi, brother of the late Cardinal Patrizi. While studying philosophy Pecci was entrusted, despite his youth, to give repetitions in philosophy to the pupils of the German College. In his third year of philosophy he sustained a public disputation, and obtained the first prize (1830). The following year, being then but twenty-one years old, he obtained the laurea in philosophy. Even in Viterbo young Pecci was noticed for his ability and for his perfect propriety of conduct. In Rome he seemed entirely devoted to study, and took no part in entertainments, conversazioni, amusements, or plays. At the age of twelve or thirteen he wrote Latin, prose or verse, with facility; and it may be mentioned that since he became Pope a volume of his verses, chiefly Latin, has been printed at Udine. Having entered the College of Noble Ecclesiastics, the Abbate Pecci frequented the schools of the Roman University to learn canon and civil law. Pecci and the Duke Sisto Riario Sforza (afterwards Cardinal Archbishop of Naples) were the two brilliant youths who eclipsed all the rest of their companions in study. Cardinal Antonio Sala took much interest in Pecci, and assisted him with advice and instruction. Becoming a Doctor in Laws, he was made, by Pope Gregory XVI., a domestic prelate.

and Referendary of the Segnatura, March 16, 1837. Cardinal Carlo Odescalchi, famous for his humility in renouncing the purple to enter the Society of Jesus, gave Pecci holy orders in the chapel of St. Stanislas Kostka, in S. Andrea al Quirinale, and on Dec. 23, 1837, conferred the priesthood upon him in the chapel of the Vicariate. Gregory XVI. bestowed upon him the title of Prothonotary Apostolic, and appointed him Apostolic Delegate at Benevento, Perugia, and Spoleto in succession. In these important posts he ruled with firmness and prudence, and while at Benevento he, by his energy, put a stop to the brigandage which had before infested that district. In 1843 he was again promoted by Pope Gregory XVI., being sent as Nuncio to Belgium, and on Jan. 17 in that year he was created Archbishop of Damietta, in partibus infidelium, to qualify him for his office of Nuncio. He remained in Brussels for three years, and was then nominated Bishop of Perugia on Jan. 19, 1846, about four months previous to the death of Gregory XVI. He was created and proclaimed a Cardinal by Pius IX. in the Consistory of Dec. 19, 1853. He was a member of several of the Congregations of Cardinals—among them those of the Council, of Rites, and of Bishops and Regulars. In September 1877 he was selected by Pope Pius IX. to fill the important office of Cardinal Camerlengo of the Roman Church, which post had become vacant by the death of Cardinal de Angelis. In that capacity, after the death of the late Pope (Feb. 7, 1878), he acted as head of the Church in temporal matters, made the arrangements for the last solemn obsequies of the Pontiff, received the Catholic ambassadors, and superintended the preparations for the Conclave. Sixty-two Cardinals attended the Conclave, which was closed in the Vatican on Monday, Feb. 18, 1878, and the Cardinal Camerlengo was made Pope by the acclamation of all. The news was officially proclaimed to the outside world at a quarter-past one o'clock from the gallery of St. Peter's, when it was announced that His Holiness had assumed the name of Leo XIII. On March 3 he was crowned in the Sistine Chapel, all the ancient ceremonies being observed, save the benediction Urbi et Orbi, from the loggia of St. Peter's. At the end of 1887 the Pope celebrated his jubilee, commemorative of his having been fifty years in the priesthood, on which occasion he received congratulations from all parts of the world. The Queen of England sent the Duke of Norfolk as her Special Envoy with valuable gifts and an address of congratulation. In June 1891 the Pope issued an important Encyclical Letter on Labour, which presents the Papacy in a new and liberal light. Later, His Holiness bade the French clergy recognise the Republic, the result being that many hitherto disaffected Monarchists have accepted the present order of things in France. On Feb. 19, 1893, His Holiness celebrated his episcopal Jubilee, and held a State celebration at St. Peter's before immense crowds of pilgrims. The English pilgrims on this occasion were headed by the Duke of Norfolk. In October 1894 the Pope summoned a conference of the Patriarchs of the Greek and other Eastern Churches at the Vatican, but the gathering was without results. In March 1895 considerable excitement was aroused in Austria owing to an announcement in the leading organ of the Christian Socialists' Party that the Pope had sent his blessing to the party, whose leader, the well-known Polish priest and Christian Socialist agitator, Father Stojałowski, was then awaiting his trial on a charge of inciting civil discontent, and to the journal itself. At about the same time an intimation was given to the world that, being approached by many English churchmen, both lay and clerical, who desired reunion with the Church if only certain restrictions, including the enforced celibacy of the clergy, could be withdrawn, the Pope was disposed to grant some mitigation as to celibacy, but, the English bishops being divided, nothing further came of the pronouncement. Following up this appeal to His Holiness, Viscount Halifax, as representing the English churchmen before mentioned, visited Rome and conferred with Cardinal Vaughan, the Pope's English Vicar, as to the conditions of reunion. The Pope did not endorse Cardinal Vaughan's conclusions favouring the promotion of individual conversions, but stated his desire to address an appeal to the English people. His famous utterance was published on April 20, 1895, inscribed "Ad Anglos," and the pathetic plea for the unity of Christendom was followed, in June 1896, by an Encyclical addressed to the Bishops of the Church, in which the conditions of unity—in brief, unqualified recognition of Rome—were laid down. As was observed at the time by all thinking people, not one word from the beginning to the end of this statement could be found to justify the assumption of Lord Halifax and kindred spirits that Rome would or could treat the question of reunion as a matter of negotiation or compromise. Although rebuffed, members of the English Church Union sought for the recognition by Rome of Anglican Orders, and the assistance of Mr. Gladstone was enlisted in that behalf. But neither Mr. Gladstone's touching personal appeal to His Holiness nor the earnest, if misguided, efforts of the High Church Party availed. On Sept. 21, 1896, the now-famous "Papal Bull on Anglican Orders" was promulgated, and, to the keen disappointment of Mr. Gladstone and to the dismay of the English Extremists, the Pope unequivocally refused to recognise English ecclesiastical Orders, setting forth in his pronouncement an elaborate argument to justify Rome's reiterated negative. When receiving the Cardinals and his Court on the celebration of his 87th birthday in March 1897 the Pope emphasised the drastic nature of his Bull, which, he said, had been issued "in order to enlighten those who were honestly mistaken and to cut short sophistical evasions." His Holiness has not since made a further appeal to the English Church, convinced, probably, by the severe and discouraging criticism of both Prelate and laity that his Pontificate will never see the dawn of the reunion of the West. The only two recent intrusions of the Pope into English political life have been the bestowal, in March 1896, of his blessing on Mr. John Dillon as the new leader of the Irish Party, and his expressions of sympathy with the objects of the Irish Race Convention, which met in Dublin during September 1896. But the Pope's active interest in European affairs has of late been as keen as ever, and in 1896 he made various representations to the Governments of Hungary, Bulgaria, and Servia, concerning which it is impossible to comment here. An Encyclical was published in May 1897, exhorting the faithful, on the occasion of Pentecost, to pray for the unity of all Christians; and in the following month the Pope solemnly canonised two old priests, Anthony Zaccaria (1502-39) and Peter Fourier (1565), a ceremony which had not been seen in St. Peter's for thirty years. His Holiness at this time made an important statement as to the Church's attitude towards the French Republic, asserting that the supreme criterion of the common good imposed upon Catholics the acceptance of the existing form of government. On Aug. 14, 1897, the Pope received in audience Sir Wilfrid Laurier (q.v.) on his visit to Europe. This interview resulted in the appearance, on Dec. 24, 1897, of an Encyclical on the Manitoba Schools Question, in which, while asserting the concessions obtained by Catholics as inadequate, the Pope advised the faithful on their part not to refuse a partial compromise. On the previous day, Leo, speaking at his customary Christmas reception to the Cardinals, declared the hostility between the Vatican and the Italian Government to be "repugnant to the national traditions and genius," and said that such a state of affairs could never be supported by the votes of the Italian Catholics. In the spring of 1898 the Pope endeavoured to act as mediator between Spain and America, with the view of bringing about the conclusion of the Hispano-American War, but with no success. In June 1897 His Holiness revived memories of his early days as a poet in a Latin poem, "In Praise of Frugality." An English translation of this poem, which was on the model of the Epistles of Horace, was made by Mr. Andrew Lang for the New York World. The effort was an interesting appeal for asceticism in modern life, and much astonishment was evinced at such a production from a statesman so advanced in years. From time to time, during recent months (1898), alarming reports have been issued as to the state of His Holiness's health, and bulletins have been issued with unusual reticence. In the early part of 1899 a serious operation was performed on His Holiness, from which he has only partially recovered.

LÉPINE, Louis, French administrator, was born at Lyon in 1846, and was educated at that town and at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, Paris. He was attending the Law School when the war of 1870 broke out, and he at once enlisted in the "mobiles" of the Rhône, and after the siege of Belfort passed into a volunteer regiment organised by Colonel Denfert-Rochereau. After the war he was called to the Bar at Lyon, and in 1877 was appointed Sous-Préfet at La Palisse. Having filled the same office at many towns, in 1885 he was promoted Préfet of the Indre department. From 1886 to 1891 he was Chief Secretary of the Préfet de Police at Paris, whence he went to the Loire as Préfet, and was instrumental in arbitrating between the masters and men during the strike of glass-workers and engineers. He then passed to the Seine-et-Oise, when in 1893 he was recalled to Paris to succeed M. Lozé as Préfet de Police, because of the riots of the students. On Sept. 29, 1897, he was appointed Governor-General of Algeria.

LE ROUX, Henri (known as Hugues Le Roux), French writer, was born at Havre in 1860, and early in life took to journalism, and was a notable contributor to the Revue Politique et Littéraire. When M. Jules Claretie (q.v.) became Director of the Comédie Française, M. Le Roux took his place on the Temps. His first serious work was a translation from the Russian of Stepniak's "Subterranean Russia," and he has since poured forth a quantity of novels, travels, and works of belles lettres. Among the most important of these are "Les Âmes en Peine," 1888; "L'Enfer Parisien," 1888; "Entre Hommes," 1889; "Au Sahara," 1891, illustrated with photographs by the author; "En Yacht," 1891, travels in Spain, Morocco, and Algeria; "Les Mondains," 1893. In 1888 his adaptation of the Russian novel of Dostoevski, entitled "Crime et Châtiment," was played at the Odéon. He is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and his Paris address is 167 Boulevard Malesherbes.

LESCHETIZKY, Theodor, musician, was born at Langert, in Austrian Poland, in 1831. He was educated by his father, and by Czerny and Sechter, and began to teach at the age of 15. For many years he was Professor at St. Petersburg Conservatoire, and first came to England as a pianist in 1864. Afterwards, he settled in Vienna, where he has acquired the reputation of being the finest pianoforte teacher in Europe. Among his pupils have been Paderewski (q.v.), Mark Hambourg, and Madame Essipoff, whom he subsequently married. In the autumn of 1897 he came to England on a visit to Mark Hambourg, and gave several recitals at the Salle Erard and elsewhere, being most cordially greeted. His compositions include an opera, entitled "Die Erste Falte," which was played at Prague in 1867, and numberless pieces for the pianoforte.

LESLIE, George Dunlop, R.A., the youngest son of the late Charles Robert Leslie, R.A., was born at 12 Pineapple Place, St. John's Wood, London, July 2, 1835, and educated at the Mercers' School in the City. From his father he received, of course, a great deal of instruction in art; and the pure and tender feeling, as well as the simplicity and method which distinguish so many works of the father, seem to be reflected in the productions of the son. Young Leslie was, however, placed by his father at Mr. F. Cary's School of Art, Bloomsbury, whence he was admitted a student in the Life School of the Royal Academy in April 1854. The first picture he exhibited, called "Hope," appeared at the British Institution in 1857, and was purchased by Lord Houghton. In the same year two small pictures by him were hung at the Royal Academy, where he has since regularly exhibited. In the spring of 1859 his father died, leaving the young artist entirely to his own resources. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1868, and a Royal Academician, June 29, 1876. The principal pictures which he has exhibited are: "The Defence of Lathom House,"

1865; "Clarissa," 1866, which was also exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition; "Nausicaa and her Maids," 1871; "School Revisited" (his most celebrated picture), 1875; "Cowslips" and "The Lass of Richmond Hill" (his Diploma picture), 1877; "Home, Sweet Home," 1878; "Naughty Kitty" and "Alice in Wonderland," containing portraits of the artist's wife and daughter, 1879; "All that Glitters is not Gold," 1880; "Hen and Chickens," 1881; "Molly," "Sally in our Alley," "Pique," and "A Daughter of Charity," 1882; "Daughters of Eve" and "Wayside Rest," 1883; "A Girl with a Silver Bowl full of Roses" and "A Thames Boat-house," 1887; "Sun and Moon Flowers," 1889. More recently he has exhibited at the Royal Academy "November Sunshine," and "Toby," 1895; "Kathleen," and "September Sunshine," 1896; "The Day of Rest," 1897; "The Ash Grove," and "Arlington Row, Gloucestershire," 1898; "The Peaceful Highway," 1899. In 1881 Mr. Leslie gave up his house in St. John's Wood and removed with his family to an old-fashioned riverside house at Wallingford, where he has lived ever since. Mr. Leslie has at times used the pen as well as the pencil, being the author of "Our River," the first edition of which was published by Messrs. Bradbury & Agnew in 1881. In 1893 Messrs. Macmillan published his "Letters to Marco," which were written to Mr. Leslie's old friend, H. Stacy Marks, R.A., on subjects from natural history and country life. Both these books are illustrated by the author. In 1896 he published "Riverside Letters." Addresses: Riverside, Wallingford, Berks; and Athenæum.

LESSAR, Paul, was born in 1851, and comes of a Montenegrin family. He was educated at the École des Ingénieurs in St. Petersburg, and on account of his ability he was selected to accompany General Skobelev into Asia to survey for railways. In 1880 he joined General Komaroff as an expert in surveying and exploring the Turcoman country between the Caspian and Afghanistan. He established himself at Askabad, and in November 1881 he penetrated beyond Sarakhs, across the Afghan frontier, to within a few miles of Herat. In the course of two years he rode a distance of nearly 6000 miles, exploring the whole of the ground of the Russo-Persian and Russo-Afghan frontier. He became Diplomatic Attaché to the Governor of the Transcaspian, and to him was committed the real direction of the matter of the Afghan frontier. In 1885 he was sent on a special mission to London as geographical expert, to assist the Russian Ambassador in the negotiations which accompanied the despatch of the Afghan Boundary Commission.

LETHBRIDGE, Sir Roper, K.C.I.E., J.P., eldest son of the late Mr. E. Lethbridge, was born on Dec. 23, 1840, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated in double honours (classical and mathematical). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1880. In 1868 he was appointed Professor in the Bengal Educational Department. He was subsequently elected a Fellow of the Calcutta University, and acted as an Examiner of that University (and also of the University of Lahore), at various times from 1868 to 1876, in Political Economy, History, English Language and Literature, Mathematics, and Mental and Moral Philosophy. In 1877 he was appointed Secretary to the Simla Educational Commission, and placed on special duty to write the articles on the Feudatory States for the "Imperial Gazetteer of India." In the following year he was transferred to the Indian Political Department as Political Agent and Press Commissioner under Lord Lytton's Viceroyalty. He was for many years editor of the only Indian quarterly, the Calcutta Review; and is the author of a "History of India," also a "History of Bengal," and many other works. In 1885 he was elected Conservative member for North Kensington, and was again returned in 1886. He was created a Companion of the Indian Empire in 1877, a Knight Bachelor in 1885, and a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire in 1890. Sir Roper is a J.P. for Kent, Lord of the Manor of Exbourne, co. Devon, and patron of one living. He married (1), in 1869, Eliza, daughter of Mr. W. Finlay, and grandniece of the Right Hon. John, 13th Lord Teynham (she died in 1895); and (2), in 1897, Emma, widow of the late Mr. Frederick Burbidge of Micklefield, Herts. By his first marriage he has issue: Francis Washington Lethbridge, Lieutenant Indian Staff Corps and Assistant Cantonment-Magistrate of Rawal Pindi, India; William Agar Lander Lethbridge, Lieutenant 4th King's Own Regiment; and Caroline Anne Roper, married to Mr. Frederic Gorell Barnes, M.P. for the Faversham Division of Kent. Sir Roper is Chairman of the Indian Constitutional Association, Member of Council of the East India Association and of the National Indian Association, and Member of the Indian Committee of the Society of Arts; and Governor of the Plymouth College. Address: 21 Cornwall Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.

LEWIS, Mrs. Arthur. See TERRY, KATE.

LEWIS, Professor Bunnell, M.A., F.S.A., is descended from Philip Henry, the celebrated Nonconformist, father of Matthew Henry the Commentator, and from a Huguenot family which seems to have migrated into England at the time of the Reformation. He was born in London in 1824; educated at the Islington Proprietary School, under the late Dr. Jackson, afterwards Bishop of London, and at University College, London; he also read privately with the late Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy. He took the degree of B.A. at the University of London in 1843, with the University Scholarship in Classics; and was elected a Fellow of University College in 1847. He graduated M.A., Branch I. (Classics), in 1849, with the Gold Medal, then awarded for the first time; and was appointed Professor of Latin in Queen's College, Cork, in 1849. At the foundation of the Queen's University in Ireland he took an active part in its administration, and held the office of Examiner in Latin for four years. He was elected F.S.A. in 1865; and Foreign Corresponding Associate of the National Society of Antiquaries of France in 1883. He is a Member of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, the Royal Historical and Archaeological Association of Ireland, and the Huguenot Society of London. At the request of the Council of University College, London, he delivered courses of lectures on Classical Archaeology in 1873, 1874, in connection with the Slade School of Art. Professor Lewis has visited, for purposes of archaeological research, Ravenna, Brittany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, the south-west of France, Tarragona, Palermo, Constantinople, Autun, Reims, Switzerland, Langres and Besançon, the Middle Rhine and the Upper Danube, Pola, Aquileia, and Budapest. The results of these investigations have appeared in the Journal of the Archaeological Institute, 1875-93. Many facts have been mentioned with which the English public was not previously acquainted, and ancient monuments have been specially considered as illustrating the Greek and Latin authors. With the view of making classical instruction more realistic and interesting, Professor Lewis has collected objects of art and antiquity for the museum of his college; and has laboured in various ways to introduce the study of antiquities as an integral part of University education. He has contributed to the second revised edition of Dr. William Smith's Latin Dictionary. A great part of his paper on Autun was translated into French and published by the Société Eduenne, of which M. Bulliot, the explorer of Mont Beuvray, is the President.

LEWIS, Sir George Henry, senior member of Lewis & Co., solicitors, was born in 1833, and educated at Edmonton and University College, Gower Street. At the age of seventeen he was articled to his father, and was admitted as solicitor in Hilary Term 1856, when he went into partnership with his father and uncle. He made his first mark in conducting the prosecution of the directors of Overend & Gurney's bank, and subsequently had the management of many other mercantile and financial prosecutions. He was engaged also in the prosecution of Madame Rachel, and of Slade, the medium; in the Hatton Garden Diamond Robbery case; in Belt v. Lawes; the Baccarat case; and later in the preparation of the case for Mr. Parnell and the Irish party against the Times at the Parnell Commission. He has by far the largest practice in criminal cases of any lawyer in London, and has been the solicitor in most of the causes célèbres, and in all the notable newspaper libel cases of recent years. He was knighted in June 1893. In 1867 he married Elizabeth, daughter of F. Eberstadt. Addresses: 88 Portland Place, W.; Ely Place, Holborn, E.C.; and Walton-on-Thames.

LEWIS, George Pitt, eldest son of the late G. Lewis of Exminster, and Jane Frances, niece of Stephen Pitt of Crichton Mallerbie, Somerset, was born at Honiton, Dec. 13, 1845. He was educated privately, gained a studentship of the Four Inns of Court in November 1869, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in June 1870; he became a Q.C. in 1885, and in the same year was appointed Recorder of Poole. He represented the Barnstaple Division of Devonshire in the Liberal interest from 1885 to 1892, but voted against the Home Rule Bill of 1886. He was one of the originators of the Bar Committee, now the Council of the Bar, and a member of it from its commencement; was appointed Examiner for Honours to the Council of Legal Education in 1897, and is on the Board of Preliminary Examiners appointed by the Four Inns of Court in 1897. He is the author of "A Complete County Court Practice," which, after passing through four editions, is now merged in "The Yearly County Court Practice"; also of "The Insane and the Law," 1895. He is also editor of the 9th edition of "Taylor on Evidence," the author of "Inns of Court" and other articles in the "Encyclopædia of English Law," "The History of the Temple," &c., &c. He was appointed in 1898 one of the Honorary Counsel to the Honourable Society of the Baronetage. Address: 4 Paper Buildings, Temple, E.C.

LEWIS, Most Rev. John Travers, D.D., LL.D., Archbishop of Ontario, born in 1825 at Garrystoyne Castle, the son of the Rev. J. Lewis, of St. Anne's, Cork, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as Senior Moderator in Ethics and Logic, and was Gold Medallist. He was ordained in 1848, and held the curacy of Newtown Butler; went to Canada in 1849, and was appointed by the Bishop of Toronto to the pastoral charge of the parish of Hawkesbury, which he exchanged in 1854 for the rectory of Brookville. He was consecrated first Bishop of Ontario, in Upper Canada, March 25, 1862. On Jan. 25, 1893, he was elected Metropolitan of Canada, and on Sept. 19 of the same year he was made Archbishop of Ontario at the General Synod held in Toronto for the Consolidation of the Church of England in Canada. Address: Bishopsleigh, Kingston, Canada.

LEWIS, The Right Rev. Richard, D.D., Bishop of Llandaff, was born in Pembrokeshire, March 27, 1821, and is the son of John Lewis. He was educated at Bromsgrove and at Worcester College, Oxford (B.A. 1843; M.A. 1846). He was instituted to the rectory of Lampeter-Velfry, Narberth, Pembrokeshire, in 1851, and was appointed Archdeacon of St. David's in 1875. In 1883 he was appointed Bishop of Llandaff in succession to Dr. Ollivant, and was consecrated to that See by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), in St. Paul's Cathedral on April 25 of that year. Addresses: The Palace, Llandaff; Heullan, Narberth; and Athenæum.

LEWIS, Professor William James, M.A., son of the Rev. J. Lewis, late of Bonvilston, born near Newtown, Montgomeryshire, Jan. 16, 1847, was elected a Scholar of Jesus College, Oxford, in October 1865, and obtained a first class in the University Examinations in Mathematics and Natural Science. He was elected a Fellow of Oriel College in April 1869. For some time he was Assistant-Master at Cheltenham College. He was a Member of the Total Eclipse Expeditions (English) of 1870 and 1871, and his observations on the polarisation of the corona have been published in the volume of "Solar Eclipses" issued under the auspices of the Royal Astronomical Society. In 1874 he began to study mineralogy, and for that purpose went to Cambridge, where he received the valuable assistance of Professor William Hallowes Miller. He held an appointment in the Mineral Department of the British Museum from 1875 to 1877, in which latter year he resigned owing to ill-health. He has contributed several papers on Crystallography to the Philosophical Magazine. In February 1881 he was elected Professor of Mineralogy at Cambridge in succession to the late Dr. William Hallowes Miller. In 1884 he organised, and has since conducted as Honorary Secretary, the Cambridge University Scholastic Agency. Address: Trinity College, Cambridge.

LEYDS, Dr. W. J., Minister Plenipotentiary of the South African Republic in Europe, after the Jameson Raid in 1896, became the chief adviser of President Krüger, and was credited with violent anti-English opinions. He made a visit to Europe, endeavouring to raise a loan, in 1896, and revisited Europe in 1898, when he was received by Emperor William II. in October of that year.

LICHFIELD, Bishop of. See LEGGE, HON. AND RIGHT REV. AUGUSTUS.

LIDDERDALE, The Right Hon. William, Director of the Bank of England, son of John Lidderdale, a Russia merchant, was born at St. Petersburg on July 16, 1832, and educated at a private school in Cheshire. He entered commercial life in the office of Heath & Co., Russia merchant, in Liverpool, and afterwards became cashier to Messrs. Rathbone Brothers & Co. in the same city, representing that firm in New York from 1857 to 1863, and becoming a partner in 1864, when he opened their London house. In 1870 he was elected a Director of the Bank of England. In 1887 he was Deputy-Governor of the Bank. From 1889-92 he was Governor. In November 1890 Mr. Lidderdale saved the City "from what would otherwise have undoubtedly been the greatest financial panic this generation has seen," by his wise, firm, and rapid measures during the Baring crisis. In these measures he was materially assisted by Mr. Powell, the Deputy-Governor, and by Lord Rothschild and a few other leaders of finance, but it was chiefly owing to his initiative that the Baring difficulty was smoothly tided over. In the Vagliano case he has also done good service to the banking interest at large, having afforded important assistance to Sir Richard Webster in his arguments before the House of Lords. Mr. Lidderdale, after the Baring crisis was over, was continued in office as Governor of the Bank of England a year longer than is customary. He was also presented with the freedom of the City. Since 1893 he has been a Commissioner of the Patriotic Fund. In 1868 he married Mary, elder daughter of Wadsworth D. Busk, Esq., formerly of St. Petersburg. Address: 42 Lancaster Gate, W.

LIDGETT, Rev. John Scott, M.A., was born on August 10, 1854. He is the son of the late John Jacob Lidgett, a shipowner of the port of London, by his marriage with Maria Elizabeth, the daughter of the late Rev. John Scott, the first organiser and head of the Wesleyan system of elementary education. He was educated at the Blackheath Proprietary School and at University College, London, whence he graduated at the London University, taking the B.A. degree in 1874, and the M.A. in 1875. In 1876 he entered the Wesleyan ministry, being successively appointed to Tunstall in the Potteries, Southport, Cardiff, Wolverhampton, and Cambridge. During his residence in Cardiff and Wolverhampton he took considerable part in educational and social movements. While in Cambridge he inaugurated, in conjunction with the late Rev. Dr. W. D. Moulton, the movement which led to the establishment of the Bermondsey Settlement. The scheme was sanctioned by the Wesleyan Conference in 1889, and the settlement opened in January 1892. Mr. Lidgett has been Warden from the beginning. The settlement has now about 25 residents besides a large staff of non-resident workers, and it carries on an extensive programme of religious, educational, and philanthropic work in Bermondsey and Rotherhithe on broadly undenominational lines. In 1897 Mr. Lidgett published a considerable theological book entitled "The Spiritual Principle of the Atonement," being the 27th Fernley Lecture. This book attracted favourable notice in theological circles, and a second edition has been issued. In November 1897 Mr. Lidgett was returned to the School Board for London, being head of the poll in the Southwark Division. He is a Governor of the Leys School, Cambridge, Chairman of the Young People's Section of the National Home Reading Union, a Member of the Executive Committee both of the National and the Metropolitan Council of the Evangelical Free Churches, in addition to being a member of numerous Wesleyan and educational committees. He has also been for a number of years a Guardian of the Poor of the St. Olave's Union. In 1884 he married Emmeline Martha, second daughter of Dr. Andrew Davies, of Newport, Mon. Address: The Bermondsey Settlement, Farncombe Street, Jamaica Road, S.E.

LIE, Jonas, Norwegian novelist, was born at Eker, near Drammen, Nov. 6, 1833, and after having studied for the law abandoned it for literature. His novels, which are numerous, give realistic pictures of Norwegian life, especially of that of the fishing population. The most noteworthy are: "The Visionary," 1870, which was translated into English in 1894; "The Three-Master Future," 1872; "The Pilot and his Wife," 1874, translated in 1877; "One of Life's Slaves," 1883, translated in 1896; "The Commodore's Daughters," 1886; and "Misa Ions," 1889. He published a volume of poems in 1866, and a comedy entitled "Lystiga Kmer" in 1894.

LIEBKNECHT, Herr, one of the leaders of contemporary Socialism in Germany, was born at Giessen, March 29, 1826. He entered the university of that town in his sixteenth year, and enthusiastically devoted himself to the study of philology, theology, and philosophy, with the object of becoming a learned jurist or advocate. He showed socialistic tendencies at an early age, and, becoming enamoured of the writings of St. Simon, he hurried to Paris to aid in the February Revolution of 1848. Previously to this, however, he was charged with taking part in one of the Polish revolutionary movements, and was accordingly expelled from Austria in 1846, and he joined the ouvriers in Paris in 1848. This chapter over, he assisted in the ill-fated attempt to establish a republic in Germany, was arrested at Freiburg, and lay in prison for nine months without trial. Soon after his liberation Liebknecht came into collision with the Swiss authorities for trying to "impregnate" the trade unions of the Republic with socialist principles. He was accordingly conveyed to the frontier of France, and handed over to the police of that country, who conducted him to the coast, put him safely and surely on a ship, and, as he says, "packed him off to England like a bale of contraband goods." From 1850 to 1862 he remained in England, "living a life of honourable privation at the hungry occupation of journalism," an intimate associate of Frederick Engels and Karl Marx, who were also temporarily resident in this country. In 1862, on the proclamation of an amnesty, Liebknecht returned to Germany, and "to the tender mercies of Prince Bismarck." He at once set to work to further the Socialist cause as a journalist, schoolmaster, and lecturer. In 1865 he was again banished from Berlin and Prussia. A candidate for Parliament in February 1867, he was arrested and imprisoned for three months, but was duly elected seven months later for Schneeberg Stolberg, in Saxony, and subsequently represented Offenbach on the Maine. In 1870 Liebknecht, Bebel (q.v.), and others "fearlessly bore testimony," in the press and Parliament, against what they conceived to be "the fratricidal iniquity" of the Franco-German war. Arrested again, quite naturally, for high treason, Liebknecht with his colleagues was imprisoned for three months, and sentenced to two years' further incarceration. The "Man of Blood and Iron" passed his Anti-Socialist law in 1878, which continued in operation until 1890, when he retired. The effect of this law on Herr Liebknecht was to deprive him of all direct intercourse with his family for a period of twelve years. Opinions may differ with regard to the philosophy of Liebknecht, but as to the heroism and staunch conviction which have marked his career there can be no question. He visited this country in 1896, when he lectured throughout Great Britain, under the auspices of the Zurich International Socialist Committee, and returned to Germany to undergo another term of four months' imprisonment for lèse-majesté. His offence was the childish one of not rising to welcome the Emperor on his visit to open Parliament. His importance in German political life can be gauged by the fact that he has the high honour of representing Berlin in the Reichstag, in which assembly he is regarded as an "Incorruptible." He is also editor of Vorwärts, the leading Socialist organ in Germany, and is an eloquent parliamentary and public speaker.

LIEBLING, Alice, was born at Berlin, 27th November 1872, and was educated in that city and at Lausanne. Under the nom-de-plume of "Fred Aling" Madame Liebling has won a considerable reputation in Germany as a writer and a novelist. She contributed feuilletons and essays to the Berliner Tageblatt and the Montags-Welt, and in 1897 published her first novel, "Eltern Sünden" ("The Sins of the Parents"), which created some sensation in Germany on account of the boldness and vividness of the style, and the courage with which the psychological sides of the incidents were handled. "Fred Aling" has written some poetry, chiefly the ballet "Der Spielteufel," and two of her fairy tales inspired the composition of two of her husband's most famous piano pieces, "The Flower and the Butterfly" (Op. 11) and "The Star of Warsaw" (Op. 14), which were well received at the St. James's Hall in June 1898. Madame Liebling is now engaged in writing the libretto of Herr Georg Liebling's opera "Am Fjord," which will be produced shortly. "Fred Aling" has settled in the metropolis as special correspondent for Great Britain of the Berliner Kleines Journal, and of that Parisian curiosity, La Fronde, a paper written, printed, and published entirely by women. On the occasion of her husband's recital before the Queen at Osborne in August 1898, Madame Liebling had the honour of being presented to her Majesty.

LIEBLING, Georg, a German pianist, was born at Berlin, 22nd January 1865. As a child he showed remarkable musical ability both in composition and in execution. At the age of sixteen he became a teacher in the Kullak Conservatoire, Berlin, in the following year making his first tour through Germany and Austria, where he was enthusiastically received. He first studied the piano under Theodor and Franz Kullak, and learnt composition with Heinrich Urban and Alb. Becker. So promising was his future that, in 1884, Franz Liszt took him under his charge at Weimar, where he remained for two years, and thus completed his musical education. In October 1884 he gave his first Berlin concert, and from 1885 to 1889 travelled through Europe, performing before several of the Courts. He was appointed by the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha as Court pianist and chamber virtuoso to his Court, and Liebling's career from that time has been one of increasing success. Although still young, he has become well known as a composer, fulfilling the promise of his early years in overtures, concertos, dances, and songs. He gave a series of ten recitals in London during 1897 and 1898 at the St. James's Hall, on each occasion receiving merited applause. His compositions, which are numerous, are widely known and played. Herr Liebling, on 4th September 1895, married, at Berlin, Alice, daughter of Herr Goldberger, an intimate acquaintance of the old Emperor, William I. On Aug. 14, 1898, Herr Georg Liebling played, by command, before her Majesty the Queen at Osborne, who expressed great delight at the performance, complimenting Herr Liebling on his skill as an executant and composer, and presenting him with a diamond pin as a memento of the occasion. In September 1898 Liebling was offered a professorship at the Guildhall School of Music, which, after some hesitation, he accepted, abandoning his projected American tour. He has played in several of the large provincial towns, such as Liverpool, Blackburn, and Manchester (at the Hallé concerts)—appearing with Patti at the Dome, Brighton—and has everywhere been received with great favour. Herr Liebling has settled, for the time being, in London. Address: 13B Hyde Park Mansions.

LI HSI, King of Corea, succeeded to the throne in 1864, and although he has the reputation of being a weak and vacillating ruler, owing to his country being the battle-ground of China and Japan, yet he has firmly opposed the Court of Peking in their endeavours to possess Chosen, and to prevent him sending ambassadors to other Courts. A Russian Agent now resides at Seoul, and he is regarded as the real King of Corea.

LI HUNG CHANG, General, ex-Prime Minister of China, was born at Ho Fei Shieun, in the Anu-Huei province, Feb. 16, 1823. In 1860 he co-operated with General (then Colonel) Gordon in suppressing the Taeping rebellion, being then Governor of the Thiang-sin province. The other Thiang province being added to his rule, he was created Viceroy of the united countries May 1865. The following year he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary, and in 1867 Viceroy of Hong-Kuang, and a Grand Chancellor in 1868. After the Tien-Tsin massacre in 1870 he was despoiled of his titles, and otherwise punished on the charge of not assisting the General in command, but in 1872 the reigning Emperor restored him to favour and to the office of Grand Chancellor. He was the mediator for fixing the indemnity for the murder of Mr. Margary, who was killed in 1876 while endeavouring to explore South-western China. He has also negotiated important treaties with Peru and with Japan. Li Hung Chang was till lately the Viceroy of the Metropolitan provinces of Pe-Chih-Li, and as such was the actual ruler or chief administrator of the Chinese Empire. He is a man of liberal views, has permitted coal-mining and coast-steamer traffic to be carried on by English companies, and is thought to be favourable even to railways. He was the originator of the Chinese navy. During the recent war with Japan General Li Hung Chang, though an old man, and more than once discouraged and disgraced by the Emperor, carried up to 1895 the whole burden of responsibility which in a constitutional country would be divided between various ministers. He has performed the functions of a War Ministry, Marine Ministry, and Finance Ministry, and that without any staff or civil service to assist him. The Emperor issues edicts, but does not provide the means for carrying them out. On Li Hung Chang has devolved the task of providing means, whether in gross or in detail. Indeed, he has been fitly described as the Atlas on whose shoulders the whole rotten fabric of Chinese administration has rested for thirty years past. At the beginning of the recent war he was invested by the Emperor with the supreme charge of the naval and military forces sent to Corea, but early in the war was deprived of the Yellow Jacket and the Peacock's Feather, and was afterwards superseded in the chief command. He, however, still continued Prime Minister. In December it was rumoured that influential Chinese merchants and others at Canton were anxious that he should be impeached on the charge of being under Japanese, and even German, influences. Later it was reported that he had been definitely superseded in all his offices, and then again restored to complete favour (February 1895) in view of the peace negotiations with Japan, which he is said to have undertaken. On March 28, 1896, Li Hung Chang left Shanghai for Europe to represent the Emperor of China at the Czar's coronation, thus beginning his famous journey round the civilised world, which is thought to have critically influenced the European situation. He declared that the object of his trip was to see Europe for himself, in order to study it, and to report to the Emperor as to feasible reforms for China. Indeed, he said the Emperor had expressly ordered him to make the trip, and he affirmed that his business in Europe was not at all that of concluding treaties of any sort, but solely to observe and to carry back useful information. He visited Germany, the Hague, Brussels, and Paris, arriving in England in August 1896. While here Li Hung Chang, naturally as an honoured guest, paid visits to almost everything worth visiting, doing homage in particular to Gordon's statue in Trafalgar Square, and receiving an invitation to Hawarden from the late Mr. Gladstone. After paying his respects to the Queen, Li left England on Aug. 20, 1896, expressing his thanks to the English nation and assuring them of his good-will and gratification. He crossed to the United States and visited the Dominion, returning via Yokohama to Tien-tsin, which he reached Oct. 3, 1896, and proceeding to Peking (October 17). In a few days Li Hung Chang was appointed Minister for Foreign Affairs, and, curiously enough, an Imperial edict was issued at the same time ordering him to be punished "for presuming to enter the precincts of the ruined summer palace while visiting the Empress Dowager." The Emperor suspected Li of going behind his back, and as a punishment deprived him of one year's salary, although strongly advised to deprive the Foreign Minister of all his offices. Disgusted at the treatment he had received on his return, Li declared his intention of retiring into private life, but he remained at his post, probably to support the Empress Dowager and her party against the Emperor, but more particularly, it has been hinted, in order to secure, by his influence, the long series of concessions which Russia has received from China, and to checkmate any inconvenient ascendancy which Britain might acquire at Peking. In March 1898 China acknowledged that the mission of her envoy, Li Hung Chang, to St. Petersburg, had been unsuccessful, and that she had no alternative but to agree to the Russian demands. It is impossible to trace here all the influences, direct and indirect, which Li Hung Chang exerted over the course of events. He evidently gave some measure of satisfaction to his Imperial master, for in June 1898 the Emperor conferred upon him the Chinese Order of the Double Dragon (third degree, first class), a distinction never before bestowed on a Chinese subject. Rumours were current in China during August 1898 reflecting doubtfully upon Li Hung Chang's integrity, and in September 1898 he was dismissed from the Tsung-li-Yamen by an Imperial decree. This momentous occurrence was regarded as a distinct success for British diplomacy, and, although Li was permitted to retain the position of Senior Grand Secretary, it was expected that, anticipating dismissal, he would resign. The cause of his disgrace was that he deceived the Tsung-li-Yamen as to the true nature of the terms of the Lu-han railway contract, and it was understood that, Li having served its purpose, Russia would abandon him. Towards the end of September 1898 rumour reached England that the Dowager Empress had recovered her ascendancy over the Emperor, and that consequently the return to power of Li Hung Chang, her lieutenant, was imminent. Whatever may be conjectured concerning his career as a diplomatist, admiration cannot be withheld from the elevating and distinguished efforts he has made to further the social and educational interests of his country. A recent writer, Mr. Valentine Chirol, has given the following portrait of this potent politician: "Gifted with no mean intelligence and with a double dose of Chinese cunning, he is too much of a sceptic to allow prejudices or principles of any kind to stand in his way. Brought more often than most of his fellow-countrymen into contact with Europeans, especially during his five-and-twenty years' residence at Tien-tsin, he has rubbed up acquaintance with Western modes of thought, and he has learned with some success the art of turning towards every European whom he meets that facet of his character which is most likely to impress his visitor. On proper occasions he will shed crocodile's tears over the iniquity of the opium trade, yet nowhere does the cultivation of the native poppy receive more encouragement than in the province which he rules or on his own vast estates. He will deplore the lamentable periodicity of famines, and yet will allow his subordinates to engineer a gigantic corner in grain. It is difficult to believe that his own hands are clean when he is known to have amassed in the course of a long official career a colossal fortune, reputed by many to be the largest possessed by any single individual in the world, and certainly in China." His life was written by R. K. Douglas, and published in 1895.

LILLY, William Samuel, M.A., J.P., eldest son of the late William Lilly, of Windout House, near Exeter, was born at Fifehead, Dorsetshire, on July 10, 1840, and educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where in 1858 he obtained the senior scholarship and the Classical Prize. He graduated in 1861 in the Law Tripos, and in the same year obtained an appointment, by open competition, in the Civil Service of India. He was sent to the Presidency of Madras, where, after filling various public offices, he was appointed, in 1869, Under-Secretary to the Government. He left India on account of ill-health in 1870. He was called to the English Bar in 1873, and in 1874 was appointed Secretary to the Catholic Union of Great Britain, which office he still holds. He published, in 1884, "Ancient Religion and Modern Thought"; in 1886, "Chapters in European History," 2 vols.; in 1889, "A Century of Revolution"; in 1890, "On Right and Wrong"; in 1892, "On Shibboleths" and "The Great Enigma"; in 1893 (with J. E. P. Wallis) a "Manual of the Law specially affecting Catholics"; in 1894, the "Claims of Christianity"; and in 1897, "Essays and Speeches," and is well known as a contributor to the Quarterly, Contemporary, and Fortnightly Reviews, and to the Nineteenth Century, upon philosophical and historical subjects. He is a Justice of the Peace for the counties of Middlesex and London. He married, in 1878, Susannah, second daughter of the Rev. George Hall. Residence: 27 Egerton Terrace, S.W.; Club: The Athenæum.

LIMERICK, Bishop of. See GRAVES, THE RIGHT REV. CHARLES.

LINCOLN, Bishop of. See KING, THE RIGHT REV. EDWARD.

LINCOLN, The Hon. Robert Todd, American statesman, is the son of the sixteenth President of the United States, and was born at Springfield, Illinois, Aug. 1, 1843. He was prepared for college at Phillips Academy, Exeter, N.H., and graduated at Harvard in 1864. After a short stay at the Harvard Law School he was commissioned a Captain in the Union Army, and served through the final campaign of the Civil War. He then resumed the study of law, was admitted to the Bar, and began the practice of his profession at Chicago. All offers to enter public life were steadily refused by him until President Garfield in 1881 tendered him the portfolio of Secretary of War in the Cabinet, and this he accepted. On the assassination of Mr. Garfield, Mr. Lincoln was requested by President Arthur to retain his seat, which he did until the accession to the presidency of Mr. Cleveland in 1885. In the latter year he resumed the practice of law in Chicago, where he remained until sent by President Harrison in 1889 as the American Minister to England. He resigned this position at the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's second Administration, and again returned to his professional work in Chicago.

LINDLEY, The Right Hon. Sir Nathaniel, Master of the Rolls, is the eldest son of the late Dr. John Lindley, F.R.S. (Professor of Botany at University College, London, and author of numerous well-known botanical works), by Sarah, daughter of Mr. George Anthony Freestone, of St. Margaret's, Suffolk. He was born at Acton Green, Middlesex, in 1828, and educated at University College, London. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, in Michaelmas term, 1850, and practised in the Chancery Courts. In 1872 he obtained a silk gown. He was appointed a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas in May 1875, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. He became one of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Nov. 1881, and a member of the Privy Council in the following month, and Master of the Rolls in Oct. 1897. In 1892 he was Treasurer of the Middle Temple, and from 1891 to 1895 Chairman of the Council of Legal Education. In 1888 he received the Hon. LL.D. of Edinburgh University. He is the author of an "Introduction to the Study of Jurisprudence," and of treatises on the Law of Partnership and Companies, of which a fifth and sixth edition have been published. In 1858 he married Sarah, eldest daughter of Edward John Teale, of Leeds. Addresses: 19 Craven Hill Gardens, W.; East Carlton, Norwich; Athenæum.

LINDSAY, Sir Coutts, Bart., of Balcarres, J.P., D.L., born in 1824, late Lieut.-Colonel Grenadier Guards; Lieut.-Colonel commanding the Fife Rifle Volunteers; and late Major commanding the first regiment of the Italian Legion, was the eldest son of Lieut.-General James Lindsay and the eldest daughter of Sir Coutts Trotter. He succeeded his maternal grandfather in 1837. Since his retirement from active military life he has devoted himself to artistic pursuits. During his residence in Rome he became an intimate friend of the late Mr. Gibson, and embracing art as a serious study enjoyed the advantage of the instruction of Ary Scheffer. Sir Coutts Lindsay, whom professional artists used not to consider as an amateur, has exhibited many pictures at the Royal Academy, notably the "Good Shepherd," and a portrait of Lord Somers. His most important work is, perhaps, to be found in Dorchester House, the central hall of which is decorated entirely from his designs, and mainly by his own hand. Strongly imbued with the Early Italian idea of painting, for decorative purposes, upon a golden ground, he has left in Mr. Holford's mansion a substantial record of his skill. He was on the English Commission, and a member of the Fine Arts Committee, of the Paris Exhibition. He was the owner of the Grosvenor Gallery in the days of its greatness. In building it, however, he was not actuated by any spirit of opposition to the Royal Academy, but rather by the idea of affording an increased area to artists for the exhibition of their works. He married in 1864 Blanche, daughter of the late Right Hon. H. Fitz Roy, a lady well known as a painter and poetess. Addresses: Balcarras, Colinsburgh, Fife; and 4 Cromwell Place, S.W.

LINDSAY, David, F.R.G.S., Australian explorer, was born at Goolwa, on the Lower Murray, South Australia, June 20, 1856, and is the younger son of John Scott Lindsay, master-mariner, of Dundee, Scotland. He was educated at the Goolwa Public School, and at the Rev. John Hotham's Private School at Port Elliot; was appointed Cadet in the South Australian Survey Department in June 1873, Surveyor in March 1874, Junior Surveyor for the Northern Territory in 1878, resigned his post in the Government service in June 1882, was appointed, by the South Australian Government, as Leader of the Arnheims Land Exploring Expedition in 1883, during which journey much new country was discovered and mapped down, and much hardship endured through shortness of rations, they having, for the last three weeks, to subsist on horseflesh dried in the sun. The expedition lost sixteen horses through accidents and starvation, and four horses were speared by natives at one camp. Mr. Lindsay carried out a private exploration at his own risk and expense right across Australia from South to North, occupying twelve months, from November 1885 to December 1886 (during which time only three showers of rain fell). He surveyed and marked on the ground 550 miles of Run boundary lines, connecting the Queensland border-line with the Adelaide and Port Darwin telegraph line; and discovered the "Rubies" in MacDonnell Ranges, Central Australia. The journals of these two explorations have been published in the South Australian parliamentary papers, and by the Royal Geographical Society of England. Mr. Lindsay is a Member of the Council of the South Australian Institute of Surveyors, Member of the Board of Examiners for Licensed Surveyors, Honorary Member of the South Australian branch, and Honorary Corresponding Member of the Victorian branch of the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia, and Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of London.

LINGEN, Lord, Ralph Robert Wheeler Lingen, K.C.B., D.C.L., Baron Lingen of Lingen, in the county of Hereford, only son of Mr. Thomas Lingen, and of Ann, daughter of Mr. Robert Wheeler, of Birmingham, born in that town on Feb. 19, 1819, was educated at Bridgnorth Grammar School, whence he was elected, in 1837, to a scholarship at Trinity College, Oxford. He obtained the Ireland University Scholarship in 1838, the Hertford University Scholarship in 1839, graduated B.A. as a first-class in Classics in 1840, was afterwards elected to a Fellowship at Balliol College, and obtained the Chancellor's prize for a Latin Essay in 1843, and the Eldon Law Scholarship in 1846. He was elected an honorary D.C.L. in 1881. He studied in the chambers of the late Mr. Peter Brodie and the late Mr. Heathfield, and was called to the Bar in 1847, but shortly afterwards entered the Educational Department of the Privy Council, and in 1849 succeeded Sir J. P. Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., as Secretary. In January 1870 he was appointed to succeed the Right Hon. G. A. Hamilton as Permanent Secretary of the Treasury, and held this post till 1885. He was nominated C.B. in 1869, and K.C.B. in 1878. He was created a Peer July 3, 1885, and elected an Alderman of the first London County Council in 1889, but resigned in 1893. He is a Governor of Rugby and Bedford Schools, and a member of the Committee for editing the Statutes and State Trials. He married, in 1852, Emma, second daughter of Mr. Robert Hutton, of Putney Park, Surrey, formerly M.P. for the city of Dublin. Addresses: 13 Wetherley Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LINTON, Sir James Dromgole, President of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, was born in London, Dec. 26, 1840, and is the only son of the late James Linton, of London, and Jane Scott, of Carlisle. He soon showed talent for drawing, and was sent to the Newman Street School of Art, then conducted by Leigh, a pupil of Etty. He continued his studies there till the age of twenty-one, and then began to exhibit water-colours at the Dudley Gallery and the Institute of Water-Colour Painters; of the latter he was in 1867 elected a member, and his pictures soon became a special feature of the exhibitions. At the same time he became a member of the staff of artists on the Graphic. Among his pictures exhibited at the Institute may be mentioned: "Maundy Thursday," "1793," "Love the Conqueror," "Off Guard," "The Cardinal Minister," "The Earl of Leicester," and "Priscilla." Mr. Linton worked hard to obtain for the art of water-colour painting a recognised position. In 1863 he, together with other artists, opened the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, a development of the New Society which had been formed in 1832 by painters dissatisfied with the manner in which their art was treated by the Royal Academy. The exhibition was for many years confined to the works of members, but in 1883, having moved to large new quarters in Piccadilly, it was thrown open to all comers, and Mr. Linton was elected President. The Queen granted the title "Royal," and in 1885 conferred on the President the honour of knighthood. Sir James has also produced a number of pictures in oil; in 1878 he exhibited a small picture, "Biron," at the Academy, and in 1879 five oil paintings at the Grosvenor Gallery. In the same year he received a commission for a series of pictures representing the conflict between Islam and Christianity in the sixteenth century. In 1885 he exhibited at the Academy "The Marriage of H.R.H. the Duke of Albany," painted by command of the Queen. Sir J. Linton is also President of the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours, which holds its exhibitions in the winter at the rooms of the Water-Colour Institute; President of the Society of Illustrators; Hon. Member of the Scottish Water-Colour Society; Chairman of the Royal Drawing Society; Knight of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem; Officer of the Order of Leopold of Belgium. He was decorated with the Jubilee Medal in 1897. Address: 39 Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, W.

LIPPINCOTT, Sara Jane (Clarke), known by her pseudonym of "Grace Greenwood," was born at Pompey, New York, Sept. 28, 1823. She was educated at Rochester, New York. She removed with her father's family to New Brighton, Pennsylvania, in 1843, and soon began writing for magazines and other periodicals. In 1853 she was married to Mr.

Leander K. Lippincott, of Philadelphia. In 1854 she established the Little Pilgrim, a paper for children, which for some years had a wide circulation. She has appeared on the stage as a dramatic reader and as a lecturer. Besides frequent contributions to periodicals, she has published: "Greenwood Leaves," 1850-52; "History of my Pets," 1850; "Poems," and "Recollections of my Childhood," 1851; "Haps and Mishaps of a Tour in Europe," 1854; "Merrie England," 1855; "Forest Tragedy, and other Tales," 1856; "Stories and Legends of Ireland," and "History for Children," 1858; "Stories from Famous Ballads," 1859; "Bonnie Scotland," 1860; "Stories of many Lands," 1866; "Stories of France and Italy," and "Records of Five Years," 1867; "New Life in New Lands," 1873; "Heads and Tails," 1875; "Queen Victoria," 1883; and "Stories for Home-Folks," 1885. She has been perhaps best known as a correspondent of the New York Tribune and New York Times, writing from Washington and from Europe, where she spent a number of years.

LIPPMANN, Gabriel, French man of science, was born at Hallerich, in Luxemburg, Aug. 16, 1845. Admitted to the École Normale in 1868, he completed his physical and chemical education in the universities of Germany. He gained his doctor's degree by a remarkable thesis on the relations between electric and capillary phenomena (1875). These studies led him to the invention of the capillary electrometer, an instrument of marvellous sensibility. In 1883 M. Lippmann was nominated Professor of Mathematical Physics at Paris; and in 1886 succeeded Jamin as Professor of Experimental Physics; and in the same year was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences. He is married to a daughter of M. Cherbuliez, and is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. His writings are to be found in the journals of the Academy of Sciences, of which the most remarkable are: "Extension du Princip de Carnot à la Théorie des Phénomènes Électriques," 1876; "Sur le Propriétés Électriques et Capillaires du Mercure," 1877; "Méthode Thermoscopique pour la Détermination de l'Ohm," 1882. Besides the electrometer, M. Lippmann has invented other remarkable instruments, such as the capillary electromotor, and he is also interested in the photography of colours.

LIPTON, Sir Thomas Johnstone, Kt., merchant and philanthropist, was born in Glasgow of Irish parentage. He is the owner of extensive tea gardens in Ceylon, and is well known for his teas, which are within the reach of every purse. As an importer of tea he has been a notable benefactor of the working-man, or rather of the working-man's wife and children. On Thursday in Jubilee week (1897) he sprang into fame as the provider of the tea drunk by some 300,000 poverty-stricken Londoners, in fifty-six different centres where Jubilee dinners were provided for them at the kind instance of H.R.H. the Princess of Wales. To this colossal tea-drinking Sir Thomas Lipton most generously contributed £25,000. His generosity earned its reward, and he was knighted. Address: Osidge, Southgate, Middlesex.

LISTER, Lord, Joseph Lister, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., President of the Royal Society, Surgeon-Extraordinary to the Queen, Emeritus Professor of Clinical Surgery in King's College, London, is the son of the late Joseph Jackson Lister, Esq., of Upton, Essex, and was born in 1827. He is a B.A. and M.B. of the University of London, 1852; a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, England, 1852; and a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, 1855. He was for some time Regius Professor of Surgery in the University of Glasgow, and afterwards Regius Professor of Clinical Surgery in the University of Edinburgh. In 1876 he was one of the members appointed to the General Medical Council for Scotland by the Privy Council. In 1880 he received the Medal of the Royal Society; and in the following year the prize of the Academy of Paris was awarded to him for his observations and discoveries in the application of the antiseptic treatment in surgery, which has often been referred to as "Listerism," and is now of world-wide fame and universal beneficence. He received the degree of LL.D. at Glasgow University in 1879; D.C.L. at Oxford in 1880; LL.D. at Cambridge in 1880; and in 1883 was made a Baronet on Mr. Gladstone's recommendation. He has also been the recipient of many other honorary degrees and distinctions. In 1896, being then President of the Royal Society, he was elevated to the peerage, as Lord Lister of Lyme Regis, and is, if not the first medical man called to the House of Lords, certainly the first to be called there in recognition of his great position as a medical man. In the September of that year he was President of the British Association, and at the Liverpool meeting delivered a masterly and comprehensive address on "Listerism" and all that the word implies. Old pupils of his recognised in this address the sum and substance of the master's teaching during many previous years, but the general public, profoundly ignorant of the recent march of surgical science, were none the less profoundly impressed with what to them proved a revelation. Since that date his lordship has taken much the same position in the world of English science as that taken by Huxley a decade or two ago. The Royal College of Surgeons of England has presented him with its medal, an honour granted to very few, and he has been fêted at a great banquet of the medical profession and of scientific men generally. His portrait, painted by Mr. Oules, R.A., and subscribed for by his admirers, was presented to him by Mr. Davis-Colley, on behalf of the surgical profession, in the theatre of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, in the hall of which it now hangs. More recently he was entertained by his former "dressers" at a banquet, of which Dr. St. Clair Thomson was secretary. At the Virchow address and dinner (October 1898), Lord Lister fitly presided, and was the object of the illustrious German savant's most fervent eulogy. During his address, Professor Virchow expressed the admiration felt for Lord Lister's grand scientific achievements by the Continent at large by one of those acts of spontaneous courtesy which, though rarely witnessed in this self-contained island, are an honour to foreign men of learning, for he turned round, at a critical point in his oration, and shook the subject of our notice warmly by the hand. It was a historic incident. In June 1899 the Council of the Royal Institution of Public Health awarded the Harben Gold Medal for 1899 to Lord Lister, "in recognition of his eminent services to preventive medicine." He is the author of papers "On the Early Stages of Inflammation," &c., in the Philosophical Transactions; "On the Minute Structure of Involuntary Muscular Fibre," in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh; and of various other papers on "Surgical Pathology," &c. One of his latest papers on "Principles of Antiseptic Surgery" appeared in Virchow's Festschrift in 1891. He married, in 1856, Agnes, daughter of J. Syme. This lady died in 1893. Addresses: 12 Park Crescent, Portland Place, W.; and Athenæum.

LISTOWEL, Earl of, The Right Hon. William Hare, K.P., J.P., was born at Convamore, co. Cork, on May 29, 1833, and succeeded his father as 3rd Earl in 1856. Obtaining a commission in the Scots Guards in 1852, he was present at the battle of the Alma, where he was severely wounded, and retired as a Captain in 1856. He acted as a Lord-in-Waiting in 1880, was created K.P. in 1873, and is Vice-Admiral of the Province of Munster. Lord Listowel married, in 1865, Lady Ernestine Mary Brudenell-Bruce, daughter of the 3rd Marquis of Ailesbury. Addresses: Kingston House, Princes Gate, S.W.; and Convamore, Ballyhooley, co. Cork.

LITTLE, The Rev. William John Knox, M.A., Canon of Worcester, is a son of Mr. John Little, of Stewartstown, co. Tyrone, and was born in 1839. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1862 as a third class in the Classical Tripos, and proceeded M.A. in due course. He was successively assistant master in Lancaster and Sherborne Grammar Schools; curate of Christ Church, Lancaster; curate in charge of Turweston, Bucks; and curate of St. Thomas's, Regent Street. He was collated to the rectory of St. Alban's, Cheetwood, in 1875, and remained there until 1885, when he was appointed Vicar of Hoar Cross. In September 1881 he was nominated by Mr. Gladstone to the canonry in Worcester Cathedral that had been vacated by the promotion of Canon Bradley to the Deanery of Westminster. Canon Knox Little is well known as a most eloquent popular preacher of the High Church School, whose sermons suggest the grand flights of the Jesuit orators of the Roman Church. Perhaps his most memorable sermon is that which he delivered on the text in the "Song of Solomon," "He is chiefest among ten thousand; he is altogether lovely." He is the author of "Characteristics of the Christian Life," "Meditations on the Three Hours' Agony of our Blessed Redeemer," "Motives of the Christian Life," and a volume of "Sermons" and some novels, one of which is "The Child of Stafferton," 1889. One of his most recent publications is "The Christian House, its Foundation and Duties," 1891. He married, in 1866, Annie, eldest daughter of Mr. Henry Gregson, of Moorlands, Lancashire, and has issue. Address: The Vicarage, Hoar Cross, Burton-on-Trent.

LITTLER, Ralph Daniel Makinson, Q.C., C.B., is the son of the late Rev. Robert Littler of London, and was born on Oct. 2, 1835. He graduated B.A. at the University of London in 1854, was Common Law Prizeman, and is a member of the Convocation of the University. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1857, but was admitted a barrister at the Middle Temple in 1870, becoming a Q.C. in 1873, and a bencher in 1882. He practises on the Northern and North-Eastern Circuits, and is the author of "Practice and Evidence in Divorce Cases";

"Digest of Cases before Referees, in Parliament." Address: 6 Pump Court, Temple, E.C.

LIVEING, George Downing, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., eldest son of Edward Liveing, of Nayland, Suffolk, surgeon, was born Dec. 21, 1827, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. 1850; M.A. 1853; and became in the same year Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College. He was one of the Cambridge Essayists, 1855. He was appointed Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, 1860; Professor of Chemistry in the University of Cambridge, 1861; and was elected Fellow of the Royal Society, 1879; and is J.P. for Cambridgeshire. Professor Liveing is joint-author with Professor Dewar, of "Ultra-Violet Spectra of the Elements," in the Transactions of the Royal Society, 1883; and of many papers on spectroscopic subjects in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Proceedings of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and Philosophical Magazine; and of "Chemical Equilibrium the Result of the Dissipation of Energy," 1885. Besides his scientific work, Professor Liveing's energies have been much given to the spread of education. Before 1852 there were no laboratories in Cambridge in which students could learn the practical applications of science. In that year he established, at his own expense, the first chemical laboratory for undergraduates in Cambridge, and subsequently, for twelve years, he presided over the laboratory built for him by St. John's College. This was the beginning of that system of experimental teaching which has now so prominent a place at the University. In the first establishment of the local examinations of the University he took a leading part, and for several years he was the organising secretary for these examinations. During that time, and in great measure through his exertions, the examination and inspection by the University of secondary schools and the admission of girls and girls' schools to the examinations were commenced. He also took an active part in the establishment, in 1873, of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board. In 1875 he promoted, and in great measure organised, the examinations of the University in State Medicine, open to the whole medical profession, which have since taken the name of Examinations for the Diploma in Public Health, and have been the model for similar examinations by other bodies. In recent years he has actively promoted the establishment of a School of Agricultural Science at Cambridge, which has received the support of several county councils. Appointed with the President of Magdalen College, Oxford, to examine into the working of University Colleges, he issued his "Report on University Colleges," in conjunction with Mr. Warren, in 1897. He married, in 1860, Katharine, second daughter of Rowland Ingram, rector of Great and Little Ellingham, Norfolk, who died in 1888 without issue. Addresses: The Pightle, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

LIVERPOOL, Bishop of. See RYLE, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN CHARLES.

LIVERSIDGE, Professor Archibald, M.A., F.R.S., President Royal Society of New South Wales, was educated at a private school, and by private tutors in science in London. He entered the Royal College of Chemistry and Royal School of Mines, London, 1866, and obtained a Royal Exhibition at these places in 1867; this privilege was tenable for three years with £50 per year and remission of all fees, equal to about £100 in addition. At the same examination he obtained Medals in chemistry, mineralogy, and metallurgy. During his first year as student at the Royal College of Chemistry he was given charge of the Chemical Laboratory at the Royal School of Naval Architecture for one term, during the illness of the lecturer, and published his first paper on "Super-saturated Saline Solutions." He was trained in Chemistry at the College of Chemistry, under Professor Frankland, F.R.S., D.C.L., &c. He took the Associateship of the School of Mines, in Metallurgy and Mining, 1870, after having studied and passed in Physics under Professor Tyndall, Geology under Sir Andrew Ramsay, Mineralogy and Mining under Sir W. Warrington Smyth, Mechanics under Professors Willis and Goodeve, and Metallurgy under Dr. Percy. He also spent some time in Dr. Frankland's private chemical laboratory, as a senior student upon research work. In 1870 he obtained an open scholarship in science at Christ's College, Cambridge. During his first year at Cambridge he held the post of Demonstrator of Chemistry in the University Laboratory for two terms in the absence of Dr. Hicks. He was one of the first two students in the new Physiological Laboratory at Cambridge, just started by Professor Michael Foster, Secretary to the Royal Society. In 1872 he was offered the appointment of Professor of Chemistry and Mineralogy in the University of Sydney, and went out in September of that year. He was a Representative Commissioner at the Paris Exhibition in 1878, and a juror in chemistry and metallurgy. He has been a trustee of the Australian Museum, Sydney, since 1874, and during visits to Europe, America, &c., purchased most of the non-Australian mineral and geological collections which it possesses. Professor Liversidge has also been a member of the Sydney University Senate since 1878 and Dean of the Faculty of Science since the formation of that faculty in 1883. He made the chemical investigations upon the Sydney water supply for the Government in 1876; was one of the original members of the Board of Technical Education, and Hon. Secretary of the Royal Society of N.S.W. from 1874 to 1889, except when he was President in 1883-84. He was the President for 1889-90 (this being an annual office). He was elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society, England, in 1882. He published a work on the minerals of N.S.W. in 1888, to show the progress made in the knowledge of the mineralogy of N.S.W. during the first 100 years of its history. He originated the Australasian Association for the Advancement of Science, as a centennial record of the progress of the colonies. This Association held its first meeting in Sydney in 1890. He has visited Tasmania and New Zealand several times, Fiji, Java, China, Japan, and the United States in 1887. Professor Archibald Liversidge is an Associate of the Royal School of Mines, London; Fellow of the Chemical Society, London; Fellow Inst. Chemistry of Gt. Brit. and Irel.; F.G.S.; F.L.S.; F.R.G.S.; Mem. Phys. Soc. London; Mem. Mineralogical Soc. Gt. Brit. and Irel.; Cor. Mem. Roy. Soc. Tas.; Cor. Mem. Senckenberg Institute, Frankfurt; Cor. Mem. Soc. d'Acclimat., Mauritius; Hon. Fel. Roy. Hist. Soc. Lond.; Mem. Min. Soc. of France; Professor of Chemistry in the University of Sydney; Editor for many years of the Journal of the Royal Society of New South Wales; and is the author of nearly a hundred scientific papers and reports on chemistry, mineralogy, &c. Address: Sydney.

LLANDAFF, Bishop of. See LEWIS, THE RIGHT REV. RICHARD.

LLANDAFF, Viscount, The Right Hon. Henry Matthews, Q.C., ex-Home Secretary, was born in 1826, in Ceylon, where his father, of whom he was the only son, was a Puisne Judge. After graduating at the Universities of Paris and London, he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, after having been admitted to the Inn at the early age of eighteen. In 1868 he took silk, and from 1872 to 1876 acted as Examiner in Common Law to the Council of Legal Education. He has been engaged in several of the great cases of his time, notably the Home case, the Slade case, Reg. v. Boulton and Park, the Epping case, the Tichborne case, and the Crawford case. He contested the borough of Dungarvan three times unsuccessfully, but sat for it from 1868 to 1874. At the general election of 1886 he was returned for East Birmingham, being the first Conservative who ever sat for Birmingham. On the formation of Lord Salisbury's second Ministry, Mr. Matthews was appointed Home Secretary, and as such he had to endure a prolonged storm of adverse criticism in the Opposition press. In 1892 he was again returned for East Birmingham. In 1895 he was raised to the peerage by the title of Viscount Llandaff, his family having anciently been of that city. In 1897 he was appointed Chairman of the Royal Commission on the London Water Supply. Addresses: 6 Carlton Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LLEWELYN, Sir Robert Baxter, K.C.M.G., was born in 1848, and entered the Colonial Office in 1868. In the next year he became Registrar of the Colonial Secretary's Office of Jamaica, and was promoted to be Clerk of the Privy Council in 1877. In 1878 he was Commissioner of Turks Islands, and then was successively Administrator of Tobago, St. Vincent, and St. Lucia. In 1891 he was appointed Administrator of the Colony of the Gambia, which post he still holds. In 1898 he was created a K.C.M.G.

LLOYD, The Right Rev. Arthur Thomas, Suffragan Bishop of Thetford, is the son of the Rev. Henry W. Lloyd, Vicar of Cholsey, Berks, and was educated at Magdalen College School, and St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1868, and M.A. in 1870. Ordained in 1868, he was Curate of Cholsey from 1868 to 1873, and Curate-in-charge of Watlington, Oxon, from 1873 to 1876. He was presented to the Vicarage of Aylesbury in the latter year, and in 1882 became Vicar of the Cathedral Church of St. Nicholas, Newcastle, being at the same time appointed Hon. Canon and Rural Dean of Newcastle. Mr. Lloyd was appointed Suffragan to the Bishop of Norwich in 1894, under the title of Bishop of Thetford; he was also given the rectory of North Creake, Norfolk, and became Archdeacon of Lynn. Address: North Creake Rectory, Fakenham, Norfolk.

LLOYD, The Right Rev. Daniel Lewis, D.D., is the son of John Lloyd of Penywern, and was born on Nov. 23, 1843. He was educated at Jesus College, Oxford, where he was a scholar of his College, and where he gained a second class in Moderations in 1865, and a second class in the final school of Lit. Hum. in 1867. He was ordained in 1867, and in the same year was appointed Head-Master of Dolgelly School and Curate of Dolgelly. In 1873 he became Head-Master of the Friars' School, Bangor; and he accepted the post of Head-Master of Christ's College, Brecon, in 1878. After twelve years' work at Brecon, Dr. Lloyd was in 1890 consecrated Bishop of Bangor. He has published a Welsh Hymn Book under the title of "Emyniadun yr Eglwys." The Bishop has recently, owing to ill-health, been compelled to resign his see (November 1898). Address: Gwynfryn, Llanarth, Cardiganshire.

LLOYD, Edward, the famous tenor vocalist, was born in London in 1845. When seven years of age he entered Westminster Abbey choir. Afterwards he became solo tenor at the Chapel Royal, St. James's. Mr. Lloyd sang in Novello's Concerts in 1867, and at the Gloucester Festival in 1871, where he attracted much attention by his part in Bach's "Passion." In 1888 he went on a tour in America, and sang in the Cincinnati Festival. He repeated his visit in 1890 and 1892. In 1888 he sang also in the Handel Festival; and was principal tenor in the Leeds Musical Festival in 1889. Since that year he has frequently taken part in musical festivals at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere, notably at the Handel Festival in 1891. In 1890 and 1892 he received an enthusiastic welcome in the United States, and he has sung with his accustomed power at the Handel Festival, and others, since 1894.

LLOYD, The Right Rev. John, D.D., Bishop Suffragan of Swansea, is the eldest son of John Lloyd, and was born at Newport, Pembrokeshire, in October 1847. He was educated at Haverfordwest, at Cardigan, and at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, where he was exhibitor and scholar of his College, Prizeman in Divinity, and a Senior Optime in 1876, in which year he graduated B.A. Ordained in 1876, he was Curate, successively, of Roehampton, and Storrington, Sussex. In 1877 he was appointed to the Vicarage of Llanfihangel Aberbrythych, Carmarthenshire, and he became Rector of Penboyr, Llandyssil, Carmarthenshire, in 1884. Dr. Lloyd was, in 1890, consecrated Suffragan to the Bishop of St. David's, under the title of Bishop of Swansea; at the same time he became Vicar of Carmarthen, and Canon of St. David's. The Bishop has published numerous sermons and addresses. Addresses: Vicarage, Carmarthen; and Glanymor, St. David's.

LOBB, John, was born on Aug. 7, 1840, in Mile End New Town, in the county of Middlesex. After a creditable examination in 1862, he received a call to the Primitive Methodist ministry, but, preferred a commercial sphere, remaining a lay preacher. In 1870 he established a local journal, the Kingsland Monthly Messenger, which proved a success. In 1872 his services were transferred to the Christian Age, a weekly journal which had then been established about twelve months, with a sale of about 5000 copies weekly. In five years, by his energy, it reached a circulation of about 80,000 copies weekly. In 1880 Mr. Lobb became the chief proprietor. In 1876 he was urged by the late Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., and George Sturge, the well-known philanthropist, to raise a fund for the Rev. Josiah Henson, the original character of Mrs. Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Within seven months, by lectures and preaching sermons, he raised for him upwards of £2000. He edited the story of Mr. Henson's life, which also contained a preface by the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G. Within six weeks upwards of 30,000 copies were sold. Subsequently the book was translated into twelve languages. A quarter of a million have been sold. On Monday, March 5, 1877, Mr. Lobb received her Majesty's command to attend at Windsor Castle, with the hero of his book, and had the honour of inscribing his name in her Majesty's private album. At the triennial election of the London School Board of 1882, he was returned for the division of Hackney, second on the poll, polling 11,576. In 1885, of the thirteen candidates he was returned at the head of the poll, polling 15,092. In 1888 he was again returned at the head of the poll, polling 17,360 votes; and at the triennial election of 1891 he was again at the head of the poll, polling 14,002. At the triennial election of 1894 he lost his seat, it being the first and only occasion on which Mr. Lobb had identified himself with any party. Although known as an Independent, he was regarded as a "Diggleite." In 1897 he was again returned to the Board. It must be said in justice to Mr. Lobb, however, that he was strongly opposed to Mr. Athelstan Riley and his friends on the religious question. Mr. Lobb is known as the "famous pamphleteer," on "School Board Extravagance," "The Scandals of the Stores," "Pen and Ink Sketches of All the Members," "A Twelve Years' Experience of the London School Board." His first pamphlet, published in 1885, reached a sale of 97,000 copies in six weeks. He was for nine years Chairman of the Stores Committee, and subsequently Chairman to the Finance Committee in succession to

Sir Richard Temple, Bart., M.P. In 1886 he edited and published "The Life and Times of Frederick Douglass," the famous runaway slave who was afterwards Marshal to the District of Columbia, U.S.A., to which the Right Hon. John Bright contributed a preface. In 1879 he published the "Life of the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D.," and also "Arrows and Anecdotes and the Story of the Great Revival." In 1877 he published a weekly paper called the Daisy Family Story Paper, which in five years reached a weekly sale of 15,000 copies. In 1882 he received £1000 for the copyright of the Daisy, which was subsequently conducted by Mrs. Joseph Parker of the City Temple. He is a Guardian of the City of London Union, of whom there are ninety-four, being elected in 1885 for the parish of St. Bride, Fleet Street, E.C. He is a Member of the Metropolitan Asylums Board, and has published pamphlets on dementia, imbecility, and idiocy in its various forms. He is Ex-Chairman of the Lunatic Visiting Committee of the City of London Union, the Contract Committee, and is Vice-Chairman of the Finance Committee. In 1887 he was elected a Member of the Court of Common Council for the ward of Farringdon Without. He has served on the Central Markets, the Billingsgate Market, and was Vice-Chairman of the Finance of the Markets Committees. He has served for ten years on the Officers and Clerks Committee, and six years on the Freeman's Orphan School Committee, and was Chairman for two years in succession. He is also a Member of the Guildhall Library Committee, the Epping Forest Committee, and one of the Court of Assistants to the Honourable Irish Society. On the occasion of the German Emperor's visit to the City he was a Member of the Reception Committee, and in 1894 served on the Lord Mayor's Committee; and on the occasion of the Queen's visit to the City on June 22, 1898, was one of the five Common Councillmen appointed to receive her Majesty with the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs at Temple Bar. He has served for twelve years as a Governor of Lady Holles's Trust to the Ward of Cripplegate, E.C. He is a Governor of St. Bride's Foundation, a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society, and the Royal Geographical Society. On July 21, 1891, he was publicly presented with a testimonial in the form of a cheque for £250 and an illuminated address, in the Mansion House, by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Sir Joseph Savory, Bart., M.P. A silver tea and coffee service was at the same time presented to Mrs. Lobb. In 1896 he was the recipient of another public testimonial in the form of a solid silver fruit-stand and an illuminated address from the School Keepers under the London Board. Mr. Lobb is a Freeman of the Loriners' Company and the Blacksmiths' Company. A full-length portrait of Mrs. John Lobb was in the Royal Academy in 1897, No. 174 in Gallery No. 2, by Joseph Mordecai. Address: the Christian Age, St. Bride's Street, Ludgate Circus, E.C.

LOCH, Lord, The Right Hon. Henry Brougham Loch, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., D.C.L. Hon. Oxon., late Governor of the Cape, and High Commissioner for South Africa, was born on May 23, 1827, and is the son of James Loch, M.P., of Drylaw, Midlothian, and Anne, daughter of Patrick Orr, of Bridgeton, Kincardineshire. Entering the Royal Navy in 1840, he served until 1842; in 1844 he obtained a cornet's commission in the 3rd Bengal Light Cavalry, and was A.D.C. to Lord Gough in the Sutlej Campaign, and Adjutant and second in command of Skinner's Horse in 1852. Two years later he raised irregular Turkish cavalry in Bulgaria, and in 1857 joined the Earl of Elgin's mission to China as attaché. Afterwards we find him at the head-quarters of the army engaged in China. In 1858 he brought the Treaty of Yeddo to England, and in 1860 that of Tien-tsin and the Convention of Peking. He was at that time Secretary of the Chinese Mission. He was taken prisoner during the war, and with Mr. Boulby, the Times correspondent, was carried about in a cage by his captors, and exhibited to the natives. After his liberation he returned to England, became Private Secretary to Sir G. Grey in 1861, and in 1863 was appointed Lieut.-Governor of the Isle of Man, and subsequently Governor of Victoria; and in 1889 was appointed to succeed Sir Hercules Robinson as Chief Commissioner at the Cape. Here he was energetic in developing the resources of his colony. He was conspicuously before the public during the Matabele War in his character of representative of Imperial interests in South Africa. He several times visited England, and once more arrived in this country, with Dr. Jameson in November 1894. He retired from the Governorship of Cape Colony in 1895, and was succeeded by the late Sir Hercules Robinson (Lord Rosmead). He is married to Elizabeth, daughter of the Hon. E. E. Villiers, and niece of the 4th Earl of Clarendon. Addresses: 44 Elm Park Gardens, S.W., &c.; and Athenæum.

LOCK, Walter, D.D., Warden of Keble College, Oxford, and Dean Ireland's Professor of Exegesis of Holy Scripture, was born at Dorchester on July 14, 1846, being the second son of Henry Lock, solicitor. He was educated at the Dorchester Grammar School from 1856 to 1858; at Marlborough College from 1859 to 1865, and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he was a scholar, from 1865 to 1869. He gained a first class in the first Public Classical Examination, and the Hertford Scholarship in 1867; a first class in Literæ Humaniores in 1869; and the Craven Scholarship in 1870. He was elected a Fellow of St. Mary Magdalen College in 1869. He became Tutor of Keble College in 1870, Sub-Warden in 1880, and Warden in 1897. He was Senior Proctor in 1882-83. He was Select Preacher at Oxford, 1889-90, and at Cambridge in 1891, and was Examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of York in 1891. He was appointed Professor of Exegesis in 1895, and was elected Honorary Fellow of Magdalen College in 1897. He is the author of sermons preached in Keble College; "Sermons," 1877 and 1889; Articles in the "Dictionary of Christian Biography," 1887; in the "Dictionary of the Bible," 1897; "The Church," an Essay in "Lux Mundi," 1890; "John Keble," a biography, 1892; and is editor of the "Christian Year," with Introduction and Notes, 1895. Address: Keble College, Oxford.

LOCKHART, William Ewart, R.S.A., was born in Dumfriesshire on Feb. 14, 1846. He exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy at the early age of fourteen, and a few years later in the Royal Academy. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1870. Eight years later, in 1878, Mr. Lockhart was made a full Academician. He is the representative of the Scottish Academy among the Trustees of the British Institution, and is an Associate of the Royal Water-Colour Society. In June 1887 Mr. Lockhart was commissioned by her Majesty the Queen to paint, for the Royal Galleries at Windsor, a picture of the "Jubilee Celebration in Westminster Abbey," which large work engrossed his whole attention for almost three years. His principal works exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy are: "Priscilla," 1870; "Don Quixote," 1875; "Gil Blas," 1878; "Al-naschar," 1879; "Cardinal Beaton," 1881; "The Cid," 1882; "Swineherd," 1885; "Church Lottery," 1886; "Glaucus," and "The Jubilee Celebration in Westminster Abbey," 1887, &c. Three years ago he was awarded a medal in the Paris Salon for his portrait of Lord Peel, the late Speaker of the House of Commons. In 1898 the French Government purchased his picture in the Salon for the State collection. In 1897 he was elected a Member of the Society of Portrait Painters in London. Since the Jubilee he has been almost exclusively engaged on portraiture. As a young man he was several years in Spain, painted many scenes of Spanish life, and imbibed a great love for Spanish art, especially for the works of Velasquez. Address: 16 Phillimore Gardens, Kensington, W.

LOCKHART, General Sir William Stephen Alexander, G.C.B., K.C.S.I., Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in India, was born in September 1841. He is the son of the late Rev. L. Lockhart, of Wicketshaw and Milton Lockhart, co. Lanark. He entered the Indian Army in October 1858 as a Lieutenant of the 44th Bengal Native Infantry, and was promoted Captain in December 1868, Major in June 1877, and Colonel in April 1883. For a few months in 1858 he served with the 5th Fusiliers in Oude. Sir William Lockhart has seen very considerable war service, and has taken part in campaigns in India, Abyssinia, Afghanistan, Burma, and Sumatra. He served with distinction throughout the Bhootan Campaign of 1864-66 as Adjutant of the 14th Bengal Cavalry, and took part in the Reconnaissance to Cheerung, obtaining Medal and Clasp. In the Abyssinian Expedition of 1867-68 he was Aide-de-camp to Brigadier-General Merewether, and was present at the action of Arogee and the capture of Magdala; being mentioned in despatches. As Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster-General of the 2nd Brigade he served with the Hazara Field Force in the operations in the Black Mountain. During the Dutch War in Acheen of 1875-77 he took part in the capture of Lambada, and received the Dutch War Medal with Clasp, and promotion to Major. He served in the Afghan War of 1879 as Road Commandant in the Khyber Pass, and afterwards as Assistant Quartermaster-General to Lord Roberts's Division, and was present at the affair of Takht-i-Shah and the investment of Sherepore; he also took part in the operations round Cabul. Lieut.-Colonel Lockhart was mentioned in despatches, received a medal with clasp, and was promoted to a C.B. From June 1885 to July 1886 he was employed with the Chitral Mission, and in the Burmese Expedition of 1887 he obtained the command of a Brigade, and at the conclusion of the campaign received the thanks of the Government of India and promotion to K.C.B. In March of 1887 he was appointed a Brigadier-General in the Bengal Command, and some two years later Assistant Military Secretary for Indian Affairs at Headquarters. He was afterwards attached to the Punjab Frontier Force and chosen to command the two Miranzai Expeditions of 1891. Recognition by the Indian Government, mention in despatches and promotion to Major-General for distinguished service in the field, were the rewards of his efforts. In the following year he conducted the Isazai Expedition. Sir William Lockhart was promoted Lieutenant-General in 1894 and obtained the command of the Punjab, the most important of the Indian commands. During the same year an expedition was sent into Waziristan under his charge, and he again received the thanks of the Government of India for the skilful manner in which he conducted the operations to a completely successful issue. He was also promoted K.C.S.I. A rising on the Indian frontier in 1897, which subsequently assumed a very serious aspect, again brought into prominence the capacity and military ability of Sir William Lockhart. Soon after peace had been restored by Sir Bindon Blood in the Swat Valley, the Afridis captured the forts in the Khyber and effectually closed the Pass. The Mohmands and Orakzais immediately joined in the revolt, and an army of 40,000 British troops for punitive operations was placed under the command of Sir William Lockhart. Much heavy fighting ensued, but ultimately all the chiefs of the tribes came into the British camp and submitted. The Mohmands, however, again proved troublesome, and the Tirah Field Force was organised further to chastise them. The Governor-General in his despatch said, "That the manner in which the campaign had been conducted reflected great credit on Sir William Lockhart's skill and judgment." Sir William was shortly after chosen Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in India in the room of Sir George White. He was promoted to a G.C.B. on the Queen's Birthday in 1898 in recognition of his services on the Indian frontier. He is married to Mary Katharine, daughter of the late Captain William Eccles of the Coldstream Guards.

LOCKROY, Edward Simon, a French journalist and politician, son of the dramatist and director of the Théâtre Français, born in Paris, July 18, 1840, studied painting under Eugène Giraud and at the École des Beaux Arts. He accompanied M. Renan as secretary on his archaeological tour through Judæa and Palestine, 1860-64, and took part, under Garibaldi, in the expedition of Sicily. On his return to France he made his début in journalism and wrote for the Figaro, the Diable à Quatre, and the Rappel. For these articles he was condemned to four months' imprisonment and fined 3000 francs. During the siege of Paris he was chief of a battalion of the National Guard, and on Feb. 8, 1871, was elected to represent the Seine in the National Assembly, and voted against the preliminaries of peace. After the insurrection of March 18 he was arrested in the environs of Paris, taken first to Versailles, and then to Chartres, but was liberated in June without a trial. On July 23 following he was elected a Member of the Municipal Council of Paris. He then became editor of the Peuple Souverain, a popular political journal, and for an article entitled "Mort aux traîtres" he was tried and acquitted; but a few days afterwards, owing to a noisy duel with M. Paul de Cassagnac, he and his adversary were condemned to eight days' imprisonment. On March 27, 1873, he was again condemned to a month's imprisonment and a fine of 500 francs for an article, "La Libération du Territoire." During his imprisonment M. Lockroy was elected representative for the department of Bouches du Rhône by 55,830 votes. At the general election in February 1876 he was returned simultaneously for the 17th Arrondissement of Paris and for Aix, and was one of the 363 deputies who refused a vote of confidence in the Broglie Cabinet. In 1883 he acted with M. Floquet in carrying through his Exile Bill. M. Lockroy was Minister of Commerce under M. de Freycinet in 1886, and of Public Instruction in 1888 under M. Floquet; and in 1886 was charged with the organisation of the International Exhibition of 1889. In the September elections of 1889 he was elected for the Second District of the 11th Arrondissement of Paris, beating the Boulangist Massard by a large majority. M. Lockroy was for long an important member of Victor Hugo's circle, having married the widow of Charles Hugo in 1877. On the constitution of the Brisson Cabinet in 1898, he was offered, and he accepted, the Portfolio of Minister of Marine, a position on which he has laid the foundations of an European reputation. His statesmanlike reorganisation of the navy received such support from all responsible parties that, notwithstanding the overthrow of his colleagues, M. Lockroy retained office as Minister of Marine in M. Charles Dupuy's Cabinet of October 1898, and through this unusual opportunity was enabled to continue the vast scheme whose foundations he had already partly laid. His policy is as vigorous as his administration, and has brought him a large measure of official approval and general popularity. Personally M. Lockroy is essentially Parisian. He has been described as of that race of French troops who once stormed a city in silk stockings to the sound of violins. This fin-de-siècle portrait gives an excellent view of the popular French Minister. He is said to be capable of enunciating a policy in the midst of the light persiflage of a salon, and will discuss torpedoes in the entr'acte of a première at the Comédie Française. On the administrative side M. Lockroy is a Minister of large designs. Besides many departmental details into which it is impossible to enter here, he has reinforced regulations for the suppression of advancement by favour, and has inaugurated a school for petty officers. In fact, M. Lockroy is slowly and surely re-establishing the régime which Admiral Besnard, his old successor in office, promptly swept away. As there is no such thing as stability in contemporary French administration, we fear that M. Lockroy's reforms, excellent as they are, cannot survive the century. He has published several volumes, composed mainly of articles contributed to various journals: "Les Aigles du Capitole," 1869; "La Commune et l'Assemblée," 1871; "L'Isle Révoltée," 1877; "Ahmed-le-Boucher," 1887. He has also edited "Le Journal d'une Bourgeoise pendant la Révolution, 1791-1793," the lady in question having been his maternal grandmother, Mme. Julien.

LOCKYER, Sir (Joseph) Norman, K.C.B., F.R.S., born at Rugby, May 17, 1836, is the son of Joseph Hooley Lockyer, and Anne, daughter of Edward Norman, of Cosford, Warwickshire; was educated in various private schools in England, and on the Continent, where he attended the scientific lectures at the Sorbonne in Paris. He was appointed to the War Office in 1857, and from Lord de Grey received the appointment of editor of the Army Regulations in 1865; and, in conjunction with Mr. Thomas Hughes, M.P., placed the legislation of the War Office on an improved basis. In 1870 he was appointed Secretary of the Royal Commission on Scientific Instruction and the Advancement of Science, presided over by the late Duke of Devonshire, and, on the termination of the labours of that commission in 1875, was transferred by the then Prime Minister, Mr. Disraeli, to the Science and Art Department. In this Department he organised the Loan Collection of Scientific Apparatus, opened by her Majesty in 1876. He was subsequently employed in connection with the Science Museum, and the inspection of the scientific teaching in the Training Colleges. He was appointed a member of the Solar Physics Committee on its establishment in 1878, and Professor of Astronomical Physics in the Royal College of Science on its reorganisation in 1881. Sir Norman Lockyer is known as a worker in astronomical physics, a large contributor to scientific literature, and a lecturer on scientific subjects. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1860, and he contributed an important paper on the "Planet Mars" to the Memoirs of that Society. About that time he began telescopic and spectroscopic observations of the sun, and in 1866 proposed a method for observing the red flames without an eclipse, which method he and M. Janssen independently applied in 1868. To commemorate this discovery a medal was struck by the French Government in 1872. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1869, and independently, and in conjunction with Dr. Frankland, announced many important solar and physical discoveries to the Society in that and the following years. Since 1876, when his observatory was removed from his private residence at Hampstead to the Science and Art Department at South Kensington, he has communicated many memoirs to the Royal Society, dealing, among other matters, with the dissociation of the terrestrial elements in the sun, the spectra of sun spots, a revision of Kant's hypothesis on the origin of celestial bodies, the spectra of meteorites, the classification of stars as determined by their spectroscopic phenomena when photographed on a large scale, and on the origin of new and variable stars. He was chief of the English Government Eclipse Expeditions to Sicily in 1870, to India in 1871, to Egypt in 1882, to the West Indies in 1886, to Lapland in 1896, and to India in 1898. He also observed the total eclipse of the sun in the United States in 1878. He was elected Rede Lecturer to the University of Cambridge in 1871, and Bakerian Lecturer to the Royal Society in 1874. He received the Rumford Medal from the Royal Society in 1874, and the Janssen Medal from the Institute of France in 1891. In 1875 the Institute of France (Academy of Sciences) elected him a corresponding member in the Section of Astronomy. He has since been elected a member of the Academy of the Lincei of Rome, and of a large number of other academies in Europe and America. Sir Norman Lockyer has published "Elementary Lessons in Astronomy," 1870; "Contributions to Solar Physics," 1873; "The Spectroscope and its Applications," 1873; "Primer of Astronomy," 1874; "Studies in Spectrum Analysis," 1878; "Star-Gazing, Past and Present," 1878; "The Chemistry of the Sun," 1887; "The Movements of the Earth," 1887; "The Meteoritic Hypothesis," 1890; "The Dawn of Astronomy," 1894; "Rules of Golf," 1896; "Recent and Coming Eclipses," 1897; and "The Sun's Place in Nature," 1897. Many of these works have been translated into German, and some of them into Russian, Greek, and Chinese. During the years 1890-93, Sir Norman Lockyer carried on an investigation of the orientation of ancient temples, with a view of ascertaining the astronomical basis of the old temple worships. For this purpose he visited Egypt in 1891 and 1893; the results of his inquiries are included in his last published work. Sir Norman Lockyer is a Knight of the Brazilian Order of the Rose, and he received the distinction of C.B. for his public service on the occasion of the New-Year Honours in 1894, and K.C.B. on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee in 1897. On Nov. 22, 1894, a complimentary dinner, attended by many eminent men of science, was given to Sir Norman Lockyer to commemorate the jubilee of Nature, of which he is the original editor. In 1858 Sir Norman Lockyer married Winifred, daughter of William James, Trehinshon, near Abergavenny. Addresses: 16 Penywern Road, Earl's Court, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LODER, Gerald Walter Erskine, M.P., LL.B., J.P., D.L., was born in Sussex on Oct. 25, 1861, and is the fourth son of the late Sir Robert Loder, Bart., M.P. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A.). Called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1888, he became private secretary to the Right Hon. C. T. Ritchie, at that time President of the Local Government Board. From 1892 to 1896 he was private secretary to Lord George Hamilton, Secretary of State for India. Since 1889 he has represented Brighton as a Conservative, and is a Director of the London and Brighton Railway. He married, in 1890, Lady Louise, eldest daughter of the 10th Duke of St. Albans. Address: 48 Cadogan Square, S.W.

LODGE, Professor Oliver Joseph, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., was born on June 12, 1851, at Penkhull, near Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire, and is the son of Oliver and Grace Lodge, and grandson of Rev. Oliver Lodge, of Barking, Essex, and of Elsworth, Cambridgeshire (formerly of co. Tipperary), and of the Rev. Joseph Heath, of Lucton, Herefordshire. At the age of eight he went to Newport Grammar School, in the house of Rev. John Heawood; with whom also, when rector of Combs, Suffolk, he was under private tuition between the ages of twelve and fourteen. At fourteen he was taken into business to help his father, who was in failing health, and he continued in business till the age of twenty-one; matriculating at the London University and taking honours in Physics at the intermediate B.Sc., by evening work. He also obtained, through the Science and Art Department, a winter's work at the Chemical Laboratory, South Kensington. In 1872 he was proxime accessit to a scholarship at St. John's College, Cambridge, and in the same winter went to University College, London, to study mathematics under Professors Henrici and Clifford, and to work in Professor Carey Foster's laboratory. He took the D.Sc. degree, and married in 1877; lectured on Physics at the Bedford College (for ladies), became Assistant-Professor of Physics at University College, London, and, during the illness of Professor W. K. Clifford, took charge of most of his classes. In 1880 he was appointed Professor of Physics at the University College, then just established in Liverpool. This office he continues to hold. In 1887 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; and in 1888 the honorary LL.D. of St. Andrews University was conferred upon him. He is best known as a teacher, and he has examined for both the London University and the Science and Art Department. His writings are a text-book of "Elementary Mechanics," 1877; and "Modern Views of Electricity," 1889; a treatise on the phenomena of lightning and other disruptive discharges called "Lightning Conductors and Lightning Guards," 1892; and a popular illustrated work on astronomical biography and discoveries called "Pioneers of Science," 1893. His scientific papers have appeared chiefly in the Philosophical Magazine, but he has written considerably in Nature and the Electrician; occasionally also in the Engineer. He has lectured at the London Institution on "Electricity and Light," and on "The Ether and its Functions"; also at the British Association at Montreal on "Dust"; and at the Royal Institution on the "Deposition of Dust Fume and Fog by Electricity," on "The Leyden Jar," on "Aberration," and (in 1897) to a Christmas audience on "The Principle of the Electric Telegraph." His chief experimental work has been connected with the alternating character of lightning and other discharges, and with the propagation of electro-magnetic waves (see Philosophical Magazine, August 1888). In this latter subject, he was on the track of the nearly simultaneous discoveries made by the late Dr. Hertz. These discoveries verify the electrical and optical theories of Clerk Maxwell, and owe their importance and rapid acceptance to his scientific insight. In conjunction with the late J. W. Clark, Professor Lodge discovered the now well-known power of electricity to coagulate or condense suspended particles of fume or fog. He has also written largely on electrolysis and on contact electricity, and has devised models illustrating Clerk Maxwell's theories. In 1891 he was President of Section A of the British Association at Cardiff, where he delivered an address, which is often quoted, concerning the need for scientific recognition and investigation of "occult" phenomena. He is, in fact, an active member of the Society for Psychical Research, and frequently contributes to their Proceedings. For some years he was engaged in examining the question whether moving matter is able to disturb the ether of space, and other questions connected with the subject of astronomical aberration (Phil. Trans. Roy. Soc., 1893, 1897). His conclusion is that the ether is absolutely devoid of mechanical viscosity, and therefore cannot be disturbed in a "rotational" manner by any mechanical means. Another observation of importance, made while inventing the lightning guard for cables, &c., now manufactured by Dr. Alexander Muirhead, was the fact that metals cohered readily under electrical influence, a principle which has led to the most sensitive detector of electric waves known. Such waves emitted from one station can be received at a distant station, and there by aid of a coherer be made to affect any telegraphic instrument. This method of signalling across space was demonstrated publicly by several persons, but most completely by Professor Lodge in 1894, though it has not till recently excited much interest outside scientific circles. An account of these researches is contained in a little book published by the Electrician newspaper, London, entitled, "The Work of Hertz and some of his Successors." In conjunction with Dr. A. Muirhead, Professor Lodge has now devised and executed a plan for syntonising or tuning the emitter and receiver in wireless telegraphy, so that the response is discriminative as well as highly efficient, and he has made further advances in the same direction by another method which has not yet been published, though it has been referred to by Professor Silvanus Thompson in a recent lecture to the Society of Arts. In February 1899, he was elected President of the Physical Society of London. Professor Lodge married, in 1877, Mary F. A. Marshall. Address: 2 Grove Park, Liverpool.

LOEWE, The Rev. Dr. Louis, was born at Zülz, in Prussian Silesia, in 1809, and was educated at Rosenberg, in Silesia, subsequently at the theological colleges of Lissa, Nicholsburg, and Presburg, and the University of Berlin. He was appointed in 1839 Hebrew Lecturer and Oriental linguist to the late Duke of Sussex; in 1856 Head-Master of the Jews' College, Finsbury Square; in 1858 Examiner for Oriental Languages to the Royal College of Preceptors; and in 1868 Principal and Director of Sir Moses Montefiore's Theological College at Ramsgate. Dr. Loewe travelled under the auspices of the Duke of Sussex, the Duke of Northumberland (then Lord Prudhoe), the Earl of Munster, and the late Admiral Sir Sydney Smith, in the years 1836, 1837, 1838, in Egypt, Nubia, part of Ethiopia, Syria, Palestine, Turkey, Asia Minor, and Greece, for the cultivation of the study of Arabic, Coptic, Nubian, Turkish, and Circassian languages and literature, and accompanied Sir Moses Montefiore, Bart., on nine of his philanthropic missions to the East, and on four to Russia, Poland, Roumania, and Rome. He has published "The Origin of the Egyptian Language proved by the Analysis of that and the Hebrew," in the Asiatic Journal, 1837; "Briefe aus dem Orient" (Letters from the East), in Dr. Philippson's Allgemeine Zeitung des Judenthums, Nos. 18-79, in 18 numbers, Leipzig, 1839; a translation of J. B. Levinsohn's "Efés Dámim," a series of conversations at Jerusalem between a patriarch of the Greek Church and a chief Rabbi of the Jews, London, 1841; a translation of the Rev. David Nieto's "Máttéh Dán," being a supplement to the book "Kuzári," 1842; "Observations on a Unique Cufic Gold Coin, issued by Al-Aamir Beákhám Allah, Abû Ali Manzûr Ben Mustali, tenth caliph of the Fatimite dynasty," London, 1849; "A Dictionary of the Circassian Language," in two parts, English-Circassian-Turkish and Circassian-English-Turkish, 1854; "Memoir on the Lemlein Medal," 1857; besides numerous "Discourses" and papers in the Transactions of learned societies.

LOEWY, Maurice, National Astronomer of France, was born at Vienna, April 15, 1833, and was one of the most distinguished pupils of the Observatory of his native town. In consequence of his Jewish birth, he was not allowed to follow a scientific career in his own country. Le Verrier, the renowned co-discoverer of Neptune, heard of this, and invited him to Paris, offering him a post at the Observatory. In 1864 he became a naturalised French subject, and on the re-organisation of the Observatory in 1873 he was made chief of the instruments. He was appointed a member of the Bureau des Longitudes in 1872, and in the next year a member of the Academy of Sciences, to the chair of Delaunay. He was nominated Sub-Director of the Observatory in 1878, and Director in recent years. He is a member of the Academy of Sciences of Vienna and St. Petersburg and of the Royal Society, whose gold medal he gained in 1889, and he is a Commander of the Legion of Honour. His chief work has been the determination of the longitudes of Vienna, Berlin, Marseilles, and Algiers, compared with that of Paris, by a new method that he has invented. His writings, which are exclusively scientific, have been published in the Mémoires of the Academy of Vienna, in the Comptes Rendus of the Academy of Sciences, and in the Annales of the Observatory; his articles deal with the determination of orbits of comets and planets and other astronomical and mathematical questions. Address: L'Observatoire, Paris.

LO FENG-LUH, Sir Chih Chen, K.C.V.O., is the seventh son of Lo Shao Isung, a celebrated scholar and distinguished military officer of Foo Chow. He was born in 1850, and was educated privately by his father, and at the Imperial Naval College on the river Min, from which he passed out first in 1872. He subsequently came to London, and studied at King's College, and in 1877 was attached to Kosung Tao's Mission. From 1879 to 1881 he was at the Chinese Legation in Berlin, and in 1882 he became Secretary to Li Hung Chang (q.v.), accompanying him as First Confidential Secretary of his Staff on important foreign missions, among others, to Shimonoseki, where the Peace Treaty with Japan was signed (1895). He also formed part of the congratulatory Embassy to the coronation of the Czar and on the subsequent European tour (1896). In the next year he was appointed Chinese Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to London, which post he still holds. His Excellency became a Mandarin of the Fourth Rank in 1881, a Taotai in 1885, a Mandarin of the Second Rank in 1890, and in 1892 honours were awarded his ancestors for three generations. In 1896 he was created an Hon. Knight Commander of the Victorian Order, and he has also been decorated with Russian, German, Dutch, and Belgian Orders. He is the author of "Problems in Nautical Astronomy and Navigation," and "Solutions of Problems by Inter-Terminate Equations." Lady Lo, his wife, died in London in February 1899. Address: Chinese Legation, 49 Portland Place, W.

LOFTIE, Rev. William John, F.S.A., eldest son of John Henry Loftie and Jane Crozier, was born at Tandragee, in the county Armagh, July 25, 1839, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1864. Subsequently he turned to literature, writing first on antiquarian subjects in the People's Magazine (S.P.C.K.), of which he became editor in 1872. Elected F.S.A. in 1872, he published a "Century of Bibles," and in 1873 "The Latin Year," a collection of hymns. After holding temporary Church appointments he became Assistant-Minister of the Chapel Royal, Savoy, 1871, holding that post until 1895, and in 1879 published "Memorials of the Savoy"; meanwhile, having spent some winters on the Nile, he wrote "A Ride in Egypt," and has since published "An Essay of Scarabs," and written papers in the Archæological Journal on "Egyptology." Being also a student of old prints, he published, in 1877, a catalogue of the works of Hans Sebald Beham. He became connected with the Guardian in 1870, and was a weekly contributor for six years. In 1874 he joined the staff of the Saturday Review, and has written on art and archæology in the Portfolio, the Magazine of Art, and many other periodicals. In 1894 he joined the staff of the National Observer. The Art at Home Series, begun in 1877, resulted in the issue of twelve volumes, by various writers, including Mrs. Loftie, Mr. Andrew Lang, Mrs. Oliphant, and Mr. Walter Pollock. He then turned his attention to municipal antiquities, and besides a short guide entitled "Through London," and other books, has published two editions of "A History of London," "Windsor," "Kensington, Picturesque and Historical," "Westminster Abbey," a volume on the "City" for Mr. E. A. Freeman's series of Historic Towns, the authorised "Guide to the Tower," for the Government, of which 10,000 copies were sold in the first three weeks; "The Cathedral Churches of England," 1892; and "Inns of Court and Chancery," 1894. Besides these literary labours, he was one of the founders of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings. He married, in 1867, Jeannie, widow of J. J. Burnett, of Gadgirth, Ayr. Address: 3A Sheffield Terrace, Kensington, W.

LOFTUS, The Right Hon. Lord Augustus William Frederick Spencer, G.C.B., commonly called Lord Augustus Loftus, the fourth son of the 2nd Marquis of Ely, by the daughter of Sir H. W. Dashwood, Bart., was born on Oct. 4, 1817, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. Entering the Diplomatic Service, he was appointed Attaché at Berlin in 1837, and paid Attaché at Stuttgart in 1844. He accompanied Sir Stratford Canning (afterwards Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe) on his special mission to the Courts of Berlin, Vienna, Munich, and Athens, in March 1848. He was appointed Secretary of the Legation at Stuttgart in 1852, and in Berlin in 1853; and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Vienna in March 1858. He was appointed by the Queen to represent her Majesty at the marriage of his Serene Highness Prince Leiningen with the Princess Mary of Baden, at Carlsruhe, in August 1858. In December 1860 he was transferred to Berlin. On the elevation of the Mission in Berlin to the rank of an Embassy, he was transferred, Oct. 28, 1862, to Munich, which was on that occasion raised to the rank of a First-class Mission. He was created a K.C.B., Dec. 12, 1862; was promoted to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the King of Prussia, Jan. 19, 1866; and was made a G.C.B., July 6, 1866. He was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the North German Confederation, Feb. 24, 1868; was sworn a Privy Councillor, Nov. 11, 1868; and was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Russia, Oct. 16, 1871. The latter post he held till February 1879, when he was appointed Governor of New South Wales, a post held by him till 1885. In 1892 he published his "Diplomatic Reminiscences between the years 1837 and 1862." He married, in 1845, Emma, second daughter of Admiral H. Greville. Address: 9 Queen's Gate Place, South Kensington, S.W.

LOGUE, His Eminence Cardinal Michael, Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland, was born in 1840, and consecrated Bishop of Raphoe in July 1879; became Coadjutor for Armagh in 1887, and in 1888 succeeded to the Archbishopric. A Cardinal's hat was conferred upon him in January 1893. Address: Armagh.

LOMBROSO, Professor Cesare, criminologist, was born in November 1836 in Venice, and is of Venetian parentage. At the age of eleven he essayed the composition of romances, poems, and tragedies, after the style of Alfieri, and, for so young a writer, attained a respectable success. At twelve he developed, with the intensity of youth, a passion for the study of classical antiquity, and even published two small works on Roman archæology. At thirteen he was attracted to the investigations of sociology—a science then in its infancy—from a linguistic point of view, chiefly, we are told, with relation to Greek, Hebrew, Chinese, and Coptic. Being keenly interested in scientific pursuits, he was drawn at this time to natural science, and examined with particular attention the bearings of scientific research on the formation of crystals. Before entering the University of Turin he published two books on marked evolutionary lines—Darwin's theory was not propounded until some years later. While a student at the university he first approached that field of scientific work—criminology in its sociological relations—which has since given to his name a world-wide fame. He took up the investigation of mental diseases after a joint study of the history of ancient religions and of medicine, his conclusions being afterwards adopted by Virchow and other eminent specialists. In 1859 Lombroso joined the army, and later on became a military surgeon. He was appointed in 1862 to the charge of the department of mental diseases at the University of Pavia, where he initiated an institution for the insane, a psychiatric museum, and a series of researches in the application of exact scientific methods to the study of insanity. It is interesting to note, that at this period, which perhaps we might call the beginning of his professional career, Lombroso incurred the displeasure and, indeed, the derision of the scientific men of the time. It was said contemptuously that he was studying madness with a yard measure, a comment in which a slight element of truth appears to have been unnoticed by latter-day enthusiasts for the Lombroso method. However, notwithstanding the general scorn, the Professor went on quietly with his work, carrying on some important investigations into the causes of pellagra, a skin disease due to under-feeding, common among the peasantry of Northern Italy, the Asturias, Gascony, Roumania, and Corfu. Lombroso's system slowly made progress, and came to be widely adopted. This may not have been owing so much to the inherent value of his method as to the fact that his was the only attempt at that time to conduct criminal investigation with due regard to recent scientific discovery. Appointed as Director of the Asylum at Pesaro, he introduced many reforms in the conduct of that institution, and established a newspaper written and managed by the insane. He afterwards returned to Pavia, where he continued his psychiatric work, investigating the influence of atmospheric conditions on the mind, inventing an instrument to measure pain, and engaging in many studies, marked by extraordinary ingenuity, patience, and insight. It is said that Lombroso, even as a youth, exhibited a marvellous faculty, almost amounting to genius, of divining the possible bearings of other men's discoveries, and of turning his intuitions to important use in the consideration of new methods. Gifted as he was in this rare art, Lombroso eagerly assimilated the conclusions of Darwin as revealed in the latter's book, "The Origin of Species." An excellent critic has observed that Darwin's work "supplied, for the first time, an indispensable biological basis, and furnished that atavistic key of which Lombroso was tempted to make at first so much use, sometimes, it must be added, so much abuse. These circumstances combined to render possible for the first time the complete scientific treatment of the criminal man as a human variety, while Lombroso's own manifold studies and various faculties had given him the best preparation for approaching this great task." Lombroso, with his usual acuteness, at once commenced an elaborate treatise on much the same lines that Darwin had followed, testing the latter's theories at many points, and speculating with considerable success on the important suggestions towards the study of man which "The Origin of Species" gave to the scientific world. Lombroso's great work, "L'Uomo Delinquente," was not published, however, until 1876—nearly twenty years after the undertaking was conceived—and the second volume appeared only in 1889. The influence of "L'Uomo Delinquente" in Italy, France, and Germany is said to have been as immediate and as decisive as that of "The Origin of Species." Despine's "Psychologie Naturelle," the greatest work on the criminal which had appeared before Lombroso's, was partial; the criminal was therein regarded purely as a psychological anomaly. Lombroso first perceived the criminal as, anatomically and physiologically, an organic anomaly. He set about weighing him and measuring him, according to the methods of anthropology. Even on the psychological side he gained new and more exact results. He went back to the origins of crime among plants and animals, among savages and children. He endeavoured to ascertain the place of the criminal in nature, the causes of his appearance, and his treatment. It need hardly be said that this momentous investigation has earned for its conductor a reputation almost exceeding that of any other scientific man of the day. The results of that work are daily used on the Continent in the administration of several State prisons and in the control and supervision of many private asylums. Lombroso's methods have never been adopted in England. Rich, laborious, various, Lombroso's life-work has opened up so many new lines of investigation, and has suggested so many more, that it has everywhere been received as marking a new epoch. This distinguished man works steadily on in Italy. The scientific world is enriched, almost every month, by some new study of his, conceived in a truly remarkable brain. He has frequently contributed to the Nineteenth Century and other important English magazines. The Monist, an American quarterly philosophical magazine, contained in its number of June 1898 a very suggestive essay by Lombroso on "Progressive Phenomena in Evolution."

His work has now many English students, largely through the medium of such popular and useful series as the Criminology Series (Fisher Unwin) and the Contemporary Science Series (Walter Scott). Lombroso, as yet, exerts very little influence on English prison reformers, who are considered by some to run the risk of sinking the scientific beneath the purely emotional or traditional.

LONDON, Bishop of. See CREIGHTON, THE RIGHT REV. MANDELL.

LONDONDERRY, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Charles Stewart Vane-Tempest-Stewart, K.G., LL.D., D.L., J.P., son of the 5th Marquis, and Mary, eldest daughter of Sir John Edwards, Bart., was born on July 16, 1852, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford. As Viscount Castlereagh he unsuccessfully contested South Kensington in 1874, and Montgomery District in 1877, and sat for County Down from 1878 to 1884. On the death of his father in 1884 he succeeded to the title, and on the formation of Lord Salisbury's second administration in 1886, was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. He remained at Dublin till 1889. He was Chairman of the London School Board from October 1895 until 1898, and in 1897 was appointed A.D.C. to the Queen. He married the eldest daughter of the Earl of Shrewsbury, and is the owner of extensive collieries in Durham. His ancestor, the second peer, was the celebrated Viscount Castlereagh. Addresses: Londonderry House, Park Lane, W.; Wynward House, Stockton-on-Tees, &c.

LONG, John Davis, American jurist and statesman, was born at Buckfield, Maine, Oct. 27, 1838. Educated at Harvard University, and graduating there in 1857, he afterwards studied law, was admitted to the Bar in 1862, and practised his profession in Boston. He was a Member of the State Legislature of Massachusetts in 1875-78, being Speaker of the Lower House for the last three years; was Lieutenant-Governor of the State in 1879 and Governor in 1880, 1881, and 1882; was elected to the forty-eighth Congress, and re-elected to the forty-ninth and fiftieth Congresses. In 1897 he was appointed to be Secretary of the United States Navy under President McKinley.

LONG, The Right Hon. Walter Hume, M.P., J.P., D.L., President of the Board of Agriculture, is the eldest son of the late Richard Penruddocke Long, Esq., of Dolforgan, Montgomeryshire (who represented North Wilts from 1865 to 1868), by Charlotte Anna, daughter of William W. Fitzwilliam-Hume Dick, Esq., late M.P. for Wicklow, and also grandson of the late Walter Long, Esq., who represented North Wilts for thirty years. He was born at Bath, July 13, 1854. He was educated at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford. He represented North Wiltshire in Parliament from 1880 to 1885, and the Devizes Division of that county from 1885 to the general election in July 1892, when he was defeated; in the following December, however, he was elected for the West Derby Division of Liverpool. From 1886 to 1892 he acted as Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board under Mr. Ritchie, and in 1895 he became President of the Board of Agriculture, and was sworn of the Privy Council. Mr. Long may be described as being a "Progressive Conservative." He is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant of Wiltshire, and Colonel of the Wilts Yeomanry. He married in 1878 Lady Dorothy Blanche, fourth daughter of the 9th Earl of Cork and Orrery. Addresses: 11 Ennismore Gardens, S.W.; and Rood Ashton, Trowbridge, Wilts.

LONGLEY, Sir Henry, K.C.B., Chief Charity Commissioner for England and Wales, was born in 1833, and is the son of the late Archbishop Longley and Caroline, daughter of the first Lord Congleton. He was educated at Rugby and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1856, M.A. in 1859, and B.C.L. in 1863. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1860, and after going the Northern Circuit for a short time, ultimately practised at the Equity Bar and as a conveyancer. He was appointed a Poor-Law Inspector in 1868, and was in charge of the Metropolitan Poor-Law District from 1872 to 1874. In the latter year he was appointed Third Charity Commissioner upon the transfer of the duties of the Endowed Schools Commissioner to the Charity Commission. He was appointed Second Charity Commissioner in 1879, and Chief Charity Commissioner in July 1885 upon the death of Sir W. R. Seymour Fitzgerald, G.C.S.I. Sir H. Longley was created C.B. in 1887, and K.C.B. in 1889; he is the author of a report of the Local Government Board made in 1873 on "Poor-Law Administration in London, with special reference to the disposal by Boards of Guardians of Applications for Relief." He married, in 1861, Diana, second daughter of John Davenport, of Foxley, Herefordshire. Addresses: 8 Lowndes Street, S.W.; Gwydyr House, Whitehall, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LONGMAN, Charles James, M.A., J.P., was born on April 14, 1852, and is the second son of the late William Longman, the well-known publisher. He was educated at Harrow and University College, Oxford, where he took a second class in Classical Mods., a third class in Mod. Hist., and graduated M.A. in 1877. He has succeeded his father in the firm of Longmans, Green & Co., and since 1882 has edited Longmans' Magazine. He was President of the Publishers' Association in 1896 and 1897. He is joint-author of the work on "Archery" in the Badminton Series, and in 1883 was Archery Champion of England. He is married to Harriet, second daughter of Sir John Evans, K.C.B., F.R.S. Address: 27 Norfolk Square, W., &c.

LONGSTAFF, L. W., is the eldest son of the late Dr. G. D. Longstaff, and was born in 1841. He received his education at Wandsworth under Bishop Staley, and studied chemistry at Frankfort-on-the-Main and at the Royal College of Chemistry. He is a director of Blundell, Spence, & Co., and is favourably known in the world of capital and labour as having inaugurated one of the first successful attempts to reconcile employers and employed. He has been President of the Hull Incorporated Chamber of Commerce and Shipping, and is F.R.G.S. and member of many other scientific bodies. He has recently become famous as the donor of £25,000 for the equipment of the National Antarctic Expedition. Address: Hull.

LONGSTREET, General James, was born in South Carolina in 1821; graduated at the Military Academy at West Point in 1842; and was on duty in Missouri and on the Mexican frontier till 1846; took part in the Mexican War, 1846-48, where he was wounded; attained the rank of Captain and Brevet Major; served subsequently in Texas and as Paymaster in the U.S. Army, and became a Major on the staff in 1858. He resigned his commission to take part with the South in the Civil War, June 1, 1861, and was appointed to the command of the 4th Brigade of General Beauregard's first corps near Centreville. He was in command in the affair at Blackburn's Ford, July 18, 1861, and engaged in the battle of Bull Run, July 21. He commanded the Confederate troops in the battle of Williamsburg, May 6, 1862, and commanded the left wing of the Confederate army in the battle of Chickamauga, Sept. 20, 1863. In the later part of 1861 he was made Major-General, and won reputation under General Lee in the campaigns against M'Clellan, Pope, Burnside, and Meade. After the battle of Sharpsburg, 1862, Longstreet was promoted to the command of a corps, with the rank of Lieutenant-General. He took an active part in the battle of Gettysburg, July 1-3.

He was also conspicuous in the campaign of the Wilderness, May 1-6, 1864, where he was severely wounded, but recovered in time to lead his corps during the siege of Petersburg. He surrendered with General Lee in April 1865. After the war General Longstreet acted zealously for the restoration of harmony between the two sections. Having been amnestied by President Johnson, he was so cordial towards the Administration that President Grant appointed him Surveyor of the Port of New Orleans. In 1875 he took up his residence in Georgia, and in 1880 was sent as Minister to Turkey, where he remained until 1881. He was subsequently U.S. Marshal for the Northern District of Georgia, and in 1897 was appointed U.S. Commissioner of Railroads by President M'Kinley. He resides at Gainesville, Georgia.

LOPES, Sir H. C. See LUDLOW, LORD.

LOPES, The Right Hon. Sir Lopes Massey, Bart., of Maristow, Devon, M.P. for Westbury from 1857 to 1865, and for South Devon from 1868 to 1885, Civil Lord of the Admiralty from 1874 to 1880, D.L. for Wilts and Devon, was born on June 14, 1818, and educated at Winchester and Oriel College. Sir Massey had several parliamentary contests, but the most severe was that with Lord Amberley, son of the late Lord John Russell, for South Devon in 1868, which lasted sixteen weeks, and which Sir Massey won by a majority of upwards of 500 votes. During the thirty years he was a member of the House of Commons he took a very prominent part in all measures which had reference to the agricultural interest, and more particularly directed his attention to the subject of Local Taxation, contending that real property (i.e. land and houses) was very unjustly burdened with many charges which were national in their character, and ought therefore to be transferred to the Imperial Exchequer. Though at first there was much indifference on this subject among all parties, in and out of the House of Commons, and he met with comparatively little sympathy, he persevered every session in bringing this question before the House, and his able and exhaustive speeches in exposing the grievances and anomalies of the local taxpayer gradually created increasing interest in this subject until finally, in 1872, he carried a resolution "that it was expedient to remedy the injustice of imposing taxation of national objects upon one description of property, and that the ratepayers should be relieved from charges imposed upon them for the administration of justice, police, and lunatics." This resolution was carried into effect by Lord Beaconsfield's Government in 1874. The whole cost of the administration of justice and of prisons, as well as half the expenses of police and lunatics, were transferred to the Imperial Exchequer, and the ratepayers were relieved to the extent of nearly three millions. As Chairman of the Local Taxation Committee, which he initiated, Sir Massey consistently and successfully opposed several other measures which proposed to place further charges on the land rates, and when the late Mr. Stansfield brought forward the Public Health Bill, he carried an amendment that one half of the salaries of medical officers and inspectors should be defrayed by the National Exchequer. Mr. Goschen, who, as President of the Poor-Law Board, was his chief opponent on these questions in the House of Commons, has since publicly admitted there that the credit of these changes for the relief of local rates was due to Sir Massey's advocacy, and that he was in error in his opposition to them, and has himself since proposed and carried other important measures which have tended to relieve the local taxpayer. During the six years Sir Massey held the office of Civil Lord to the Admiralty, he introduced many reforms in the secretariat and in the dockyards. He was Chairman of several committees which were appointed for this object. By his management of the Greenwich property, which was entirely under him, he very much increased the value and income of this property. This enabled him very considerably to increase the Greenwich Age Pensions, and the number of boys educated in the Greenwich School. Lord Beaconsfield was so satisfied with the way in which Sir Massey fulfilled his duties, that he offered him the higher office of Secretary to the Treasury, in succession to the late Mr. W. H. Smith, but Sir Massey was so interested in his work that he preferred to continue in it. Sir Massey resigned his seat for South Devon in 1885. He married (1) Bertha, only daughter of the 1st Lord Churston, who died Jan. 13, 1872, leaving one surviving son, Henry Yarde Buller Lopes, M.P. for Grantham, who married Lady Albertha, daughter of the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe; (2) in 1874, Louisa, daughter of Sir Robert William Newman, Bart., of Mamhead. Addresses: Mavistow, Rorborough, South Devon; 28 Grosvenor Gardens, S.W.

LORNE, Marquis of, The Right Hon. John Douglas Sutherland Campbell, G.C.M.G., LL.D., D.Sc., D.L. (Dumbartonshire since 1896), M.P., is the eldest son of the Duke of Argyll and Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the 2nd Duke of Sutherland, and was born at Stafford House, London, on Aug. 6, 1845. He was elected M.P. for Argyllshire, in the Liberal interest, in February 1868, and in December of the same year he became private secretary to his father at the India Office. He married the Princess Louise, fourth daughter of Queen Victoria, on March 21, 1871. The marriage ceremony was performed in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, by the Bishop of London, assisted by the Bishops of Winchester, Oxford, and Worcester. He was created a Knight of the Thistle in 1872. He has written "A Trip to the Tropics and Home through America," 1867; "Guido and Lita: a Tale of the Riviera" (a poem), 1875; "The Psalms literally rendered in Verse," 1877; "A Life of Lord Palmerston," 1890; "Windsor Castle"; and a libretto for the opera "Diarmid," 1897. In July 1878 he accepted the post of Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, in succession to Lord Dufferin. He was soon afterwards created a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and George. Accompanied by the Princess Louise, he proceeded to Canada, November 1878, where he had an enthusiastic reception. His term of office, during which he had travelled very extensively throughout the Dominion, expired in 1883, when he was succeeded by the Marquis of Lansdowne. He has since written on Imperial Federation and on many public topics. At the general election in 1885 Lord Lorne contested Hampstead as a Liberal, against Sir Henry Holland. In 1892 he contested Bradford. In 1895 he was returned as a Liberal Unionist for South Manchester. He has been Governor of Windsor Castle since 1892, and has the Volunteer Order for Long Service. Addresses: Kensington Palace, W.; Roseneath, Dumbartonshire; and Athenæum.

LOTHIAN, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Schomberg Henry Kerr, K.T., LL.D., F.R.S.E., F.L.S., was born on Dec. 2, 1833, is the second son of the 7th Marquis, and succeeded his brother as 9th Marquis in 1870. He was educated at Glenalmond, Eton, and New College, Oxford. After serving on Sir James Outram's Staff in Persia, in 1857, he entered the Diplomatic Service, in which he was appointed second Secretary of Legation at Frankfurt in 1862, and in the same capacity at Vienna in 1865. Lord Lothian was Secretary for Scotland, and Vice-President of the Council of Education for Scotland from 1887 to 1892, and held the position of Lord Rector of Edinburgh University from 1887 to 1888. He has been Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal of Scotland since 1874, and Captain of the Corps of Royal Scottish Archers since 1884. He is President of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, and of the Royal (Scottish) Geographical Society, K.T., 1878; P.C., 1886. He was married, in 1865, to Victoria Alexandrina Montagu-Douglas-Scott, daughter of the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. Addresses: 39 Grosvenor Square, W.; and Newbattle Abbey, near Dalkeith, N.B.

LOTI, Pierre. See VIAUD, JULIEN.

LOUBET, Émile, President of the French Republic, was born at Marsanne, Drôme, on December 31, 1838, his father being a peasant proprietor. He studied law, obtained the degree of Doctor, and established himself at Montélimar, of which town he became Mayor in July 1870. He entered political life in 1876, as representative of Montélimar, and took his seat among the Republican Left. His early Parliamentary career was marked by his support of M. Dufaure, the enemy of the Monarchist coalition; he voted for preventing non-authorised religious congregations from teaching, for the invalidation of the election of the Communist Blanqui, and for free elementary education. He supported the Gambetta and Ferry ministries, and voted for the Tonkin and Tunis credits. In 1885 he became Senator for his Department, sitting among the Moderate Republicans, and two years later was appointed Minister of Public Works in the Tirard Cabinet, which resigned in 1888, when he refused to join M. Floquet. When M. de Freycinet resigned in 1892, the President, M. Carnot, called upon his old friend to re-form the Cabinet, which he did with the majority of the former members, taking himself the Portfolio of the Interior from M. Constans, while M. de Freycinet became Minister of War. His policy was that of the Extreme Left, and in the strike of the Carmaux miners, he was reproached by the Left for lack of sympathy with the miners, and by the Right for his tolerance towards attacks on the liberty of the subject. M. Loubet offered himself as arbitrator between the men and the company, and managed to patch up a peace between them. The men construing this into a victory, made revolutionary demonstrations at Carmaux and at Lyons, and the office of the company at Paris was almost blown up by an infernal machine. The Right endeavoured to lay the blame of this on the weakness of the Government, but they were unsuccessful in the division. However, in November 1892, the Panama affair was seized upon as a pretext for upsetting the Ministry, which was succeeded by that of M. Ribot. In 1895 he was appointed President of the Senate, in succession to M. Challemeil-Lacour, and filled that post with much distinction. He was a warm friend of M. Faure, and advised him on critical occasions. On the sudden death of the latter, Feb. 16, 1899, M. Loubet was called upon by the united votes of the Senate and Chamber to fill his place. He has been all his life remarkable for his devotion to work and for simplicity of manners, being a contrast to M. Faure, who was most attentive to ceremony and a slave to the protocol.

LOUGH, Thomas, M.P., was born in Ireland in 1850, and is the son of Matthew Lough, of Killynebbur House, Cavan, and Martha, daughter of William Steel. He was educated at the Royal School, Cavan, and at the Wesleyan Connectional School, Dublin. Mr. Lough, who is a strong Radical, contested Truro in 1886, and entered Parliament for Islington in 1892, being re-elected in 1895. In 1886 he founded the Home Rule Union, of which he has been an Hon. Secretary. He has been a citizen of the Metropolis since 1880, his business being that of a tea merchant, and in October 1892 he started the London Reform Union, having for its main object the improvement of the municipal government of London. He is now Chairman of the Union, Mr. Passmore Edwards being President. He published, in 1888, "Glimpses of Early Ireland," and, in 1896, "England's Wealth, Ireland's Poverty." He married, in 1880, Edith, daughter of the late Rev. John Mills. Addresses: 29 Hyde Park Gate, S.W.; and Drummully House, co. Cavan.

LOUISE, H.R.H. Princess, Marchioness of Lorne, Louise Caroline Alberta, is the fourth daughter of her Majesty, the Queen, and was born at Buckingham Palace on March 18, 1848. She was married, on March 21, 1871, to the Marquis of Lorne, eldest son of the Duke of Argyll. The Princess devotes a good deal of time to painting and sculpture. She is an accomplished painter in water-colours, and an industrious hon. member of the exclusive Old Water-Colour Society. She is also distinguished as one of the very few women sculptors in Great Britain. At an early age she is said to have watched the late Mrs. Thorneycroft at work, as the mother of the great sculptor modelled the young Royal Princess and Princesses at various ages. Afterwards she studied her difficult art under the late Sir Edgar Boehm, R.A., and under his influence produced her fine statue of the Queen, now placed in Kensington Gardens, between the east front of Kensington

Palace and the Round Pond. To execute this idealised representation of her royal mother she was chosen by the Committee of the Women's Jubilee Fund of 1887. The work was subscribed for by women, and is a conspicuous landmark in a park which contains only one other notable statue, that of Edward Jenner. Another fine example of her work is her marble bust of the Queen in the Gallery of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colour. Her studio is in her home in Kensington Palace. Princess Louise, besides being a Princess of the United Kingdom, is Duchess of Saxony, and Princess of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and V.A. and C.G.

LOVELAND, Richard Loveland, Q.C., D.L., Deputy-Chairman of the County of London Sessions, was born in London, July 18, 1841, being the only surviving child of the late John Perry Loveland, J.P., Middlesex, and Harriet Hannah, only child of the late Richard Errington, of Beaufront, near Hexham, Northumberland, and granddaughter of Thomas Loveland of Park Place, Islington, London. By royal license, dated March 28, 1861, he was authorised to take the surname of Loveland instead of that of Oldershaw, and to bear the arms of Loveland quarterly with those of Oldershaw. He was educated at Kensington Grammar School privately, and at Pembroke College, Oxford. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and Lincoln's Inn in 1865; and was Deputy-Chairman of Middlesex Quarter-Sessions, 1889-96. He was appointed Deputy-Chairman of the County of London Quarter-Sessions in 1896, and Queen's Counsel in 1897. He is editor of Sir John Kelying's "Crown Cases"; Shower's "Cases in Parliament"; Hall's "Essay on Rights of Seashore," and joint-editor of Griffith and Loveland "On the Judicature Acts." Mr. Loveland is Past Master of the Worshipful Company of Turners of London, and was an Alderman of the Middlesex County Council up to 1896. He married Maria Elizabeth Oddie, fifth daughter of the Rev. P. H. Hind, Vicar of Woodcote-cum-Southstoke, Oxon. Address: 1 Gloucester Square, Hyde Park.

LOW, Lord, Alexander Low, J.P., is the son of James Low of "The Laws," Berwickshire, and was born in 1845. He was educated at Cheltenham College, St. Andrews University, and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained first class honours on graduating B.A. He was called to the Scotch Bar in 1870, and was appointed a Lord of Session in Scotland in 1890, at the same time receiving the title of Lord. He was married in 1875 to Annie, daughter of Lord Mackenzie, Lord of Session. Address: 12 Drumsheugh Gardens, Edinburgh; and "The Laws," Edrom.

LOW, Lieut.-General Sir Robert Cunliffe, G.C.B., son of the late General Sir John Low, G.C.S.I., was born in the parish of Kemback, Fife, in January 1836. He entered the 4th Bengal Cavalry as a Lieutenant in September 1855. He was promoted Captain in January 1862, receiving the brevets of Major in 1872 and Colonel in 1883. Sir Robert has seen considerable war service all over India, in Afghanistan, and in Burmah. During the Indian Mutiny he was present at many actions, including the siege and capture of Delhi, and in the operations in the Jhujur district; the siege of Lucknow, and the operations in Central India. He was mentioned in despatches, and thanked by the Indian Government for his services, receiving a medal with two clasps. He commanded a company in the second Eusofzai Expedition on the North-West Frontier in 1863. The Afghan War, however, gave Sir Robert his great opportunity, for, as Director of Transport to the army at Cabul, he rendered Lord Roberts invaluable service in the march to Candahar. He also accompanied the expedition to the Bezar Valley, and was present at the action of Zawa. He was mentioned in despatches, and received a C.B. and the command of a brigade in India. In the Burmese War of 1885 he had charge of a brigade with the rank of Brigadier-General, and was again mentioned in despatches. For his services during the campaign he was created a K.C.B., and was also promoted to Major-General in the Bengal command. In 1895 he was chosen to command the Chitral relief force. That campaign is considered a masterpiece of the "Art of War," and the successful issue to which it was brought was due in a very great measure to Sir Robert Low. As a reward for his distinguished services he was created a G.C.B., an honour never before conferred upon an officer below the rank of full General or Lieut.-General. He was promoted Lieut.-General in November 1896. He married, in 1862, Constance, daughter of the late Captain Taylor, H.E.I.C.S. Address: Lucknow, India.

LOW, The Hon. Seth, LL.D., was born at Brooklyn, New York, Jan. 18, 1850. He was graduated from Columbia College, New York City, in 1870, and immediately entered the mercantile house of his father, in which in 1875 he became a partner. In 1881 he was nominated as an independent (Reform) candidate for the mayoralty of his native city, and was elected. He served for two terms (1882-85), and during his administration accomplished much in purifying municipal politics. On leaving that office he again became engaged in active business, until his election, in 1889, as the successor of the late Dr. F. A. P. Barnard to the Presidency of Columbia College, of which he was already a trustee. Mr. Low has been for a number of years a member of the New York Chamber of Commerce; is President of the Archæological Institute of America; a Vice-President of the New York Academy of Sciences; was the founder and first President of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities; and one of the organisers and the first President of the Young Men's Republican Club of Brooklyn. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of the State of New York and Amherst College in 1889, and by Harvard University, University of Pennsylvania, and Trinity College in 1890. In 1897 he was the candidate of the Citizens' Union party for the Mayoralty of New York, but was not elected. He is (May 1899) one of the American delegates to the Peace Conference at the Hague.

LOW, Sidney James, born on Jan. 22, 1857, was educated at King's College School, and Balliol College, Oxford, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple. In 1883 he was appointed Lecturer on History at King's College, London. In 1884 he edited jointly with the late Prof. Pulling, the "Dictionary of English History," a well-known work of reference. Mr. Low has been closely connected with the London daily press for many years, and was editor of the St. James's Gazette from 1888 to December 1897. He has also contributed extensively to the Nineteenth Century, the Fortnightly Review, and other magazines. Permanent address: 2 Durham Place, Chelsea, S.W.

LOWE, Lieut.-General Sir Drury Curzon Drury-. G.C.B., J.P., son of the late Mr. William Drury Lowe, of Laco Park, Derbyshire, by the Hon. Caroline Esther Curzon, daughter of the 2nd Lord Scarsdale, was born in 1830 and educated at Oxford University, of which he is a graduate. He entered the army in 1854, became Captain in 1856, Major in 1862, Lieut.-Colonel in 1866, Colonel in 1871, and Major-General in 1881. He served with the 17th Lancers in the Crimea, from June 18, 1855, including the battle of the Tchernaya, the siege and fall of Sebastopol (Medal with Clasp, and Turkish Medal); also in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1858-59, including the pursuit of the rebel forces under Tantia Topse, and the action of Zeerapore (mentioned in despatches, Medal with clasp for Central India). He commanded the 17th Lancers and the Cavalry of the 2nd Division in the Zulu war of 1879, and led the charge at the conclusion of the battle of Ulundi, in which he was wounded (C.B., Medal with clasp). He served in the Boer war of 1881, under Sir Evelyn Wood, in command of the Cavalry Brigade; served in the Egyptian war of 1882 in command of the Cavalry Division, and was present at the engagements of El Magfar Mahota, the two actions at Kassassin, and the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, immediately after which he commenced a forced march with the cavalry, by which he obtained possession of Cairo, the surrender of its citadel, and of the rebel chief Arabi (six times mentioned in despatches, received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, K.C.B., Medal with clasp, second class of the Osmanieh, and Khedive's Star). From 1885 to 1890 he was in command of the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot, and was also I.-G. of Cavalry for Great Britain. From 1890 to 1891 he was I.-G. of Cavalry at the Headquarters of the army, and in 1892 was appointed Colonel of the 17th Lancers. In 1895 he retired. He is a J.P. for Hants. Address: Key Dell, Horndean, Hants.

LOWE, Canon Edward Clarke, D.D., born at Everton, near Liverpool, Dec. 15, 1823, youngest son of S. Lowe, Esq., solicitor, formerly of Whitchurch, Salop, and subsequently of Liverpool, was educated at Liverpool at a private school, and afterwards at Oxford, where he entered under Rev. W. Jacobson (who became Bishop of Chester) at Magdalen Hall in 1842, whence he was elected to the Bible Clerkship at Lincoln College in June 1844, where he was a pupil of the late Mark Pattison. He graduated B.A. in 1846 (third cl., Lit. Hum.), and the following year became Second Master of the King's School, Ottery St. Mary, and was ordained Deacon by Bishop Philpotts in September of the same year, and Priest in September of the year following. In 1849 he joined, at Shoreham, the Rev. N. Woodard, who had just begun his effort to found, by public boarding schools, a system of Church of England education for the middle classes. In January 1850 he opened, as Head-Master, at Hurstpierpoint, the first middle school of the system, and remained in that office till the end of 1872, when he was appointed Provost of the Midland district of St. Nicolas College, as head of the Society of SS. Mary and John of Lichfield in union with St. Nicolas College, and directing the large schools at Denstone and Ellesmere for boys, and two for girls at Abbot's Bromley, as well as a boys' day-school at Dewsbury. In 1891, on the death of Canon Woodward, he was elected Provost of St. Nicolas College in succession to the founder, and returned into Sussex. In September 1873 he was preferred to a Canonry in Ely Cathedral, upon a vacancy falling to the Crown, sede vacante; and since 1880 up to the present time has represented the Chapter as Proctor in Convocation. He has published several small educational works; among others, "Porta Latina," Erasmus Colloquies, "An English Primer," and an annotated edition of G. Herbert's "Church Porch." Addresses: The College, Ely; and Henfield, Sussex.

LOWE, Edward Joseph, F.R.S., J.P., D.L., eldest surviving son of the late Alfred Lowe, Esq., J.P., of Highfield, near Nottingham, was born at Highfield, Nov. 11, 1825, and in 1840 began that valuable series of daily meteorological observations which were continued to April 1882. In 1846 he published "A Treatise on Atmospheric Phenomena." About 1848 he assisted the late Professor Baden Powell in the meteor observations for the British Association, and was the first to point out the convergence of meteors to a point in the heavens. "Prognostications of the Weather," a small work by him, appeared in 1849. In 1850 he became a member of the Royal Meteorological Society, of which he was one of the founders. In 1853 he wrote two valuable local works, entitled "The Climate of Nottinghamshire," and "The Conchology of Nottinghamshire." In the same year he likewise assisted the late Prof. Edward Forbes in the compilation of his work on "British Mollusca," and issued the first parts of the well-known "Natural History of British and Exotic Ferns." His next work, on "British Grasses," appeared in 1858, and he subsequently wrote two other botanical works on "Beautiful-leaved Plants," and "New and Rare Ferns," in 1861 and 1862; "Our Native Ferns," in 1865; and "Chronology of the Seasons," &c. In 1860 he was one of those who accompanied the Government expedition to Spain for the purpose of observing the solar eclipse, and was placed in charge of the meteorological departments in the Santander district. In 1866 he was local secretary to the British Association. In 1868 he was President of the Nottingham Literary and Philosophical Society. Besides being the author of the works enumerated, Mr. Lowe has contributed many papers on scientific subjects to various learned societies, and to the British Association; and he sent daily meteorological telegrams to the Board of Trade, and synchronous meteorological observations to the United States Government up to 1882. He was the inventor of the dry powder tests for the ozone observations used in the scientific balloon ascents. He was also the discoverer of an entirely new and distinct species of British worm, the Megascolex rigida (Baird); has been the raiser of many abnormal British ferns; and has succeeded in producing hybrids between Polystichum aculeatum and P. angulare. Since 1886 he has devoted his time to the hybridisation of ferns, and flowering plants, and has recently discovered that divisions of a prothallus will grow and produce several ferns, also that ferns can have multiple parents, and hundreds of distinct varieties have resulted from this discovery. In 1891 he published a "Handbook on the Varieties of British Ferns," and has of late years issued a large work, "The Ferns of Great Britain and their Varieties." For some years past Mr. Lowe has been a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for Nottinghamshire, and a Commissioner of Income Tax. He is a Fellow of the Royal, the Royal Astronomical, the Geological, the Linnean, the Royal Meteorological, and the Royal Horticultural Societies. In 1849 he married Anne, daughter of John Allocock. In 1882 he went to reside at Shirenewton Hall, near Chepstow, which estate he purchased from Lord Kintore.

LOWELL, Percival, son of Augustus Lowell and Katharine Bigelow (Lawrence) Lowell, was born in Boston, Massachusetts, United States of America, March 13, 1855, and took his degree at Harvard University in 1876. He has travelled considerably, especially in the Far East. While in Japan, in 1883, he was appointed Foreign Secretary and Counsellor to the Korean Special Mission to the United States, the first to go from Korea to a Western Power. He returned to Korea with the mission the same year, and spent the winter of 1883-84 in Söul, its capital. He published, in 1885, "Chosön, a Sketch of Korea"; in 1888, "The Soul of the Far East"; in 1889, "Noto, an Unexplored Corner of Japan," and poems in Scribner's Magazine, and lectured before the Q.B.K. Society at Cambridge, Massachusetts. He is a Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Japan.

LOWNDES, Mrs. F. S., née Maria Adelaide Belloc, the only daughter of M. Louis Belloc, a French barrister, and of Madame Belloc (née Beatie Rayner Parkes), through whom she is descended from Dr. Joseph Priestley, was born in 1868, and educated at Mayfield Convent. She is prominent among London lady journalists, and, having made a special study of French history and literature, is an authority in matters of contemporary French biography. She has published the "Life and Letters of Charlotte Elizabeth, Princess Palatine," 1889, and selections from the correspondence of "Edmond and Jules de Goncourt," 1894. This last work was written in collaboration with Miss Shedlock. She married, in 1896, Mr. Frederic Sawrey Lowndes, M.A., of the Times. Address: 11 Great College Street, Westminster, S.W.

LOWRY, Henry Dawson, born at Truro, Feb. 22, 1869, is eldest son of T. S. Lowry and his wife Winifred. The family subsequently removed to Camborne, and Mr. Lowry was educated at Queen's College, Taunton, and at Oxford (unattached), where he graduated in the Honour School of Chemistry, 1891. He began the career of journalism very early, and in 1891 was already writing Cornish stories in the National Observer. He came to London in 1893, and wrote a good deal in prose and verse for the Pall Mall Gazette. He was on the staff of that journal for part of 1895, in which year he went to Black and White. Early in 1897 he became editor of the Ludgate, until, in April 1898, the magazine was sold by the Black and White Company, Limited, and he quitted their service. He had already become connected, as a leader-writer, with the Morning Post, and this appointment he still holds. Publications: "Wreckers and Methodists," 1893; "Women's Tragedies," 1895; "A Man of Moods and Make-Believe," 1896; and "The Happy Exile," 1895; and a great quantity of scattered articles. Permanent addresses: Camborne, Cornwall; and the Yinik Club.

LOWTHER, The Right Hon. James, M.P., J.P., younger son of Sir Charles Hugh Lowther, Bart., by Isabella, daughter of the late Rev. Robert Morehead, D.D., Rector of Easington-cum-Liverton, Yorkshire, was born at Swillington House, Leeds, in 1840, and educated at Westminster School and at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1862, M.A. 1866). He was called to the bar at the Inner Temple in 1864. The next year he was elected M.P. for York in the Conservative interest, and continued to sit for that city until 1880. He unsuccessfully contested East Cumberland in February 1881, and in September of the same year was elected Member for North Lincolnshire, which constituency he represented until November 1885. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor-Law Board from August to December 1868, and Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies from February 1874 till February 1878, when he was appointed Chief Secretary of Ireland, which office he held until the resignation of Lord Beaconsfield's Government in May 1880. He unsuccessfully contested the East Lindsey Division of Lincolnshire, November 1885, also North Cumberland at the general election of 1886; but was returned for the Isle of Thanet Division of Kent, in June 1888, and again in 1892 and 1895. Mr. Lowther is a magistrate, deputy-lieutenant, and county alderman for the North Riding of York. He is well known as a member of the Jockey Club. Addresses: 59 Grosvenor Street, W.; and Wilton Castle, Redcar.

LOWTHER, The Right Hon. James William, M.P., LL.M., J.P., is the eldest son of the Hon. William Lowther, formerly M.P. for Westmoreland, and was born on April 1, 1855. He was educated at Eton, King's College, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained honours in both the Classical and Law Tripos. He was called to the Bar in 1879, and was elected a Conservative member of the House of Commons for Rutlandshire in 1883. After unsuccessfully contesting Mid-Cumberland in 1885, he was, in the following year, elected Member for the Penrith Division of the same county; he still retains this seat in the Conservative interest. Mr. Lowther acted as an unpaid Charity Commissioner from 1887 to 1891, was Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs from 1891 to 1892, and he represented this country at the Venice International Sanitary Conference in 1892. Since August 1895 he has filled the offices of Deputy-Speaker and Chairman of Ways and Means. He was married in 1886 to Mary Frances, daughter of the late Right Hon. A. J. Beresford Hope. Address: 16 Wilton Crescent, S.W.

LOYD, Archie Kirkman, Q.C., M.P., J.P., was born in 1847, and is the son of the late Thomas Kirkman Lloyd, Bengal Civil Service. He was educated at Brighton College, and in 1867 entered the Indian Civil Service. He was Prizeman in English Law and in Hindi at the further examinations, but retired from the Civil Service in 1869. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1868, joined the Norfolk and then the Midland Circuit, became Q.C. in 1892, and Bench in 1894. From 1880 to 1891 he was Secretary to the Macclesfield Corrupt Practices Commission. He is a J.P. for Berks, and was elected to Parliament as Conservative member for the North or Abingdon Division of Berkshire in 1895. He is joint-editor of recent editions of Sir John Byles's work on Bills of Exchange. He married, 1885, Henrietta, daughter of the late E. L. Clutterbuck, of Hardenhuish, Wilts. Addresses: Hodcott, W. Ilsey, Berks; 60A Cadogan Square, S.W.; Lamb Buildings, Temple.

LOYSON, Charles, known as Père Hyacinthe, born at Orleans, March 10, 1827, was educated at Pau by private professors, where his father was Rector of the University. His mother was of the noble family Burnier-Fontonel, of the Château de Reiquier, Savoy. In 1845 he entered St. Sulpice, was ordained priest after five years of theological study, taught philosophy at the great Seminary at Avignon, and theology at that of Nantes, and officiated in his ecclesiastical capacity at St. Sulpice, in Paris. He afterwards spent two years in the convent of the Carmelites at Lyons, entered that Order, and attracted much attention by his preaching at the Lycée of that city. In June 1869 Père Hyacinthe delivered before the International League of Peace an address, in which he spoke of the Jewish religion, the Catholic religion, and the Protestant religion as being "the three great religions of civilised peoples." This expression elicited severe censures from the Catholic press. On Sept. 20 of the same year Père Hyacinthe published his famous Manifesto, addressed to the General of the Barefooted Carmelites at Rome, but evidently intended for the governing powers of the Church, in which he protested against the "sacriligious perversion of the Gospel," and went on to say: "It is my profound conviction that if France in particular, and the Latin races in general, are given up to social, moral, and religious anarchy, the principal cause is not Catholicism itself, but the manner in which Catholicism has for a long time been understood and practised." This manifesto against the alleged abuses in the Church created intense excitement, not only in France, but throughout the civilised world, and the young monk was hailed as a powerful ally by all the open opponents of the Papacy. Soon after this he left France for America, landing in New York, Oct. 18, 1869. He was warmly welcomed by the leading members of the various Protestant sects in the United States, but, though he fraternised with them to a certain extent, he constantly declared that he had no intention of quitting the Catholic faith. On Sept. 3, 1872, he was married in London, at the Marylebone Registry Office, to Emilie Jane, daughter of Mr. Amory Butterfield, and widow of Captain Edwin Ruthven Meriman, of the United States. The late Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, and Lady Augusta Stanley, his wife, were present at the marriage. Soon after his marriage, Père Hyacinthe was called to Geneva; and after giving a series of lectures in the Salle de la Réformation, which found echo throughout Europe, he was invited by the Swiss Government to take charge of the Catholic Church in Geneva, and thus he became the founder of the Old Catholic State Church, or, as it is officially styled, the Christian Catholic Church of Switzerland. In March 1894 Père Hyacinthe, in consequence of pecuniary and other discouragement, asked Archbishop Gerrard Gul, head of the Dutch Jansenist body, to take over his Gallican mission. The mission was taken over, but Père Hyacinthe was informed that, as a married priest, he would have to sink into the position of a layman. He protested, and now continues his Gallican services at an Anglican church at Neuilly. In 1896 he went to Jerusalem in his endeavours at a rapprochement between the three monotheistic religions. His great breadth of view has led to false rumours of his becoming a Copt or an Armenian. His "Last Will and Testament" explains his position very clearly.

LUBBOCK, The Right Hon. Sir John, Bart., M.P., D.C.L., LL.D., V.P.R.S., D.L., was born at 29 Eaton Place, London, April 30, 1834, being the son and heir of Sir John William Lubbock, of Mitcham Grove, Surrey, and High Elms, Down, Kent, a gentleman eminent as an astronomer and a mathematician, by his wife, Harriet, daughter of Lieut.-Col. George Hotham, of York. The baronetcy was created in 1806, in favour of the great-great-uncle of the present baronet, who succeeded to it in 1865, and who resides at High Elms, Down, in Kent. From a private school he was transferred to Eton. His father, owing to the sudden illness of several of his partners, took him when but fourteen years of age into his bank in Lombard Street, a business with which the family has been connected for several generations. He became a partner in that establishment in 1856. Among the improvements which he introduced in banking affairs were the "Country Clearing" and the publication of the Clearing House returns. So high was his professional reputation that he was chosen Honorary Secretary to the Association of London Bankers, the first President of the Institute of Bankers, an association numbering over 2000 members, and is now President of the Central Association of Bankers. He was nominated by the Crown to serve on the International Coinage Commission. He was also a member of the Public School Commission, the Advancement of Science Commission, the Education Commission, the Gold and Silver Commission, and Chairman of the Committee which settled the designs of the new coins. He was also for some time Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. It is, however, by his works on the ancient vestiges and remains of man that Sir John Lubbock has most distinguished himself. He has written "Pre-historic Times, as illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages," 1865 (5th edit., 1889); "The Origin of Civilisation and the Primitive Condition of Man," 1870, which also has, like the preceding work, passed through five editions, and which has been translated into all the principal languages; "The Origin and Metamorphoses of Insects," 1874; "On British Wild Flowers, considered in Relation to Insects," 1875; "Monograph of the Thysanura and Collembola"; two volumes of Lectures and Addresses; a work on Ants, Bees, and Wasps, which in less than a year ran through five editions; "The Pleasures of Life"—this is the most popular of Sir John Lubbock's works, and has run through over thirty editions, of which 130,000 copies have been sold; "The Senses of Animals," "Fifty Years of Science," "Flowers, Fruits, and Leaves," "Representation," "Chapters in Popular Natural History," "The Beauties of Nature," "The Use of Life," "The Scenery of Switzerland" (2nd edit.), and over a hundred separate memoirs on zoological, physiological, and archaeological subjects in the Transactions of the Royal Society, the Society of Antiquaries, the Linnæan, Ethnological, Geological, and Entomological Societies, and the British Association. He was chosen as President of the British Association for the "Jubilee" year (1881), and presided over the meeting held at York. He is now President of the Linnæan Society. He has been President of the Ethnological and Entomological Societies, and of the Anthropological Institute, Vice-President of the British Association, and of the Royal Society. Sir John Lubbock was twice chosen to represent Maidstone in Parliament. In February 1870, after he had been defeated as a Liberal candidate for West Kent by only fifty votes, he was returned for the county town, an honour which was renewed at the general election of 1874; in 1880, however, he lost his seat, but was immediately returned by the University of London, for which he now sits. In the House of Commons he has spoken principally on financial and educational subjects. He has been so fortunate as to succeed in carrying more than twenty important public measures, including the

Bank Holidays Act (1871), by which four new statute holidays were added to the two previously in existence. Amongst the other measures were: the Absconding Debtors Bill, the Apothecaries' Company Medical Act Amendment Bill, the University of London Medical Act Amendment Bill, the Falsification of Accounts Bill (by which, for the first time, it became an offence to falsify accounts for the purpose of fraud), the Bankers' Books Evidence Bill, the College of Surgeons Medical Act Bill, the Factors Acts Amendment Bill, Shop Hours Regulation Act, and the Bills of Exchange Act, which consolidates and confirms the whole law relating to bills of exchange, cheques, and promissory notes; the Public Libraries Amendment Act, the Open Spaces Act, and the Metropolis Management Act. More recently his name has been associated with the "Ancient Monuments Bill," which has received the sanction of the Legislature. In 1877 he moved the "previous question" to Mr. Gladstone's famous resolutions on the Eastern Question. In March 1878 he was appointed a Trustee of the British Museum, in the place of the late Sir William Stirling Maxwell. In the same year the University of Dublin conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He is also a D.C.L. of Oxford, LL.D. of Cambridge and of Edinburgh, and M.D. of Würzburg. He has had the honour of being elected an honorary member of many foreign scientific societies, both on the Continent and in America. He was Vice-Chancellor of the University of London for eight years, but resigned the office on his election to represent the University in Parliament. This seat he held without a contest till 1886, but on the dissolution Mr. Frederic Harrison was brought forward as a Home-Rule candidate, Sir J. Lubbock standing as a Unionist. The latter easily won the seat, polling 1314 votes against Mr. Harrison's 516. On the formation of County Councils he stood for the City on a requisition signed by the leaders of all parties, and out of 10,000 votes recorded, received 8900, the largest number of votes recorded for any candidate in the whole country. He was unanimously elected Vice-Chairman of the London County Council, and re-elected 1889; and in 1890 was elected Chairman, on the resignation of the Earl of Rosebery, and occupied this post to 1892. He is President of the London Chamber of Commerce, and was till 1899 President of the Working-Men's College, where he is now succeeded by Prof. A. V. Dicey. Several of his books have been translated into the French, German, Spanish, Italian, Danish, Swedish, Russian, Polish, Bohemian, Roumanian, Marathi, and Urdu languages. Sir John Lubbock married (1), in 1856, Ellen, only child of the Rev. Peter Hordern, Chorltoncum-Hardy (she died in 1879); and (2) Alice, daughter of General Fox-Pitt-Rivers, in 1884. Addresses: High Elms, Down, Kent; 2 St. James's Square; and Athenæum.

LUCAN, Earl of, The Right Hon. George Bingham, Bart., K.P., J.P., was born May 8, 1830, and succeeded his father as 4th Earl in 1888. He was educated at Rugby, and then obtained a commission in the army. He served in the Rifle Brigade and the Coldstream Guards, acted as A.D.C. to his father in the Crimea, where he was present at the battles of the Alma and Balaclava, and finally retired as Lieut.-Colonel in 1860. As Lord Bingham, he sat in the House of Commons as member for Mayo from 1865 to 1874, and is now a Representative Peer for Ireland, having a seat in the House of Lords. He is a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and of the Medjidieh, has been Vice-Admiral of Connaught since 1889, and was created K.P. in March 1899. Lord Lucan was married, in 1859, to Lady Cecilia Catherine Gordon-Lennox, daughter of the 5th Duke of Richmond, K.G. Addresses: Laleham House, Staines; and Castlebar House, Mayo.

LUCAS, John Seymour, R.A., was born in London on Dec. 21, 1849, and is a son of Henry Lucas, brother of the portrait painter. Leaving school at the age of fifteen, he spent three months in the studio of a sculptor, and a further term of nine months with Gerard Robinson, the wood-carver, from whom he received his first notions of composition. His uncle, John Lucas, the painter, then articulated him to his son, John Templeton Lucas, who was to teach him the art of painting. During the term of his apprenticeship Mr. Lucas attended the evening classes of the St. Martin's School of Art, in connection with South Kensington; and in 1871 he became a student of the Royal Academy, exhibiting his first picture there in 1872. It was not until 1875, however, that Mr. Lucas contributed to the annual exhibition at Burlington House a work of any mark; this was entitled "By Hook or Crook." The following year he sent two pictures, "Fleeced," and "For the King and the Cause"; and in 1877, "Intercepted Despatches." "An Ambuscade, Edge Hill," appeared in 1878. The technical excellence of all this artist's work is of a high order, and is especially noticeable in "The Gordon Riots," which was exhibited in 1879. In 1877 he was elected full member of the Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, and in 1886 was elected A.R.A. His recent works are "The Armada in Sight," 1880; "Charles before Gloucester," 1881; "The Favourite," 1882; "A Whip for Van Trompe," 1883; "After Culloden," 1884; "From the Field of Sedgemoor," 1885; "Peter the Great at Deptford," 1886; and "The Latest Scandal," 1887, &c. He exhibited "The Call to Arms," and four portraits at the Royal Academy's Exhibition in 1894. Since that date he has exhibited as many as twenty-one pictures and black and white drawings at the Royal Academy. He was made R.A. in February 1898. Address: New Place, Woodchurch Road, West Hampstead, N.W.

LUCCA, Pauline. See WALLHOFFEN, MADAME.

LUCK, Major-General Sir George, K.C.B., was born on Oct. 24, 1840. He is one of the Lucks of Malling, Kent. He was educated privately, and entered the 15th Foot (East York Regiment) as Ensign in April 1858. The following year he exchanged into the 6th Dragoons, Inniskillings, and in 1868 was promoted Captain in the 15th Hussars. He attained the rank of Major in March 1878, and Lieut.-Colonel in April 1879. From 1871 to 1874 he was Instructor in Army Signalling at Bombay. He took part in the Jowaki Expedition of 1878, receiving a medal. He saw much service in the Afghan War, and took part in the occupation of Kandahar and Khelat-i-Ghilzai, and the operations at Yarkistan. He also commanded the advance cavalry at the action of Takhti-pul, where he was wounded. He was mentioned in despatches, and received a C.B., and commanded the 15th Hussars in the march from Quetta and the relief of Kandahar. Sir George Luck with his regiment went to South Africa and took part in the Transvaal war of 1881. He was promoted to be Brigadier-General in command of the Sind district in 1884, was transferred to the Bengal command in 1887; and in the same year was appointed Inspector-General of Cavalry in India. He was promoted Major-General in May 1893, and was appointed Inspector-General of Cavalry in Great Britain and Ireland in 1895. Major-General Sir George Luck is married to Ellen Georgina, daughter of Major-General Frank Adams, C.B. Addresses: Horse Guards, Whitehall; and 23 Courtfield Road, South Kensington, S.W.

LUCKOCK, The Very Rev. Herbert Mortimer, D.D., Dean of Lichfield, was born at Great Barr, Staffordshire, on July 11, 1833, and is the second son of the Rev. T. G. M. Luckock. He was educated at Marlborough and Shrewsbury, and at Jesus College, Cambridge. After taking orders he was twice Vicar of All Saints', Cambridge. He has been Rector of Gayhurst and Stoke Goldington, Honorary and then Residentiary Canon of Ely, first Principal of Ely Theological College, and was appointed Dean of Lichfield in 1892. He has published works bearing on points of theology and church history, such as the intermediate state, the history of marriage, the state of the faithful dead. He has also written "Footprints of the Son of Man," "Footprints of the Apostles," "The Divine Liturgy," "History of the Church of Scotland," and has edited Bishop Woodford's "Great Commission." He married, in 1866, Margaret Emma, daughter of S. H. Thompson, of Thingwall, Lancs. Addresses: The Deanery, Lichfield; and Athenæum.

LUCY, Henry W., J.P., born at Crosby, near Liverpool, Dec. 5, 1845, was apprenticed to a Liverpool merchant; joined the staff of the Shrewsbury Chronicle as chief reporter in 1864; in 1869 went to Paris to attend lectures at the Sorbonne; in January 1870 returned to London to join the staff of the morning edition of the Pall Mall Gazette; and in October 1873 joined the Daily News as special correspondent, chief of the Gallery staff, and writer of the Parliamentary summary. Mr. Lucy is the author of "A Handbook of Parliamentary Procedure"; and "Men and Manner in Parliament." He is a frequent contributor to London and American periodical literature. In 1882 his first novel, "Gideon Fleyce," was published. In the autumn of 1883 he made a journey round the world, visiting the United States, Japan, and India. He wrote an account of the journey in a series of Letters which first appeared in the Daily News and the New York Tribune, and were subsequently published in book form under the title "East by West." In 1885 the first volume of his "Diary of Two Parliaments" was published simultaneously in this country, the United States, and Australia. The second volume appeared in 1886. "A Diary of the Salisbury Parliament" was published in 1892; "A Diary of the Home Rule Parliament," in 1896. Others of his works are, "Faces and Places," 1895; "Mr. Gladstone, a Study from Life," 1896; "The Miller's Niece," 1896. On the death of Mr. Tom Taylor, who, in succession to Mr. Shirley Brooks, had written the "Essence of Parliament" for Punch, Mr. Lucy was invited to continue the work. This he did in a new style, now familiar as "The Diary of Toby, M.P." In 1878 his letters to the Daily News, describing the condition of the people in South Wales owing to the strike, resulted in a public subscription, which in the course of three weeks amounted to over £10,000 in cash, in addition to many gifts in kind. With a portion of the money the rector of Mertyr was enabled to feed daily for seventeen weeks 5000 children. Mr. Lucy has travelled extensively, and accompanied the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne, when the last-named was appointed to the Governor-Generalship of Canada in 1878. In January 1886 Mr. Lucy accepted the editorship of the Daily News, resigning the post in July 1887, preferring his earlier work in the Press Gallery of the House of Commons. Addresses: 42 Ashley Gardens, Westminster; Whitethorn, Hythe, Kent.

LUDLOW, Sir Henry, Knt., Chief-Justice of the Leeward Islands, was born in 1838, and is the son of Mr. George Ludlow, late of Hertford, who was first cousin to Mr. Serjeant Ludlow, sometime Recorder of Bristol. Sir Henry was educated at Christ's Hospital and St. John's College, Cambridge, and graduated as B.A., 8th Wrangler, in 1857, and subsequently became M.A. and Fellow of St. John's. He obtained, in 1861, the studentship granted by the Inns of Court to the student who passed the best examination previous to his call to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn; and was called to the Bar in 1862, and appointed Attorney-General of Trinidad in 1874, and Chief-Justice of the Leeward Islands in 1886. In conjunction with E. Chisholm Batten he published "Batten and Ludlow on the Jurisdiction of the County Courts in Equity," and in conjunction with H. Jenkins, Esq., published "Ludlow and Jenkyns on Trade-Marks." He married, in 1876, Alice, daughter of Thomas Swodes. Address: St. John's, Antigua, West Indies.

LUDLOW, Lord, The Right Hon. Henry Charles Lopes, D.L., third son of the late Ralph Lopes, the second baronet of Maristow, Devon, by Susan Gibbs, eldest daughter of the late A. Ludlow, Esq., of Heywood House, Wiltshire, was born at Devonport, Oct. 3, 1828, and received his education at Winchester School, and at Balliol College, Oxford (B.A. 1850). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, June 7, 1852, and for some time he practised as an equity draughtsman and conveyancer. In 1857 he joined the Western Circuit, of which he became, in course of time, the leading "stuff gown." Mr. Lopes was made Recorder of Exeter in 1867, obtained his silk gown in 1869, and was elected a Bencher of his Inn shortly afterwards. In April 1868 he was returned to the House of Commons, in the Conservative interest, as member for Launceston. He was re-elected in December 1868, and he continued to sit for that borough till January 1874. The Warrington Park property having in the meantime changed hands, it then became necessary for Mr. Lopes either to oppose the new owner or to seek for another seat. Choosing the latter alternative, he determined to stand for Frome, near which borough he had a residence and property. After a severe contest he was returned by 642 votes, against 557 recorded in favour of Mr. Willans, the Liberal candidate. He continued to represent Frome until his elevation to the judicial bench. Mr. Lopes was a frequent speaker in the House of Commons, and he succeeded in carrying through that House a Jury Bill containing more than a hundred sections, but there was not sufficient time to get it passed by the House of Peers. On Nov. 3, 1876, Mr. Lopes accepted the vacant judgeship in the Court of Common Pleas, in succession to the late Mr. Justice Archibald, and very shortly afterwards he received the honour of knighthood. In November 1876, on the death of his maternal uncle, Sir Henry Lopes became the owner of Heywood, near Westbury, Wiltshire, a place which had been for many years in his mother's family, and where he now resides. On Dec. 1, 1885, he was appointed a Lord Justice of Appeal, and subsequently sworn of the Privy Council. He retired from the Court of Appeal in 1897, and was raised to the peerage as Lord Ludlow of Heywood, being granted an annuity of £3500. In 1854 he married Cordelia Lucy, daughter of Erving Clarke, Esq., of Efford Manor, near Plymouth, and thus became connected with the old Cornish families of Molesworth and Trelawney. She died in December 1891. Sir Henry was Treasurer of the Inner Temple for the year 1890; and has been a Member of the Council of Legal Education. He was appointed Chairman of the Wilts Quarter Sessions in 1895. Addresses: Heywood, Westbury, Wilts; 8 Cromwell Place, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LUGARD, Colonel Frederick J. D., C.B., D.S.O., who comes of a race of fine soldiers, is a nephew of the late General the Right Hon. Sir Edward Lugard, G.C.B. He was born at Fort George, Madras, in 1858, his father being an army chaplain there at the time. He was educated at Rossall, and passed from that school into Sandhurst direct. He entered the army as a second lieutenant in the 86th Foot, the Royal Irish Rifles, and soon after joined the Norfolk Regiment. In 1879 he went to India, and was attached to the expedition despatched to avenge the murder of Sir Louis Cavagnari. He saw a good deal of service in the Afghan War, and was present at the affair at Saidabad. Mr. Lugard occupied his leisure during the next three or four years in preparation for different army examinations, and in studying the phases of animal life, thus gaining a knowledge which stood him in good stead when he wrote the zoological part of his work on Africa. In 1885 he was promoted captain, and was appointed, by telegram, transport officer of the Indian contingent under General Hudson for Suakin. He was mentioned in despatches, and received a medal with clasp, and the Khedive's Star, for his services in Egypt. In 1886 Captain Lugard went as transport officer to the Ruby Mines Column in Burma. As there are no roads in the portion of the country through which he journeyed, and the way led over mountains 8000 feet high, and through a dense bamboo jungle, the difficulties in the path were very great, but so successfully did Lugard overcome them that he was made a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, then recently instituted. In 1888 he commanded an expedition which was sent against slave-traders on Lake Nyassa, when he was severely wounded. Afterwards, during sick-leave, he was appointed Representative in Uganda of the British East Africa Company, and on his return to England in 1893 published his important work on "The Rise of our East African Empire; or, Early Efforts in Uganda and Nyassaland," and in a series of public lectures and letters to the Times strenuously advocated the retention of those countries under British rule, in which efforts he has been successful. In 1894 Captain Lugard was employed by the Royal Niger Company in command of the expedition to Borgu, which was organised to negotiate treaties between England and the native potentates. He was created a C.B. in May 1895, and in the following year was sent in charge of an expedition to Lake Ngami. He was shortly after appointed Commissioner and Commandant of the Forces in Nigeria and Lagos. Colonel Lugard, on account of ill health, returned to England in August 1898. Club: Junior Army and Navy.

LUITPOLD, Prince Charles Joseph William Louis, Regent of Bavaria, was born at Würzburg, Mar. 12, 1821, and is the second son of King Louis I. of Bavaria. He is General and Inspector-General of the Bavarian Army, Chief of the Regiment of Bavarian Artillery, and proprietor of the first regiment of Austrian Artillery. He married, April 15, 1844, the Princess Augusta, Archduchess of Austria, and has four children. On the death of Louis II., King of Bavaria, on June 10, 1886, he was appointed Regent on account of the mental derangement of Prince Otto, the succeeding titular king.

LUMSDEN, General Sir Peter Stark, G.C.B., C.S.I., D.L., son of the late Colonel Thomas Lumsden, C.B., was born on Nov. 9, 1829. He entered the Indian Army in 1847, and has risen to his present rank by constant and active service, principally on the North-West and other frontiers of India. In 1857 he was employed in a difficult mission to Afghanistan, at the crisis of the Indian Mutiny, and creditably discharged his arduous and perilous duties. He served in Central India in 1858, under Major-General Sir R. Napier. He accompanied the expedition to China in 1860, and was present in all the actions there, including the assault and capture of the Taku Forts. He was Quartermaster-General of the Army in India from 1868 to 1873, and Adjutant-General from 1874 to 1879, and Chief of the Staff to the Commander-in-Chief, Sir F. P. Haines, during the last Afghan War. He was appointed Commissioner for the demarcation of the North-Western Boundary of Afghanistan, July 16, 1884. After the Penjdeh "incident," Sir Peter Lumsden returned home to report on the state of things to the British Government, and his place was taken by Colonel (now Sir West) Ridgway. He attained General's rank in 1890, and joined the Indian Staff Corps in that year. Sir Peter Lumsden was a member of the Council of India from 1883 to 1893, and was made a G.C.B. July 3, 1885. He married, in 1862, Mary, daughter of J. Marriott. Address: Buchrumb, Duftown, Scotland.

LUNN, Henry Simpson, M.D., F.R.G.S., editor of Travel, was born at Horncastle, in Lincolnshire, on July 30, 1859, and is the eldest son of Henry Lunn. He was educated at the Horncastle Grammar School, and at Dublin University, where he graduated B.A., M.D., B.Ch. In 1887 Dr. Lunn left England for the Indian Mission field as a medical missionary. As correspondent to the Pall Mall Gazette he attended the Indian National Congress, becoming intimately acquainted with the leaders of the movement, and lecturing to large assemblies of educated Hindus on the development of their national life. The vigour with which he threw himself into his Indian work was responsible for a series of attacks of malarial fever, and he was ordered home only twelve months after he had entered the work. He was at once invited to become the colleague of the Rev. H. Price Hughes at St. James's Hall, and for two years was actively engaged in the work of the West London Mission. During this period he wrote a series of articles for Mr. Hughes's paper, the Methodist Times, which led to a grave controversy and to a special Commission, of which the Right Hon. Sir Henry Fowler, Sir George Chubb, and others were members. The report of the Commission was indecisive, but the bitterness aroused was so great that Dr. Lunn resigned the Methodist ministry, and accepted an appointment as Sunday Evening Lecturer at the Regent Street Polytechnic. At this date he published his Indian experiences, under the title of "A Friend of Missions in India." In 1890 Dr. Lunn founded the Review of the Churches, a magazine expressing the increasing desire for inter-denominational comity. In this he was assisted by an editorial staff, including Dean Farrar, Rev. Donald Fraser, D.D.; Rev. John Clifford, D.D.; Rev. John Mackennal, D.D.; and Mr. Percy Bunting. In 1892 he founded the Grindelwald Conference for the consideration of the question of Christian unity, and was supported in arranging these gatherings by the Bishops of Ripon and Worcester, Earl Nelson, Dean Fremantle, the Moderator of the Church of Scotland, the Moderator of the English Presbyterian Church, the Moderator of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, and a number of influential Nonconformist divines. In 1895 Dr. Lunn visited America and lectured on Christian Unity and on the Religions of India to large and enthusiastic audiences in New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, Toronto, and Boston. He also delivered lectures at the Universities of Harvard, Brown, and Boston. During late years he has devoted considerable energy to the development of the tours which grew out of the Grindelwald Conference, and which have assumed a special educational character, and in connection with this development, he has published a series of guide-books entitled "How to Visit Switzerland," "How to Visit Italy," "How to Visit Northern Europe," and "How to Visit the Mediterranean." Recently Dr. Lunn has taken an active part in the organisation of Free Church Councils, and spoke at the last gathering of the National Federation of Free Churches in Bristol on the relation of the Free Churches to journalism. He is also a member of, and lecturer for, the Eighty Club. He was one of the original founders of the Liberal Forward Movement, and is a member of the Executive Committee. Dr. Lunn is married to Ethel, eldest daughter of Canon Moore, of Midleton Rectory. Address: 5 Endsleigh Gardens, N.W.

LUSHINGTON, Sir Godfrey, K.C.B., G.C.M.G. (1899), M.A., fifth son of the late Right Hon. S. Lushington, M.P., was born in 1832. He was educated at Rugby and Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a first class in Classical Moderations in 1853, and also a first class in the Final School of Lit. Hum. in 1854; he was also elected a Fellow of All Souls' College. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1858, became counsel to the Home Office in 1869, and was appointed Assistant Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in 1876. Sir G. Lushington was, from 1883 to 1895, Permanent Under-Secretary at the Home Office, and was created a K.C.B. in 1892. Formerly a member of the London County Council, he was elected Alderman (Moderate) until 1900, but resigned his Aldermanship in March 1898. He was married, in 1865, to Beatrice, daughter of S. Smith, of Embley, Romsey, Hants. Addresses: 34 Old Queen Street, S.W.; Stoke, Great Bedwyn, Hungerford; and Athenæum.

LUXEMBURG-NASSAU, Grand-Duke of, Adolphus-William-Charles-Augustus-Frederick, was born at Biebrich, July 24, 1817, and married, at Dessau, April 23, 1851, his second wife, Princess Adelaide of Anhalt; his first wife, the Grand-Duchess Elisabeth Michailovna of Russia, having died in 1845 without issue. His only daughter, Princess Hilda, was married to the Crown Prince Frederick of Baden in 1885, a grandson of the Emperor William I., with a settlement of a million sterling. The Hereditary Prince Alexander is likewise an only son, born in 1852, and serves as major-general in the Austrian army. Should his sister die without issue, her dower will ultimately revert to him, and he will be one of the wealthiest princes in Europe, his father possessing, in addition to a fortune of at least three millions sterling, vast estates in Austria and Germany. Prince Alexander married, on June 21, 1893, Marie-Anne, Princess of Braganza. Through this union his family hope to secure the succession to the Luxemburg throne in the direct line, thus eventually avoiding complications with Prussia.

LYALL, Sir Alfred Comyn, K.C.B., G.C.I.E., son of the Rev. Alfred Lyall, was born at Couleston, Surrey, in 1835, and educated at Eton. He was appointed Home Secretary in India in 1873; Foreign Secretary in 1878; and Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Provinces in 1882, having in the previous year been created a K.C.B. He was formerly Secretary to the Order of the Star of India, and the Order of the Indian Empire. Sir Alfred Lyall, who is no less distinguished in literature than in the public service, is the author of "Asiatic Studies, Religious and Social," 1882, and of a volume of poems. In 1889 he published a biography of Warren Hastings in the English Men of Action Series, and in 1891 delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge on "Natural Religion in India." In 1893 appeared his "Rise of the British Dominion in India" (3rd edit., 1893). In January 1888 he was appointed a member of the Council of India. He has the honorary degree of D.C.L. at Oxford, and of LL.D. at Cambridge. In 1863 he married Cora, daughter of P. Cloete. Addresses: 18 Queen's Gate, S.W.; and Athenæum.

LYALL, Sir Charles James, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., LL.D., Edinb., late Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces of India, was born March 9, 1845, and educated at King's College, London, and at Balliol College, Oxford. In 1867 he entered the Bengal Civil Service, and was Assistant-Magistrate for Meerut until 1871, when he was appointed Under-Secretary for the N.W. Provinces. After holding other under-secretaryships, he became Secretary of the Chief Commission of Assam in 1880; and Secretary to the Government of India for the Home Department, 1889-95, when he was appointed to the post of Chief Commissioner, Central Provinces, India. In 1898 he was appointed Secretary of the Judicial and Public Department of the India Office. He has translated several texts from the Arabic. Address: Government House, Nagpur.

LYALL, Edna. See BAYLY, ADA ELLEN.

LYDEKKER, Richard, F.R.S., F.G.S., F.Z.S., J.P. for Hertfordshire, eldest son of the late G. W. Lydekker, was born in 1849, went to Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1868, and in 1871 was second in the first class of the Natural Science Tripos, the late Mr. A. H. Garrod being senior. In 1874 he went with three friends on a tour to Kashmir, and while there in the autumn was appointed by Lord Salisbury (then Secretary for India) to the Geological Survey of India. He held this appointment until 1892, when he resigned on his marriage with the elder daughter of the Rev. Canon Davys, Rector of Wheatthampstead, Herts, for which county he became J.P. during the same year. During his service on the Geological Survey of India, he surveyed nearly the whole of the territories of the Maharaja of Kashmir.

The results of this difficult work were written after the author's return home, and published, with a map, by the Government of India in the Memoirs of the Geological Survey of India. In the winters during his Indian service, Mr. Lydekker was occupied in descriptions of the large series of vertebrate fossils from the Siwalik Hills at the foot of the Himalayas, this being continued (by special grant from the Indian Government) after his return to England. The results were published by the Indian Government in the Palæontologia Indica. In 1884 Mr. Lydekker undertook for the Trustees the writing of catalogues of the fossil mammalia, birds, reptilia, and amphibia in the British Museum. Of this work the mammalia occupy five volumes; reptiles and amphibians four, and the birds one volume. In 1893, and again in 1894, Mr. Lydekker, under the auspices of the Royal Society, went out to Argentina to study the fossil mammals in the La Plata Museum, the results of his investigations having been published in two volumes, illustrated by folio plates. He has written a number of papers on vertebrate palæontology, published in the Records of the Geological Survey of India, Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Proceedings of the Zoological Society, Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, &c. While in India he was a Fellow of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. In 1880 he was elected a Fellow of the Zoological Society, and in 1883 he became a Fellow of the Geological Society, and was elected a member of the Council of the latter Society in 1886, and again in 1893, while in the following year he was chosen one of the Vice-Presidents, and in 1898 was elected on the Council of the Zoological Society. Mr. Lydekker is also joint-author with Professor H. A. Nicholson of the only "Manual of Palæontology" extant in this country; while, in co-operation with Sir W. H. Flower, then Director of the British Museum (Natural History), he has written "The Study of Mammals." To the general public he is, however, probably better known as the editor and chief author of the "Royal Natural History." Among his other contributions to scientific literature may be mentioned: an illustrated monograph of "The Deer of all Lands," "A Geographical History of Mammals," "Horns and Hoofs," "Forms and Phases of Animal Life," and "Life and Rock," three volumes of Allen's Naturalists' Library. He married, in 1882, Lucy Marianne, eldest daughter of Canon Davys. Address: The Lodge, Harpenden, Herts.

LYNE, The Rev. Joseph Leycester, called "Father Ignatius," son of Francis and Louisa Genevieve Lyne, was born Nov. 23, 1837, at Trinity Square, by the Tower of London, educated at St. Paul's School, then by Rev. G. N. Wright, at Ayscough Free Hall, Spalding, Lincoln, and Britannia House, Worcester; next at Trinity College, Glenalmond, Perth. He was ordained in 1860 to the curacy of St. Peter's, Plymouth, and was then Mission Curate to the late Mr. Lowder at St. George's in the East, but left him in 1862 to begin the attempt of restoring monasticism in the Church of England. He began at Claydon, near Ipswich, and moved to Norwich, Jan. 30, 1863. Next he moved to the Isle of Wight, to a house of Dr. Pusey's, at Chale, then to Laleham, Chertsey, for three years, and finally he purchased land among the Black Mountains, and built Llanthony Abbey, five miles beyond the old ruined Llanthony Priory. There is a Priory of Nuns attached to the Church, as well as an Abbey for Monks, after the example of many of the old double monasteries of the Saxon Church. The monks claim to follow the ancient rule of St. Benedict, and use the Benedictine Breviary for Choir Office and the Sarum Missal of the ante-Reformation Church of England. They wear the old English Benedictine dress. Mr. Lyne's monastic name is "Ignatius of Jesus." During the last few years Father Ignatius has inaugurated a special crusade in defence of the Holy Scriptures and Orthodox Christianity against the "Higher Critics" and other opponents of Orthodoxy within the Church of England. During the year 1893 he initiated at Llanthony Abbey a petition to the Archbishop of Canterbury and Convocation, praying that Church authority should arrest the attacks upon the Faith of Christ now so common among the clergy. The petition was largely signed first in Oxford, then throughout the country. It was presented by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. In the early part of 1893 the Monk's preaching at the University Church of St. Mary the Virgin in Oxford caused much excitement, being commented on as a significant fact by the Times and most newspapers throughout the country. Never had such vast congregations of men assembled in this historic church for centuries. "The feat of filling and more than filling St. Mary's with men only has not been accomplished by any other preacher," was the statement made by one of the chief Church papers at the time. At the Church Congress at Birmingham in 1893 Father Ignatius denounced the author of "Lux Mundi" as "an impugnor of Holy Scripture and of our Lord Jesus Christ." He is the author of many published sermons, poems, hymns; the "Tales of Llanthony," "Brother Placidus," "Leonard Morris," and "Tales of the Monastery." He is the composer of many pieces of sacred music, 1860-98; also editor of

"Llanthony Monastery Tracts." In the years 1890 and 1891 the Welsh Monk made a missionary tour in America. From Quebec to the southernmost point of civilisation in Florida he preached the old-fashioned Gospel message, receiving invitations from bishops and clergy, from Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, and Methodist ministers to preach in their places of worship. He was asked by the Superior of a Roman Catholic College to address their students, and in Chicago he preached in the Cathedral and in Mr. D. L. Moody's Tabernacle. The Monk's visit to North America was certainly, from an ecclesiastical point of view, unique. In the summer of 1898 he was ordained Priest at Llanthony Abbey by Archbishop Mar Timotheus, of the Syrian Church, and afterwards issued a manifesto with regard to his ordination, in which he maintained the validity of the orders he had received. Address: Llanthony Abbey, near Abergavenny.

LYNN, William Thynne, B.A., F.R.A.S., eldest son of the late William Bewicke Lynn, F.R.C.S., for many years one of the surgeons of Westminster Hospital, and descended from a family long resident in the county of Durham, was born at Chelsea, Aug. 9, 1835, and educated privately in the neighbourhood of Esher, Surrey. His first appointment, after a short preliminary training at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was that of an assistant at the Cambridge Observatory, under the late Professor Challis, in the year 1855, whence, in the following year, he returned to Greenwich as a member of the staff of the Royal Observatory, where Professor (afterwards Sir George) Airy was Astronomer-Royal. For several years he superintended the greater part of the astronomical calculations, during which he found time to devote some of his evenings to attending lectures at King's College, London, of which he was elected an associate in 1862. In that year he also graduated as B.A. in the University of London, after passing the requisite examinations in 1860 and 1861. In February 1862 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, to the Monthly Notices of which he from time to time contributed papers, of which the last appeared in 1896. In 1863 he published a small educational work called "The First Principles of Natural Philosophy." A long and serious illness compelled him to desist from night exposure, in consequence of which he retired from the Observatory in the month of February 1880. He continued, however, to give much of his time to astronomical literature, and numerous contributions from his pen appeared in the pages of the Observatory, the Athenæum, the Companion to the British Almanac, and other periodicals; besides his editing and revising various astronomical works. In 1884 he published a concise and popular summary of the most interesting facts known respecting the heavenly bodies (especially their movements) under the title "Celestial Motions: a Handy Book of Astronomy," of which a ninth edition appeared in 1897. In 1886 he was elected an Honorary Associate of the Liverpool Astronomical Society. In 1880 he had been admitted a Lay Reader in the diocese of Rochester; and in 1889 he published two small volumes, intended chiefly for Sunday-school teachers, on "Bible Chronology," and "Brief Lessons on the Parables and Miracles of our Lord," and early in 1891 a third, entitled "Eminent Scripture Characters," and in 1892 a "Short Catechism of English Church History" in pamphlet form. In 1893 appeared also a small treatise on "Remarkable Comets" (of which a sixth edition was published in 1898), and "Brief Lessons on Astronomy," and in 1896 a companion volume to the former, entitled "Remarkable Eclipses," which is now in its third edition. The columns of Notes and Queries since 1882 contain a large number of contributions from his pen on literary, scientific, and Biblical subjects. "Celestial Motions" has been translated into French. Address: 3 South Vale, Blackheath, S.E.

LYONS, Sir Algernon M'Lennan, G.C.B., D.L., Admiral of the Fleet, was born in August 1833. He is the son of the late Lieutenant-General Humphrey Lyons by Eliza, daughter of Henry Bennett, Esq., of Fir Grove, Liverpool. He entered the Navy in 1847, and was promoted Lieutenant in June 1854, serving in that rank throughout the Russian War in the Black Sea. He commanded the boats of H.M.S. Firebrand in the destruction of Russian works on the Danube, and was mentioned in despatches. He was also present at the bombardment of Sebastopol, and as Flag-Lieutenant to the Commander-in-Chief assisted in subsequent operations in the Black Sea, including the capture of Kertch and Kinburn. Sir Algernon commanded H.M.S. Racer on the American Station during the Civil War, and in 1875 he was appointed Commodore on the West Indian Station. He was promoted Rear-Admiral in 1878, and became successively Commander-in-Chief in the Pacific, on the North American Station, and at Devonport, where he succeeded H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. From 1875 to 1878 he was an Aide-de-camp to the Queen, becoming First and Principal Naval A.D.C. to Her Majesty in 1895. Sir Algernon was appointed K.C.B. in 1889, and promoted to G.C.B. in 1897. He holds the Crimean and Turkish Medals and the Medjidieh of the fifth class, and is a Deputy-Lieutenant and J.P. for the county of Glamorganshire. He married, in 1879, Louisa, daughter of Thomas Penrice, Esq., of Kilvrough, Glamorganshire. Address: Kilvrough Park, Mill, R.S.O.

LYTE, Sir Henry Churchill Maxwell, K.C.B., F.S.A., Deputy-Keeper of the Records, Royal Commissioner on Historical MSS., is the son of the late J. W. Maxwell Lyte, Esq., grandson of the Rev. H. F. Lyte, the well-known hymn-writer, and the representative of the families of Lyte of Lytescary, co. Somerset, and Maxwell of Falkland, co. Monaghan. He was born in London on May 29, 1848, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took honours in Law and History and became M.A. In 1875 he published a "History of Eton College," of which a new edition, revised and enlarged, was issued in 1889. In 1880 and 1881 he contributed to the Archæological Journal a series of papers on "Dunster and its Lords," which was afterwards reprinted with additions as a volume for private circulation. This was followed, in 1886, by a "History of the University of Oxford from the earliest times to the year 1530." In the meanwhile Mr. Maxwell Lyte had been acting for some years as an Inspector for the Historical Manuscripts Commission. Reports by him on the Collections of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, the Duke of Rutland, and upwards of twenty other owners, have at different times been presented to Parliament. In January 1886 he was appointed Deputy-Keeper of the Records, in succession to the late Sir William Hardy, and as such was entrusted with the direction of all official publications and arrangements connected with the national archives, upon which he presents an annual report. In the following month he was nominated one of the Royal Commissioners on Historical Manuscripts. He was made a C.B. in January 1889, and a K.C.B. in 1897. He married, in 1871, Frances Fownes, daughter of the late J. C. Somerville, Esq., of Dinder, co. Somerset. Addresses: 3 Portman Square, W.; and Athenæum.

LYTTELTON, Hon. Alfred, M.P., M.A., is the eighth son of the 4th Lord Lyttelton, and was born on Feb. 7, 1857. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was captain of both his school and university cricket elevens. He graduated B.A. in 1878, was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1881, and joined the Oxford Circuit. He acted as Legal Private Secretary to Sir Henry James, when Attorney-General, from 1882 to 1886, was appointed Recorder of Hereford in 1894, and in the following year became Recorder of Oxford. Mr. Lyttelton has represented Warwick and Leamington as a Liberal Unionist Member of the House of Commons since 1895, and he was chosen to second the Address in the Lower House in 1897. Address: 16 Great College Street, Westminster, S.W.

LYTTELTON, Hon. Canon Edward, M.A., the seventh son of the 4th Lord Lyttelton, and Mary, daughter of Sir S. Glynne, born July 23, 1855, was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was foundation scholar, and where he gained a second-class in the Class Tripos in 1878. He was assistant-master at Wellington College, 1880-82; assistant-master at Eton College, 1882-90; and was appointed headmaster of Haileybury College in 1890. He was made an Honorary Canon of St. Albans in 1895. He married, in 1888, Caroline Amy, younger daughter of the Very Rev. John West, D.D., Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin. Mr. Lyttelton is the author of a "Handbook on Cricket," 1890; "Mothers and Sons," 1892; and "Shall we go on with Latin Verses?" 1897. He served on her Majesty's Royal Commission on Secondary Education, 1894-96. As a cricketer, moreover, Mr. Lyttelton has made his mark, and forms with his two brothers a remarkable trio of experts at this fine old English game. Residence: Master's Lodge, Haileybury College, Hertford.

MAARTENS, Maarten, novelist, was born in Holland, and received his education in Germany, and at the University of Utrecht. He is a barrister by profession, but for years now he has devoted himself entirely to literature. Some of his best-known books are: "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," "An Old Maid's Love," "A Question of Taste," "God's Fool" (perhaps his most popular work), and "The Greater Glory." These works, originally written in excellent English, are also published by the author in his native tongue. They present a not over-pleasant picture of bourgeois existence in the Netherlands, but are admitted by Dutchmen to be singularly true to life. On the occasion of her Majesty, Queen Wilhelmina of Holland, ascending the throne on Aug. 31, 1898, Mr. Maarten Maartens published a charming poem in the Daily Chronicle of that date, hailing the youthful Sovereign as "Queen of the Lowlands by the Northern Sea."

MACALISTER, Alexander, M.D., LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., F.S.A., second son of Robert Macalister, Esq., was born in Dublin on April 19, 1844, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He became L.R.C.S. in 1861, L.R.C.P. 1862, and subsequently M.A. and M.D. of the Universities of Dublin and Cambridge, LL.D. of the University of Glasgow and of McGill University. In 1869 he was appointed Professor of Zoology in Dublin University, and of Anatomy in 1872. In 1883 he was appointed Professor of Anatomy at Cambridge, and he was elected a Fellow of St. John's College. He is F.R.S. and member of the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland, and has published "Introduction to Animal Morphology," 1876; "Morphology of Vertebrate Animals," 1878; "Text-Book of Human Anatomy," 1889; and a number of papers on anatomical and other subjects. Address: Torrissdale, Cambridge.

MACALISTER, Donald, M.A., M.D., Cantab., B.Sc. London, F.R.C.P. London, was born May 17, 1854, at Perth, Scotland, and is the son of Donald MacAlister, Esq., formerly of Tarbert, Lochfyne, representative of the ancient family who were hereditary keepers of Tarbert Castle. He was educated at Aberdeen and at Liverpool Institute, and his scholastic successes were probably unique. He took the highest place in successive years in Oxford Senior, Cambridge Senior, and London Matriculation; five Gold and Silver Medals in the Science and Art Examinations; Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society; and five scholarships at Oxford and Cambridge. He entered St. John's College, Cambridge, October 1873, gained all College honours open to him, including the Herschel prize for Astronomy; graduated B.A. as senior wrangler and first Smith's prizeman 1877, and B.Sc. London the same year. He was Master at Harrow in 1877, and subsequently examiner, and was elected Fellow of St. John's in the same year. He studied medicine at Cambridge and St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, where he was Lecturer in Natural Philosophy, and graduated M.B. in 1881. He made researches in the physiology of heat-production under Professor Ludwig at Leipzig in 1881, and studied the mechanism of the heart and the architecture of bones, on which he has published papers. He graduated M.D. in 1884, and was elected Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, 1886; appointed Gulstonian Lecturer 1887, and first Croonian Professor 1888; Secretary and Recorder in the Section of Mathematics and Physics of the British Association for Advancement of Science, 1879-84, and Vice-President, 1886; is member of the Council, Tutor, and Linacre Lecturer, St. John's College; Physician to Addenbrooke's Hospital; late Member and Secretary of the University Council of Senate, 1886-98; Secretary of the Special Board for Medicine, Examiner and University Lecturer in Medicine; Accessor to the Regius Professor of Physic; Elector to the Professorships of Medicine, Surgery, Anatomy, Zoology, and Pathology; member of the General Board of Studies, and of the Local Examinations and other Syndicates; Representative of the University on General Medical Council (elected 1889); Examiner in Medicine at Victoria University; Thomson Lecturer at Aberdeen, 1889; late editor of the Eagle and of the Practitioner; member of the editorial committee of the British Pharmacopœia, 1898; and editorial referee of the British Medical Journal. He has published an English edition of "Ziegler's Pathological Anatomy," 1885-86 (3 vols., 3rd edit., 1897-98), and is the author of "The Nature of Fever," 1887; "Antipyretics," 1888; "Law of the Geometric Mean," 1879; "Advanced Study and Research in Cambridge," 1896; and other literary, scientific, and professional Memoirs. He is also a Fellow of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and of the Physical, Mathematical, and Physiological Societies of London; a Member of the Permanent International Commission of Hygiene and Demography (Madrid, 1898); and a Justice of the Peace for the county of Cambridge. He married Edith, eldest daughter of Professor A. MacAlister, in 1895. Addresses: Barrmore, Cambridge; St. John's, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

MACALISTER, John Y. W., son of Donald MacAlister, Esq., formerly of Tarbert, born at Perth in 1857, was educated at the High School, Liverpool, and Edinburgh University. For two years he studied medicine, but his health broke down, and when he recovered he chose librarianship as a vocation. In 1878 he entered the Liverpool Library as sub-librarian, and two years later was appointed Librarian of the Leeds Library, where he superintended the erection of the new buildings, the internal portion of which was designed by himself. He catalogued the collection of some 90,000 volumes, and classified the whole library on a system devised by himself. Recognised as an expert, he was invited by the Yorkshire College to assist in planning and arranging their new library, for which he received the cordial thanks of the College. While in Leeds he contributed many literary and antiquarian articles to the Leeds Mercury and Yorkshire Post, and was a successful lecturer. In 1887 he was appointed first librarian of the Gladstone Library. As soon as this appointment was made Mr. Gladstone invited Mr. MacAlister to Hawarden in order to discuss the scope of the new library, and to examine the statesman's ingenious methods of arrangement and classification. Immediately afterwards he was elected Librarian of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society (the "Academy of Medicine" of Great Britain), and the Committee of the Gladstone Library reluctantly released him from his engagement. He, however, acted as Librarian of the Gladstone Library for some months in an honorary capacity, and started the work on right lines with a well-selected nucleus of books. In his new position he soon made his energy felt. The Society was housed in such cramped and ill-adapted quarters in Berners Street, that a portion of its valuable library was stored in the cellars, while its income was barely sufficient for its needs. He submitted a scheme to the Council, which proposed that they should build new and suitable premises on such a scale and on such financial terms as, without cost to the Society, would place it ultimately in free possession. The scheme seemed so sanguine and risky that it was strongly opposed until Mr. MacAlister gained the powerful support of Sir Andrew Clark. In accordance with the scheme the Society purchased the freehold of 20 Hanover Square. Handsome premises were erected, which have become the centre of most of the leading scientific and literary societies in London. Mr. MacAlister's most sanguine expectations were realised, and the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society is now not only the chief medical society, but one of the wealthiest scientific societies of the kingdom. In 1892 Mr. MacAlister was appointed Chairman of the Editing Committee of the International Congress of Hygiene. In 1887 he was elected Honorary Secretary of the Library Association, and in that position has done great service to the library movement. In 1886 he founded the Library, a monthly magazine devoted to the work and literature of libraries, which soon became an established success. He has also edited the "Public Library Manual," the "Library Year-Book," and the "Library Association Series" of handbooks. In 1890 he took up the question of library legislation, then in a state of chaos, and it was mainly due to his efforts that in 1892 Sir John Lubbock was able to submit to Parliament a Bill consolidating and amending the different Acts, which soon passed, and is now the law under which all public libraries are conducted. In 1892 he visited the principal libraries of France, and was invited by the late Duc d'Aumale to visit him at Chantilly, and to examine his magnificent library. He obtained from the duke an invitation to the Library Association to visit Chantilly, which they did when, later on, its annual meeting was held in Paris. His latest service to the cause of libraries was to secure for the Association, through the powerful influence of Lord Dufferin, Lord Windsor, and Sir John Lubbock, a Royal Charter of Incorporation, which was granted in February 1898. Mr. MacAlister numbers amongst his friends many men of light and leading in the world of literature. He was very intimate with the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, who shortly before his death sent him a complete set of his works, each volume containing an appropriate autograph quotation. Dr. Nansen is an intimate friend of his, and it was Mr. MacAlister who presented a library of well-selected books to the Fram. Among his most-treasured possessions are souvenirs from the famous expedition, which Dr. Nansen sent to him on his return. "Mark Twain" is another of Mr. MacAlister's many friends, and when in London, the greatest of humourists often smokes the pipe of peace at 20 Hanover Square with his friend. Mr. MacAlister is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and of the Royal Geographical Society, and a well-known "Savage." His official address is 20 Hanover Square, W.

MACARTHUR, The Right Rev. James, D.D., Bishop of Bombay, was educated at the University of Glasgow, where he graduated M.A. in 1868. Becoming a Scotch Barrister in 1871, he was, three years later, called to the English Bar at the Inner Temple. Relinquishing the legal profession, Mr. Macarthur spent a year at Cuddesdon Theological College, and was ordained in 1878. After serving a curacy at St. Mary, Redcliff, Bristol, for two years, he was presented to the Rectory of Lamplugh, Cumberland, in 1880, and in 1887 he became Vicar of St. Mary, Tothill Fields, London. He was subsequently transferred to the Vicarage of All Saints, South Acton, in 1892, and was appointed Rural Dean of Ealing in 1894. In 1898 Mr. Macarthur was consecrated Bishop of Bombay.

M'ARTHUR, W. A., M.P., D.L., is the eldest son of Alexander M'Arthur, M.P., and was born in 1857, and educated privately. Entering upon a business career, he became partner in the firm of W. & A. M'Arthur, Australian merchants, and was Commissioner for New South Wales to the Colonial Exhibition in 1886. He is also a Director of the Bank of Australasia, and a D.L. for London. His parliamentary career dates from 1886, when he contested Buckrose, Yorks., but was unseated on a scrutiny. In 1887 he was returned as a Liberal for the St. Austell Division of Cornwall, and was again returned in 1892 and 1895. He was a Junior Lord of the Treasury from Aug. 1892 to July 1895, and since March 1894 has been second Liberal Whip. He has acted as Hon. Sec. and unofficial whip to the Committee of Radical members. Address: 14 Sloane Gardens, S.W.

MACARTNEY, Sir Halliday, K.C.M.G., son of Robert Macartney, of Dundrennan, Kirkcudbrightshire, was born in 1833, and was educated for the medical profession at the Edinburgh University. In 1856, during his student days, he joined a contingent of volunteers being raised for the Turkish army, and served through the Crimea, studying Turkish at the same time. Returning to Edinburgh he graduated M.D., and entered the Army Medical Service as Surgeon in the 99th Regiment, at that time under orders for India, where the Mutiny had broken out. The regiment arrived too late at Calcutta for its services to be required, and was sent on to China, where Macartney was present at the taking of the Taku Forts, the attack on Peking, and the sacking of the Summer Palace. Remaining in China after the peace, he took service under the Imperial Government, 1862, being granted military rank and command together with General Gordon, of whom he was the friend. As an officer in the Celestial army, he drilled a force of 3000 men, which operated with success against the Taepings. He also established a military arsenal at Nankin, of which he was Governor for twelve years till 1876. He was then sent to England on a special mission in connection with the Margary incident. A permanent mission being resolved upon by China, he became its European Secretary, and as such paid frequent visits to the principal European capitals. He attended the coronation of the present Czar's father, and has been present at many of the principal State functions at home and abroad. He is officially described as Councillor and English Secretary to the Chinese Legation in London, and his unrivalled knowledge of the Chinese language, customs, and policy, has led to his being described by Anglo-Chinese officials as "a thorough Chinaman." He received the honour of the C.M.G. in 1881, and the K.C.M.G. in 1885, and has been decorated with the Orders of the Precious Star and the Double Dragon. In 1884 he married Jeanne, daughter of J. L. de Sautoy. Address: 49 Portland Place, &c.

MACARTNEY, William G. E., M.P., is the eldest son of Mr. J. W. E. Macartney, M.P., of co. Tyrone, and was born in 1852. He was educated at Eton and Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated with a first class in History in 1875 (B.A.) He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1878, and went the South-Eastern Circuit. In 1885 he entered Parliament as Conservative Member for South Antrim, which he continues to represent. In 1895 he was appointed Secretary to the Admiralty. Addresses: Clogher Park, Tyrone, and Palace Chambers, Westminster, S.W.

MACAULAY, James, M.A., M.D., eldest son of Alexander Macaulay, M.D., was born at Edinburgh, May 22, 1817. His early education was received at the Edinburgh Academy, where he was from 1824 to 1830. The Rector of the school in those years was the Venerable Archdeacon Williams. Tait, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, was "Dux" of the school in 1826. In 1830 he entered the University of Edinburgh, where he took degrees in arts and in medicine, attending also the classes in theology. After graduating in 1841, Dr. Macaulay studied in Paris, and travelled in Italy and Spain. In 1850 he became joint-editor of the Literary Gazette, on the retirement of William Jerdan, and retained the appointment till 1857. In the following year he became editor of the Leisure Hour and the Sunday at Home. From the Leisure Hour office was issued, about twenty years ago, the Boys' Own Paper, which was started in order to take the place of the pernicious weekly literature which had previously been provided; and was followed by the Girls' Own Paper. Both were founded by Dr. Macaulay. He has also written many books of biography, travel, and adventure, some of them chiefly for juvenile reading, such as "All True," "Stirring Stories of Peace and War," "Wonderful Tales from Real Life," "Anson's Voyage Round the World," and his story, "From Middy to Admiral of the Fleet." The last of these Christmas books is entitled, "Strange, yet True; or, Interesting and Memorable Stories retold." "Notes of a Tour in the United States," which first appeared in the Leisure Hour, was afterwards issued as a volume, entitled "Across the Ferry," which passed through several editions. "The Truth about Ireland" contains the result of personal observation during repeated visits. One of Dr. Macaulay's volumes in the Pen and Pencil Series is "Sea Pictures," which Mr. Ruskin said was the best book he had ever seen on the subject. He has also published books on Luther, Dr. Johnson, and General Gordon; and in 1887, "Victoria R.I., her Life and Reign." On the occasion of the silver wedding of the Prince and Princess of Wales he issued an annotated collection of the "Speeches and Addresses of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales during twenty-five years, 1863-88." Dr. Macaulay has been for thirty-five years the editor-in-chief of the Religious Tract Society's periodicals. He is now Consulting Editor of its magazines, and only an occasional contributor to the Leisure Hour and Sunday at Home, to which he devoted so long a service as editor. He retired from the editorship of the Leisure Hour in 1895. He married, in 1860, a daughter of the late Rev. G. Stokes, vicar of Hope, Hanley. Address: 4 Wynnstay Gardens, Kensington, W.

MACBETH, Robert Walker, A.R.A., R.W.S., was born in Glasgow on Sept. 30, 1848, and is the second son of Norman Macbeth, R.S.A. He was educated in Edinburgh and abroad, and received his early art training at the Royal Scottish Academy Schools. He came up to London in 1871, and for a time drew for the Graphic. He became an Associate of the Royal Water-Colour Society in 1874, and is an original member of the Painter-Etchers, as well as a Correspondent of the Institut de France. He has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy, and of late years has had the following pictures hung: "Unenvied, Unmolested," and "Dunster Castle," 1895; two illustrations to "The Fair Maid of Perth," "Cider Making," an etching of Sir E. Burne Jones's "Chant d'Amour," &c., in the Black and White Room, and "Marauders from the Moor," "Sweethearts and Wives," a water-colour, 1896; "The End of a Good Day," a portrait sketch of Alfred Gilbert, R.A., and another of Philip H. Calderon, R.A., 1897; "In Cloudland," "Sparklets," and, in the Black and White Room, two etchings of Mr. MacWhirter's "Affric Water," and another of his, "End of a Good Day." In 1899 he exhibited "Favourites of the Hunt," "Naval Manœuvres," and, in the Black and White Room, "Midnight Moths." He married, in 1887, Lydia, eldest daughter of General Bates. He lives at Washford, not far from Dunster Castle, in Somersetshire, and his London studio is 28 Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.

M'CALLUM, Lieut.-Colonel Sir Henry Edward, R.E., K.C.M.G., Governor of Newfoundland, was born in 1882, and is the son of Major H. A. M'Callum, R.M.L.I. He passed out of Woolwich first in 1871, and was appointed Superintendent of Telegraphy in the Southern District in 1874. Subsequently he became Private Secretary to Sir William Jervois in the Straits Settlements, and prepared plans for the defence of Singapore. In 1879 he was at Woolwich at the Works Office, and in 1880 became Colonial Engineer of the Straits Settlements, and in 1884 Surveyor-General, when he constructed the new fortifications of Singapore. He was created a C.M.G. in 1887, and promoted Knight Commander in July 1898. He was Governor of Lagos until September 1898, when he was appointed to his present post in succession to Sir H. H. Murray, K.C.B.

M'CALMONT, Major Harry Leslie Blundell, M.P., J.P., D.L., was born in 1861, and is the eldest son of H. B. M'Calmont, Esq., barrister-at-law. He was educated at Eton, and in 1881 entered the 1st battalion of the 6th Royal Regiment, subsequently joining the Scots Guards in 1885. He retired in 1889, and is a Major in the 4th Battalion Royal Warwickshire Regiment (militia). In 1895 he was elected as a Conservative to represent Newmarket. He is well known as an owner of racehorses, especially of "Isinglass," winner of the "triple event" in 1893, i.e. the Derby, St. Leger, and the Two Thousand Guineas, and also of the Ascot Cup in 1895. He is a member of the Jockey Club and of the Royal Yacht Squadron, and owns the steam yacht Givalda. He married, in 1886, Amy H., daughter of Major-Gen. John Miller. This lady died in 1889, and he is now married to Winifred, daughter of General Sir Henry de Bathe, Bart. Addresses: 11 St. James's Square, S.W.; Cheveley Park, Newmarket, &c.

M'CALMONT, Major-General Hugh, C.B., J.P., is the eldest son of the late James M'Calmont, of Abbeylands, co. Antrim, and Emily, daughter of the late James Marten of Ross, co. Galway. Born on Feb. 9, 1845, he was educated at Eton. Entering the 7th Hussars, he served with the Red River Expedition in 1870, and three years later he was A.D.C. to General Wolseley on the Gold Coast. From 1878 to 1879 he was High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief in Cyprus, and held the same position in Natal in 1879-80. In the Egyptian War of 1882 he was Brigade-Major, and in 1885 commanded the Light Camel Regiment on the Upper Nile. He was raised to the rank of Colonel in 1885, and of Major-General in 1896. He was made C.B. in 1885, in recognition of his Egyptian services. He is a J.P. for counties Antrim and Dublin, and has sat for North Antrim since 1895. He married Rose Elizabeth, second daughter of the 4th Lord Clanmorris, in 1885. Address : Abbeylands, co. Antrim.

M'CARTHY, Jeremiah, M.A. Dublin; M.B. London; F.R.C.S. England; late Senior Member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, was born in Dublin, and is of Irish parentage. He received his medical education at Trinity College, Dublin, and at the London Hospital, where for many years he was Lecturer on Surgery and Surgeon, retiring from the latter position in the autumn of 1898. He is a Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical and Hunterian Societies, and has contributed important articles to Quain's and Heath's Dictionaries. Address : 1 Cambridge Place, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

McCARTHY, Justin, M.P., eldest son of the late Michael Francis McCarthy, was born at Cork on Nov. 22, 1830. After receiving a liberal education there, he became attached to the staff of a Liverpool paper in 1853. He entered the Reporters' Gallery of the House of Commons in 1860 for the Morning Star, became foreign editor of that paper the following autumn, and chief editor in 1864; he resigned the latter post in 1868, and travelled through the United States for nearly three years, visiting thirty-five of the thirty-seven States. Since that time he has more than once revisited America. Mr. McCarthy has contributed to the London Review, the Westminster Review, the Fortnightly Review, the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary Review, to several English magazines, and to many American periodicals, including the North American Review, and the Forum. He is the author of "The Waterdale Neighbours," 1867; "My Enemy's Daughter," 1869; "Lady Judith," 1871; "A Fair Saxon," 1873; "Linley Rochford," 1874; "Dear Lady Disdain," 1875; "Miss Misanthrope," 1877; "Donna Quixote," 1879; "The Comet of a Season," 1881; "Maid of Athens," 1883; "Camicola," 1885 (novels); of "Con Amore," a volume of critical essays; and "Prohibitory Legislation in the United States," an account of the working of the Liquor Laws in Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Iowa, and other States of the Union. In collaboration with Mrs. Campbell-Praed he has written three novels: "The Right Honourable," 1886; "The Rebel Rose," 1887; and "The Ladies' Gallery," 1888. More lately he has published "The Dictator," a novel, 1893; and "Red Diamonds," a novel, 1898. Mr. McCarthy's most important work is "A History of Our Own Times" (1878-80), being an account of what happened in these countries, from the accession of Queen Victoria to the general election of 1880. He has published the first and second volumes of a "History of the Four Georges." He has also written a short history of "The Epoch of Reform," the period between 1830 and 1850, published in 1882, and a "Life of Sir Robert Peel," in the series called "The Prime Ministers of Queen Victoria," published in 1891; in 1896 a "Life of Leo XIII.," in 1897, 5th vol. of "History of Our Own Times," up to June of that year; in 1898, "The Story of Gladstone's Life." Mr. McCarthy was for twenty-five years a political writer for one of the London daily papers. He was elected to Parliament as member for the county of Longford, Ireland, in March 1879, and was re-elected when the dissolution took place in 1880, in both instances without a contest. At the general election, 1885, he contested Derry, and was defeated by a majority of 29, but was immediately elected for Longford, by an immense majority. In 1886 he contested Derry again, and was defeated by a majority of 3, while at the same time he was returned unopposed for Longford. He claimed the Derry seat and obtained it on petition, and then elected to sit for Derry. He has since lectured in America. He is a Home Ruler, and was Vice-Chairman of the Irish parliamentary party in the House of Commons before the rejection of Mr. Parnell by the majority, when Mr. McCarthy was by them elected Chairman. He married, in 1855, Charlotte, daughter of the late W. G. Allman; she died in 1879. Address pro tem.: 11 Roxburgh Road, Westgate-on-Sea.

McCARTHY, Justin Huntly, author, was born in 1860, and is the son of Justin McCarthy, M.P. He was educated at University College School and College, and on his leaving the latter, travelled extensively and entered upon a career of journalism. He has written largely for the newspapers and magazines, and has published many books, including the following: (Poetry) "Serapion," "Hafiz in London," "Harlequinade"; (fiction) "Doom," "Dolly," "Lily Lass," "A London Legend," "The Royal Christopher"; (history) "An Outline of Irish History," "England under Gladstone," "Ireland since the Union," "The French Revolution"; (plays) "The White Carnation," "The Highwayman," "The Wife of Socrates," &c. He has also translated "Omar Khayyam," the "Arabian Nights," and Hafiz. He sat in Parliament as an Irish Nationalist from 1884 to 1892. In 1894 he married the accomplished Miss Cissy Loftus. Address: 31 King's Road, Brighton.

M'CLELAN, The Hon. Abner Reid, Lieut.-Governor of New Brunswick, was born at Hopewell, N.B., Jan. 4, 1831, of a family that had emigrated from Londonderry towards the end of the last century. He was educated at Mount Allison Academy, and for several years was a successful merchant at Hopewell. In 1854 he entered the N.B. Assembly as representative for Albert, and sat until the Union in 1867, which he aided to bring about, being Chief Commissioner of Public works at the time. In 1867 he was called to the Canadian Senate, where he sat until his appointment as Governor in 1896. Address: Government House, Fredericton, N.B.

M'CLINTOCK, Admiral Sir (Francis) Leopold, K.C.B., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., &c., is second son of the late Henry M'Clintock, Esq., uncle to the first Lord Rathdonnell, and of a daughter of Archdeacon Fleury. He was born at Dundalk in 1819, and entered the navy in 1831. After some years of foreign service, during which he was promoted to Lieutenant for special services in the recovery of H.M.S. Gorgon when stranded in South America, he returned to England about the time when great anxiety began to be felt for the safety of Sir John Franklin and his companions. He accompanied Sir James Clarke Ross as Second Lieutenant on board H.M.S. Enterprise, in the Arctic Expedition sent out by the Admiralty in 1848. Returning unsuccessful in November 1849, M'Clintock joined a second expedition sent out early in 1850, under the command of Captain Horatio Austin, as Senior Lieutenant of H.M.S. Assistance, Captain (Sir) Erasmus Ommaney. It was their fortune, in August 1850, to see, at Cape Riley, the first traces of the missing expedition. In the following spring, whilst frozen up at Griffith's Island, he signalled himself by an unprecedented sledge journey of eighty days and 760 geographical miles, reaching the most westerly point which had then been attained from the east, in the Arctic regions. Upon the return of this expedition to England in October 1851, Lieutenant M'Clintock was promoted to the rank of Commander. The following spring he again proceeded to the Arctic regions in command of H.M.S. Intrepid, one of five vessels composing the third searching expedition, under Sir Edward Belcher's command. In accordance with instructions from the Admiralty, the Intrepid, in company with the Resolute, Captain Kellett, wintered at Melville Island, in order to search for the heroic Captain M'Clure and his companions; and most fortunately they were discovered and rescued, after their three years' imprisonment in the ice. M'Clintock again distinguished himself by his sledge journey of one hundred and five days and 1210 geographical miles, into the hitherto unexplored region northward of Melville Island. The comparative perfection to which Arctic sledge-travelling has been carried is almost entirely due to the improvements effected by him. Abandoning four out of the five ships embedded in the ice, and also M'Clure's ship the Investigator, the personnel of this expedition, with M'Clure and his companions, returned to England in October 1854, in the depot ship North Star, and two relief ships, freshly arrived out, under Captain Inglefield. M'Clintock was now advanced to the rank of Captain. In 1857 he accepted the command of Lady Franklin's own search expedition—to be fitted out at her expense. He selected, and appropriately equipped, the steam yacht Fox, of 177 tons, and with twenty-four companions sailed on July 1, 1857. He returned on Sept. 20, 1859, having discovered, upon the north-west shore of King William's Island, a record announcing the death of Sir John Franklin and the abandonment of the Erebus and Terror. M'Clintock brought home intelligence of their great discoveries and the fate of their crews, and many relics of the bold expedition. He published a very interesting account of his most important and successful searching voyage. Captain M'Clintock was received with great distinction. Knighthood, the Freedom of the City of London, and the highest degrees of the chief Universities were conferred upon him. Her Majesty, by her Order in Council, sanctioned his time in the Fox to count as sea-time served in the navy, for having brought home the only authentic intelligence of the death of Franklin and the fate of his companions. During the next six years Sir Leopold commanded, in succession, H.M.S. Bulldog, Doris, and Aurora, fulfilling various important and delicate duties abroad. From 1865 to 1868 he served as Commodore of the Jamaica Station. From 1868, until promoted to Rear-Admiral in 1871, he was a naval Aide-de-camp to the Queen; from 1872 to 1877 Admiral-Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard, when he was promoted to Vice-Admiral; and from 1879 to 1882 he served as Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian Stations. In 1884 he became a full Admiral and also an Elder Brother of the Corporation of the Trinity House; in 1887 he was selected for one of the few pensions open to admirals, for "good and meritorious services"; and in 1891 he was created a Knight Commander of the Bath. He is the author of "The Voyage of the Fox in the Arctic Seas," which has gone through five editions. In 1870 Sir Leopold M'Clintock married Annette Elizabeth, second daughter of Robert Foster Dunlop, Esq., of Monasterboice House, co. Louth, by Anna Elizabeth, sister of 10th Viscount Massereene and Ferrard, and has issue. Address: 8 Atherton Terrace, Gloucester Road, S.W.

MACCOLL, Canon Malcolm, was born March 27, 1838, on a sheep farm occupied by his father, a man of some distinction in mathematical sciences, in Inverness-shire, and was educated at Edinburgh, at Trinity College, Glenalmond, and at the University of Naples. He was appointed assistant-curate of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, in 1861; chaplain to the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, 1862-63; curate of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, 1864-67. He spent the period between 1867 and 1869 in Southern Italy, chiefly in the study of theology, literature, and foreign politics. In 1871 he was collated to the rectory of St. George's, Botolph Lane, in the City of London. In 1884 he became a Canon residentiary of Ripon. He is the author of "Mr. Gladstone and Oxford," by "Scrutator," 2nd edit., 1865; "Science and Prayer," 4th edit., 1866; "Is there not a Cause? a Letter to Col. Greville Nugent, M.P. (late Lord Greville), on the Disestablishment of the Irish Church," 2nd edit., 1868; "The Reformation in England," 2nd edit., 1869; "The Oberammergau Passion Play," 10th edit., 1870; "Is Liberal Policy a Failure?" by "Expertus," 1870; "Who is Responsible for the (Franco-German) War?" by "Scrutator," 2nd edit., 1871; "The Damnable Clauses of the Athanasian Creed rationally explained," in a letter to Mr. Gladstone, 1872; "Lawlessness, Sacerdotalism, and Ritualism," 3rd edit., 1875; "The Eastern Question: its Facts and Fallacies," 1877; "Three Years of the Eastern Question," 3rd edit., 1878; "Christianity in Relation to Science and Morals," 5th edit., 1889; "Life Here and Hereafter," 2nd edit., 1896; "England's Responsibility towards Armenia," 4th edit., 1895; "The Sultan and the Powers," 2nd edit., 1896; besides contributions to periodical literature, and, in 1886, a pamphlet on the Irish Question, which passed through nine editions in the course of the year. In foreign politics he has made a special study of Mohammedanism as a theocratic system of government, inconsistent, as he contends, with civilisation, and fatal to the moral and intellectual development of any people who embrace it. This is his conclusion from the history and tenets of Islam, confirmed by his own observation in various Mohammedan lands. Address: The Residence, Ripon.

MACCOLL, Norman, M.A., editor of the Athenæum, was born in 1843, and educated at Downing College, Cambridge, of which he was a Fellow. He was Hare prizeman in 1868, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1875. He has published a work on "Greek Sceptics from Pyrrho to Sextus," 1869. Address: 1 New Court, Carey Street, W.C.; and Athenæum.

M'CONNELL, W. R., Q.C., J.P., D.L., Chairman of the County of London Court of Sessions, was born on July 2, 1837, at Belfast, being the only child of David M'Connell, J.P., of Castlereagh House, co. Down, and Jane, his wife, daughter of Alex. M'Connell. He was educated at the Royal Academical Institution, Belfast, at a private school in England, at Heidelberg, and the University of London, where he graduated B.A. in 1858. After being called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple in 1862, he joined the Northern Circuit in 1863. He was appointed Revising Barrister for Liverpool in 1868; one of the Counsel to the Board of Trade in 1875; and Counsel to her Majesty's Board of Customs in 1876. He was Royal Commissioner to inquire into Corrupt Practices at Parliamentary Elections in the city of Gloucester in 1880. He became a Queen's Counsel in 1897, and was appointed Chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions for the County of London in August 1897. He is a Magistrate for the counties of Down and London, a Deputy-Lieutenant, and a F.R.G.S. Mr. M'Connell is married to Minnie, daughter of Edward Marshall. Addresses: 35 Montague Place, Russell Square, W.C.; and Norfolk Cottage, Littlehampton, Sussex.

MAC CORMAC, Sir William, Bart., K.C.V.O., D.Sc., M.A., M.Ch. honoris causa, President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and Member of the Court of Examiners, Royal College of Surgeons, and now Examiner for H.M. Naval Medical Service, was born at Belfast, Jan. 17, 1836, being the eldest son of Henry Mac Cormac, M.D., and Mary Newsam. He was educated in the Belfast Institution, in Dublin, and in Paris; he became Bachelor and Master of Arts, also Master in Surgery, and Doctor of Science honoris causa of the Queen's University, and received its gold medal. He was afterwards a Member of the Senate, and Examiner in Surgery of the University.

He was appointed Surgeon, and subsequently Consulting Surgeon, to the Belfast Royal Hospital. He saw service at Metz and Sedan, during the Franco-German war, 1870-71, as Surgeon-in-Chief of the Anglo-American Ambulance, and during the Turco-Servian war, 1876. He was one of the Senior Surgeons, and Lecturer on Surgery at St. Thomas's Hospital during twenty years; is Consulting Surgeon and Emeritus Lecturer on Clinical Surgery to the Hospital, and Consulting Surgeon to the French Hospital, the Italian Hospital, and Queen Charlotte's Hospital. He is a Fellow of the English and Irish Colleges of Surgeons, and lately Examiner in Surgery in the University of London, and Examiner in Surgery for her Majesty's Army and Indian Medical Services. He is a Member of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. In 1881 he acted as Hon. Secretary-General of the International Medical Congress in London, and in consideration of his services in this capacity the Queen conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. In 1897 he was created a baronet on the occasion of her Majesty's Jubilee, and appointed Surgeon in Ordinary to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, whom he attended in July 1898, when H.R.H. was suffering from the effects of his accident. He was elected President of the Royal College of Surgeons of England for the third year in July 1898. In September 1898 he and Sir Francis Laking received the honour of knighthood in the Royal Victorian order. In December 1898, on the occasion of the Jubilee of the St. Petersburg Academy of Medicine, he was appointed an Hon. Member of the Academy. He is an officer of the Legion of Honour, Commander of the Orders of the Dannebrog, the Crown of Italy, and the Takovo; also possessor of the orders of the Crown of Prussia, North Star of Sweden, St. Iago of Portugal, Ritter Kreuz of Bavaria, Merit of Spain, and Medjidieh. Sir William Mac Cormac is the author of "Work under the Red Cross," and treatises on "Antiseptic Surgery," and "Surgical Operations," besides numerous surgical papers contributed to medical journals and addressed to medical societies. On Feb. 14, 1899, Sir William Mac Cormac delivered the Hunterian oration at the Royal College of Surgeons, England, in the presence of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. Addresses: 13 Harley Street, W.; and Athenæum.

M'CORMICK. The Rev. Joseph, M.A., D.D., was born in the year 1834, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1857, M.A. 1860, D.D. Dublin ad eundem, 1884). While at Cambridge he rowed in the University Eight, and was Captain of the University Eleven. He was ordained in 1858, and was for two years curate of St. Peter's, Regent Square, London; he was then appointed Rector of Dunmore East, Waterford, Ireland, where he remained until 1864, when he became Assistant-Minister of St. Stephen's, Marylebone. In 1867 he was appointed Perpetual Curate of St. Peter's, Deptford, and in 1875 he accepted the important Vicarage of Hull. He was made Rural Dean of Hull in 1875, Prebendary of York in 1884, and Hon. Chaplain to the Queen in 1890. In 1894 he was appointed Vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury. Address: 1 Highbury Quadrant, N.

MAC CUNN, Hamish, composer of dramatic music, was born at Greenock, March 22, 1868, and is the second son of James Mac Cunn, formerly shipowner in Greenock. He was educated at various schools in Greenock, and by private tutors, and commenced the study of music at the early age of six years. In 1883 he gained an Educational Scholarship for composition at the then newly-established Royal College of Music, London. There he studied principally under Dr. C. H. Hubert Parry until 1886, when he resigned his scholarship. His first introduction to the public was at the Crystal Palace in 1886, when at one of the Saturday concerts Mr. Manns produced his overture entitled "The Land of the Mountain and the Flood," which gained for its composer immediate fame. His principal works are: "Chior Mhor," overture for orchestra; "Bonnie Kilmeny," cantata for soli, chorus, and orchestra; concert overture, "The Land of the Mountain and the Flood;" "Lord Ullin's Daughter," ballad for chorus and orchestra; "The Ship o' the Fiend," ballad for orchestra; "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow," ballad—overture for orchestra; "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," dramatic cantata for soli, chorus, and orchestra; "Album of Ten Songs"; "Cycle of Six Love-Lyrics"; "The Cameronian's Dream," a ballad for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra; "Three Songs from William Black's 'Rhymes by a Deerstalker'"; (November 1894) an opera, produced at Edinburgh, and entitled "Jeanie Deans"; "Queen Hynde of Caledon," a dramatic cantata for soli, chorus, and orchestra; "Suite of Six Scotch Dances"; "Three Romantic Pieces," for cello and pianoforte; suite for orchestra, "Highland Memories"; ballad for male voice, chorus, and orchestra, "The Death of Percy Reed"; and a grand opera, "Diarmid," libretto by the Marquis of Lorne, produced at Covent Garden in October 1897. Besides the above mentioned, he is the author of many other songs, part-songs, &c. In June 1889 he married the only daughter of the late John Pettie, R.A. Address: 21 Albion Road, South Hampstead, N.W.

MACDONALD, The Most Rev. Angus, D.D., Roman Catholic Archbishop of St. Andrews and Edinburgh, was born at Borrodale, in Inverness-shire, on Sept. 18, 1844, and is the youngest son of the late Angus Macdonald, Esq., of Glenaladale, and Mary, daughter of Hugh Watson, Writer to the Signet. He was educated at St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw, and is a B.A. of London University. He was ordained priest in July 1872, and was consecrated Bishop of Argyll and the Isles in 1878, when the Hierarchy of Scotland was restored in March of that year. He was translated to his present see in 1892. Twenty years before that date the staunch Protestants of St. Andrews used to aver that there were only two Roman Catholics in the ancient University city, but under Archbishop Macdonald the Church of Rome has made converts in the diocese. Address: 42 Greenhill Gardens, Edinburgh.

MACDONALD, Sir Claude Maxwell, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., British Minister to the Court of China, son of the late Major-General J. P. Macdonald, was born in 1852. He was educated at Uppingham and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and entered the army as a Lieutenant of the 74th Highlanders in March 1872. He was promoted Captain in 1881, and Major in 1882, in which year he went to Egypt and took part in the campaign, being present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He was mentioned in despatches, and obtained the brevet of Major, the Khedive's Star, and medal with clasp. He remained in Egypt on special service, and in 1884 volunteered for the 1st Battalion of the Black Watch, which was attached to the Suakin Expedition, and took part in the battles of El-Teb and Tamai, where he was wounded. He obtained two clasps to his medal and the Osmanieh of the Fourth Class. From February 1883 until June 1887 he was attached by the War Office to the Agency at Cairo. He retired from the army in 1887, and was appointed Acting-Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar. In 1888 he became Commissioner on the West Coast of Africa, and the following year proceeded on a special mission to the Niger Territories. Subsequently at Berlin he took part in the delimitation of the boundary between the Oil Rivers Protectorate and the Cameroons, and then became Commissioner and Consul-General in the Oil Rivers Protectorate and the adjoining native territories. Sir Claude Macdonald was appointed in 1891 Commissioner and Consul-General in the Niger Coast Protectorate, Consul to the Island of Fernando Po, and also Consul in the Cameroons. He was created K.C.M.G. in 1892, and K.C.B. in 1898. In January 1896 he was appointed Envoy-Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Peking. Since his appointment, China has been passing through the most critical stage in its history; and although the British policy in the Far East has been severely criticised, yet Sir Claude Macdonald has secured some substantial concessions. Among them should be mentioned the decision of the Chinese Government to open all inland waters to navigation, whether by foreign or native steamers, and the assurance that no portion of the provinces adjoining the Yangtse-Kiang valley should be alienated to any other Power. It is also, in great measure, due to Sir Claude Macdonald that the Government undertook that, so long as British trade continued to exceed that of any other Power, the Inspector-General of Maritime Customs should be a British subject. In May 1899, he returned to England to take a short holiday, his health having been much impaired. Sir Claude married, in 1892, Ethel, daughter of Major W. Cairns Armstrong, widow of P. C. Robertson, Esq., of the Indian Political Service. Address: British Legation, Peking, China.

MACDONALD, Frederic William, born in Leeds, Feb. 25, 1842, is the son of the Rev. G. B. Macdonald, a well-known Wesleyan minister, and grandson of the Rev. James Macdonald. He was educated at St. Peter's Collegiate School, London, at Oxenford House, Jersey, and Owens College, Manchester, where he was Senior Prizeman in Classics, Greek Testament, and English Literature, session 1861-62. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1862. First stationed at Burslem, afterwards in Liverpool, Waterloo, Manchester, Southport, Kensington, and Clifton. In 1880 he was the representative of the British Methodist Conference to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States at Cincinnati. In 1881 he was Fernley Lecturer on "The Dogmatic Principle in Relation to Christian Belief," and was appointed Professor of Systematic Theology at the Birmingham branch of the Wesleyan Theological Institution. In 1885 he published "The Life of Fletcher of Madeley"; and in 1887 "The Life of William Morley Punshon, LL.D." He was assistant-editor of the London Quarterly Review, 1872-76, and was elected a member of the Birmingham School Board in 1888. In 1891 he retired from his professorship to become Secretary of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society, and in this capacity travels largely at home and abroad.

MACDONALD, George, LL.D., poet and novelist, was born at Huntly, Aberdeenshire, in 1824, and was educated at the parish school there, and at King's College and University, Aberdeen. After taking his degree he became a student for the ministry at the Independent College, Highbury, London, and was for a short time an Independent minister, but soon retired, became a lay member of the Church of England, and settled in London to pursue a literary career. His first work was "Within and Without, a Dramatic Poem," 1856; followed by "Poems," 1857; "Phantastes, a Faerie Romance," 1858; "David Elginbrod," 1862; "Adela Cathcart," 1864; "The Portent, a Story of Second Sight," 1864; "Alec Forbes of Howglen," 1865; "Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood," 1866; "Guild Court," 1867; "The Disciple and other Poems," 1868; "The Seaboard Parish," 1868; "Robert Falconer," 1868; "Wilfrid Cumbermede," 1871; "The Vicar's Daughter," and "Malcolm," 1874; "St. George and St. Michael," 1875; "Thomas Wingfield, Curate," 1876; "The Marquis of Lossie," 1877. Besides these Mr. Macdonald has written books for the young; "Dealings with the Fairies," 1867; "Ranald Bannerman's Boyhood," 1869; "The Princess and the Goblin," 1871; "At the Back of the North Wind," 1870; and others. He is also the author of "Unspoken Sermons," 1866; and a treatise on the "Miracles of our Lord," 1870. In 1877 he received a Civil List Pension of £100, in consideration of his contributions to literature. His later works are "The Gifts of the Child Christ, and other Poems," 2 vols., 1882; "Castle Warlock," 3 vols., 1882; "The Princess and Curdie," a fairy romance, 1882; "Weighed and Wanting," 1882; "The Wise Woman," a parable, 1883; "There and Back," a novel; and "A Rough Shaking," 1891; "Vicar's Daughter," 1893; "Lilith," 1895; "Salted with Fire," and "Rampolli," 1897. In May 1893 his poetical works were published in two volumes. For some years past Dr. Macdonald has lived principally at Bordighera, but pays annual visits to England. Address: Casa Coraggio, Bordighera.

MACDONALD, Greville, M.D., eldest son of George Macdonald, LL.D., the novelist and poet, was born in Manchester on Jan. 20, 1856. He was educated at King's College School, subsequently obtaining his medical education at King's College Hospital, where he gained several scholarships and prizes. In 1879 he took the membership of the Royal College of Surgeons; in 1881 he graduated with honours at the University of London, taking the degree of M.B., and his M.D. in the following year. After travelling in the East and on the Continent for some years, he was appointed Resident Medical Officer to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat in 1886; since which time he has devoted his attention solely to the study of affections of the nose, throat, and ear. In the following year he was appointed Honorary Physician to the same institution, which office he holds at the present time. In 1893 he was appointed Throat Physician and Lecturer on Diseases of the Throat and Nose to King's College Hospital. During the year 1888 Dr. Macdonald devoted his attention specially to a scientific investigation of the functions of the nose; the results of his experiments being published in a volume entitled "On the Respiratory Functions of the Nose." He had previously published (1887) a brochure entitled "The Forms of Nasal Obstruction in Relation to Throat and Ear Disease." He has since added to these "Board School Laryngitis," 1889; "A Treatise on Diseases of the Nose and its Accessory Cavities" (2nd edit.), 1892; "Hay Fever and Asthma," 1893. Besides the above he has contributed many articles and papers to the medical societies and journals, and is one of the editors of and contributors to the Medical Annual. One of his most recent papers is on "The Forms of Epithelial Hypertrophy in the Larynx" (International Clinics), 1895-96. Address: 85 Harley Street, W.

MACDONALD, Colonel Hector Archibald, C.B., D.S.O., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, was born April 13, 1852. He joined the Gordon Highlanders as a private soldier, and served in the ranks for over nine years. He first saw active service in the Afghan War of 1879-80, and for his conduct at the affair at Karatiga he was mentioned in despatches. He was attached to the Maidan Expedition, and was present at the engagement at Charasiah, and also took part in the operations round Cabul in December 1879. He accompanied Lord Roberts in the famous march to Cabul, and was present at the battle of Candahar, after which he was promoted Lieutenant for his distinguished conduct in the field. He also received a medal with three clasps and a bronze decoration. Lieutenant Macdonald went to South Africa in 1881, and took part in the Boer War, and was present in the engagement at Majuba Hill. In June 1885 he joined the Egyptian Constabulary, and served in the Nile Expedition of that year as Garrison-Adjutant at Assiout.

He was promoted Captain in the Gordon Highlanders in January 1888, and in the following December took part in the operations near Suakim and the engagement at Gemaizah. In 1889 he took part in the capture of Tokar and the battle at Toski, and was several times mentioned in despatches. He was awarded the D.S.O. and the third class of the Osmanieh, and in July 1891 was promoted Major in the Royal Fusiliers. He obtained the command of the 3rd Infantry Brigade of Lord Kitchener's Dongola Expeditionary Force, and was present at the engagement at Firket, and the operations at Hafir, promotion to brevet Lieut.-Colonel being the reward of his services on that occasion. During the operations in the Soudan in 1898, Macdonald as a Brigadier-General was appointed to the command of the Soudanese Brigade, which he soon brought to a high state of efficiency. At the battle of Atbara his troops distinguished themselves by their cool courage under fire and their spirited charges. He had the command of the same brigade at the battle of Omdurman and the taking of Khartoum. At one time during the fight a furious charge was made upon Macdonald's troops, which were somewhat unsupported. He made two rapid changes of front and effectually checked the Dervish rush, and thus defeated the only chance the enemy really had during the battle. But for Macdonald's generalship a slaughter of the Soudanese troops would have been unavoidable. He was promoted A.D.C. to the Queen, and obtained the rank of Colonel in the English army and that of Brigadier-General in the Egyptian army. Upon his return to England in May 1899 the Clan Macdonald presented him with a sword of honour in recognition of his distinguished services in the Soudan and elsewhere. The Highland societies of London also entertained him at a banquet, the Duke of Atholl being in the chair.

M'DONALD, John Blake, R.S.A., a descendant of the family of M'Donalds of Keppoch, was born in the parish of Boharm, Morayshire, in 1829. When very young his family removed to Deeside, where he was educated, and early developed a taste for art. He removed to Edinburgh in 1852, where he attended the Board of Trustees' School of Art for several years under Robert Scott Lauder and John Ballantyne, who were at that time the teachers, receiving previous to 1862 from the Royal Scottish Academy several prizes, and in that year the first prize for painting from life. In the same year he was elected Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy. In 1862 he painted "Prince Charlie leaving Scotland, or the Last of the Stuart Race," which was exhibited at the International Edinburgh Exhibition of 1886, and there greatly admired by the Queen, and the Prince of Wales. Within the next few years he produced the following pictures: "A Scene from the Legend of Montrose," "The Quest of Henry Morton," "King James and the Witches," "The Arrest of a Jacobite," "Prince Charlie in Hiding," and "After the '45." He also produced numerous paintings of subjects from Sir Walter Scott's works, including "The Lady of the Lake," "The Antiquary," "The Heart of Midlothian," "Waverley," and "Rob Roy," all of which were engraved for the Royal Association for the Promotion of Fine Arts, by Lumb Stocks, R.A., Bell, Le Conte, Brown, and others. "Van Tromp's Duel" was another picture of this period. In 1876 he went to Venice for six months, where he made several sketches of Venetian views, which, on his return, he painted in water-colours and oil. He has paid several visits, at various times, to other places on the Continent in connection with his art, including Paris, Brussels, Cologne, and several parts of Germany. After 1876 he turned his attention to landscape. His first painting of this class was "Strathyre, at the head of Loch Lubnaig." This was followed by "The Garry above Struan" in the Edinburgh Exhibition of 1891. In 1877 he was elected a Royal Scottish Academician, his diploma picture being the "Massacre of Glencoe" now in the National Gallery, Edinburgh. In 1881 he painted another historical picture, "The Meeting of Flora M'Donald and Prince Charlie." Since then he has been principally engaged in painting landscapes in oil and water-colour. Address: 4 St. Peter's Place, Viewforth, Edinburgh.

MACDONALD, John Denis, R.N., M.D., F.R.S., Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, youngest son of the late James Macdonald, Esq., of Cork, and Catherine his wife (daughter of the late Denis M'Carthy, Esq., of Kilcoleman), was born Oct. 26, 1826, and educated under his father's supervision. In 1841 he became the apprentice and pupil of the late Dr. Wm. L. Meredith, House-Surgeon to the South Infirmary, Cork; and commenced his professional studies in the Cork School of Medicine, but completed them in King's College, London, where he succeeded Dr. Martin Duncan, F.R.S., as prosecutor to the late Professor R. B. Todd, F.R.S., and Sir William Bowman, Bart., then joint-professors of physiology. Here he had the advantage of attending the Botanical Lectures of the late Professor Edward Forbes and the Zoological course of Professor T. Rymer Jones, who may be said to have first inspired him with a taste for natural history. He was the winner of Sir William Fergusson's prize in Surgery, the Medical Society's prize, and a Certificate in Medicine, while connected with the College. Having passed the College of Surgeons he entered the Navy as Assistant-Surgeon in 1849; was appointed to the Royal Naval Hospital, Plymouth; took charge of the Medical Museum, and made numerous pathological drawings and records, preserved in the Library. Subsequently he was appointed to H.M.S. Herald, Captain Henry Mangles Denham, F.R.S., Feb. 18, 1852, for surveying and exploring service in the S.W. Pacific. Before proceeding to join the ship Dr. Macdonald profited much by the advice and information communicated to him by Professor Huxley, whose discoveries in the South Sea fauna he afterwards had numerous opportunities of verifying, whilst himself studying the topography and natural history of the different localities visited either in the ship or in the steam-tender the Torch. These included both sides of the Australian Continent, Tasmania, the Islands in Bass's Strait, the Percy Islands, New Hebrides, New Caledonia, the Isle of Pines, and the Fiji Group. Microscopical drawings and determinations of all the more important soundings and products of dredge and towing net obtained in the expedition were communicated from time to time to the learned societies at home. He materially assisted Mr. John Macgillivray, the appointed naturalist, and Mr. Frederic Matthew Rayner, the surgeon, in making the large collection of objects of natural history which were sent home, and presented by the Lords of the Admiralty to the British Museum. He headed a perilous exploring expedition into the interior of Viti Levu, ascending the Rewa river to its source at the Moli vei tala, with a terrestrial horizon, for nearly a month. An abstract of the report sent home by the captain was published by the Geographical Society in the volume for 1857. Soon after this, the Rev. Mr. Baker, Wesleyan Missionary, and a party of native teachers were clubbed and eaten in the Solo ira district. Much information was furnished from time to time to the Colonial Office, and on leaving the Colony a gold chronometer was presented to Dr. Macdonald by the Governor-General, Sir William Denison, R.E., F.R.S., members of the Legislative Assembly, and other gentlemen, in recognition of services rendered. He was also made Corresponding Member of the Australian Museum by the late William Sharp Macleay, Esq., author of the "Horæ Entomologiæ," whose splendid library at Elizabeth Bay was frequently consulted when objects of interest presented themselves. On arriving in England in 1859, at the age of 33, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and was promoted and appointed the same year to H.M.S. Icarus (Commander, now Sir Nowell Salmon, G.C.B., V.C.), and in the West Indies encountered almost single-handed (two medical officers dying in succession) one of the most formidable epidemics of yellow fever on record. Some of the particulars connected with it will be found in the article on Yellow Fever in Reynolds's System of Medicine. He was awarded the M'Dougall Brisbane Gold Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, was also adjudged but not awarded the Keith prize, the technical reason being that he could not be called a Scottish Naturalist, as specified in the bequest. He gained the Sir Gilbert Blane Gold Medal for the journal of H.M.S. Lord Warlen flag-ship, Mediterranean Station (1871), and was frequently engaged as one of the medical board of examiners, and he subsequently superintended the Naval Medical Officers entering the Army Medical School, as Professor of Naval Hygiene and a member of the Senate. Dr. Macdonald was promoted to the rank of Inspector-General of Hospitals, &c., in 1880; appointed to the Royal Naval Hospital, Plymouth, in 1883; and placed on the retired list in 1886. The following are some of his published works: "Sound and Colour," setting forth the undulatory theory as the only trustworthy basis of analogy, 1869; "Guide to the Microscopical Examination of Drinking-Water," 1875; "Outlines of Naval Hygiene," 1881; "A Guide to Microscopical Examination of Drinking-Water," 1883. Address: Amwell Place, Hurst Pierpoint, Hassocks, Sussex.

MACDONALD, The Right Hon. John Hay Athole, Q.C., C.B., V.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., J.P., D.L. (Lord Kingsburgh), Lord Justice-Clerk of Scotland and Lord President of the Second Division of the Court of Session, son of M. N. Macdonald-Hume, of Ninewells, W.S., by Grace, daughter of Sir John Hay, of Smithfield and Haystoun, Bart., was born Dec. 27, 1836; educated at Edinburgh Academy and the Universities of Edinburgh and Basle (LL.D. Edin. 1884); became Advocate, Scotland, 1859, and Q.C. 1880. He was Sheriff of Ross, Cromarty, and Sutherland 1874-76, and of Perthshire 1880-85; Solicitor-General for Scotland 1876-80; and Commissioner of Northern Lighthouses 1876-80 and 1885-88; Member of H.M. Prison Board for Scotland and H.M. Board of Supervision 1875-76 and 1880-85; Dean of the Faculty of Advocates 1882-85, and

Lord Advocate of Scotland 1885-86, re-appointed 1886-88; sworn of the Privy Council 1885, and Member of the Committee of Council on Education 1885-88. He was created C.B. 1886, and received Volunteer Decoration 1892, and is a J.P. and D.L. for the County of the City of Edinburgh, and a Member of H.M. Board of Manufactures. He was Colonel-Commandant of the Queen's Rifle Volunteer Brigade (Royal Scots) 1882 to 1890, and is Brigadier-General of the Forth Brigade 1888; F.R.S.E. 1886 and F.R.S. 1888; Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers 1886; a Brigadier-General and Adjutant-General of the Royal Company of Archers (Queen's Body-Guard for Scotland); Chairman of Royal Commission on Boundaries of Glasgow 1888; unsuccessfully contested Edinburgh 1874 and 1880, and Haddington Burghs 1878. He sat as M.P. for the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews 1885-88. He is an eminent electrician, having received numerous medals at International Exhibitions for inventions; is an authority on Criminal Law, and his books and lectures on Drill and Tactics have been used as a basis for the improvement of British Infantry drill. His chief works are: "Macdonald on Tactics," "Treatise on the Criminal Law," "Our Trip to Blunderland," "Common Sense on Parade, or Drill without Stays," &c. He married in 1864 Adelaide Jeanette, daughter of Major Doran of Ely House, Wexford; she died in 1870. Address: 15 Abercromby Place, Edinburgh.

MACDONALD, Sir William C., is the youngest son of the late Hon. Donald M'Donald, at one time President of the Legislative Council of Prince Edward Island. In 1854 he left Prince Edward Island and became an importer and tobacco merchant in Montreal. He received the honour of Knighthood (December 1898) for his gifts to philanthropical and educational objects in Canada. He has been especially munificent to the McGill University, his contributions to that institution amounting to upwards of 1,600,000 dollars. He is a Governor of McGill University, Montreal, a Governor of the Montreal General Hospital, and a Director of the Bank of Montreal. He is a Roman Catholic. Address: Montreal.

MACDONELL, Sir Hugh Guion, G.C.M.G., her Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary at Lisbon, was born at Florence, March 5, 1832, and is the second son of Hugh Macdonell. He was educated at Sandhurst, and joined the Rifle Brigade in 1848, with which regiment he served in British Kaffraria till 1852. In 1854 he entered the Diplomatic Service as an unpaid Attaché, and was promoted to be a paid Attaché at Constantinople in 1858, and rose to be Second Secretary in 1862. He was successively Secretary at Buenos Ayres 1869, Madrid 1872, Berlin 1875, Rome 1878, and Munich 1882. In 1885 he was British Minister to Brazil, being transferred to Copenhagen in 1888, and to his present post in 1893. He was created a C.B. in 1890, a K.C.M.G. in 1892, and a G.C.M.G. in June 1899. Address: British Legation, Lisbon.

MACDONNELL, Sir Antony Patrick, G.C.S.I., Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces of India, was born in 1844, and having been educated at Queen's College, Galway, he entered the Indian Civil Service in 1865. He became Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces in 1891, Acting Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in 1893, and Member of the Viceroy's Council in the same year. In 1895 he was promoted to his present post, and was created a G.C.S.I. in 1897. In October 1898 he was entertained at a banquet in London by his friends and admirers. Address: Government House, Allahabad.

McDOUGALL, The Hon. William, C.B., Q.C., and a Privy Councillor for Canada, was born at Toronto, Jan. 25, 1822. His grandfather, John M'Dougall, served through the American Revolution in the British Commissariat. He was educated at Toronto and at Victoria College, and afterwards studied law. From 1848 to 1858 he conducted at Toronto a monthly journal on agriculture, and from 1850 edited the North American, which was merged in the Toronto Globe in 1857. He was first elected to Parliament as a Reformer in 1858; was appointed Commissioner of Crown Lands, and a Member of the Executive Council in a Reform Ministry in May 1862; and resigned office with his colleagues in March 1864 on questions of constitutional changes; in June of the same year accepted the office of Provincial Secretary in a coalition ministry, formed to carry a measure to unite British America under one government. During the Fenian troubles in the summer of 1866, Mr. McDougall was charged with the duties of Minister of Marine. In the first Dominion Government of 1867 he was made Minister of Public Works, which position he held until 1869. In 1868 he and Sir George Cartier were sent to England to confer with the Imperial Government on some questions that had arisen between the Provinces, including the acquisition of the North-West Territory and Rupert's Land then claimed by the Hudson Bay Company, under its charter from Charles II. After five months' negotiations the delegates concluded the purchase of nearly one half the North American continent for £300,000, and one twentieth of the prairie land surveyed within twenty years. In 1869 he was commissioned Lieut.-Governor of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territories, but the half-breed rebellion, under the provisional government of Louis Riel, at the time prevented his entering the country. Returning to Ottawa he resumed his place in Parliament, and declined to assume the Governorship after the suppression of the outbreak. In 1873 he was the Special Commissioner of the Dominion Government to confer with the Imperial authorities on the subject of the Fisheries and Emigration. Mr. McDougall sat for South Simcoe in the Ontario Legislature from May 1875 to September 1878, when he resigned to contest Halton in the Dominion Parliament, which he represented until 1882. He was offered the Governorship of British Columbia or the Chief-Justiceship of Manitoba in 1878, both of which he declined. He resumed the practice of his profession at Ottawa as Consulting Counsel in special cases. In 1867 he was created C.B. (Civil), and subsequently became a Puisne Judge in the Province of Quebec.

MACEVILLY, The Most Rev. John, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Tuam, Primate of Connaught and Metropolitan, was born in Louisburgh, co. Mayo, on April 24, 1817, of respectable parents of the farmer class. He was educated at St. Jasteth's, Tuam, then graduated at Maynooth College, and after having earned the highest collegiate honours was a scholar of the Dunboyne Establishment for three years, and was ordained Priest in 1840. He was appointed Professor of SS. Scripture in St. Jasteth's in 1842, and in course of time became President of that College, which position he held up to the year 1857. In March 1857 he became Bishop of Galway, and in 1866 was also appointed temporary Administrator of Kilmacduagh and Kilfenora, remaining still Bishop of Galway. Between 1852 and 1894 he wrote a full Commentary in the English language on the entire New Testament, except the Apocalypse or Revelation. It has achieved a wonderful success, is used as a class book in almost all Colleges, and has reached (at any rate the Epistles and leading Gospels) the fifth edition. It is in great request at home and abroad, especially in America. The Archbishop, who is now in his eighty-second year, administers the largest Diocese in Ireland with wonderful vigour and vigilance. Address: St. Jasteth's, Tuam, co. Galway.

MACEWEN, Professor William, M.D., F.R.S., LL.D. (Glasgow), F.F.P.S. (Glasgow), was born in 1848, received his medical education at Glasgow University, of which he is M.D., and was appointed Regius Professor of Surgery in the same in 1892. He became F.R.S. in 1895. On the occasion of the Jubilee of the St. Petersburg Academy of Medicine in December 1898, he was appointed an Hon. Member of the Academy. He has published "Osteotomy," 1880; "Observations concerning Transplantation of Bone," 1881; "Transverse Fracture of the Patella," "Surgery of the Brain and Spinal Cord," &c. Address: 3 Woodside Crescent, Charing Cross, Glasgow.

M'GAW, Joseph Thorburn, M.A., D.D., was born on December 7, 1836, at Sunnyside, five miles from Belfast. His father, Mr. William Orr M'Gaw, was a well-known office-bearer in Carnmoney Presbyterian Church, and was held in the highest esteem for his superior intelligence and his marked integrity of character. His mother was a daughter of the Rev. Alexander Clarke, minister of Lylehill Presbyterian Church, near Antrim. He was sent at an early age to Belfast Academy, of which the Rev. R. J. Bryce, LL.D., was then Principal. In 1854 he entered Queen's College, Belfast, and secured the first Scholarship on the Classical side. In 1855, before he was quite nineteen, he was appointed Principal of the Coleraine Academy. In 1859 he became Headmaster of the English School of the Belfast Academy, and he was offered the Principalship some years afterwards. Prior to taking his degree he spent an extra session at the University of Glasgow. He graduated in the Queen's University in 1861, taking a double first in English Literature and Metaphysics, and obtaining a valuable exhibition and gold medal. In the same year, in competition with two distinguished rivals, he carried off one of the most coveted prizes of his college, the Senior Scholarship in Metaphysical and Economical Science, and became Assistant to the Professor of Logic and Metaphysics—Dr. M'Cosh, afterwards President of Princeton. Mr. M'Gaw studied theology at the General Assembly's College, Belfast. During his divinity course he took a leading part in philanthropic and religious work. In May 1862 he was licensed by the Presbytery of Belfast, and in the autumn of the same year he was ordained at Ramelton, in co. Donegal. In June 1865, before he had completed his twenty-ninth year, he was elected by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland to the Chair of Logic, Belles-Lettres, and Rhetoric in Magee College, Londonderry. He took an active part in the educational life of the "Maiden City," and was the founder of the Londonderry Academical Institution. In 1874 Professor M'Gaw resigned his chair in order to accept a call from the new congregation at Sale, Manchester, to which he ministered with much success till 1889, when the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England unanimously appointed him General Secretary. In 1891 the Presbyterian Theological Faculty of Ireland conferred upon him the degree of D.D. During a vacancy in the Barbour Chair of the Presbyterian College, London, Dr. M'Gaw lectured on Homiletics and Pastoral Theology. In 1896 his brethren showed their appreciation of his work and their esteem for himself by unanimously electing him Moderator of the Synod—the highest honour at their disposal. From this record it will be apparent that Dr. M'Gaw has been a worker and a preacher rather than an author. He has found time, however, to contribute occasional articles to the magazines, and, when a Professor in Magee College, he published an address delivered as President of the Faculty on "Pantheism and Positivism as antagonistic to Christianity." Address: 7 East India Avenue, London, E.C.

M'GRATH, Terence. See BLAKE, HENRY ARTHUR.

M'GREGOR, Robert, R.S.A., was born, of Scottish parents, in Yorkshire, July 6, 1848. Both his father and grandfather were artistic designers for table linen and silk goods. He was educated in Manchester and Edinburgh; and elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy (A.R.S.A.) in 1882, and Royal Scottish Academician (R.S.A.) in 1889.

MACGREGOR, Sir William, K.C.M.G., C.B., M.D., and LL.D. Aberdeen, B.Sc. Cambridge, Lieutenant-Governor of British New Guinea, was born in 1847, and is the eldest son of the late John Macgregor. He was educated at Aberdeen and Glasgow, and in Berlin and Paris. He began his medical career as Resident Surgeon and Resident Physician at the Glasgow Royal Infirmary and Royal Lunatic Asylum, Aberdeen. In 1873 he was appointed Assistant-Government Medical Officer in the Seychelles, was Surgeon at the Civil Hospital, Port Louis, Mauritius, in 1874, and became Chief Medical Officer in Fiji, 1875. In 1875 he was appointed Administrator of the Government and Acting High Commissioner and Consul-General for the Western Pacific; and in 1888 Administrator of British New Guinea, and Lieut.-Governor in 1895. In 1889 he was made Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Address: Government House, Port Moresby, British New Guinea.

MACHRAY, Most Reverend Robert, D.D., LL.D., the first Canadian Archbishop of the Church of England and Primate of All Canada, was born in Aberdeen in 1832, his father being a lawyer. He was educated at King's College, Aberdeen, and Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, graduating in 1855. He became a Fellow of his College, and in 1865, when Vicar of Madingly, was appointed Bishop of Rupertsland, a diocese formerly including Manitoba and North-West Territories, but now only the former. He is Chancellor of St. John's College, Manitoba, and in 1893 became Prelate of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. At the First General Synod of the Church of England in Canada he was made Primate of the Dominion, and Archbishop of his See, September 1893. Address: Bishop's Court, Winnipeg.

M'ILWRAITH, The Hon. Sir Thomas, K.C.M.G., LL.D., was born at Ayr, N.B., in 1835, and was educated at the Glasgow University. He went out to Victoria in 1854, and was civil engineer on the Government railways. He entered the Queensland Parliament in 1869; was Minister of Works, 1873; and Premier, 1879-83, when the general election resulted in a majority for Sir Samuel Griffith. In 1886 he retired from public life, but re-entered it in 1888, arousing enthusiasm by his programme of a National Party, and he became Premier for a short while. During this period the well-known dispute arose with the Governor, Sir Antony Musgrave, as to his prerogative of mercy in the case of convicted criminals. He resigned his post in November of the same year through ill-health, and travelled to China and Japan. In 1890 he joined Sir Samuel Griffiths in defeating the Government, and became Treasurer in his administration during 1890-91. He was again Premier from 1892 to 1893, when he finally retired. He is married to Harriette, daughter of Hugh Mossman. Address: Brisbane, Queensland.

M'INNES, The Hon. Thomas Robert, Lieut.-Governor of British Columbia, was born at Lake Ainslie, Nova Scotia, Nov. 5, 1840. He studied medicine at Harvard University and at the Rush Medical College, Chicago, graduating M.D. in 1869. He practised for some years at Dresden, Ontario, becoming reeve of the town in 1874. In the same year he removed to New Westminster and was mayor of that town, 1876-78. From 1878 until 1881 he sat in the House of Commons, when he was called to the Senate. In November 1897 he was appointed to his present post. Address: Government House, Victoria, B.C.

McINTOSH, Professor William Carmichael, M.D., LL.D. St. Andrews, F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.L.S., J.P., was born at St. Andrews, Oct. 10, 1838; and was educated at the Madras College, St. Andrews, the University of St. Andrews, and the University of Edinburgh, graduating in Medicine in 1860 with a Thesis (Gold Medal); L.R.C.S., Edinburgh, 1860; Cor. Memb. Z.S.; Soc. Psychol. Par. Soc. Honor., 1866; Soc. Centrale d'Agricult. de France Soc. Honor.; and Hon. Member of other societies. Dr. McIntosh was Assistant-Physician, Perth Asylum, from August 1860 to March 1863; Physician to the Perth District Asylum from March 1863 to November 1883, and a Consulting Physician to the latter till 1893. He was Examiner in Natural History, University of Edinburgh, from October 1874 to January 1885; Professor of Natural History, University of St. Andrews, August 1882; President Biol. Sect. Brit. Assoc., 1885; Member of the Fishery Board for Scotland, 1892-96; Director of the University Museum, and Hon. President of various students' societies. He is also J.P. for Fife, and Vice-President Lit. and Antiq. Soc., Perth, and Literary and Philosophical Society, St. Andrews. He has published: "Observations and Experiments on the Shore Crab," 1860; "The Marine Invertebrates and Fishes of St. Andrews," 1875; "Monograph of the British Annelida (Ray Society)," 1872-73, and Part II., 1898; "The Annelida of H.M.S. Challenger," 1885; "Report on Trawling," for H.M. Commission under Lord Dalhousie, 1884; "On the Development and Life-Histories of the British Food-Fishes" (with E. E. Prince, B.A.), 1889; "Life-Histories of the British Food-Fishes" (with Dr. A. T. Masterman). Dr. McIntosh is Neill Gold Medallist, Royal Society of Edinburgh; Gold Medallist, Edinburgh Fisheries Exhibition, 1882; Gold Medallist, International Fisheries Exhibition, London, 1883. He has written numerous medical papers. Of scientific papers (Zoological) he has published upwards of a hundred, some of them of considerable size, and the majority illustrated by original plates. He has made large additions to the Perth Museum and to the University Museum, St. Andrews; while the St. Andrews Marine Laboratory (1884) owes its existence to him, with the aid of the Government and the Fishery Board. By the munificence of Dr. C. H.

Gatty, there is now the Gatty Marine Laboratory of the University of St. Andrews. He is Captain of the University company of artillery. Addresses: 2 Abbot'sford Crescent, St. Andrews; Barham, Springfield, Fife.

MacINTYRE, Margaret, prima donna, is a daughter of General MacIntyre, late of the Royal Artillery. She received her musical education at Dr. Wyld's branch of the London Academy of Music at Brighton, and subsequently studied under Signor Garcia at the London Academy of Music. She won the Bronze Medal of the Academy in 1883, the Silver Medal in 1884, the Gold Medal in 1885, and obtained an Associate's diploma. On the occasion of the late Abbé Liszt's visit to England, Miss Maggie MacIntyre sang the soprano music in that composer's oratorio of "St. Elizabeth," and won his warm approval. In May 1888 she appeared as Michaela in "Carmen," and won an instant success. At the Royal English Opera House she sang the part of Rebecca in "Ivanhoe," and in 1891 took part in the Handel Festival. She has also won great applause in Australia and the Colonies, and has sung as prima donna at La Scala and in St. Petersburg and Moscow. Address: 8 Pont Street, S.W.

MACKAY, Sir James Lyde, K.C.I.E., Indian merchant, was born at Arbroath, Sept. 11, 1852. He was educated at Arbroath and Elgin, and in 1874 he went out to India to the firm of MacKinnon, MacKenzie & Co., of which he has been a partner since 1881. He was appointed a member of the Legislative Council of the Viceroy of India in 1891; from 1890 to 1893 he was President of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. He returned to England in the next year, and is a member of the Council of India, and a Director of the British India Steam Navigation Company. Address: 7 Seamore Place, Mayfair.

MACKELLAR, Alexander Overlin, M.D.R.U.I., F.R.C.S. Eng., received his medical education at Manchester; Queen's College, Belfast; University College, London; and in Paris. He is Surgeon, Senior Lecturer on Practical Surgery, and Lecturer on Forensic Medicine at St. Thomas's Hospital, and Surgeon-in-Chief to the Metropolitan Police Force. He was formerly Surgeon-in-Chief at the French Hospital, London. He took part as surgeon in the Franco-Prussian Campaign of 1870-71, and for his distinguished services was created Knight of the Military Order of Merit of Bavaria. Attached as Surgeon-in-Chief to the English ambulance in the Turco-Servian War of 1876, he subsequently became Knight Grand Cross of Takovo, &c. He was Consulting Surgeon to the fifth Ambulance of the Red Crescent during the Russo-Turkish War of 1877, and has the first class of the Medjidieh, besides other orders. Address: 79 Wimpole Street, W.

McKENDRICK, Professor John Gray, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.R.C.P., was born in Aberdeen on Aug. 12, 1841. He was educated in Aberdeen and in Braco village, Perthshire, spent several years in a law office in Aberdeen, and then taking to the study of medicine, he graduated as M.D. and C.M. at the University of Aberdeen in 1864. He held in succession the offices of Visiting Surgeon to the Chester General Infirmary, Resident Medical Officer to the Eastern Dispensary, London, and Surgeon to the Belford Hospital, Fort William. He then became Assistant to the late Professor Hughes Bennett, in the Chair of the Institutes of Medicine or Physiology in the University of Edinburgh. Owing to Professor Bennett's illness, he discharged the entire duties of the Chair for three sessions, then became an Extra-mural Lecturer on Physiology in Edinburgh for two years, and was appointed to the Chair of Institutes of Medicine in the University of Glasgow in 1876. For two years he held the office of Fullerton Professor of Physiology in the Royal Institution of Great Britain; and on two occasions he was the Thomson Lecturer on Natural Science in the Free Church College of Aberdeen. He has written various papers on physiological subjects, such as on the Action of Light on the Retina, on the Antagonism of Drugs, on Anæsthetics, &c., published in the Medical Journals and in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh. He has devoted special attention to physiological acoustics, and to the scientific use of the phonograph. In 1896 he devised a method by which the time, rhythm, and intensity of music may be communicated to the deaf. He published a work entitled "Outlines of Physiology" in 1878, and a larger "Text-book of Physiology," in 2 vols., in 1889; "Life in Motion, or Muscle Nerve," 1892; and "Physiology," 1896. He is LL.D. of the University of Aberdeen, 1882; F.R.C.P. Edin., 1872; F.R.S.E. 1873; and F.R.S. 1884. He married, in 1867, Mary, daughter of W. Souttar, Aberdeen. MACKENZIE, Hon. Sir Alexander, K.C.S.I., late Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, was born at Dumfries, June 28, 1842, and is the eldest son of the Rev. J. R. Mackenzie, D.D. He was educated at King Edward School, Birmingham, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1862, and became Assistant-Magistrate at Shahabad in 1863. In 1873 he was on Famine Duty, and in 1876 Magistrate at Moorshedabad. He became Home Secretary to the Government of India in 1882. In 1887 he was Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, and was transferred to Burmah in 1890, while in 1895 he was appointed to the Lieut.-Governorship of Bengal, which he held till 1898. He married Maud, the grand-daughter of the late Sir George Elliott, Bart., in 1893, having been created K.C.S.I. in 1891. He has written a work on the "North-East Frontier of Bengal" in 1884. Address: The Shrubbery, Darjiling.

MACKENZIE, Sir Alexander Campbell, Mus. Doc. St. And., Camb., and Edin., Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, is the son of a favourite Edinburgh musician, Alexander Mackenzie of the Theatre Royal, was born in Edinburgh in 1847, and sent to Germany, at the age of ten, to study under Ulrich Edward Stein. Four years later he entered the ducal orchestra at Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, and remained in Germany till 1862, when he came to London to study the violin under M. Saindon. The same year he was elected King's Scholar at the Royal Academy of Music. In 1865 he returned to Edinburgh as a teacher of the pianoforte, then resided for some years in Italy, devoting himself entirely to composition. His earlier works comprise "Cervantes," an overture for orchestra: a scherzo for the same; overture to a comedy; string quartette, and many other pieces in MS., but the composition which made him famous was his opera "Colomba," based upon Mérimée's celebrated story. This work (of which the libretto was written by Dr. Hueffer) was produced with very great success by the Carl Rosa Company at Drury Lane in 1884. This was followed by "Jason," for a Bristol musical festival; "La Belle Dame sans merci," for the Philharmonic Society, and the "Rose of Sharon" for Norwich; two "Scottish Rhapsodies" for orchestra, and a violin concerto for Birmingham. His second opera, "The Troubadour," was produced in the summer of 1886; and at the Leeds Festival of 1886 his cantata "The Story of Sayid" was performed with success, and in 1890 "Ravenswood" was equally successful at the Lyceum. Among other works from his pen are: "A Jubilee Ode" for the Crystal Palace, "The New Covenant" for the Glasgow Exhibition of 1888, a Twelfth-Night "Overture," "The Cottar's Saturday Night," "The Dream of Jubal" for Liverpool, a "Pi-broch" for Leeds, "Veni, Creator Spiritus" for Birmingham. His latest published works are: "Bethlehem," an oratorio; music to "The Little Minister," Scottish Concerto for the Pianoforte, "His Majesty," comic opera, Savoy Theatre. He was elected Principal of the Royal Academy of Music in February 1888, in succession to the late Sir George Macfarren, and in 1893 Conductor of the Philharmonic Society. He received the honour of knighthood in 1895. Addresses: 4 Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, W.; and Athenæum.

MCKENZIE, Marian. See SMITH-WILLIAMS, MRS., A.R.A.

MACKENZIE, Robert Jameson, Rector of Edinburgh Academy, third son of the late Hon. Lord Mackenzie, Senator of the College of Justice in Scotland, was born in Edinburgh, Feb. 3, 1857. He was educated at Loretto School, Midlothian, and Keble College, Oxford, of which he was senior classical scholar, and where he graduated M.A. After being a master at Clifton College from January 1882 to April 1888 he was appointed Rector of the Edinburgh Academy in October 1888. He has published a "Memoir of the late Ernest Roxburgh Balfour," which was written in conjunction with the Rev. Cosmo G. Lang, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and Vicar of Portsea. To Mr. Mackenzie must be attributed the revival of the Edinburgh Academy, which was at a very low ebb when he succeeded to the rectorship. The school, which then numbered little over 200, now numbers 400. A large gymnasium and laboratory, two fives courts, and half a dozen schoolrooms have been built during this period, and a second cricket ground of 9 acres has been acquired to meet the new needs of the school. In connection with this field, 2½ acres of ground have been secured on an admirable site in the north of Edinburgh, within ten minutes' walk of the school, upon which boarding-houses are being erected by the Edinburgh Academy Boarding-House Company—a company which has been formed among the old boys. In recent years the school has been successful in gaining scholarships at Oxford and Cambridge, and has upon two occasions given remarkably successful representations of Greek plays, the "Antigone" of Sophocles having been produced in 1895, and the "Alkestis" of Euripides in the present year. It has also been successful in passing boys high for Woolwich, the Woods and Forests, and other examinations. In athletics the Academy has risen to a level with the chief boarding-schools in Scotland, having during the last season, and on former occasions, defeated at football both Fettes and Loretto. During the last five years two Academy boys have been captains of the Oxford University Rugby Football "Fifteen," namely, the late E. R. Balfour and T. A. Nelson. Address: The Academy, Henderson Row, Edinburgh.

MACKENZIE, Stephen, M.D., F.R.C.P., brother of the late Sir Morell Mackenzie, received his medical education at the London Hospital, at Aberdeen University, and in Berlin. He graduated M.D., with special honours for his graduation thesis, at Aberdeen in 1875, and in 1873 obtained highest honours at the M.B. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London, and of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., besides being member of a number of learned societies. He is Physician, and Physician in charge of the department for skin diseases at the London Hospital, where at one time he lectured on Pathology, and is now Lecturer on the Principles and Practice of Medicine. He is an examiner in medicine at the Roy. Coll. Phys., and holds a number of hospital appointments. His contributions to medical literature chiefly take the form of articles on "Vertigo," "Jaundice," &c., in Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," articles on "Chyluria" and "Filaria" in Heath's "Dictionary of Surgery," and various contributions to the medical transactions and journals. His address is: 18 Cavendish Square, W.

MCKINLAY, Mrs. John, née Antoinette Sterling, by which name she is known professionally, was born at Sterlingville, Jefferson Co., in the State of New York, in 1850, and is the youngest daughter of James Sterling, of old New England descent. She was educated as a vocalist under Abella, Marchesi, Pauline Viardot, and Manuel Garcia. She made her début at one of the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts in 1873, and at once became a general favourite for ballads and Scotch songs. Her rendering of "The Better Land" and "The Lost Chord" is celebrated. In 1875 she married Mr. John McKinlay. He died in 1893. She is a vice-president of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union. Address: 125 Ashley Gardens, S.W.

MCKINLEY, Hon. William, twenty-fourth President of the United States, was born at Niles, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1843. He was educated at the public schools, and at the Poland (Ohio) Academy. In 1861, at the outbreak of the Civil War, he enlisted as a private in the Union army, and before its close had risen to the rank of captain and brevet major. In 1867 he was admitted to the bar, and began the practice of the law at Canton, Ohio. He was chosen prosecuting attorney of Stark Co., Ohio, in 1869, and in 1871 was elected a Representative in Congress, and was continuously re-elected until 1891. Mr. McKinley was Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that framed the Revenue Bill of 1890, and hence that measure has been known as "the McKinley tariff." He was elected Governor of Ohio in 1891, and re-elected by an increased plurality in 1893, serving until the close of 1895. As his name was closely connected in the minds of the people with the principles of a protective tariff, both these elections were contested on the national question of tariff policy, and this point was fully discussed by orators on both sides all over the country, so that when Mr. McKinley's election in 1893 was found to be more pronounced than it had been in 1891, it was considered an indication that he would be the candidate of his party for the Presidential election in 1896. This nomination took place at a Convention of Delegates from the party in all parts of the country, which was held at St. Louis, Missouri, in June 1896. Soon after (July 7, 1896) the Democratic Convention was held in Chicago, and selected as their candidate Wm. Jennings Bryan, with a platform of principles advocating the unlimited coinage of silver, a low tariff, and the non-interference of the Federal authorities in local affairs, even when national interests were involved. In the ensuing election (November 1896) Mr. McKinley received the votes of many who were Democrats with reference to the tariff, while his opponent received many Republican votes in the west and south because of his views concerning silver. The tariff question was discussed during the canvass, but it did not take the pre-eminent place it had before occupied, and as a result the old party lines were much broken up. Mr. McKinley received a plurality over Mr. Bryan of over 600,000 votes, and was inducted into office Mar. 4, 1897. As the tariff of 1894, shorn of the income-tax feature, did not produce sufficient revenue for the support of the Government, an extra session of Congress was called to meet Mar. 15, 1897, and a new tariff, with strongly protective features (known from the name of the chairman of the committee in which it originated as "the Dingley Bill"), was agreed upon. In the meantime relations between the United States and Spain were becoming more and more strained because of the sympathy of the Americans with the sufferings of the people in Cuba, occasioned by the restrictions of the Spanish authorities growing in part out of the insurrection there. This tension was greatly increased by an explosion by which the U.S. battleship Maine was destroyed in the harbour of Havana on the night of Feb. 15, 1898, together with the lives of two of her officers and more than 250 of her crew. A careful investigation failed to show with certainty the cause of the explosion, but there were strong indications that it came from a point outside the ship, and other events occurring which increased the existing irritation, war was declared in April following. Within four months the power of Spain on the sea had been destroyed, her army in Eastern Cuba had surrendered, and lodgments by the American land forces had been effected in Porto Rico and in the Philippine Islands. Spain then sued for peace, and a protocol was signed August 12, stopping hostilities and providing for the appointment of Peace Commissioners to settle the details with reference to the Spanish islands in the Pacific, her army to be withdrawn entirely from her West Indian possessions, and Porto Rico to be ceded to the United States. During the war the President has enjoyed a vast popularity in the States.

M'LACHLAN, Robert, F.R.S., F.C.S., F.E.S., was born in London, April 10, 1837, and educated principally at Ilford, in Essex. His father, Hugh M'Lachlan, a native of Greenock, settled in London early in life, and was eminently successful as a chronometer maker. His mother, whose maiden name was Thompson, was from Northamptonshire. Robert, the youngest of five children, early showed a taste for natural history, which, as years sped on, concentrated itself upon botany, and subsequently upon entomology. A voyage to New South Wales and China in 1855-56, led to his collecting Australian plants; and on his return to England his desire to have them named led to his acquaintance with Robert Brown, then Keeper of the Botanical Department of the British Museum. Contact with this celebrated botanist had a distinct influence on his subsequent scientific career. In 1858 he was elected a Member of the Entomological Society of London, of which he became successively Secretary, Treasurer, and President, the latter in 1885-86, and is again Treasurer. He was elected, in 1862, a Fellow of the Linnean Society, and of the Royal Society in 1877, and is also a Fellow of the Zoological and of the Royal Horticultural Societies, and on the Honorary List of the New Zealand Institute, the Royal Society of Liège, the Entomological Societies of Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Sweden, Russia, &c. His attention has been directed to entomology in general, and he has, on several occasions, acted as scientific adviser to the Colonial Office. Repeated visits to the Continent have kept him in frequent intercourse with the entomologists of other countries. Amongst his general works perhaps the principal are the article "Insects," in the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and "The Entomological Results of the last Arctic Expedition," published in the Journal of the Linnean Society. As a specialist he has particularly attended to the Order Neuroptera, upon which his publications are very numerous, the principal separate work, a bulky 8vo, of upwards of 600 pages, with 76 plates, "Revision and Synopsis of the Trichoptera (or Caddis-flies) of the European Fauna, with Supplement," 1874-84, the first attempt which has been made at working out exhaustively a special group of insects on characters based on certain structural peculiarities, and which has served as a departure in the case of workers of other groups. In 1893 came out his "Catalogue of the Library of the Entomological Society." Mr. M'Lachlan has been a frequent contributor to most of the Natural History Journals during his time, and was for seventeen consecutive years a contributor to the Zoological Record, and has acted as an editor of the Entomologist's Monthly Magazine since its establishment in 1864. Address: 23 Clarendon Road, Lewisham, S.E.

MACLAGAN, Sir Douglas, eldest son of the late David Maclagan, M.D., F.R.S.E., Physician to the Forces, and Surgeon in Ordinary to the Queen in Scotland, was born at Ayr, N.B., in 1812, and educated at the High School of Edinburgh, and subsequently at the University of Edinburgh. He became Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, 1863, and has been President of both the Royal College of Surgeons and of Physicians, Edin., an honour held only by his father; he has been P.R.S.E., and is Deputy-Lieutenant of the City of Edinburgh. He was Professor of Medical Jurisprudence and Public Health in the University of Edinburgh from 1862 to 1896. Sir D. Maclagan holds the following posts: Surgeon-General of the Royal Company of Archers, the Queen's Body-Guard for Scotland; Brigade-Surgeon Lieut.-Colonel Forth Infantry Brigade (V.D.); Medical Adviser to H.M. Prisons Commissioners for Scotland; and Supervisor, on behalf of the Privy Council, of Pharmaceutical Examinations in Scotland. He is the author of "Nugæ Canonicæ Medicæ," and of numerous papers on Medical Jurisprudence, and on Materia Medica and Therapeutics, in the medical journals. He was made Knight Bachelor in 1886. Address: 28 Heriot Row, Edinburgh.

MACLAGAN, Thomas John, M.D. Edin., received his medical education at the University of Edinburgh, and in Paris, Munich, and Vienna. He was at one time Examiner in Medicine at the University of Aberdeen, and is a Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., member of various medical societies, and Physician in Ordinary to Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. He has contributed articles on Rheumatism, Cholera, &c., to the Lancet, a paper with the title "Is Typhoid Fever Contagious?" to the Nineteenth Century, 1879, and has published "The Germ Theory Applied to the Explanation of the Phenomena of Disease: the Specific Fevers," 1876; "Rheumatism: its Nature, its Pathology, and its Successful Treatment," 1881; "Fever, a Clinical Study," 1886; and a translation of Bouchard's "Cerebral Hæmorrhage." Address: 9 Cadogan Place, Belgrave Square, S.W.

MACLAGAN, The Right Hon. and Most Rev. William Dalrymple, D.D., D.C.L., Archbishop of York, Primate of England and Metropolitan, brother of Sir Douglas Maclagan, born at Edinburgh in 1826, and educated there. In early life he served in the army in India, and retired with the rank of lieutenant in 1852. Then he went through the ordinary university course at St. Peter's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1856, M.A. 1860, D.D. jure dignitatis 1878). He was ordained deacon in 1856, and priest in 1857. He served the curacies of St. Saviour, Paddington, and St. Stephen, Marylebone, till 1860, when he was appointed Secretary to the London Diocesan Church-Building Society. In 1865 he was appointed Curate-in-charge of Enfield, and in 1869 Lord Chancellor Hatherley gave him the Rectory of St. Mary, Newington. When Newington was transferred to Rochester, the Bishop of London, in order to retain Mr. Maclagan in his diocese, promoted him to the vicarage of St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, where he remained till 1878, when he was nominated by the Crown, on the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, to the Bishopric of Lichfield, which had become vacant by the death of Dr. Selwyn. He was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, June 24, 1878. In 1891 he was translated to York. The same year he was made an Hon. Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge, and a D.C.L. of the University of Dur-

Dr. MacLagan has published one or two detached sermons; a Charge delivered to the Clergy and Churchwardens of his Diocese in 1880; and several other addresses to the Clergy, and Parochial Papers. In conjunction with Dr. Archibald Weir, he edited "The Church and the Age: Essays on the Principles and present Position of the Anglican Church," 1870; and in 1891 published his "Pastoral Letters and Synodal Charges." He married (1), in 1860, Sarah Kate, daughter of George Clapham; and (2), in 1878, Augusta, daughter of the 6th Viscount Barrington. Addresses: Bishopsthorpe, York; and Athenæum.

MACLAREN, Ian. See WATSON, THE REV. JOHN.

McLAREN, Lord, John McLaren, LL.D., D.L., J.P., Lord of Session, Scotland, was born in Edinburgh in 1831, and is the eldest son of Duncan McLaren, M.P. He was educated at the University, Edinburgh, and became an Advocate in 1856. He was Sheriff of Chancery from 1869 to 1880, when he became Q.C. and Lord Advocate. He represented Wigtown District in Parliament in 1880, and was returned for Edinburgh in 1881. He was appointed Lord of Justiciary in 1885, and was raised to the Bench in 1881. He has published a "Treatise on the Law of Wills," and married the daughter of a German gentleman resident in Glasgow, in 1868. Address: 46 Moray Place, Edinburgh.

MACLEAN, James Mackenzie, M.P., President of the Institute of Journalists, is the son of Mr. Alexander Maclean, and was born near Edinburgh on Aug. 13, 1836. Intending to enter at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was, however, compelled by circumstances to forthwith earn his own livelihood, and he took up journalistic work. After working on the staff of the Newcastle Chronicle for a short time, he became its editor in 1855, and continued in that position until 1858. He then worked as leader-writer on the Manchester Guardian for nearly two years, and in 1859 went out to India as editor of the Bombay Gazette. Becoming in 1863 proprietor of that paper, he kept up his connection with it until 1879, when he effected a sale and left India for good. Whilst living at Bombay Mr. Maclean interested himself greatly in municipal matters; was one of the first members of the newly-created Corporation, and held for a time the office of Chairman of the Town Council. In 1882 he became a proprietor of the Western Mail at Cardiff, and still continues to contribute to it. Mr. Maclean was elected Conservative member for Oldham in 1885, and in 1886 he came out at the head of the poll with the largest vote given in the whole country; however, in 1892 he lost his seat, and remained out of Parliament for three years. Cardiff, which had been a Radical stronghold for forty years, was won to the Conservative Party by him in 1895, and he still sits as member for that constituency. He is a Fellow of the University of Bombay, and has been a member of Council, and a Vice-President of the Associated Chambers of Commerce in England. He was elected President of the Institute of Journalists in 1896. On the occasion of the visit of the Prince of Wales to India he published a "Guide to Bombay," which is a historical handbook for all Western India from before the English conquest to the present day. He married Anna Maria Whitehead in 1867. Address: 40 Nevern Square, Earl's Court, S.W.

MACLEOD, Mrs. Alick. See MARTIN, MRS. FREDERICK.

MACLEOD, The Very. Rev. Donald, D.D., one of the Queen's Chaplains in Scotland, and editor of Good Words since the death of his illustrious brother in 1872, was born at Campsie, Stirlingshire, and is the son of the late Norman Macleod, D.D., first editor of Good Words, a magazine chiefly famous, in the opinion of the present generation, for the beauty of its illustrations in the sixties. He graduated B.A. at the University of Glasgow, and then travelled, after which he became minister of the parish of Lauder, and subsequently of Linlithgow. He was Moderator of the Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1895-96, and since 1888 has been Convener of the Home Mission Committee of the Kirk. He has for nearly thirty years been minister of the parish of Park, Glasgow, having been called thither in 1869. Dr. Macleod is famous not only as a minister and man of letters, but as a leader of the Church and organiser of mission work. Among his publications we may note his "Memoir of Norman Macleod, D.D.," and his edition of the Bible in three volumes. Address: 1 Woodlands Terrace, Glasgow, &c.

MACLEOD, Fiona, authoress, was born in the Hebrides, where she spent the greater part of her childhood. She is one of the leading spirits of that "Renaissance" which has done so much to revive the interest of intelligent people in the literature and traditions of the Celts. Her first book, "Pharais," published in 1894 at Derby, at once attracted the favourable attention of prominent men and women of letters. Her subsequent works have been: "The Mountain-Lovers," and "The Sin-Eater," 1895; "The Washer of the Ford," "Green Fire," and "From the Hills of Dream" (verse), 1896; "The Laughter of Peterkin, Old Celtic Tales Retold," and a collected edition of some of her more important works, 1897. Her most recent work is the "Dominion of Dreams," 1899. From internal evidence derived from the writings of Miss Fiona Macleod and Mr. William Sharp (q.v.), it has recently been conjectured (Jan. 1899) that they are one and the same person. This, however, is not the case. Address: c/o Miss Rea, The Columbia Literary Agency, 9 Mill Street, Conduit Street, W.

MACLURE, The Very Rev. Edward Craig, D.D., Dean of Manchester, eldest son of the late John MacLure, and eldest brother of Sir J. W. MacLure, Bart., M.P., was educated at the Manchester Grammar School, where he was the exhibitor of his year. He graduated B.A., M.A., and D.D. at Brasenose College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar and Hulseian Exhibitioner. After occupying curacies at St. John's, Ladywood, Birmingham, and St. Pancras, Middlesex, he became vicar of Habergham Eaves, Burnley, in 1863, where he remained for fourteen years Chairman of the Burnley School Board. On the death of Dr. Molesworth in 1877 he was appointed vicar of Rochdale by the late Bishop of Manchester. In 1878 he became Honorary Canon of Manchester, and in 1879 Rural Dean. In Rochdale, and previously at Burnley, he had carried out important works of church restoration and extension. Dean MacLure has always undertaken a very considerable share of diocesan work, having been honorary secretary of the Diocesan Conference and the Diocesan Board of Education. He is also honorary secretary to the Training College at Warrington. In 1888 he was one of the honorary secretaries of the Church Congress in Manchester, and was appointed Dean of Manchester in July 1890. He has twice been Chairman of the School Board, Manchester, and is Governor of Owens College, the Grammar School, and of Hulse's Trust and Chetham's Hospital, besides holding other public offices. He is also Chairman of the School Boards Association of England and Wales, and he is prominent in all educational matters. He married the eldest daughter of Johnson Gedge, of Bury St. Edmunds. Address: The Deanery, Manchester.

MACLURE, Sir John William, Bart., M.P., D.L., J.P., F.R.G.S., was born in Manchester on April 22, 1835, and is the son of John MacLure, of Manchester, and Elizabeth, daughter of William Kearsley, of Kearsley. He was educated at Manchester Grammar School. He has been one of the most actively benevolent of Manchester public men. He founded, with the late Canon Richson, the Manchester and Salford Sanitary Association, and has laboured from the first to improve the homes and the sanitation of large and overcrowded towns. He was founder of the Cotton Famine Fund, and was its Hon. Sec. from 1862 to 1866. With the then Premier, the late Lord Derby, and other influential men, he distributed more than a million and a half among the starving or distressed cotton operatives of the north. As Churchwarden of Manchester he raised nearly £50,000 towards the restoration of the ancient Parish Church at Manchester, which has since become the Cathedral. He is P.G. Deacon of Freemasons in England, a Knight of Grace of St. John of Jerusalem, Director of numerous public companies, Trustee and Treasurer of the Cotton Districts Convalescent Fund, F.R.G.S., F.S.S., J.P. for Lancashire and Manchester, has been Major of the 40th Lancashire Rifles, and was created a Baronet in 1898. He has sat as a Conservative for the Stretford Division of Lancashire since 1886. He married, in 1859, Eleanor, daughter of Thomas Nettleship, of East Sheen. London address: Victoria Mansions, 26 Victoria Street, S.W.

MACMAHON, Major Percy Alexander, R.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., is the second son of the late Brigadier-General P. W. MacMahon, C.B., and was born at Sliema, in the island of Malta, Sept. 26, 1854. He was educated at the Proprietary School, Cheltenham, and afterwards at Cheltenham College, where he obtained the Junior Mathematical Scholarship in January 1868. He entered the Royal Military Academy as a cadet in January 1871, and subsequently, in September 1872, entered the Royal Artillery as a Lieutenant. He was promoted Captain in October 1881, and in March 1882 was appointed Instructor of Mathematics at the Royal Military Academy. From that date he has been engaged in research in Pure Mathematics. Numerous memoirs from his pen, chiefly connected with Higher Algebra, have been published in the American Journal of Mathematics, the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, the Messenger of Mathematics, and the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in June 1890; was President of the London Mathematical Society, 1894-96; was in 1897 elected honorary member of the Cambridge Philosophical Society; and the degree of Doctor of Science (honoris causa) was conferred upon him by the University of Dublin. Address: 52 Shaftesbury Avenue, W.

MACMILLAN, The Rev. Hugh, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S.E., F.S.A. Scot., Chief of the Clan Macmillan, born at Aberfeldy, Perthshire, Sept. 17, 1833, was educated at Breadalbane Academy and Edinburgh University. He was appointed Free Church Minister of Kirkmichael, Perthshire, in 1859, translated in 1864 to Free St. Peter's Church, Glasgow; and in 1878 to the Free West Church, Greenock, his present charge. He received the degree of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews in February 1871; was elected two months afterwards F.R.S.E. In April 1879 the degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Edinburgh; and in 1883 he became an F.S.A. Dr. Macmillan is the author of "Bible Teachings in Nature," 1866, now in its 25th edition, translated into Danish, Swedish, German, and other Continental languages; "First Forms of Vegetation"; "Holidays on High Lands"; "The True Vine"; "The Ministry of Nature"; "The Garden and the City"; "Sun-glints in the Wilderness"; "The Sabbath of the Fields," translated into Danish and Norwegian; "Our Lord's Three Raisings from the Dead"; "Two Worlds are Ours," translated into German; "The Marriage in Cana of Galilee"; "The Olive Leaf"; "Roman Mosaics; or, Studies in Rome and its Neighbourhood"; "The Riviera"; "The Mystery of Grace"; "The Gate Beautiful, and other Bible Teachings for the Times"; "My Comfort in Sorrow"; "The Daisies of Nazareth," 1894; "The Clock of Nature," 1896; "The Spring of the Day," 1898. Nearly all these books have passed through numerous editions, have been popular in this country and America, and have been translated into the leading European languages. Dr. Macmillan has published besides numerous contributions to quarterly reviews and religious and scientific periodicals. He delivered the "Thomson Lectures" on Science in the New College, Aberdeen, in 1886; and he was appointed to give the "Cunningham Lectures" on the Archaeology of the Bible in the light of recent researches, in the New College, Edinburgh, in 1894, and the

"Gunning Lectures" on Science and Revelation, in 1898, in the University of Edinburgh. He served as Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland during 1897-98. Address: 70 Union Street, Greenock.

MACNAGHTEN, Lord, The Right Hon. Edward, D.L., J.P. (Life Peer), Lord of Appeal, is the second son of Sir Edward Macnaghten, 2nd Baronet, and was born in 1830. He was educated at Cambridge, where he twice rowed in the University race, and was a Fellow of Trinity; called to the Bar, 1857; made Q.C., 1880; Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, 1883; and appointed a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, 1887, in succession to Lord Blackburn. He was returned to Parliament as Conservative member for Antrim in 1880, and continued to sit for that constituency, or for North Antrim, until his appointment as Lord of Appeal. Since 1895 he has been Chairman of the Legal Council of Education. He married Frances only child of the Right Hon. Sir Samuel Martin. Addresses: 198 Queen's Gate, S.W., &c.; and Athenæum.

MACNAMARA, Nottidge Charles, F.R.C.S., F.R.C.S.I., is of Irish stock, and became a M.R.C.S. when he was twenty-one years of age, the examination in those days lasting an hour and a half. Within a month he received a commission to proceed to India as an Assistant-Surgeon in the Hon. E.I.C. Medical Service. His experiences in India during his nineteen years of service were typical, various, and often perilous. He went through the Southall Rebellion and the Mutiny, was stationed at Dinapore and Tirhoot, and in 1865 was appointed Surgeon to the Ophthalmic Hospital in Calcutta. Here he was instrumental in building and endowing a large native hospital of 250 beds (the Mayo), which continues a most useful institution. It was opened by Lord Northbrook, the then Viceroy, in 1873. Returning to England, Mr. Macnamara, then Surgeon-Major, retired from the Bengal Medical Service and from his Indian appointments, and became Surgeon and Lecturer on Clinical Surgery at the Westminster Hospital. He is also Consulting Surgeon to the Westminster Ophthalmic Hospital, is a Vice-President of the British Medical Association, has (1875) been an Examiner to the Royal College of Surgeons of England, where also he was Vice-President of the Council from 1893 to 1896, and in 1895 Bradshaw Lecturer, his subject being Osteitis in Childhood. He is a Fellow of Calcutta University. He has published "Lectures on Diseases of Bones and Joints," 3rd edit.; "Diseases of the Eye," 5th edit.; "Notes on Leprosy," 2nd edit., and works on Asiatic Cholera, &c., besides contributing clinical lectures to the Lancet. Address: 13 Grosvenor Street, W.

MACNEILL, John Gordon Swift, M.A., Q.C., M.P., is the only son of the late Rev. John Gordon Swift MacNeill, M.A., and of Susan, daughter of the Rev. Henry Tweedy, M.A. Mr. MacNeill was born in Dublin in 1849, and matriculated in Trinity College, Dublin in 1866, when he obtained three first honours in Classics. In 1868 he obtained a classical exhibition at Christ Church, Oxford, was placed in the second class of Classical Moderations in 1870, and in the School of Law and Modern History in 1872. After obtaining a First Place and First Exhibition at the Final Examination for call to the Irish Bar in 1875, and becoming Auditor of the Irish Law Students' Debating Society, whose gold medal he holds, in 1876 he was called to the Irish Bar and joined the Munster Circuit. In 1881 he was an Examiner in the Law School of Dublin University, and in 1882 he was appointed Professor of Constitutional and Criminal Law in the Honourable Society of the King's Inns, Dublin, and being, on the expiration of the term, re-elected in 1885 for another term. In 1885 he wrote "The Irish Parliament, what it was, and what it did," a work which obtained the warm praises of Mr. Gladstone, at whose suggestion "English Interference with Irish Industries," which appeared in 1886, was written. "How the Union was carried" quickly followed. In February 1887 Mr. MacNeill, who had during the previous general election spoken in many constituencies in Scotland in favour of Home Rule, was elected in the Nationalist interest, Member for South Donegal. In 1887 he took a tour in South Africa, and meeting Mr. Rhodes on board ship, was authorised by that gentleman to make his offer, which was accepted, of £10,000 as a contribution to the funds of the Irish Parliamentary party. In 1891 Mr. MacNeill took a second journey to Cape Colony, and made a close study of the workings of responsible Governments under Colonial conditions. In 1892 the Conservative Government were defeated on his motion for the disallowance of the votes of certain directors and shareholders of the East African Company, for a grant towards the expenses of the Mombasa Railway, on the ground that they had a direct personal and pecuniary interest in the vote. In 1894 Mr. MacNeill published his work "Titled Corruption," describing the sordid origin of some of the Irish peerages. He is a lineal descendant of the last John MacNeill, Laird of Barra; William Lenthall, Speaker of the House of Commons in the Long Parliament; and of Godwin Swift, the uncle and guardian of Jonathan Swift, the illustrious Dean of St. Patrick's Cathedral. Address: 19 Blackhall Street, Dublin.

MACRORIE, The Right Rev. William Kenneth, D.D., D.C.L., Assistant-Bishop to the Bishop of Ely, late Bishop of Maritzburg, and Canon of Ely, born Feb. 8, 1831, in Liverpool, is the son of David Macrorie, M.D., a well-known physician in that town, and received his education at Winchester and at Brasenose College, Oxford, B.A. 1852, M.A. 1855. He held the Rectory of Wapping in the Diocese of London from 1861 to 1866, when he was appointed Vicar of Accrington, Lancashire, which preferment he held until his consecration as Bishop of Maritzburg, or Pietermaritzburg, Jan. 25, 1869. The ceremony was performed at Capetown, the consecrating prelate being the metropolitan, Dr. Robert Gray, Bishop of Capetown, assisted by the Bishops of Grahamstown, St. Helena, and the Orange Free State. A protest signed by 129 persons having been presented against Dr. Macrorie's consecration on the ground that Maritzburg was in the See of Natal, which already had a legal Bishop (Colenso), the Metropolitan replied that it could not be accepted as a protest, the signers having no right to protest, but that he would receive it as "the expression of views of certain individuals." Bishop Macrorie was made a Canon of Ely in 1892 on his return from South Africa, and is now Assistant-Bishop to the Bishop of Ely. He is the author of some charges and addresses. In 1863 he married Agnes, daughter of William Watson, of South Hill, Liverpool. Address: The College, Ely.

MACRORY, Edmund, M.A., Q.C., is the son of Adam John Macrory, of Duncairn, Belfast, advocate, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1863, became a Benchler in 1878, and practises on the Northern Circuit. He was formerly a Member of the Joint Board of Examiners of the Inns of Court. He is the author of "Report of Cases relating to Letters Patent for Inventions," and is joint-editor of "Hindmarsh on Law of Patents." Mr. Macrory was married, in 1862, to Elizabeth, daughter of the Right Hon. Sir Henry Manisty, Justice of the High Court. Address: 7 Fig-Tree Court, Temple, E.C.

M'VAIL, Professor David Caldwell, was born in Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Oct. 6, 1845, is the son of the late James M'Vail, and studied Medicine in Anderson's College, Glasgow. He is L.R.C.P. Edin., 1866; M.B. Glasgow, 1876; F.F.P.S. Glasg., 1878; and was formerly House Surgeon in Alnwick Infirmary, late Professor of Physiology in Anderson's College, and subsequently Lecturer on the Practice of Medicine in the Western Extra-mural School, and Member of the General Medical Council of the United Kingdom. At the present time he is Extra Physician to the Glasgow Royal Infirmary, and Professor of Clinical Medicine in St. Mungo's College, Glasgow. Dr. M'Vail is the author of various valuable contributions to medical literature, principally with reference to diseases of the respiratory organs, e.g., "The Mechanism of Respiration in Normal and Abnormal Conditions," Lancet, 1882; "The Wavy Respiratory Sound of Phthisis," British Medical Journal, 1882; "Pathology of Pulmonary Emphysema," Ibid. 1884, &c. He is widely known in connection with what may be termed academic politics. For the past decade he has been the acknowledged and energetic leader of the reform party in the University of Glasgow; and it is very largely to him, and to the movement in which he has taken so active a part, that the recent thoroughgoing Universities (Scotland) Act is due. The main plank of the reform platform has been the destruction of the practical monopoly of teaching, of examining, and of degree granting, enjoyed by the professors in the Scottish Universities, while the principal means urged for the accomplishment of this object have been an entire re-casting of the governing body of the Universities, the fuller recognition of extra-mural teaching, the prohibition of the degree-examination of candidates by their own teachers, and the affiliation of new colleges. Dr. M'Vail has also been the moving spirit in the erection and incorporation of St. Mungo's College, the medical faculty of which is in intimate connection with the Royal Infirmary of Glasgow. On the board of directors of the College he occupies a seat as one of the representatives chosen by the managers of the Royal Infirmary. He was elected in 1891 a member of the Court of Glasgow University, and in 1892 he was appointed by her Majesty to be Crown member for Scotland of the General Medical Council. Address: 3 St. James's Terrace, Glasgow.

MACWHIRTER, John, R.A., was born in 1839, at Slateford, near Edinburgh, and educated at Peebles. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1863. In the following year he came to London, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy on Jan. 22, 1879, and R.A. in 1893. He was elected an Honorary Member of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1882; elected member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, same year; exhibited in R.A. 1884, "The Windings of the Forth," "A Sermon by the Sea," and "Home of the Grizzly Bear"; 1885, "Track of a Hurricane," "Iona," "Loch Scavaig"; "The Three Witches," 1886. Mr. Macwhirter has painted "Loch Coruisk, Skye," 1867; "A great while ago the world began, with hey ho, the wind and the rain," 1871; "Caledonia," 1875; "The Lady of the Woods," 1876; "The Three Graces," 1878; "The Valley by the Sea," 1879; "The Lord of the Glen," 1880; "Sunday in the Highlands," and "Mountain Tops," 1881; "A Highland Auction" and "Ossian's Grave," 1882; "Corrie, Isle of Arran," "Sunset Fires," "Nature's Mirror," "A Highland Harvest," 1883; and "Edinburgh from Salisbury Crag," 1887. More recently he has exhibited "A Highland Storm," and a set of three pictures, "The Shamrock," "The Rose," and "The Thistle," 1893; and "Subsiding Flood," "Nature's Archway" (diploma work, deposited on his election as an Academician), and three other pictures in 1894, since which date he has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy of his characteristic landscapes. His principal Highland pieces have been: "Glen Affaric," 1895; "The Sleep that is among the Lonely Hills" and "Bonnie Scotland," 1896; "Affaric Water" (two pictures), 1897; "Morning, Isle of Arran," 1898; "Dark Loch Coruisk," and "The Silver Strand, Loch Katrine," 1899. He married, in 1872, Katherine, daughter of Professor Menzies, of Edinburgh University. Addresses: 1 Abbey Road, N.W.; and Athenæum.

MADAGASCAR, Queen of. See RANAVALO MANJAKA III.

MADAN, Falconer, M.A., born April 15, 1851, is the fifth son of the Rev. George Madan, then Vicar of Cam in Gloucestershire (afterwards Vicar of St. Mary Redcliffe, Bristol, and Rector of Dursley), and of his wife Harriet, née Gresley. He was educated at Marlborough College from 1864 to 1870, and at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he obtained an open scholarship. He was twice Proxime Accessit for the Hertford Scholarship; graduated B.A. in 1874, M.A. in 1877; was a Fellow of his College from 1876 to 1880, and was again elected to that position in 1889. On June 15, 1880, he was elected a Sub-Librarian of the Bodleian Library, and in 1889 was appointed Lecturer in Mediæval Palæography in the University of Oxford—positions which he still holds. In 1874 he won the University Single Fives Prize. His chief works are: "A Bibliography of Dr. Henry Sacheverell," 1884; "Books in Manuscript," 1893; "The Early Oxford Press, '1468' to 1640," 1895; "A Summary Catalogue of Western MSS. in the Bodleian Library," vols. iii.-iv., 1895-97 (in progress); "The Gresleys of Drakelow," a family history, 1898. He married, on Dec. 29, 1885, Frances Jane, daughter of Harrison Hayter, Esq., Past President of the Institution of Civil Engineers: and has issue. Addresses: 90 Banbury Road; and Brasenose College, Oxford.

MADDEN, The Right Hon. Dodgson Hamilton, M.A., LL.D., son of the Rev. Hugh Hamilton Madden, M.A. (Rector of Templemore and Chancellor of Cashel), by Isabella, daughter of H. J. Monck Mason, Esq., LL.D. (author of "An Essay on Irish Parliaments," "Life of Bishop Bedell," and other works), was born at Loughgall, co. Armagh, Mar. 28, 1840. He entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1857, and obtained a Classical Scholarship and Moderatorship, a Gold Medal and Senior Moderatorship in Ethics and Logics, a Vice-Chancellor's Prize for English Composition, and other honours. He graduated B.A. and M.A., and in 1891 the University conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. He was called to the Bar in 1864, appointed Q.C. in 1880, Third Serjeant-at-Law in 1887, Solicitor-General in 1888, Attorney-General in 1889, and a Judge of the High Court, Queen's Bench Division, in 1892. In 1896, under a provision introduced into the Land Act of that year, he was appointed Additional Land Judge for the purposes of the Local Registration of Title Act, a measure which he was successful in passing, when Attorney-General for Ireland, in 1891. He represented the University of Dublin in Parliament (1887-92), and was appointed Vice-Chancellor of the University in 1895, on the retirement of the Right Hon. John Thomas Ball, LL.D. He is Vice-Chairman of the Board of Intermediate Education in Ireland. He published works on the Registration of Deeds, 1868, and the Practice of the Land Judges' Court, 1870, 1879, and 1889; and is the author of "The Diary of Master William Silence: a Study of Shakespeare and of Elizabethan Sport" Longmans, 1897. He married (1), in 1868, Minnie, daughter of Lewis Moore, Esq., D.L., Cremorgan, Queen's County; and (2), Jessie Isabelle, daughter of Richard Warburton, Esq., D.L., Garryhinch, King's County. Address: Nutley, Booterstown, co. Dublin.

MADDEN, Hon. Sir John, K.C.M.G., Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of Victoria, was born in 1844, and educated at Melbourne University, where he graduated B.A. in 1863, and LL.D. in 1866. In the same year he was called to the Australian Bar, and in 1889 was appointed to his present post. He was created K.C.M.G. at the New Year 1899. He married, in 1872, Gertrude Frances, daughter of F. J. Stephen. Address: Cloyne, St. Kilda, Melbourne.

MADDEN, Thomas More, M.D., was born in the island of Cuba, where his father, the late Dr. R. R. Madden, F.R.C.S. Eng., then filled the office of British representative at the Havanna, in the International Commission for the Abolition of the Slave-Trade, to which he was appointed by Lord Palmerston, and for which he had relinquished his practice as a London physician. Dr. Madden, senior, who died in 1886, was not only a prominent member of the anti-slavery party, but was also a prolific and well-known writer, having in the course of his long and varied life published more than forty volumes. Amongst these we may here mention his "Travels in the East," "History of the United Irishmen," "Life and Correspondence of Lady Blessington," "Biography of Savonarola," "The Infirmities of Genius," "History of Periodical Literature," &c., Dr. More Madden entered on medical studies at the age of fourteen, when he was apprenticed to the late Mr. Cusack, Surgeon-in-Ordinary to the Queen in Ireland. Shortly before the completion of pupillage, however, he was forced by symptoms of pulmonary disease to remove to a more genial climate, and the next few years he passed in the South of Spain, Italy, and France, completing his professional studies in Malaga and at the University of Montpellier. Having graduated as a physician, after he returned home in 1862 he became a member of the London College of Surgeons, and is also a Member of the Dublin College of Physicians, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. After a further period of health-travel in Southern Europe, Egypt, Africa, and Australia, he settled down in practice in Dublin. In 1868, having adopted obstetric and gynecological practice as a specialism, Dr. More Madden was appointed Assistant Physician to the Rotunda Lying-in Hospital. On retirement from that office three years later, he was accorded the special thanks of the governors for "zealous and efficient discharge of his duties, and uniform kindness to the patients." In 1872 he received the French bronze cross, in recognition of his services in connection with the organisation of the Irish Ambulance Corps employed during the Franco-Prussian War. In that year, being also Examiner in Obstetric Medicine in the Queen's University, he was appointed Physician to the newly-established Hospital for Sick Children, Dublin; and not long afterwards became Obstetric Physician and Gynaecologist to the Mater Misericordiae Hospital. In addition to these appointments Dr. More Madden is Consultant to the National Lying-in Hospital, and other institutions. In 1878 he was elected Vice-President of the Dublin Obstetrical Society; in 1885 Vice-President of the British Gynaecological Society; in 1886 President of the Obstetric Section of the Academy of Medicine; and more recently he held the office of President of the Obstetric Section of the British Medical Association. He received the degree of M.D. (honoris causa), from the Medical College of Galveston in 1890; and was accorded a Gold Medal by the Associazione dei Benemeriti Italiani. In 1892 he was Hon. President of the first International Congress of Obstetrics and Gynaecology at Brussels. He has been also made Honorary or Corresponding Member or Fellow of many medical and scientific societies at home and abroad. In 1895 he received the degree of Master of Obstetrics (honoris causa), from the Royal University of Ireland. Besides a vast number of contributions to medical journals, and several articles in Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," and other standard books, Dr. More Madden's writings include the last edition of "The Dublin Practice of Midwifery"; "Change of Climate in Chronic Disease," 3rd edit., 1876; "Spas of Germany, France, and Italy," 1874; "Contributonal Treatment of Chronic Uterine Disease," 1878; "Mental and Nervous Disorders peculiar to Women," 1883; "Child Culture—Mental, Moral, and Physical," 3rd edit., 1890; "On Uterine Tumours," 1887; "Treatment of Dysmenorrhœa and Sterility," London, 1889. In 1893 he edited "A Manual of Obstetric and Gynaecological Nursing"; and in the same year was published in Philadelphia and in London his "Clinical Gynaecology—a Handbook of Diseases of Women," profusely illustrated. Finally, in the list of this writer's works may be mentioned "The Health Resorts of Europe and Africa," 3rd edit., 1891. The latter work has been also republished in America. The latest publication of this writer on a professional subject is one on "The Special Hygiene and Management of Childhood and Youth," 1897. Besides these Dr. More Madden has also contributed to non-professional literature several works, amongst which are his "Memoirs from 1798 to 1886 of Dr. R. R. Madden, formerly Colonial Secretary of Western Australia," 1891; "Genealogical and Historical Records of the O'Maddens of Hy-Mary," 1894; "Episodes in Ireland's History," 1897; and "A New Edition of the Lives and Times of the United Irishmen of 1798 and 1803, by the late Dr. R. R. Madden," 1898. Dr. More Madden married the eldest daughter of the late Thomas McDonnell Caffrey, Esq. of Crosthwaite Park, Kingstown, by whom he has two sons and one daughter surviving. Of his sons the eldest, Dr. Richard R. More Madden, follows his father's profession in London, where he is one of the Visiting Physicians to the Infirmary for Consumption, Margaret Street, Cavendish Square; and the youngest, Captain T. McD. Madden, is an officer in the Wicklow Artillery. Address: 55 Merrion Square, Dublin.

MADGE. See HUMPHRY, Mrs.

MAETERLINCK, Maurice, Belgian dramatist and poet, was born at Ghent in 1864. At an early age he took to literature, and wrote what Mr. W. L. Courtney once called "some youthful absurdities," among which were "Serres Chaudes" and "La Princesse Maleine." The latter, a strange old-world invention, introduced Maeterlinck to England, and was translated by Mr. Alfred Sutro into English, with a preface by Mr. Hall Caine, in 1892. "L'Intruse," "Les Sept Princesses," and "Pelléas et Melisande" followed, suffused with an arresting mysticism, and widening considerably the author's sphere of influence. Miss Alma Tadema translated the last play in 1895. In June 1898 "Pelléas et Melisande" was produced at the Lyceum Theatre by Mr. Forbes Robertson and Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and, albeit its run was short, special matinées were given during the "Macbeth" season in the following autumn. Naturally Mr. Forbes Robertson's venture attracted widespread attention, and curiously varying estimates were made of M. Maeterlinck's work. Succeeding contributions from M. Maeterlinck were received with much interest, especially his best-known book, "Le Trésor des Humbles" (1897), which threw a wholly new light on the author's aims. This was introduced to the British public by Mr. A. B. Walkley and translated by Mr. Sutro. The current notion of him as a kind of fantastic decadent gave place to a conception of a new and suggestive but modest seeker after the mystery of existence. Some of his prose essays, it was said, were "empty enough," and others were of "a sort of etherealised Emerson, tender, fascinating, and almost beautiful." "Aglaraine and Selysette" (1897) struck a deeper note, and many adverse comments appeared as a result. On Oct. 15, 1898, "Wisdom and Destiny" was published simultaneously in London, Paris, and New York, Mr. Sutro again being the translator, and was hailed with a round of approval. In fact M. Maeterlinck has undoubtedly laid the foundations of a growing contemporary reputation, and whilst it is too early to assert that he will make some contribution to "the stock of enduring wisdom," a surmise may be hazarded that "the Belgian Shakespeare," as he has been called, will in the coming century receive some commensurate measure of recognition.

MAGNUS, Sir Philip, J.P., second son of Jacob Magnus, was born in London on Oct. 7, 1842. He was educated at University College School from 1854 to 1858, and afterwards at University College, London, where he obtained the Andrews Scholarship for Mathematics. He graduated B.A. (first class with honours in Philosophy and Physiology) in 1863, and B.Sc. (first class with honours) in 1864 at the University of London. In 1865-66 he was a student at the University of Berlin. During his residence in Germany he made inquiries into the German system of education, visited schools, and studied methods of teaching. He embodied the results of these inquiries in a paper first read to the members of a College Society and afterwards published. This was his earliest essay on educational subjects. On his return to England he was busily engaged in tutorial, literary, and examining work, and held for some years the Professorship of Applied Mathematics at the Catholic University College. As a result of his lectures in Physics there appeared, in 1875, the first edition of his "Lessons in Elementary Mechanics" (Longmans, Green & Co.), which he re-wrote in 1890, and of which more than 40,000 copies have been sold. Later he was associated with Professor Carey Foster in editing for the same publishers a series of Science Class-books, to which he contributed the volume on "Hydrostatics and Pneumatics." Subsequently he became editor for Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. of a series of books on educational topics, called the "Education Library," to which in 1888 he contributed a volume consisting of reprints of essays and addresses delivered at various times, under the title of "Industrial Education." Since then he has contributed to different periodicals articles and essays on Educational and Commercial Subjects. In 1880 Sir Philip (then Mr.) Magnus was appointed Organising Director and Secretary of the newly formed Association of Livery Companies, known as the City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education. At that date little or nothing was known of technical education, and the wide development of that movement during recent years has followed pretty closely the lines laid down by those originally responsible for the organisation of the City Guilds Institute. In 1881 Mr. Magnus was a member of the Royal Commission on Technical Instruction. The Commission sat for three years, during which Mr. Magnus, together with his colleagues, devoted all the time he could spare from official duties to the inspection of schools and factories in France, Germany, Belgium, Italy, Holland, Switzerland, Austria, and England. In 1883 he was appointed Principal of the Finsbury Technical College, and delivered his inaugural address on Feb. 19 in that year. In 1884 he was Chairman of the Technical Section of the International Conference on Education held in London, and presided over by Lord Reay. In 1886 he received the honour of knighthood, and in the autumn of that year he represented this country at an Educational Conference held in Bordeaux. In 1890 Sir Philip Magnus was co-opted a member of the School Board for London, but did not seek re-election when the Board dissolved. In the same year he was elected by Convocation on the Senate of the University of London, to the work of which he had devoted considerable time. Sir Philip Magnus is a member of the Physical and Mathematical Societies, a Life Governor of University College, London, Honorary Fellow of College of Preceptors, Member of the Technical Education Board of London County Council, Representative of University of London on Joint Board for University Extension, and member of the governing body of more than one of the London polytechnics and other educational institutes. He is President of the National Association of Manual Training Teachers, and also of the Joint Scholarship Board, and Education Adviser to the London Polytechnic Council. He is J.P. for the county of Surrey. Sir Philip Magnus was married in 1870 to Katie, only daughter of the late Alderman E. Emanuel, J.P., of Southsea. Addresses: 16 Gloucester Terrace, Hyde Park; Tangley Hill, Chilworth, Surrey; Athenæum.

MAGRATH, The Rev. John Richard, D.D., late Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford, son of Nicholas Magrath, Surgeon, R.N., of Manor House, Guernsey, was born in Guernsey, Jan. 29, 1839, and educated at Elizabeth College, before proceeding to Oxford, where he gained a Scholarship at Oriel College. At the University he obtained (1860) the Stanhope Prize for an essay on "The Fall of the Republic of Florence." He graduated B.A., with a first class in Lit. Hum. in 1860, was Johnson's Theological Scholar, 1861, and took his M.A. degree, 1863. From 1860 to 1878 he was Fellow of Queen's College; Chaplain from 1867 to 1878, and Bursar from 1874 to 1878. He was Select Preacher before the University in 1867-69, and Senior Proctor in 1877-78. In 1878 he was elected Provost of Queen's College, and he took the degrees of B.D. and D.D. Dr. Magrath has published "A Plea for the Study of Theology in the University of Oxford," 1868; "Selections from Aristotle's Organon," 1868 (2nd edit. 1877); "Two Papers on University Reform," 1876. He was Chairman of the Oxford Local Board from 1882-87. He is a Justice of the Peace for Oxfordshire, Alderman of the City of Oxford, Member of the Hebdomadal Council of the University since 1878, and was Vice-Chancellor from 1894 to 1898, when he was succeeded by Sir William Anson. He married, in 1887, Georgiana Isabella, daughter of the Ven. W. Jackson, D.D., formerly Archdeacon and Canon of Carlisle and Provost of Queen's College, Oxford, 1862-78. Address: Queen's College, Oxford.

MAHAFFY, Professor the Rev. John Pentland, D.D., seventh and youngest child of the Rev. Nathaniel B. Mahaffy and his wife Elizabeth Pentland, was born on Feb. 26, 1839, at Chapponnaire, near Vevay, on the Lake of Geneva, in Switzerland, and was never at school, being educated in Germany by his parents, till he entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1856. He was elected to a scholarship in 1858, and obtained two Senior Moderatorships (in Classics and in Philosophy) at his degree in 1859; gained his Fellowship (by competition) in 1864; was appointed Precentor of the Chapel, with control of the college choir in 1867; Professor of Ancient History, 1871 (which offices he now holds); and Donnellan lecturer in 1873. He received the degree of D.D. in 1886, Hon. Mus. D. in 1890, Hon. D.C.L. (Oxon.), 1892. He was decorated with the Gold Cross of the Order of the Saviour by the King of Greece in 1877, and was elected an Honorary Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1882, and a Corresponding Member of the Vienna Academy in 1896. Professor Mahaffy is at present Science Tutor and Examiner and Lecturer in Trinity College, Dublin, in Classics, Philosophy, Music, and in Modern Languages. He was elected a member of the Athenæum by the Committee in 1884. He married, in 1865, Frances, daughter of William M'Dougall, Esq., J.P., &c., of Howth, co. Dublin, and has two sons and two daughters. Addresses: Trinity College, Dublin; 38 North Great George's Street, Dublin; Sea Lawn, Baldoyle; and Athenæum.

MAHAN, Alfred T., American naval officer and author, was born in New York, Sept. 27, 1840, and is the son of Prof. D. H. Mahan, Professor of Military Engineering, U.S. Military Academy. He entered the navy in 1856, was midshipman June 9, 1859, and promoted to Lieutenant in 1861. At the close of the war between the States in 1865 he had become a Lieut.-Commander; was made Commander in 1872 and Captain in 1885. The United States Naval War College at Newport, R.I., has received a great deal of his attention, and he has done much special duty there, having been President of it for some years. He was placed on the retired list at his own request in November 1896. He is widely known as an able writer on naval topics, and his work on the "Influence of Sea Power upon History," published in 1890, is standard. He has also published "The Gulf and Inland Waters," 1883; "Influence of Sea Power upon the French Revolution and Empire," 1892; "Life of Admiral Farragut," 1894; "The Life of Nelson," 1897; and he has collected various papers contributed to the American magazines and published them under the title of "The Interest of America in Sea Power, present and future," 1897. In 1894, when the Chicago of which he was in command lay in the Thames, he was the recipient of unusual honours from officers of the British Navy. On the outbreak of the war with Spain he was recalled into active service, and served in 1898 on the Board of Strategy. In 1899 he was chosen as Naval Expert for the U.S. on the Peace Conference at The Hague. Address: 160 West 86th Street, New York.

MAITLAND, Agnes Catharine, Principal of Somerville College, Oxford, was born in London, on April 12, 1849, and is the second daughter of David John Maitland (only son of Col. Maitland, H.E.I.C.S., of Chipperkyle, Galloway), and of Matilda Leathes Mortlock, daughter of Sir John Cheetham Mortlock, Commissioner in Excise. She was educated at home, and was appointed Examiner to Northern Union of Schools of Cookery, 1877; Visiting Examiner to Elementary Schools under Liverpool School of Cookery, 1881; Principal of Somerville Hall, Oxford, in succession to Miss M. Shaw-Lefevre, 1889. Miss Maitland is the author of "Elsie," a Lowland sketch, 1875; "A Woman's Victory," 1877; "Rhoda," 1885; and several volumes of stories for children, various cookery books, both for schools and other establishments; also "Cottage Lectures on Health," 1889; and papers on Hygiene, Housekeeping, Education, and so forth. Miss Maitland has always taken great interest in questions affecting women, especially in the movement for their higher education; and has lectured on these and other subjects; and carried on successfully a considerable amount of philanthropic work. Somerville Hall has grown and extended its buildings considerably since Miss Maitland entered on her duties as Principal, and became a college in 1894. Address: Somerville College, Oxford.

MAITLAND, Professor Frederic William, LL.D., was born on May 28, 1850, and is the son of John Gorham Maitland. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A.). He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, and in 1884 was appointed Reader of English Law at Cambridge University, and in 1888 Professor of English Law. He is best known as an authority on the history of the Laws of England, and has published "Gloucester Pleas," 1884; "Justice and Police," 1885; Bracton's "Note-Book," 1887; and, jointly with Sir Frederick Pollock, the standard "History of English Law," 1895; "Domesday Book and Beyond," 1897; "Township and Borough," and "Canon Law in England," 1898. He has also edited several of the Selden Society's publications. Addresses: Downing College, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

MAITLAND, Major-General Sir James Makgill Heriot, K.C.B., younger son of the late James M. Heriot of Ramornie, Fifeshire, and grandson of the 6th Earl of Lauderdale, was born at Ramornie in June 1837. He was educated privately and at the Royal Military Academy, and entered the Royal Engineers as Lieutenant in April 1855, and was promoted Captain in April 1862, Major in July 1872, and Colonel in the Army in December 1883. He first saw active service in the China War of 1857-59, taking part in the occupation of Canton, the storming of Chek-Hung, and the attack on the Peiho Forts. He was mentioned in despatches and received a medal. In 1882 he went to Egypt and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. For his services throughout the campaign he was created a C.B. and was also awarded the Medjidieh of the third class. He was afterwards appointed Colonel on the Staff and Commanding Royal Engineer in Egypt, and in that capacity took part in the Soudan Campaign, being employed on the Nile and with the Frontier Field Force, and was present at the action of Ginniss. In April 1891 he was appointed Deputy-Adjutant-General for Royal Engineers at Headquarters, and was promoted to Major-General in May 1895. In the following year he was sent as a Special Envoy from the War Office to negotiate with the Government of India. He was created a K.C.B. in 1887. Major-General Sir James Maitland is married to Jessica, only daughter of the late Captain Hutchings, R.N. His first wife was Frances, daughter of the late Sir John Campbell. Address: 16 Herbert Crescent, Hans Place, S.W.

MALABARI, Behramji Merwanji (né Mehta), an Indian poet, philanthropist, and national reformer, was born at Baroda in 1853, and is the son of Dhanjibhai Mehta, a poor Parsi clerk, who was in the service of the Gaekwar of Baroda, and died when his son was only two years of age. The child was adopted by a maternal relative, named Merwanji Nana-bhai Malabari, who subsequently became his stepfather, and whose name the orphan boy took, in lieu of Mehta. His mother, whose name was Bhikhibai, was a remarkable woman, possessing the rare qualities of irrepressible energy combined with great gentleness of disposition. Her largeness of heart and loving sympathy for the friendless procured for her the esteem of all who had the happiness to know her. She died when her son was eleven years of age. To the ennobling influence of her character her son owes many of the traits which have made him the philanthropist that he is—one who has sacrificed his fortune and devoted his life to the amelioration of the condition of the girls and women of India; and who, in the name of God and of humanity, has undertaken a noble crusade against infant marriages and enforced widowhood among the Hindu races. Malabari began life as a poet, and of his "Niti Vinod" it has been said that some of the poems will live as long as the vernacular of Gujarat endures. He has likewise written English verse which has elicited the admiration of Lord Tennyson, Professor Max Müller, and others. His poetical works are "Niti Vinod," "Wilson Virah," "Tarod-i-Ittefaq," and "The Indian Muse in an English Garb." He has also written "Gujarat a.d. Gujaratis," which has passed into three editions, and is esteemed for its humorous and picturesque style. Mr. Malabari is editor and proprietor of the Indian Spectator, the leading native journal of India, which is known to have done most valuable service to the state and the country; and also of the Voice of India. He has written largely on important political and moral questions, and is the greatest social reformer in India, known to be in touch with high authorities and leading thinkers in this country. He visited England in 1890, and his "Appeal from the Daughters of India," with his eloquent pleadings on their behalf in the Times and other journals, created a profound impression in the highest circles. An influential committee was formed to aid his efforts. It consisted of former Secretaries of State for India, Viceroy, Governors, high legal and medical authorities, and prominent representatives of Church and State. Mr. Malabari visited this country again in 1891, and continued the agitation commenced in the previous year against infant marriage in his own country. By great personal exertions, and with the aid of influential persons here, whom he interested in the cause of the helpless Indian child-wife, he succeeded in moving the Government of India to take legislative action in the matter. The famous Age of Consent Bill, introduced by Sir Andrew Scoble, the legal member of the Viceroy's Council, as the direct outcome of Mr. Malabari's long and persistent crusade, became law, after bitter discussions. The Age of Consent Act, the practical outcome of Mr. Malabari's labours of a lifetime, will remain his best claim to the gratitude of the Indian people. By raising the age of consent from ten to twelve years it tends to decrease the number of child-widows, and to improve the physical and moral condition of Indian girls in general. The educative influence of this piece of legislation is, however, its chief merit; and the next generation will raise the age still higher with much less trouble and opposition. A few years later Mr. Malabari urged the question of the Restitution of Conjugal Rights, which had been laid aside in 1891 for a more convenient opportunity. Sir Andrew Scoble's successor, Sir Alexander Miller, introduced a bill to mitigate the rigours of this imported law; but owing to the weakness or ignorance, of the new Government, the bill, introduced by Government themselves, was withdrawn. During the last few years, Mr. Malabari has been busy with his pen again, and published general literary works, all of which have met with a cordial reception, both in his own country and in England and America. In his "Indian Eye on English Life," published in 1893, he has given his impressions of men and manners English, in his racy humorous style. The book has gone through several editions in a short time. Mr. Malabari has also written on politics, and his two brochures, "The India Problem" (London and Bombay, 1894), and "India in 1897" (London, 1898), treat some of the most burning questions of current Indian politics in a calm dispassionate manner, characteristic of this publicist. Nor has Mr. Malabari neglected his poetic muse amid political and philanthropic labours, all-engrossing as they have been. He has added to his previous works two volumes of verse in his mother tongue, Gujarati, "Anubhavika," or "Experiences of Life" (1894), and "Man and his World" (1898), which have considerably enhanced his fame as a genuine poet. Mr. Malabari has also interested himself keenly in Miss Florence Nightingale's scheme for Indian Village Sanitation, for which he is doing much in a quiet manner. During the last two or three years of troubles and disasters through which India has passed, Mr. Malabari has been busy rendering assistance to the plague-stricken and famine-stricken people in the cities and the provinces, and by long and frequent tours he has kept himself in touch with the operations and measures of relief started and worked by the officials, acting throughout as a welcome interpreter between the people and their alien rulers.

MALCOM KHAN. His Highness Prince, Nazem ud Dowleh, was born at Ispahan in 1832, and is descended from a noble family of great antiquity in Persia.

His father, Yacoub Khan, was one of the ablest and most learned statesmen of Persia. After receiving a careful training at home under his father's immediate care, Malcom Khan was, at the age of twelve, sent to Paris, where he successfully applied himself to the study of mathematics and other sciences, literature, &c., and more especially to the study of the institutions of Europe as compared with those of Persia. When he returned to Persia he was at once appointed Conseiller Intime, and A.D.C. to the Shah at Teheran. At the age of twenty-two Malcom Khan was sent to Europe with the special mission of elaborating and concluding treaties of friendship and commerce with the Governments of Europe and of the United States of America. On his return to Persia he ardently promoted the introduction of reforms in the Persian administration. To this end he had already written several pamphlets and books on literary, religious, and political subjects connected with Persia. As an author he introduced into the Persian language the methods and best style of European writers, and entirely transformed the diplomatic language of Persia. In 1860 the ideas of Prince Malcom Khan were found too advanced for immediate realisation; he therefore obtained leave of absence and went to take up his residence at Constantinople, where he married, in 1865, the Princess Dadian, by whom he has had four children, three daughters, and a son who was educated at Eton. In 1872 he was asked to draw up a comprehensive programme of reforms to be carried out in Persia; and was recalled to Teheran and occupied the post second to that of the Grand Vizier, in which position all the great home and foreign affairs of the State passed through his hands; and in consequence of many important reforms realised under his immediate direction, he was created Nazem ud Dowleh (Reformer of the Empire), a title which ranks among the highest in the land. One of his best successes was to decide the Shah to undertake his first journey to Europe in 1873. The Prince was accordingly sent on an extraordinary mission to all the Courts of Europe to prepare for the visit of his sovereign. After accompanying the Shah during his tour, Prince Malcom Khan, unwilling to return to Persia, remained in Europe as Persian Minister at the Courts of London, Vienna, Berlin and other countries. During the Shah's second visit to Europe, 1878, Prince Malcom Khan was sent to the Congress of Berlin as Persian Plenipotentiary, where he succeeded in obtaining the restitution by Turkey of a disputed province, and on that occasion was raised to the rank of Highness.

Prince Malcom Khan has constantly promoted various reforms; finding that the regeneration of Oriental countries could be effected only by radical religious transformations, and by a new system of public instruction, he devoted a large portion of his time and means to modify the Arabic alphabet. He recently published an edition of the celebrated "Gulistan" and other works in his new phonetic system of Arabic writing. It is generally considered that the improvement of the relations between Great Britain and Persia, and the success which attended the visit of the Shah to this country in 1889, are due mostly to Prince Malcom Khan. Upon his sovereign's return to Persia he resigned the Embassy of London, on account of personal differences with the acting Grand Vizier. In the early part of June 1890 the Shah offered him the Persian Embassy at Rome, but his Highness declined the appointment on the plea of his health. In February 1899 his appointment was announced as Persian Minister in Rome, in succession to General Neriman Khan.

MALET, The Right Hon. Sir Edward Baldwin, G.C.M.G., G.C.B., born at the Hague, Oct. 10, 1837, is the son of Sir Alexander Malet, K.C.B., formerly British Minister at Frankfort. He was educated at Eton and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and entered the diplomatic service in 1854 as attaché at Frankfort. In 1858 he was transferred to Brussels, to Rio de Janeiro in 1861, and to Washington in 1862, where he was made Second Secretary. In 1865 he served at Lisbon and Constantinople; was appointed to act temporarily as a supernumerary Second Secretary at Paris, in July 1867, and was transferred to Paris in January 1868. During the Commune he was Chargé des Archives; was made a C.B. July 10, 1871, and promoted to be Secretary of Legation at Peking in August of the same year. From 1873 to 1875 he was acting Chargé d'Affaires at Athens, and then proceeded to Rome as Secretary of Embassy. In connection with the renewal of the treaty of commerce with Italy, Sir Edward Malet visited the manufacturing districts, and was appointed with Mr. Kennedy to confer with the Italian Commissioner in November 1875 with respect to the renewal of the treaty of Aug. 6, 1863, between Great Britain and Italy. On April 29, 1878, he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Constantinople in the absence of the Ambassador. The following year he went to Egypt as Agent-Consul-General, and as Minister Plenipotentiary in the diplomatic service. He was made a K.C.B. in 1881, and received the medal and Khedive's star for his services in Egypt in 1882. In August 1883 he was promoted to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Brussels, and Ambassador at Berlin, Sept. 20, 1884. He was also accredited as Minister Plenipotentiary to Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Saxe-Weimar, Anhalt, Oldenburg, and Brunswick. In 1895 he retired on a pension. He was British Plenipotentiary at the Congo Conference in 1884-85, and at the Samoa Conference in 1889. Sir Edward Malet was sworn a Privy Councillor in March 1885, and in June of the same year was made a G.C.M.G., and G.C.B. in February 1886. He married Lady Ermyntre, daughter of the Duke of Bedford, in 1885. Addresses: 85 Eaton Square, S.W.; Wrest Wood, Bexhill.

MALLOCK, William Hurrell, son of the Rev. Roger Mallock, of Cockington Court, South Devon, was born in Devonshire in 1849. His mother is a daughter of the late Ven. R. Hurrell Froude, Archdeacon of Totnes, and sister of Mr. Anthony Froude, the historian. Mr. Mallock was educated by a private tutor, the Rev. W. B. Philpot, of Littlehampton, Sussex, and afterwards at Balliol College, Oxford, where in 1871 he gained the Newdigate Prize Poem, the subject being "The Isthmus of Suez." He took, at Oxford, a second class in the final classical schools. Mr. Mallock has never entered any profession, though at one time he contemplated the diplomatic service. "The New Republic," most of which he wrote when he was at Oxford, was published in 1876, having first appeared in a fragmentary form in Belgravia. A year later he published "The New Paul and Virginia." In 1879 he published "Is Life Worth Living?" which first appeared in fragments in the Contemporary Review and the Nineteenth Century. In 1880 he brought out a small edition of "Poems," written, most of them, many years previously. The following year he published, "A Romance of the Nineteenth Century"; and in 1882 "Social Equality: a Study in a Missing Science," the substance of which had already appeared in fragments in the Nineteenth Century and the Contemporary during the three previous years. In 1884 he published "Property and Progress," an examination of the theories of contemporary radical and socialistic agitation. This had been formerly published in the Quarterly Review in the shape of three essays. The year following he published "Atheism and the Value of Life, or Five Studies in Contemporary Literature," being criticisms of Professor Clifford, Lord Tennyson, George Eliot, the author of "Ecce Homo," and Herbert Spencer.

In 1886 he published "The Old Order Changes," a novel which first appeared in the National Review. His most recent works are: "A Human Document," a novel, and "In an Enchanted Island," 1892; "Labour and the Popular Welfare," an edition of the Letters and Remains of the 12th Duke of Somerset, and a volume of "Verses," 1893. In 1889 he published his experiences in Cyprus, under the title, "In an Enchanted Island." More recently he has written in the newspapers, one of his most effective attacks being on socialistic doctrinairism. In 1896 he published "Classes and Masses," and in 1898, "Aristocracy and Evolution." In 1890 he became editor of the "British Review," a new weekly, now amalgamated with the "National Observer." Address: Bornhill, near Exeter.

MANCHESTER, Bishop of. See MOORHOUSE, THE RIGHT REV. JAMES.

MANCHESTER, Dean of. See MACLAURE, THE VERY REV. EDWARD CRAIG.

MANCHESTER, Duke of, William Angus Drogo Montagu, was born in London in 1877, and is the son of the 8th Duke, and Consuelo, daughter of Signor Antonio Yznaga de Valle, of Louisiana. He was educated at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and succeeded his father in 1890. He is a lieutenant in the 5th Battalion of the King's Royal Rifles. Addresses: Kimbolton Castle, St. Neots; and 45 Portman Square, W., &c.

MANN, Horace, son of Thomas Mann, Esq., solicitor, and afterwards Chief Clerk in the General Register Office, was born Oct. 4, 1823, and educated privately and at Mercers' School, London. He entered at Lincoln's Inn in 1842, and was called to the Bar in 1847, practising on the Home Circuit until, in October 1850, he was appointed Assistant-Commissioner for conducting the Census of 1851. In that capacity he wrote special Reports on "Education" and "Religious Worship." In June 1855 he was appointed Registrar, and in December 1875 Secretary to the Civil Service Commission, from which post he retired, on pension, 1887.

MANN, Tom, was born at Foleshill, Warwickshire, on April 15, 1856. As a lad he worked in a mine till he was fourteen years of age, when his people removed to Birmingham. In 1877 he came to London, and became connected with the Amalgamated Engineers. He was employed at Messrs. Thornycroft's, but in 1889, during the great dock strike, devoted himself to labour organisation among the dock labourers. He was elected President of the Dock, Wharf, Riverside, and General Labourers' Union, but retired from that position in September 1892. At the Bristol Conference of 1893 he accepted the position of Hon. President. In 1892 Mr. Mann became a member of the Royal Commission on Labour, and also gave evidence before the Commission. The London Reform Union being formed in 1893, he accepted the Secretaryship. In 1894 he became Secretary of the Independent Labour Party, which office he held for three years, resigning in order to devote himself more effectually to the International Federation of Ship, Dock, and River Workers, which came into existence in June 1896. For organising purposes Mr. Mann has visited France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Spain, but owing to the opposition of the authorities he has been expelled from France, Belgium, and Hamburg. He is now engaged in the organisation of the Workers' Union, which it is hoped will draw into the ranks of Trade Unionism large numbers of those who have up till now stood apart. Address: 34 Minford Gardens, West Kensington.

MANNS, August, well known as a musical conductor, was born on March 12, 1825, at Stolzenburg, in Prussia. He showed great ability in conducting at Krolls, in Berlin, from 1849 till 1861, and afterwards from 1851 till 1854 as Director of Herr von Roon's Regimental Band in Cologne, and was appointed in 1855 musical director of the Crystal Palace, where for nearly forty-three years he has wielded the baton at the famous winter and spring Saturday Concerts. During this long period he has done much to popularise certain French, German, and other foreign masters who would otherwise have remained comparatively unknown to the English music-loving public. It may be said that the liberal spirit in which musical art has been nursed by the concerts under his conductorship has prepared the way for that general progress of musical art in Great Britain which now gives so much enjoyment to lovers of good music in London, and in most of the large provincial towns. In 1883 he became conductor to the Handel Festival in succession to Sir Michael Costa, who retired owing to ill-health. He has conducted at all subsequent Handel Festivals. Address: Crystal Palace, S.E.

MAPLE, Sir John Blundell, Bart., M.P., Governor of Maple & Co., of the Tottenham Court Road, London, was born in 1845, and is the son of Mr. John Maple, upholsterer. He was educated at Craufurd College and King's College School, and since 1887 has represented the Dulwich Division of Camberwell in the House of Commons, where he votes as a Conservative. He entered the London County Council for South St. Pancras in 1895, and has found the funds for rebuilding University College Hospital at a cost of £120,000, on ground rendered partially vacant by the demolition of some of his workshops. He was created Baronet at the Jubilee in 1897, having been previously knighted. He is very well known in the racing world. He married Emily, daughter of Mr. Merryweather, in 1874, and their only daughter was married to Baron von Eckhardstein of the German Embassy, in 1896. Addresses: 8 Clarence Terrace, N.W.; and Childwickbury, St. Albans.

MAPOTHER, Edward Dillon, born at Fairview, Dublin, Oct. 14, 1835, of a leading Roscommon family, and was educated in the Queen's University. Before he had attained his nineteenth year he was elected Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, and in 1867 became its Professor of Physiology, and afterwards filled the presidential chair in that institution. He was also President of the Statistical Society of Ireland. In 1888 he resigned his official position to practise in London, having purchased the residence of the eminent surgeon Quain, a house also interesting as having been the abode successively of three famous portrait-painters, Francis Cotes, R.A., George Romney, and Sir M. A. Shee, P.R.A. Dr. Mapother's writings include "A Manual of Physiology," 3rd edit., 1882; "Lectures on Public Health," 2nd edit., 1867; "Lectures on Skin Diseases"; "The Body and its Health" (six editions). By this primer a knowledge of Physiology and Hygiene has been diffused in the National Schools of Ireland and of most other English-speaking countries. He also gained the Carmichael Prize (£200) for an essay on Medical Education, and has contributed many medical biographical sketches and proposals for hospital reform. Address: 32 Cavendish Square, W.

MARCET, William, M.D. Edin., F.R.C.P. Lond., F.R.S., received his medical education at Edinburgh, and graduated M.D. in 1850. In 1859 he became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, London, and a Fellow of the Royal Society. He has been Assistant-Physician at the Brompton Hospital for Consumption, is Consulting Physician in London for the Invalid Ladies' Home at Cannes, and Assistant-Physician at the Westminster Hospital. He was president from 1888 to 1890 of the Royal Meteorological Society, and is President of the Edinburgh Medical Society and Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc. Perhaps his best-known book is the reprint of his Croonian Lectures, delivered at the Royal College of Physicians in 1895, and entitled "A Contribution to the History of the Respiration of Man." Addresses: Flowermead, Wimbledon Park, Surrey; and Athenæum.

MARCHAND, The Hon. Felix Gabriel, Canadian author and statesman, was born at St. John's, Lower Canada, in 1832. He studied law, and entered the Legislative Assembly of Quebec in 1867. In 1878 he became Provincial Secretary, and for a short while was Commissioner of Crown Lands. In 1887 he was Speaker of the Legislative Assembly. He has been a constant writer in most of the French-Canadian papers, notably Le Franco-Canadien, which he founded. He has also written comedies for the stage, such as "Erreur n'est pas Compte," and "Un Bonheur en Attire un Autre." In 1879 he received the decoration of Officier de L'Instruction Publique from the French Government.

MARCHAND, Major Thomas, French explorer and "emissary of civilisation," is the son of a carpenter of Thoisse, in the department of the Saône-et-Loire, and was born in 1863. He was educated at the local college, and for five years served as a clerc de notaire. At eighteen he wished to volunteer for the army, but gave way before his mother's entreaties. However, in 1883 he served his regulation time, and having re-engaged himself, he soon gained a commission. In 1896 he joined the staff of M. Liotard, the Commissioner of the Upper Congo, and reached Loango in July of that year. He left Brazzaville, the capital of the French Congo, in March 1897, and steamed up the M'bomo River, hauling his boats through forests and over the mountains between the Congo and Nile Basins. In September 1897 he reached M'bima on the Boku River, the extremity of the Congo basin and the limit of the French Congo Protectorate. He then despatched Captain Baratier to reconnoitre the Suez River, a tributary of the Bahr-el-Ghazal, one of the heads of the Nile. This river having been mapped out, he made a road 100 miles long by 16 feet wide, over which he carried his loads, two gunboats and ten steel boats. By November he reached the Suez, and then worked his way down to the Bahr-el-Ghazal and so on to the Nile, establishing himself at Fashoda by July 1898. After the battle of Omdurman on Sept. 2, 1898, Lord Kitchener steamed up the Nile, and warned Major Marchand that he was on Egyptian territory. The Major refused to move until he had received orders from the French Government. He sent Captain Baratier with his report to Paris via the Nile, and himself left Fashoda to supplement that report in October 1898. His Government having given him orders to leave Fashoda, he marched through Abyssinia to Djibouti, arriving at Toulon in May 1899, where he was received with great enthusiasm. His reception in Paris was phenomenal.

MARCONI, William, electrical engineer and inventor of "wireless telegraphy," was born at Marzabotto, near Bologna, in 1875, his father being Italian, but his mother English. He was educated at Livorno under Professor Rosa and at Bologna under Professor Righi, where he first attracted public attention with his system of wireless telegraphy. He visited in England in 1896, and becoming acquainted with the labours of Mr. W. H. Preece, C.B., F.R.S., Engineer-in-Chief of the Post Office, Signor Marconi went to him for advice, and his apparatus was tested between Penarth and Weston with a completely favourable result. Returning to Italy, he secured support from the Italian Minister of Marine, and experiments were carried out, firstly at Rome, and subsequently at Spezzia, where messages were sent from the shore to an iron-clad ten miles away. His most important experiments, however, have been recently (1898) undertaken at Dublin in Kingstown Harbour, with the object of sending the results of the yacht races from the harbour to the offices of the Dublin Daily Express, whose editor, Mr. T. P. Gill, organised the trial. Signor Marconi, with the help of a transmitter, a receiver, an ordinary Morse tapping machine, and two batteries attached to a width of wire-netting at the top of an improvised mast, succeeded in signalling to a distance of more than ten miles. The use that this system would be to lighthouses in foggy weather and to armies in the field can be easily seen. Signor Marconi has a permanent installation working over a distance of 14½ miles, between Bournemouth and Alum Bay in the Isle of Wight, and another between Dover and Cape Grisnez.

MARGOLIOUTH, Professor David Samuel, Laudian Professor of Arabic in the University of Oxford, son of Ezekiel Margoliouth, was born in London on Oct. 17, 1858, and educated at the Hackney Collegiate School; afterwards he was scholar of Winchester College, 1872-77; whence he became scholar of New College Oxford, 1877-81, where he gained most of the University scholarships for Classics and Oriental languages. In 1881 he was elected Fellow of New College, where he became subsequently Lecturer, Tutor, and Librarian. In 1889 he was elected to the Laudian Professorship of Arabic at Oxford. In 1884 he published his critical edition of the "Agamemnon" of Æschylus; in 1887 "Analecta Orientalia ad Poeticam Aristotelem"; in 1889 "The Commentary of Jephth ibn Ali on Daniel"; in 1893, "Chrestomathia Baidawiana" and "Arabic Papyri in the Bodleian Library." He assisted Dr. Edersheim in his commentary on Ecclesiastical in the "Speaker's Commentary." Since 1896, with Mrs. Margoliouth, née J. Payne Smith, and a daughter of the late Dean of Canterbury, he has been engaged in completing the Syriac "Thesaurus" of the late Dean Payne Smith. He has also published various articles in learned journals chiefly connected with Arabic literature. Address: 88 Woodstock Road, Oxford.

MARIA CHRISTINA, Queen-Regent of Spain, born July 21, 1858, is the second daughter of the late Archduke Charles of Austria. She married, on Nov. 29, 1879, Alfonso XII., King of Spain, as his second wife, and upon his death on Nov. 25, 1885, she was appointed Regent. Her son, the present King, was born at Madrid on May 17, 1886, where also her eldest daughter, the Infanta Maria delas Mercedes, was born on Sept. 11, 1880, and her youngest daughter, the Infanta Maria-Theresa, on Nov. 12, 1882. As Regent she has proved herself a monarch of singular courage and supreme devotion to her son and his cause. The opening of the Cortes at the beginning of the Hispano-American War showed her in an almost heroic light.

MARINDIN, Sir Francis Arthur, K.C.M.G., R.E., Senior Inspecting Officer of Railways, Board of Trade, was born at Weymouth on May 1, 1838, and is the second son of the late Rev. S. Marindin, formerly in the 2nd Life Guards, and of Isabella, daughter of A. Wedderburn Colville, was educated at Eton and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and entered the Royal Engineers in 1854, retiring in 1879 with the rank of Major. He saw service in the East in 1855-56, was A.D.C. and Private Secretary to Sir William Stevenson, K.C.B., Governor of Mauritius, from 1860 to 1863, and was on special service in Madagascar in 1861. From 1866 to 1868 he was Adjutant at the School of Military Engineering at Chatham, and was Brigade-Major from 1869 to 1874. He became attached to the Board of Trade in 1877. He was created C.M.G. in 1887 for work done on the Egyptian State Railways, and became K.C.M.G. in 1897, at the Jubilee. He married, in 1860, a daughter of Sir William Stevenson, K.C.B. Addresses: 3 Hans Crescent, S.W.; and Craigflower, Dunfermline.

MARKBY, Sir William, K.C.I.E., D.C.L., J.P., fourth son of the Rev. William Henry Markby, B.D., rector of Duxford St. Peter, in the county of Cambridge, was born at Duxford on May 3, 1829, and was educated at King Edward's School, Bury St. Edmunds, and Merton College, Oxford (B.A. 1850, M.A. 1853, D.C.L. 1879). He was called to the Bar, 1856, and became Recorder of Buckingham, 1865-66; Judge of the High Court at Calcutta, 1866-78; Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta, 1887-88; and was appointed Reader of Indian Law in the University of Oxford, 1878, which office he still holds. He is a Fellow of All Souls' and of Balliol Colleges, and Justice of the Peace for the county of Oxford. In 1892 he was appointed a Commissioner to inquire into the administration of justice in the island of Trinidad. He has published "Lectures on Indian Law," and "Elements of Law considered with Reference to General Principles of Jurisprudence" (Clarendon Press), 5th edit., 1896. Addresses: Headington Hill, Oxford; and Athenæum.

MARKHAM, Sir Clements Robert, K.C.B., F.R.S., F.S.A., son of the Rev. David F. Markham, Canon of Windsor, and of Catharine, daughter of Sir W. Milner, Bart., of Nunappleton, co. York, was born, July 20, 1830, at Stillingfleet, near York, was educated at Westminster School, and entered the Navy in 1844. He was appointed Naval Cadet on board H.M.S. Collingwood, bearing the flag of Sir George Seymour, on the Pacific station, Midshipman in 1846, passed for a Lieutenant in 1850, and left the Navy in 1851. He became a clerk in the Board of Control in 1855, Assistant-Secretary in the India Office in 1867, and was in charge of the Geographical Department of the India Office from 1867 to 1877, when he retired. From 1862 to 1864 he was private secretary to Mr. T. G. Baring (now Earl of Northbrook). He was secretary to the Hakluyt Society from 1858 to 1889, and secretary to the Royal Geographical Society from 1863 to 1888. In 1888 he received the Society's Gold Medal. He served in the Arctic expedition in search of Sir John Franklin in 1850-51; explored Peru and the forests of the Eastern Andes in 1852-54; introduced the cultivation of the chinchona plant from South America into India in 1860-61; visited Ceylon and India in 1865-66 to report on the pearl fisheries; served as Geographer to the Abyssinian expedition, and was present at the storming of Magdala in 1867-68; and was created a Companion of the Bath in 1871, and a K.C.B. in 1896. He received a "Grand Prix" at the Paris Exhibition of 1867 for introducing chinchona cultivation into India. In 1874 he was created by the King of Portugal a Commendador of the Order of Christ, and by the Emperor of Brazil a Chevalier of the Order of the Rose. In 1890 he became President of the Hakluyt Society. In 1893 he was elected President of the Royal Geographical Society. In 1895 he was President of the International Geographical Congress; and in 1896 was created a K.C.B. He is the author of "Franklin's Footsteps," 1852; "Cuzco and Lima," 1856; "Travels in Peru and India," 1862; "A Quichua Grammar and Dictionary," 1863; "Spanish Irrigation," 1867; "A History of the Abyssinian Expedition," 1869; "A Life of the Great Lord Fairfax," 1870; "Ollanta, a Quichua Drama," 1871; "Memoir on the Indian Surveys," 1871 (2nd edit., 1878); "General Sketch of the History of Persia," 1873; "The Threshold of the Unknown Region," 1874 (four editions); "A Memoir of the Countess of Chinchon," 1875; "Missions to Tibet," 1877 (2nd edit., 1879); "Peruvian Bark," 1880; "Peru," 1880; "The War between Chili and Peru," 1879-81 (3rd edit., 1883); "The Fighting Veres," 1888; "Life of John Davis the Navigator," 1889; "Life of Columbus," 1892; "History of Peru," 1893; "Life of Major Bennett," "Major James Rennell and the Rise of Modern English Geography," 1895. In 1893 the National Congress of Peru voted him a Gold Medal for his historical works. He has translated and edited twenty works for the Hakluyt Society, and has contributed numerous papers to the Royal Geographical Society's Journal. He also wrote the reports on the Moral and National Progress of India for 1871-72 and 1872-73; and the Peruvian chapters for Winsor's "History of America." Sir C. Markham was editor of the Geographical Magazine, 1872-78. In 1857 he married Minna, daughter of the Rev. J. H. Chichester, Rector of Arlington, co. Devon. Addresses: 21 Eccleston Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

MARKHAM, Lieut.-General Sir Edwin, K.C.B., Inspector-General of Ordnance at Headquarters, is the son of W. Markham, Esq., of Becca Hall, Yorkshire, and was born in March 1833. He entered the army as a Lieutenant of the Royal Artillery in Dec. 1850, and was promoted Captain in Nov. 1857, Major in July 1872, and Colonel, by brevet, in January 1881. He first saw war service in the Crimea, and was present at the battles of Alma and Inkerman, and also at the siege of Sebastopol. He took part in the repulse of the sortie of the 26th Oct. 1854. For his services he was created a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and received the Crimean medal with three clasps and the Turkish medal. In 1856 he arrived in India during the Mutiny, and took part in the action of Secundra. For several years he was Assistant-Adjutant-General at Woolwich, and was appointed Colonel on the Staff in command of the Royal Artillery at Gibraltar in November 1882. In April 1885 he became Director of Artillery Studies at Woolwich, which appointment he gave up on being selected Deputy-Adjutant-General of Royal Artillery at Headquarters. Colonel Markham was promoted Major-General in April 1890, and went to Jersey in 1892 as Lieut.-Governor and Commander of the Troops. He was promoted a supernumerary Lieut.-General on taking over his present appointment in March 1895. Sir Edwin Markham was created a K.C.B. in 1897. He married, in 1877, Evelyn, a daughter of Admiral the Hon. Sir Montague Stopford. Address: 68 Chester Square, S.W.

MARKS, Harry Hananel, M.P., J.P., is the fifth son of the Rev. Professor Marks and Cecilia, daughter of the late Mosely Wolff, of Liverpool. He was born on April 9, 1855, and educated at University College, London, and the Athénée Royale, Brussels. After considerable journalistic experience in the United States he returned to London in 1884 and founded the Financial News, of which he is editor and chief proprietor. He initiated in the columns of that journal the Metropolitan Board of Works exposures, which led, in the first place, to the appointment of a Royal Commission, whose report was followed by the abolition of the Board of Works and the establishment of the London County Council. Mr. Marks took a leading part in the conduct of the inquiry before the Commission, and one indirect consequence of his labours was the passing of Lord Randolph Churchill's Act for the prevention and punishment of the acceptance of bribes by officers of municipal bodies. In 1889, largely as a consequence of his action with reference to the Metropolitan Board of Works, Mr. Marks was elected to the London County Council for East Marylebone. In 1892 he unsuccessfully contested North-East Bethnal Green in the Unionist interest. In March 1895 he was elected to the London County Council for St. George's-in-the-East, and in the following July was returned to Parliament for the same constituency, defeating Mr. J. W. Benn, the Vice-Chairman of the London County Council. A petition against his return was unsuccessful. On the London County Council Mr. Marks was largely instrumental in securing payment for coroner's jurymen. He is a J.P. for Kent. Addresses: 6 Cavendish Square, W.; Callis Court, St. Peter's, Thanet.

MARLBOROUGH, Duke of, Charles Richard John Spencer-Churchill, was born at Simla on Nov. 13, 1871, and is the son of the 8th Duke, and Albertha, daughter of the 1st Duke of Abercorn, K.G. He succeeded his father in 1892, was appointed Chancellor of the Primrose League in 1897, and in February 1899, Paymaster-General. He married Consuelo, the daughter of the millionaire, Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt, in 1895. Address: Blenheim, Oxfordshire.

MARRIOTT, The Right Hon. Sir William Thackeray, Q.C., M.P., son of the late Mr. Christopher Marriott, of Crumpsall, and of Jane Dorothea, daughter of John Poole, Esq., Cornbrook Hall, near Manchester, was born in 1834. He took his degree at St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1858, and the same year he was ordained a Deacon, and appointed to the curacy of St. George's Church, Hulme. The population amidst which he worked was composed chiefly of the working classes, and in 1860 he published a pamphlet, which had a wide circulation, on "Some Real Wants of the Working Classes," in which he advocated the formation of parks, playgrounds, gymnasiums, and clubs for the people. He started what is believed to be the first working-men's club in 1859, called the "Hulme Athenæum," which consisted entirely of working-men, and was managed by themselves, and there was a gymnasium, with rooms for fencing and boxing, and rooms for cards and bagatelle and dominoes. When the time came for him to take priest's orders he hesitated and eventually declined, and gave his reasons in the preface to his farewell sermon, entitled "What is Christianity?" which was published in 1862. He then studied for the Bar, and was called at Lincoln's Inn in 1864, became a Queen's Counsel in 1877, and was made a Bencher of his Inn in 1879. He first entered Parliament in 1880 as Liberal member for Brighton, acknowledging Lord Hartington as his leader, and not Mr. Gladstone. When Mr. Gladstone again took the leadership, and became Prime Minister and formed his Cabinet, he soon began to show signs of dissatisfaction with his post, and in 1882 he moved the amendment against the Government on the Cloture question. In 1883 he published a pamphlet, condemning strongly the revolutionary radicalism of Mr. Chamberlain, and in 1884 differed so from the Ministry in their policy in Egypt and the Soudan, that he took the "Chiltern Hundreds," and offered himself to his constituency as a supporter of Lord Salisbury. He was returned by a majority of 1457, and again in 1886 and 1892. In Lord Salisbury's first administration he held the post of Judge-Advocate-General, and was made a Privy Councillor, whilst he received the same appointment in Lord Salisbury's second administration, holding it from 1886 to 1892. In 1887 and 1888 he acted for the Khedive Ismail Pasha and other members of his family in settling their claim against the Egyptian Government, and in the latter year he received the honour of knighthood. In 1893 he resigned his seat in the House of Commons, but he still continues to be an active supporter of the Unionist party and the Primrose League. In his younger days, as student and barrister, he was a frequent contributor to the daily and weekly press, and occasionally now articles by him appear in the monthly magazines. He is married to Charlotte, daughter of Captain Tennant. Addresses: 56 Ennismore Gardens, S.W.; and 6 Crown Office Row, E.C.

MARRYAT, Florence (Mrs. Francis Lean), sixth daughter and tenth child of the late Captain Frederick Marryat, R.N., C.B., F.R.S., and Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir Stephen Shairp of Houston, Linlithgowshire, was born at Brighton, in Sussex, and educated at home. She began to write in 1865, when her first novel, "Love's Conflict," was published, since which time she has written some seventy-five novels, most of which have been republished in America and Germany and translated into French, German, Russian, Flemish, and Swedish. She was appointed editor of London Society in 1872, and has been a constant contributor to magazines and newspapers. She is known on the stage as an operatic singer and high-class comedy actress, and has been most successful as an entertainer and lecturer. Several of her works deal with spiritualism, in which she takes much interest. The last-named are: "There is no Death," 1891, of which several editions have been published; "The Risen Dead," a novel, 1893; "The Spirit World," 1894; and "A Soul on Fire." Permanent address: Langham Lodge, 26 Abercorn Place, N.W.

MARSDEN, Alexander, M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.A.S., Consulting and Senior Surgeon to the Royal Free and Cancer Hospitals, London, is the son of the late William Marsden, M.D., founder of the above institutions. He was born Sept. 22, 1832, and educated at Wimbledon School and King's College, London. He entered the army in 1854, and served at the General Hospital, Scutari. Early in 1855 he was appointed Surgeon to the Ambulance Corps before Sebastopol, was engaged in several actions with the enemy, and remained on active service till the end of the Crimean War, when he received the Crimean and Turkish War Medals. On his return home in 1856 he had the honour of being presented to her Majesty the Queen by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. He was also appointed full Surgeon to the Royal Free and Cancer Hospitals, and subsequently Curator of the Museum and General Superintendent of the former institution. For fifteen years Dr. Marsden worked at these two hospitals, seeing as many as 300 patients a week at the Royal Free, and about 70 to 80 at the Cancer. During the last twenty years he has devoted himself to the latter institution only. He is the author of "A New and Successful Mode of Treating Certain Forms of Cancer," "Cancer Quacks and Cancer Curers," "The Treatment of Cancer by Chian Turpentine and all other Methods," "Our Present Means of Successfully Treating or Alleviating Cancer and Tumours of the Breast, Tongue, Lip," &c. He is editor of the fourth edition of the late Dr. W. Marsden's "Treatise on the Nature and Treatment of Cholera," and is the author of numerous other papers. Address: Coombe, Nightingale Lane, S.W.

MARSDEN, The Right Rev. Samuel Edward, D.D., is the son of Thomas Marsden, merchant, of Sydney, N.S.W., and grandson of the Rev. Samuel Marsden, known as the Apostle of New Zealand, for many years Principal Chaplain of N.S.W. Bishop Marsden was born in Sydney, and educated at private schools and at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A.). He was Curate of St. Peter's, Hereford, from 1855 to 1858, Curate of Lilleshall, Salop, 1858 to 1861, Vicar of Bergerwick, Worcestershire, 1861 to 1869, and Inspector of Schools for Rural Deanery of Evesham. He was appointed Bishop of Bathurst, N.S.W., in 1869, and consecrated by Archbishop Tait and other Prelates, Bishop Selwyn preaching the sermon on the occasion. Bishop Marsden took part in the formalities of the General Synod of the Church of England in Australia and Tasmania. He resigned his See at the end of 1885 in consequence of ill-health. He was appointed in 1892 Assistant of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, and was Administrator of the Diocese of Bristol during the vacancy of the See. He is now Assistant-Bishop of the Diocese of Gloucester. He married an Australian lady in 1870. He was present at the Lambeth Conference in 1897. Address: Clifton Park, Clifton, Bristol.

MARSH, Miss Catherine, is the youngest daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Marsh, Rector of Beddington, Surrey, who died in 1864. Her best-known works are "English Hearts and English Hands," "Memorials of Captain Hedley Vicars," the "Life of the Rev. William Marsh, D.D.," a volume of songs and hymns, entitled "Memory's Pictures," and "Light for the Line; or, the Story of Thomas Ward, a Railway Workman," also "Brief Memories of the late Earl Cairns." Miss Marsh resided for some time at Beckenham, Kent, to the then rector of which parish her sister is married. During the visitation of cholera in 1866, whilst watching over sufferers from that disease in the wards of the London Hospital, she founded a Convalescent Hospital at Blackrock, Brighton, which has since been established as a permanent institution.

MARSH, Howard, F.R.C.S., received his medical education at St. Bartholomew's, and became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Eng., in 1866. He is Member of Council and of the Court of Examiners of the College, and in July 1898 was appointed Vice-President of the Council. As Hunterian Professor of Pathology and Surgery he lectured in 1889 on "Tuberculosis in some of its Surgical Aspects." He is Examiner in Surgery at the University of Cambridge, Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery at St. Bart's, and Consulting Surgeon at the Hospital for Sick Children, besides being a Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., and member of various medical societies. He has published a work on the "Joints and Spine," 1895, has edited the first and second editions of Sir James Paget's "Clinical Lectures and Essays," besides contributing articles on bone-setting, joints, fractures, &c., to the leading medical journals and manuals. Address: 30 Bruton Street, Berkeley Square, W.

MARSHALL, Professor Alfred, M.A. Camb., Hon. LL.D. Edin., born in London on July 26, 1842, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, whence he obtained the title to a probationary fellowship at St. John's College, Oxford, awarded for classical attainments, but preferring mathematical studies he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge. He was Second Wrangler in 1865, and was elected Fellow of his College in the same year, and Lecturer on Moral Science in 1868. He held this position till 1877, when he was appointed Principal of University College, Bristol. In the same year he married Miss Mary Paley, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Paley, and in conjunction with her he published in 1879 the "Economics of Industry." His health having broken down, he resigned his post in 1881 and went abroad. In 1883 he was appointed Lecturer on Political Economy at Balliol College, Oxford, and in 1884 he was made a Fellow of that College. In the same year he was elected to the Chair of Political Economy at his old University, vacant by Professor Fawcett's untimely death, and in the following year he was re-elected a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1889 he delivered the opening address at the Co-operative Congress at Ipswich; and was President of Section F of the British Association for 1890. He was a Member of the Royal Commission on Labour, 1891. In 1896 he was made an Honorary Fellow of Balliol and a Foreign Fellow of the Accademia Reale dei Lincei. He published the first volume of his "Principles of Economics" in 1890, and an abridgment of the second edition of that volume in 1892, under the title "Elements of Economics of Industry." A list of his minor writings may be found in the "Handwörterbuch der Staatswissenschaften" under his name. Address: Balliol Croft, Cambridge.

MARSHALL, George William, LL.D., F.S.A., genealogist, born at Ward End House, co. Warwick, April 19, 1839, is the only son of George Marshall of Ward End, by Eliza Henshaw, youngest daughter of John Comberbach. He was educated at St. Peter's College, Radley, under private tuition, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1860, and as LL.D. in 1873. He became a Barrister of the Middle Temple in 1865, is a J.P. for co. Hereford, a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and an Honorary Member of several American Antiquarian Societies; and Rouge Croix Pursuivant of Arms from 1887. He has edited a number of genealogical works, among them: "The Visitations of Nottinghamshire," and "Le Neve's Knights," for the Harleian Society, of which he has been a member of the Council since its foundation; "A Handbook to the Ancient Courts of Probate"; and the first seven volumes of the Genealogist, which magazine was founded by him in 1875. He is probably best known as the compiler of "The Genealogist's Guide," a work which contains between seventy and eighty thousand references to pedigrees, and which has passed through three editions, the first having been issued in 1879. Permanent addresses: Sarnesfield Court, Weobley, R.S.O.; and Herald's College, E.C.

MARSHALL, Herbert Menzies, R.W.S., youngest son of the late Mr. T. H. Marshall, Judge of the County Court, Leeds, was born at Leeds, Aug. 1, 1841, and educated at Westminster School, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1864 second class in the Natural Science Tripos. In the same year he went to Paris for the purpose of studying architecture, and entered the atelier of M. Questel, architect to the Château of Versailles. On his return from Paris, 1867, he became a student of the Royal Academy, and in the following year obtained there the Travelling Studentship in architecture. The result of travelling in Italy and of constant sketching under a bright sun was to weaken his eyesight so much that he was obliged to give up all work for two years, and especially any architectural drawing. This accident induced him to turn his attention to water-colour painting as being less trying to the eyes, and in 1871 he exhibited his first drawing at the Dudley Gallery. In 1879 he was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and became full Member in 1882. Mr. Marshall has held two exhibitions, in 1886 and in 1890, at the galleries of the Fine Art Society, illustrating the scenery of London, his special aim being to show how beautiful and mysterious is the common life of the streets and on the river when seen under the atmospheric effects which are found only in London. Address: 1 Victoria Mansions, Westminster, S.W.

MARSHALL, John, LL.D. Edinburgh, Rector of the Royal High School, Edinburgh, was born in that city on March 9, 1845, and is the eldest son of P. Marshall of Edinburgh. He was educated at Newington School, Edinburgh, and at the Training College, Moray House, Edinburgh, where he qualified as a certificated teacher of the first class. At Edinburgh University he gained class medals and other distinctions in every department, and on graduating with first-class honours in Classics in 1869, was awarded the Greek Travelling Fellowship as first graduate of his year. He proceeded to the University of Halle, in Saxony, where he attended lectures on classical subjects by Bernhardy, Keil, and others. In the autumn of the same year he gained the Ferguson Classical Scholarship open to all Scottish graduates, and was admitted a Foundation Exhibitioner at Balliol College, Oxford. In the following year (1870)

he gained the Guthrie Classical Fellowship at Edinburgh University; in 1871 he passed first class in Classical Moderations, and entered as a student of Lincoln's Inn. In 1872 he passed first class in Literæ Humaniores. In 1874 he was admitted a Barrister of Lincoln's Inn. He never practised, but continuing his classical studies, was appointed Classical Examiner for degrees in Edinburgh University, an office which he held for two periods of three years each. He also acted for many years as an Assistant Examiner to the Civil Service Commission (Sandhurst, Woolwich, Indian Civil Service). After assisting Dr. Abbott, Head-master of the City of London School, as Composition Master, Mr. Marshall returned to Balliol in 1876 as Classical Lecturer, and in 1877 was elected Professor of Classical Literature and Philosophy at the Yorkshire College, Leeds. There he remained for five years, contributing the economical chapters to a joint work by the Professors of the College on "Coal, its History and Uses" (Macmillan). In 1882 he returned to his native city as Rector of its ancient Grammar School, the Royal High School, where he still continues. The school has increased from about 330 to 580 boys. During his Head-mastership Mr. Marshall edited for the Oxford University Press the "Anabasis" and "Memorabilia" of Xenophon, and for Edward Arnold, Scott's "Lady of the Lake." He is also the author of a "Short History of Greek Philosophy" (Livingston), and of various pamphlets and essays on educational questions. In 1890 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. Address: Royal High School, Edinburgh.

MARTEL DE JANVILLE, Sibylle Gabrielle Marie Antoinette de Riquetti de Mirabeau, Comtesse de, better known under her pseudonym of "Gyp," French novelist, was born at the Château de Koëtsal in the Morbihan in 1850, and is the great-granddaughter of the great Mirabeau's brother. Her father served in the Pontifical Zouaves, and died in Italy shortly before the battle of Mentana. In 1869 she married the Comte de Martel, who was permitted in 1888 to add to his name those of his wife, de Riquetti de Mirabeau. Her first sketches were published in La Vie Parisienne by Marcelin, and were at once noticed for the delicate malice of their observation, their witty risqué tone, and their art of enclosing a moral in a tale that only just escaped being indelicate. Several of her types have become proverbial, "Paulette," the luxurious woman of the world; "Petit Bob," and "Loulou," the boy and girl of luxurious life. She has written in most of the high-class magazines, including the Revue des Deux Mondes and Cosmopolis. Probably the best written of her novels is "Autour du Mariage" (1883). It was dramatised by the authoress and M. Henri Crémieux, and produced at the Gymnase in the same year, but the play was not so great a success as the novel. She is in the habit of illustrating her own books, under the pseudonym of "Petit Bob," in a child-like and comic manner. Her best-known works are: "Petit Bob," 1882; "Dans le Train," and "Autour du Divorce," a sequel to "Autour du Mariage," 1886; "Pour ne pas l'être!" 1887; "Made-moiselle Loulou," 1888; "Passionnette," 1891; "Ces bons Normands," 1892; "Le Mariage de Chiffon," 1894. She lives at 71 Boulevard Bineau, at Neuilly.

MARTIN, Mrs. Frederick, née Catherine E. M. Mackay, was born in the Isle of Skye, but left for Australia with her parents in infancy. Her education was private, in an up-country district in South Australia, but she was a diligent student of literature, and made herself familiar not only with the great German poets, but with the works of Kant, Fichte, and Hegel. After some journalistic work in the provincial and Adelaide press she produced the novel "An Australian Girl," anonymously published in 1890, followed by "The Silent Sea" and "Mrs. Alick Macleod" in 1892, in which we see the results of her German studies, and also the influence of "George Eliot." Both novels, however, show accurate and yet idealising observations of Australian scenery, and give a reflex of Australian life and society, and of the growth of national sentiment in the great Southern Colonies. She resides in Adelaide, South Australia.

MARTIN, Sidney Harris Cox, M.D., F.R.S. (1895), was born in Jamaica on April 8, 1860, and is the second son of the late John Ewers Martin of Jamaica. He received his medical education at University College Medical School and in Vienna. He graduated M.B., M.D., and B.Sc. at the University of London, at which he was University Scholar of Medicine. He was at one time Pathological Curator of the Museum and Medical Tutor of the Middlesex Hospital, and is now Assistant-Physician and Professor of Pathology at University College Hospital, Fellow of University College, London, and Assistant-Physician at Brompton Hospital and at various other hospitals; Examiner in Pathology at Oxford, and in Medicine at Cambridge, and Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., and member of various medical societies. In 1892 he delivered the "Gulstonian Lectures on Diphtheria," and, besides contributing important articles to Stevenson and Murphy's "Hygiene," Quain's "Dict. of Med.," and Allbutt's "System," and to the Roy. Soc. Trans., &c., he published, in 1895, a work on "Diseases of the Stomach," and wrote the Appendix to the Report of the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis, 1896. Address: 10 Mansfield Street, Portland Place, W.

MARTIN, Sir Theodore, K.C.B., K.C.V.O., LL.D., J.P., son of the late James Martin, Esq., solicitor, of Edinburgh, was born there on Sept. 16, 1816, and received his education at the High School and at the University of his native city, of which he is an honorary LL.D. After practising as a solicitor in Edinburgh for several years he came, in 1845, to London, where he established himself with great success as a parliamentary agent. He first became known as an author by his contributions to Fraser's Magazine and Tait's Magazine, under the signature of "Bon Gaultier," and in conjunction with the late Prof. Aytoun he composed the "Book of Ballads" which bears that pseudonym, and a volume of translations of the "Poems and Ballads of Goethe," 1858. He prepared a translation of the Danish poet Henrik Hertz's fine lyrical drama, "King René's Daughter," the principal character, Iolanthe, being played by Miss Helen Faucit, who in 1851 became Sir T. Martin's wife. She died in 1898. His translations of Ehlerschlager's dramas, "Correggio," and "Aladdin, or the Wonderful Lamp," published in 1854 and 1857, have made these masterpieces of the Danish poet's genius familiar to a large circle of English readers. His metrical translation of the "Odes of Horace" appeared in 1860, and was immediately republished in the United States. It was followed, ten years later, by a critical essay on Horace's Life and Writings, in the Ancient Classics for English Readers. In 1882 Sir T. Martin completed his Horatian labours in a translation of Horace's whole works, with a life and notes, in 2 vols. His poetical translation of Catullus, 1861 (2nd edit., 1875), was followed by a privately printed volume of "Poems, Original and Translated," 1863, a translation of the "Vita Nuova" of Dante, and a translation of the first part of Goethe's "Faust." In 1866 he published a metrical version of the second part of "Faust." In 1867 he published a memoir of Professor Aytoun. It was while he was engaged on this biography that he was requested by the Queen to write the "Life of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort," the first volume of which appeared in 1874. His metrical version of Heine's "Poems and Ballads" appeared in 1878. The fifth and concluding volume of the "Life of the Prince Consort" was published on March 15, 1880, and five days afterwards the author received from the hands of the Queen the honour of knighthood, and was invested with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Bath. On Nov. 25, 1880, he was elected Rector of the University of St. Andrews. In 1883 he published a "Life of Lord Lyndhurst," founded on papers furnished by his lordship's widow and family. His last published works are "The Song of the Bell, and other Translations from Schiller, Goethe, Uhland, and others," 1889; "Madonna Pia, and other Dramas," 1894; and a translation of "The Æneid of Virgil, Books i.-vi.," 1896. He is a J.P. for Denbighshire, where he has considerable property, and he resides at Bryntysilio, near Llangollen, during the summer months. Addresses: 31 Onslow Square; Bryntysilio, near Llangollen; and Athen-

MARTIN, Sir Thos. Acquin, Agent-General to the Government of Afghanistan, was born in 1850, and was educated at the Oratory at Birmingham. He is the head of the firm of Martin & Co., civil engineers, of Calcutta and London, and was appointed to his present post in 1895. He received the honour of knighthood at the New Year, 1896. Addresses: 3 Esplanade, Calcutta; Silverlands, Eridge, Sussex.

MARTINEAU, James, D.D., LL.D., D.C.L., Litt.D., younger brother of the late Miss Harriet Martineau, was born at Norwich, April 21, 1805, and educated at the Norwich Grammar School, Dr. Lant Carpenter's School at Bristol, and Manchester New College, York. He was appointed second minister of Eustace Street Presbyterian Meeting-House, Dublin, in 1828; second minister of Paradise Street Chapel, Liverpool, in 1832; sole minister three or four years after; Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy in Manchester New College in 1840; removed to London, 1857; was minister of Little Portland Street Chapel, 1859-72; and was appointed Principal of Manchester New College, London, in 1869. Dr. Martineau is the author of "The Rationale of Religious Inquiry," published 1836; "Lectures in the Liverpool Controversy," 1839; "Hymns for the Christian Church and Home," 1840; "Endeavours after the Christian Life," vol. i. 1843, vol. ii. 1847; "Miscellanies," 1852; "Studies of Christianity," 1858; "Essays Philosophical and Theological," 2 vols., 1868; "Hymns of Praise and Prayer," 1874; and "Religion as affected by Modern Materialism," an address delivered in Manchester New College, London, 1874; "Modern Materialism: its Attitude towards Theology," 1876; "Ideal Substitutes for God considered," 1879; "The Relation between Ethics and Religion," 1881; "Hours of Thought on Sacred Things," 2 vols., 1876-80; "A Study of Spinoza," 1882; "Types of Ethical Theory," 2 vols., 1885; "A Study of Religion," 2 vols., 1888; "The Seat of Authority in Religion," and "Essays, Reviews, and Addresses," 1890. He was a constant contributor to the Prospective and National Reviews, of which he was one of the founders. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass., U.S.A., in 1872; that of Doctor of Theology by the University of Leyden in 1875; and that of D.D. by the University of Edinburgh in 1884; that of D.C.L. by the University of Oxford in 1888; and of Litt.D. by the University of Dublin in 1892. His birthday, on April 21, 1898, was the occasion for an interesting expression of feeling on the part of his admirers and of the press. Addresses: 35 Gordon Square, W.C.; and Athenæum.

MARTINO, Chevalier Eduardo de, M.V.O., Marine Painter in Ordinary to the Queen, was born in Naples, and spent many years in the Italian navy. He painted much for the late Emperor of Brazil, and is the favourite of the Emperor of Germany and the King of Italy, of both of whom he is frequently the guest. He has painted a picture of the Jubilee Naval Review of 1897 for the Queen. He was created M.V.O. in 1898.

MASCAGNI, Pietro, composer, was born at Leghorn. He was the son of a baker, but his father intended him to adopt a learned profession. He, however, when a child showed such a taste for music and musical composition, that his father was at length induced to send him to the Conservatoire at Milan. Here he failed to agree with his teachers, and joined a travelling opera company. In 1886 he married, and settled in Cerignola as a music-master. He had been a composer from early youth upwards, and his first important opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," was written here, and soon made him famous in every European capital. It was written in competition for a prize offered for a one-act opera. In many European cities he has personally conducted the opera, which has been performed in the principal European languages and in Russian. His later operas have been "L'Amico Fritz," founded on "L'Ami Fritz" of Messrs. Erckmann and Chatrian; "I Rantzau," also founded on a work by the same authors; and "Ratcliffe." "I Rantzau" was performed for the first time at Florence in November 1892, and in June 1893 it was put on the stage in London, when Signor Mascagni himself conducted. In the following month he conducted selections from his compositions before the Queen at Windsor. Scarcely did public opinion change so quickly as in the case of Mascagni. A few years since the première of his newest opera would have taken place before a small company of enthusiastic friends; now, the production of a new composition is an event of first importance in the musical world, although, as has been truly observed, one fails to note continuity and real sincerity in his work. On June 23, 1896, the first English performance of "Zanetto" was given by the sisters Ravogli in London, and the new venture was considered to deserve a higher place than anything Mascagni had written since his "Cavalleria." The general feeling excited by the last-named work has begun to die away, but the opera, especially the superb "intermezzo," still charms. On Nov. 22, 1898, his last new opera of Japanese life, "Iris," was produced at the Cortazzi Theatre; the first and second acts were much applauded, but the third was felt hardly to reach the same high level.

MASCART, Eleuthère Élie Nicolas, F.R.S., French physicist, was born at Quarebois, Feb. 20, 1835, and entered the École Normale in 1858, and became Doctor of Science in 1864. He remained Curator of the scientific collections of the École Normale for some time, and was then Professor of Physics at the Collège Chaptal. He succeeded Regnault as Professor at the Collège of France in 1872, and became Director of the Meteorological Observatory in 1878. He was elected a Member of the Academy of Sciences in 1884, and he is also a Member of the Royal Society. He was created Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1889. His chief works are: "Éléments de Mécanique," 1866; "Traité d'Électricité Statique," 1876; "Leçons sur L'Électricité et le Magnétisme," 1882; and "Traité d'Optique," 1889. His Paris address is 176 Rue de l'Université.

MASON, Professor Arthur James, D.D., Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity at Cambridge University, was educated at Repton School and at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was Fellow from 1873 to 1884, and Assistant-Tutor from 1874 to 1877. He was Canon of Truro from 1877 to 1884, and Vicar of All Hallows, Barking, from 1884 to 1895, when he was appointed Canon of Canterbury and Lady Margaret Professor. He has published: "The Persecution of Diocletian," 1875; "The Faith of the Gospel," 1887; "The Relation of Confirmation to Baptism," 1893; "The Conditions of Our Lord's Life upon Earth," 1896; "Thomas Cranmer," 1898. Address: Jesus College, Cambridge.

MASPERO, Gaston Camille Charles, Egyptologist, was born at Paris, June 24, 1846, and after a brilliant course of study at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, he entered the Ecole Normale in 1865. Devoted early to erudite studies, he was appointed Teacher and Professor of Egyptian Archaeology and Philology, first at the School of High Studies in June 1869, then at the College of France, Feb. 4, 1874. He is Docteur-ès-Lettres since 1873. He is the author of "Essai sur l'Inscription Dédicatoire au Temple d'Abydos," 1869; "Une Enquête Judiciaire à Thèbes au Temps de la XX^e. Dynastie," 1872; "De Carchemis oppidi situ et Historiâ Antiquissimâ," 1873; "Histoire Ancienne des Peuples de l'Orient," 1875; "De Quelques Navigations des Egyptiens sur les Côtes de la Mer Érythrée," 1879; "Les Contes Populaires de l'Égypte Ancienne," 1881; "Guide du Visiteur au Musée de Boulaq," 1883; "The Royal Mummies of Deir-el-Bahari," 1886; "Egyptian Archaeology," 1887; "Lectures Historiques," 1889, and a large number of important memoirs in the Revue Archéologique, Journal Asiatique, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology. He has been since 1878 the editor of the Recueil de Travaux relatif à la Philologie et l'Archéologie Égyptienne et Assyrienne. He has also edited works left in manuscript by Champollion and by Mariette Bey, and is directing the publication of the "Bibliothèque Égyptologique," which contains the scattered and hitherto unpublished works of French Egyptologists. Among his recent publications should be mentioned "Études de Mythologie et Archéologie Égyptienne," and an enlarged edition of his "Histoire Ancienne," in three large volumes, the first and the second of which appeared 1894-96, and have been translated into English. On the death of Mariette Bey, Prof. Maspero was appointed Keeper of the Boulak Museum, and till his retirement in June 1886 he did much to promote archaeological discovery in Egypt. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour, Jan. 15, 1879, and promoted Commander Dec. 20, 1895. He was elected a Member of the Academy of Inscriptions in 1883; Hon. Fellow of Queen's College, and D.C.L. Oxon. in 1887. Permanent address: 4

MASSENET, Jules Émile Frédéric, a French composer, born at Montaud, May 12, 1842, is the youngest of twenty-one children of an engineer officer of the First Empire, who established himself as a blacksmith near Saint Etienne. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire under Laurent, Reber, Savard, and Ambroise Thomas, obtained the first prize for pianoforte in 1859, the first for fugue, and the Prix de Rome for his cantata, "David Rizzio," in 1863. He travelled through Italy and Germany, and made his début at the Opéra Comique, Paris, in 1868, with "La Grand-Tante." In 1878 he was appointed Professor of Composition at the Conservatoire, and elected a member of the Académie des Beaux Arts. He is the author of "Poème d'Avril," 1868; "Suite d'Orchestre," played at the Pasdeloup Concerts, 1868; "Poème du Souvenir," 1860; "Don César de Bazan," produced at the Opéra Comique in 1873; "Les Erinnyes," a tragedy by Leconte de Lisle, and "Marie-Madeleine," a sacred drama produced at the Odéon the same year; "Eve," an oratorio performed under the direction of M. Lamoureux at his concerts at the Sacred Harmony, 1874; "The Roi de Lahore," an opera, 1877; "The Virgin," a sacred legend performed at the Historical Concerts of the Académie Nationale de Musique, 1880; "Herodiade," an opera first performed at the Monnaie of Brussels, 1881, and in Paris at the Italian Opera in 1883; "Manon," an opéra comique, with the late Mme. Heilbronn in the principal part, 1883; "Le Cid," an opera, from Corneille's tragedy, 1885; "Esclarmonde," a romantic opera which had a run of 100 representations without interruption, 1889; and a large number of melodies which are now popular, pieces for the pianoforte, and a series of seven "Suites d'Orchestre," amongst which: "Scènes Pittoresques," "Scènes Alsaciennes," "Scènes Hongroises," "Scènes de Féerie," and "Scènes Napolitaines," and two cantatas, "Narcisse" and "Biblis." He has written also some entr'acts and stage music for Sardou's dramas "Theodora" and the "Crocodile." "Le Mage," a new opera of his, the words by Jean Richepin, was produced at the Grand Opéra in Paris; and a drame lyrique, adapted from Goethe's "Werther," was first performed in 1891. His opera, "Thaïs," was performed at the Paris Opéra, Mar. 16, 1894, the libretto having been adapted from the novel of Anatole France; while in May of the same year a short one-act piece, "Le Portrait de Manon," was performed at the Opéra Comique. In 1895 he wrote the music for Claretie's "La Navarraise," which was produced at the Opéra Comique.

MASSEY, Thomas Gerald (better known as Gerald Massey), was born of very poor parents at Gamble Wharf, near Tring, in Hertfordshire, May 29, 1828, and received a scanty education at the British and National Schools. At eight years of age he was working twelve hours a day in a silk manufactory. At the age of fifteen he went to London and found work as an errand-boy, and at twenty-one he became editor of the Spirit of Freedom. The following year he was one of the secretaries of the "Christian Socialists," and a personal friend of Charles Kingsley and F. D. Maurice. In 1854 he published "The Ballad of Babe Christabel, and other Poems," which entered its fifth edition at the end of the year. He then joined the staff of the Athenæum, and for ten years wrote a considerable number of its reviews. For several years he wrote on literary subjects in the Quarterly Review. As early as 1852 Mr. Massey began to take a great interest in mesmerism, spiritualism, and kindred subjects, and he has since delivered many lectures on such matters, both in London and abroad. He has lectured all through America, Australia, and the Colonies, twice from New York to San Francisco, where he is better known and more highly thought of than in England. Of late years he has written very little poetry, but has recently published his "Collected Poems," in 2 vols., under the title of "My Lyrical Life." He has also re-written his work on the "Secret Drama of Shakspeare's Sonnets," 1864-1888. His principal works are "Voices of Freedom and Lyrics of Love," 1850; "The Ballad of Babe Christabel," &c., 1854; "War Waits," 1855; "Craigcrook Castle," 1856; "Havelock's March," &c., 1860; "A Tale of Eternity, and other Poems," 1869; "Concerning Spiritualism," 1872; "A Book of the Beginnings," 1882; "The Natural Genesis," 1884; "My Lyrical Life," 1889; besides numerous contributions to English and American periodical literature. Address: Anru, Norwood, S.E.

MASSINGHAM, Henry William, editor of the Daily Chronicle, son of John Massingham, was born at old Catton, Norwich, in 1860, and was educated under Dr. Jessopp at Norwich Grammar School, of which he was head boy when he left. He entered journalism as a member of the staff of the Norfolk News and of the Daily Press, Norwich, coming to London as one of the editors of the National Press Agency. He became assistant-editor of the Star upon its foundation, and eventually succeeded

Mr. T. P. O'Connor as editor. Leaving the Star, Mr. Massingham joined the staff of the Daily Chronicle as a leader-writer. He became successively literary editor and assistant-editor. He was the special representative of the Chronicle in the House of Commons from 1892 to 1895, when he was appointed editor of the paper. Mr. Massingham has contributed largely to the reviews, and is author of a book on the "London Daily Press." He is a Commander of the Order of the Saviour. Address: Daily Chronicle Office, Fleet Street, E.C.

MASSON, David, Litt.D., LL.D., Historiographer-Royal for Scotland, Emeritus Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh, was born Dec. 2, 1822, in Aberdeen, and educated at Marischal College in that city, and at the University of Edinburgh. He began his literary career at the age of nineteen as editor of a Scotch provincial newspaper, and repairing in 1844 to London, where he remained about a year, contributed to Fraser's Magazine and other periodicals. He established himself in Edinburgh for two or three years as a writer for periodical publications, besides having special engagements with the Messrs. Chambers, but returned to London in 1847, where he resided for eighteen years, editing and contributing largely to Macmillan's Magazine from 1858 to 1865, and was appointed to the Chair of English Language and Literature at University College, London, on the resignation of the late Professor Clough in 1852. He retired from his posts in October 1865, having been appointed Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh, a post from which he retired in 1895. He contributed numerous articles to the Quarterly, National, British Quarterly, and North British Reviews, to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and the "English Cyclopædia." His papers on Carlyle's "Latter-Day Pamphlets," "Dickens and Thackeray," "Rabelais," "Literature and the Labour Question," "Pre-Raphaelism in Art and Literature," "Theories of Poetry," "Shakspeare and Goethe," "Hugh Miller," and "De Quincey and Prose-writing," are the best known. His "Essays, Biographical and Critical: chiefly on English Poets," appeared in 1856, and have been reprinted, with additions, in 3 vols., 1874, one being entitled specially, "Chatterton: a Story of the Year 1770"; his classic "Life of John Milton, narrated in connection with the Political, Ecclesiastical, and Literary History of his Time," vol. i. was published in 1858, vol. ii. in 1871, vol. iii. in 1873, and vols. iv. and v. in 1878. He is also author of "British Novelists and their Styles: a Critical Sketch of the History of British Prose Fiction," in 1859; "Recent British Philosophy; a Review with Criticism, including some Remarks on Mr. Mill's Answer to Sir W. Hamilton," being an explanation of some lectures delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain in 1865. Other important publications from his pen are an edition of Milton's Poetical works, called "The Cambridge Edition," in three volumes, with Introductions, Notes, and an Essay on Milton's English, and a smaller edition of the same, called "The Golden Treasury Edition," in two volumes, with Introductions, Notes, and a Memoir. Both appeared in 1874. In 1873 he published a biography of the poet Drummond, entitled "Drummond of Hawthornden: the Story of his Life and Writings"; in 1874 "The Three Devils: Luther's, Milton's, and Goethe's"; and in 1878 "De Quincey," in the English Men of Letters Series. He has edited "De Quincey's Collected Works," in 14 volumes. Among his most recent works should be mentioned "Edinburgh Sketches and Memoirs," 1892; and his contribution to "In the Footsteps of the Poets," 1893. In 1893 he was appointed Historiographer-Royal for Scotland, and has edited the Register of the Privy Council of Scotland, vols. iii. to xiii. (1578-1625), published between 1880-96. He is married to Rosaline, eldest daughter of Charles Orme. Addresses: Gowan Lee, Juniper Green, Midlothian; and Athenæum.

MASTERS, Maxwell Tylden, M.D., F.R.S., Corresponding Member of the Institute of France, Chevalier of the Order of Leopold, born April 15, 1833, at Canterbury, is the youngest son of Alderman Masters, and was educated at King's College, London, after which he practised medicine for some years. He held the lectureship on botany at St. George's Hospital from 1855 to 1868, and became principal editor of the Gardener's Chronicle in 1865. Dr. Masters has been Botanical Examiner in the University of London. He is a Chevalier of the Order of Leopold; a Fellow of the Royal, Linnean, and Royal Horticultural Societies; an Associate of King's College, London; an honorary or corresponding member of the principal horticultural societies of the Continent and America, and of the Royal Society of Sciences of Liège, the Society of Natural Sciences of Cherbourg, the Botanical Society of France, and correspondent of the French Institute (Académie des Sciences), and of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. His works consist of a treatise on "Vegetable Teratology," which has been translated into German (with additions by the author), of "Botany for Beginners," and of "Plant Life" (of both which French, Dutch, and Russian translations have been made), and of numerous monographs and papers on subjects relating to botany, vegetable physiology, and horticulture. He is a frequent contributor to scientific periodicals, and has taken part in Oliver's "Flora of Tropical Africa," Hooker's "Flora of British India," Von Martius's "Flora Brasiliensis," "Flora Capensis," De Candolle's "Prodromus," the "Encyclopædia Britannica," the "Pinetum Britannicum," and other works, besides preparing, either alone or in collaboration with Messrs. G. Murray and Arthur Bennett, the second, third, and fourth editions of Henfrey's "Elementary Course of Botany." Addresses: 41 Wellington Street, Covent Garden, W.C.; and 9 Mount Avenue, Ealing.

MATHERS, Helen Buckingham.
See REEVES, MRS. HENRY.

MATHESON, Rev. George, D.D., F.R.S.E., was born at Glasgow, March 27, 1842, and educated at Glasgow Academy and the University of Glasgow. He lost his sight in youth by a gradual process of internal inflammation, beginning at the age of 18 months and recurring intermittently until his twentieth year, from which time he has been practically blind. During this gradual decline he was able with his own eyes to acquire a knowledge of Latin, Greek, French, and German, and to learn penmanship. At the Glasgow Academy he carried off the first prizes in every department. He then entered the University of Glasgow in preparation for the ministry, and took a leading place in Classics, Philosophy, and Theology; carried off the first prize in the senior division of Logic, and the prize essay for the best specimen of Socratic dialogue in 1860; took the first prize for Moral Philosophy in 1861; graduated M.A. with honours in Philosophy in 1862, and B.D. in 1866. He was licensed to the ministry of the Church of Scotland in 1866; appointed assistant to Dr. Macduff of Sandyford Church, Glasgow, in 1867; chosen by popular election parish minister of Innellan in 1868; received in 1880 a unanimous call to succeed Dr. Cumming, London, but declined it; and was appointed Baird Lecturer for 1881, and one of the St. Giles' lecturers for 1882. His ministry in Innellan was highly popular, the summer visitors flocking to his church in great numbers. His preaching is in expression purely extemporaneous, though he keeps in his mind a carefully studied train of thought. In 1886 he was translated to the parish of St. Bernard's, Edinburgh. In 1879 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of D.D. In 1890 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. In 1886 he preached before the Queen at Balmoral with such acceptance that he was requested by Her Majesty to forward a printed copy of his sermon. On that occasion the Queen, taking into account his inability to appreciate a portrait, presented him with a small bust of herself. In Edinburgh he is known as the Poet-Preacher; and he has gathered round him a congregation from all parts. He is extremely popular with all denominations. As an instance of this, the first year after his translation to Edinburgh he was invited to deliver the inaugural address to the theological students of three different colleges—the Edinburgh University, the United Presbyterian Hall, and the Free Church College of Glasgow. He is a representative of the Broad Church party, and the uniform aim of his teaching has been to discover a basis for the reconciliation of the conflicting creeds of Christendom. In 1897, through the pressure of accumulating work and the desire for more literary leisure, he associated with himself a colleague in the ministry of St. Bernard's, his duties in that sphere being now limited to the services of the pulpit. In 1892 he acquired a knowledge of the Braille system for the blind, which he has found of inestimable value. In preparing for the press his practice is to write each day in Braille what he deems an adequate amount, and on the following day to read off this in dictation to his secretary. In 1874 he published "Aids to the Study of German Theology"; in 1877, "Growth of the Spirit of Christianity," 2 vols.; in 1881, "Natural Elements of Revealed Theology" (Baird lecture); in 1882, "Confucianism" (in the St. Giles' lectures—"Faiths of the World"); and a devotional volume, "My Aspirations" (translated into German); in 1884, "Moments on the Mount," also a devotional volume, and in the same year a paper on "The Religious Bearings of the Doctrine of Evolution" (delivered at the Pan-Presbyterian Council, Belfast, and published in its Transactions); in 1885, "Can the Old Faith Live with the New?" or the problem of evolution and revelation; in 1887, "The Psalmist and the Scientist," or the modern value of the religious sentiment; in 1888, "Landmarks of New Testament Morality," and another devotional volume, entitled "Voices of the Spirit"; in 1890, a volume of hymns, entitled "Sacred Songs"; in 1891, "Spiritual Development of St. Paul"; in 1892, "Distinctive Messages of the Old Religions"; in 1895, "Searchings in the Silence"; in 1896, "Words by the Wayside" (translated into German, and greatly admired by the Queen of Roumania); and "The Lady Ecclesia" (a religious allegory depicting the early history of the Church); in 1898, "Sidelights from Patmos." In the course of 1897 he contributed one of the biographies to the volume issued by Dr. Lyman Abbot of New York—"Prophecies of the Christian Faith." Dr. Matheson has contributed to the Contemporary, British Quarterly, Modern Review, Princeton Review, Interpreter, Expositor, Good Words, Sunday Magazine, and Sunday School Times (Philadelphia). His article in the Contemporary Review, entitled "The Originality of the Character of Christ," has been printed in the United States, and has recently been translated into French. He has also contributed to the revised edition of the "Scottish Hymnal" the hymn beginning "O Love that wilt not let me go," for the use of which he has received applications from all parts of the world. Address: 19 St. Bernard's Crescent, Edinburgh.

MATHEW, The Hon. Sir James Charles, LL.D., Judge of the High Court of Justice, is son of Charles Mathew, of Lehenagh House, Cork, by Mary, daughter of James Hackett, of Cork. He was born at Lehenagh House, July 10, 1830, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he was senior moderator and gold medallist in 1860. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Hilary Term, 1854, having in the previous November obtained an open studentship. Mr. Mathew was a Member of the South-Eastern Circuit, when in March 1881 he was appointed by the Crown a Judge in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. Shortly before that time he had acted as a member of the Committee on the subject of Costs of Legal Proceedings. His appointment to the Bench is one of the few instances of a member of the Junior Bar being elevated. He was knighted on his promotion; and was created LL.D., honoris causa, by the University of Dublin. He was the third Catholic Judge appointed in England since Catholic Emancipation, the two previous ones being Mr. Justice Shee and Mr. Justice Hayes. In 1892 Sir James Mathew presided, at Dublin, over the Evicted Tenants' Commission, which began its sittings on November 8. Against the proceedings of this Commission Mr. E. Carson, Q.C., as representative of Lord Clanricarde, continuously protested, but was ordered to withdraw by Sir James, who refused to hear counsel or to adopt methods of legal procedure in his examination of witnesses. In this course he was generally supported by the opinion of lawyers. In 1895 he was appointed Judge of the Commercial Court, which was justly valued by City men. He married, in 1861, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the Rev. Edwin Biron, vicar of Lympne, Kent. Addresses: 46 Queen's Gate Gardens, S.W.; and Athenaeum.

MATHEWS, George Ballard, M.A., F.R.S., eldest son of George and Harriet Hannah Mathews, was born in London, 1861. He was educated at Ludlow Grammar School, University College, London, and St. John's College, Cambridge. He has been Professor of Mathematics in the University College of N. Wales, 1884-96, and has published Part I. of a "Treatise on the Theory of Numbers," and, in conjunction with Professor A. Gray, a "Treatise on Bessel Functions and their Applications to Physics." He has contributed various papers on mathematical subjects to the Messenger of Mathematics, the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, and the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society. Address: 10 Menai View Terrace, Upper Bangor, N. Wales.

MATHILDE, Princess Mathilde Lætitia Wilhelmine Bonaparte, daughter of the ex-King Jerome and Princess Catherine of Würtemberg, and cousin to Napoleon III., was born at Trieste, May 27, 1820, and married at Florence, Oct. 10, 1841, to the Russian Prince Anatole Demidoff. This union was not happy, and in 1845 they separated by mutual consent, her husband being compelled by the Czar to allow the Princess an annuity of 200,000 roubles. From 1849 till the marriage of Napoleon III. she did the honours at the palace of the President, and on the re-establishment of the Empire was comprised amongst the members of the imperial family of France, and received the title of Highness. After the war she again took up her residence in Paris, and continued giving the artistic and literary receptions which have made her salon famous. The Princess, who was a pupil of M. Giraud, is an accomplished artist, and has exhibited some of her pictures upon several occasions at the Salon de Peinture. She obtained honourable mention in 1861.

MATTHEWS, Charles Willie, is the stepson of the late Charles Matthews, of London, comedian, and was born at New York on Oct. 16, 1850. He was educated at Eton, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1872. He is on the Western Circuit, and was appointed Recorder of Salisbury in 1893. Address: 1 Essex Court Temple, E.C.

MATTHEWS, The Right Hon. Henry. See LLANDAFF, VISCOUNT.

MATTINSON, Miles Walker, is the son of Thomas Mattinson, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and he entered as a student at Gray's Inn in 1874; he obtained the Bacon Scholarship in 1874, a first class Studentship in 1875, a certificate of Honour in 1876, and was called to the Bar in 1877. He practices on the Northern Circuit, and was appointed Recorder of Blackburn in 1886. Mr. Mattinson is the author of "Law of Corrupt Practices at Elections," and "Selection of Precedents in Pleading." Address: 1 Garden Court, Temple, E.C.

MAUDE, Cyril, actor, was born in London on April 24, 1862. He is the son of Captain Charles Henry Maude, formerly of the 14th Madras Infantry, grandson of Viscount Hawarden, and the Hon. Mrs. Maude, daughter of the third Baron Sudeley. He was educated by Charles Kingsley's great friend, Cowley Powles, and afterwards at Charterhouse, Godalming. He first went on the stage in the spring of 1883, playing at Denver, Colorado. He continued acting in the American and English provinces until the autumn of 1867, when he made his first London success in a play called "Racing," at the Grand Theatre, Islington. Shortly afterwards he distinguished himself in a play by Hamilton and Quinton called "Handfast." He was a member of the Gaiety Company during the autumn and winter of 1887. He joined the Vaudeville Company in 1888, remaining there for three consecutive seasons. He then joined Mr. Wyndham's forces at the Criterion, and after shorter seasons with Henry Arthur Jones at the Avenue, with Mrs. Langtry at the Haymarket, at the Shaftesbury, and with Mr. Alexander in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" at the St. James's, he played for three years at the Comedy Theatre under Mr. Comyns Carr's management. He then played at the Lyceum, and in 1896, together with Mr. Frederick Harrison, he started in management at the Haymarket Theatre, and has up to the present date most successfully produced "Under the Red Robe," "A Marriage of Convenience," and "The Little Minister," the last-named piece breaking all the previous historically successful Haymarket records. Mr. Maude is chiefly, and justly, famous for his impersonations of old men, which remind one of the most finished French acting. He was married in 1888 to Miss Winifred Emery (q.v.), and has two daughters, Margery, born in 1889, and Pamela, born in 1893. Address: 33 Egerton Crescent, S.W.

MAUDE, Mrs. Cyril. See EMERY, ISABEL WINIFRED M. E.

MAUDSLEY, Henry, M.D., F.R.C.P., LL.D., third son of the late Thomas Maudsley, was born near Giggleswick, Settle, Yorkshire, Feb. 5, 1835, and educated at Giggleswick School and University College, London. He studied medicine at University College, and graduated M.D. at the University of London in 1857. Dr. Maudsley was Physician to the Manchester Royal Lunatic Hospital, 1859-62; was made Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1869; and was appointed Gulstonian Lecturer to the College in 1870. He is a Fellow of University College, London; was lately Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in University College, and is Consulting Physician to the West London Hospital; and an honorary member of various learned societies in Paris, Vienna, Italy, and America. He has been President of the Medico-Psychological Association of Great Britain and Ireland, and was editor of the Journal of Mental Science. Dr. Maudsley is the author of "The Physiology of Mind," "The Pathology of Mind," "Body and Mind," "Body and Will," "Responsibility in Mental Disease," and "Natural Causes and Supernatural Seemings" (3rd edit., 1897). He is married to Ann Caroline, youngest daughter of the late John Conolly, M.D., D.C.L., Lawn House, Hanwell. Addresses: 12 Queen Street, Mayfair; and Heathbourne House, Bushey Heath, Herts.

MAUREL, Victor, French singer, was born at Marseilles, July 12, 1848. His father being an architect, he first studied painting, together with music, but he soon devoted himself entirely to the latter. He studied at the Conservatoire of his native town, and in Paris, where he carried off the two chief prizes in 1867. The next year he was engaged at the Opéra as understudy for the chief baritone singers. He preferred, however, Italian opera, and in 1869 he went to the Scala at Milan, to which he has often returned. Subsequently he travelled in America, Egypt, and Russia, returning to Italy in 1873, when he made a great success in Marchetti's "Ruy Blas" and Gomez's "Fosca." At the end of 1879 he was singing again at the Paris Opéra, and appeared in "Hamlet" and "Don Juan," 1880. The same year he created the part of Amonasro in Verdi's "Aida," and he is acknowledged to be one of the best interpreters of that composer's music. In 1883 he attempted to restore Italian opera in Paris, and took the Théâtre des Nations, where he was assisted by the best European singers. He produced there "Simon Boccanegra," by Verdi, Massenet's "Hérodiade," Donizetti's "Lucrezia Borgia," and other classical works; but the enterprise proved a ruinous one, and he was compelled to desist at the end of 1884. M. Maurel is well known at Covent Garden, and in 1893 he appeared in Verdi's "Falstaff," after creating the part at the Scala at Milan. He has recently lectured on musical and operatic history, illustrated by sketches of song. His Paris address is 10 Rue Lesueur.

MAXIM, Hiram Stevens, C.E., was born in the town of Tangersville, State of Maine, U.S.A., on Feb. 5, 1840. His parents were also born in the State of Maine, but his grandparents were born in the State of Mass., and were of English Puritan stock, and were among the early settlers of Plymouth County, Mass. He attended the common schools in the State of Maine, which only gave him the foundation of an education, since which time he has been engaged in educating himself in the different branches of science with which his work has brought him in contact. He always had a great liking for mechanics, and while still a mere boy was able to operate almost any kind of tool and to do very good work. Before the age of twenty-one years he had served an apprenticeship and had also been foreman. At the age of twenty-four he was in the large machine works of his uncle, Levi Stevens, at Fitchburg, Mass. Later on he became a mechanical draughtsman in Boston, and also acted as foreman in the manufacture of gas machines and philosophical instruments. At twenty-eight he was a draughtsman in a large steamship-building establishment in New York City, where shortly after this he invented a new gas locomotive headlight, which went into general use. He also did much to perfect automatic gas machines for lighting private houses out of the reach of coal-gas. These machines went largely into use, and are still being made in large quantities. In 1877 he took up the question of electricity, and was among the first to make dynamo-electric machines and electric lamps in the U.S.A. He was the first to make incandescent lamp carbons by the process known as "flashing," that is, a process of building up, solidifying and standardising the carbons by electrically heating them in an atmosphere of hydro-carbon vapours. It was this process which rendered it possible to make incandescent lamps which would stand. Unfortunately for Mr. Maxim the process, which is much used, has become common property. In 1881 he exhibited at Paris the first electrical current regulator ever made for electric lamps. This regulator maintained a constant potential of current quite irrespective of the number of lamps in the circuit, and for this invention he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour by President Grévy. At this time he took out a great many patents on electrical machinery, including arc lamps, incandescent lamps, search lights, dynamo-electric machines, chemical processes relating to electricity, &c. In 1883 he took up the question of automatic guns. He believed that the recoil energy of the gun, which was only a disturbing element in firing, could be turned to useful effect, and that the energy was always sufficient to perform all the necessary functions of loading and firing. Accordingly he made a species of a dynamometer gun with which he was able to measure the force of the recoil, the duration of the recoil, and everything relating to loading and firing a gun. This gave him the necessary data, and he made the first automatic gun in Hatton Garden in 1884. This gun was a nine days' wonder in London. People at first would not believe that it was possible for a gun to load and fire itself without any one touching it, and everybody came to see the gun, from the Prince of Wales downwards. Competitive trials with other guns operated by hand followed, and he exhibited his automatic guns in various countries, and received some very large orders. The amalgamation with the Nordenfelt Company followed, and the management of the company passed into the hands of a board of directors. Mr. Maxim writes characteristically of the guns: "I think it is now admitted that these automatic guns have proved themselves superior to all others. In the late war with the Matabele they operated without a hitch, and it was these guns that saved the British column from total annihilation. I have received many letters from the officers in command, and they all attribute their wonderful success to the remarkable killing power of these guns, and they say that no soldier, no matter how brave, could stand up before them. Six hundred rounds a minute from a single barrel is rather too deadly a fire to stand up against; in fact, the slaughter was so great that the matter was seriously discussed in Parliament as to whether the English were justified in slaughtering the natives in such numbers." The French navy has adopted the fully automatic Maxim gun, using a barrel of 1½-inch bore with cast-iron explosive projectiles, and the French officers, in describing the fire, said it was literally a rain of iron. When the question of smokeless powder came up in Europe Mr. Maxim was among the first in England to commence experiments, and he found that very excellent results could be obtained by combining gun-cotton of the highest degree of nitration —commonly called tri-nitrocellulose—and nitro-glycerine with a small percentage of a suitable oil. He found that the violence of the nitro-glycerine could be modified to any extent in this way, and with such a compound detonation was absolutely impossible. After a large number of experiments he produced most excellent results. The powder was found to be a stable compound not affected by heat and moisture, and to give very high muzzle velocities and low pressures without any smoke at all. This was the first compound of the kind ever made. About nine years ago he took up the question of aerial navigation, and made a large number of experiments with a view of ascertaining exactly how much power was required to perform artificial flight on the aeroplane system, the aeroplane being propelled by screws. The experimental apparatus was placed on the end of a very long rotating arm, so that the apparatus passed around a circle, the circumference of which was 200 feet. After this he commenced experiments on a very much larger machine to run in a straight line on a railway track; but it was first necessary to produce some kind of motive power which should be much lighter and stronger than anything else in existence, and this he has succeeded in doing. He has, he avers, been able to get a horse-power out of every 10 lbs. of motor, a result which, he thinks, has never been attained before. His large machine is driven by twin screws, and the thrust of these screws is over 2100 lbs. when the engines are running at full speed. The machine is provided with all sorts of instruments and tachometers, so as to measure the thrust of the screw, the speed and the lifting power of the aeroplane as the machine runs on the railway track. An inverted rail is provided on each side of the machine to prevent it from leaving the track. These are the first experiments that have ever been tried with a machine running in a straight line, and it is the first time that any considerable weight has been lifted by an aerial apparatus not provided with a gas bag. Mr. Maxim is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, Member of the Society of Arts, Member of the English Society of Mechanical Engineers, Member of the London Chamber of Commerce, Member of the Bridgeport Scientific Society, and has lately been decorated by the Sultan of Turkey with the Grand Order of the Medjidieh.

MAX-MÜLLER, The Right Hon. Professor Friedrich, K. M., LL. D., D. C. L., son of Wilhelm Müller, the German poet, was born at Dessau, Dec. 6, 1823. In 1850 he took one of his Christian names as his surname. He was educated at the public schools of Dessau and Leipzig, attended lectures in the Universities of Leipzig and Berlin, and took his degree in 1843. He studied Arabic and Persian under Professor Fleischer; Sanskrit and comparative Philology under Professors Brockhaus, Bopp, and Rückert; philosophy under Drobisch, Weisse, and Schelling. He published, in 1844, his first work, a translation of "The Hitopadesa," a collection of Sanskrit fables; and then proceeded to Berlin, to examine the collection of Sanskrit MSS. there. In 1845 he went to Paris to continue his studies under Eugène Burnouf, at whose suggestion he began to collect materials for an edition of the "Rig-Veda," the Sacred Hymns of the Brahmins, and the Commentary of Sāyanāchārya. After copying and collating some of the MSS. in the Royal Library at Paris, he repaired to England in June 1846, in order to collate some more MSS. at the East-India House and the Bodleian Library. When he was on the point of returning to Germany he made the acquaintance of the late Baron Bunsen, then Prussian Minister in London, who persuaded him to stay in England, and on his and the late Professor Wilson's recommendation the East-India Company engaged him to publish the first edition of the "Rig-Veda" at their expense. In 1848 he settled at Oxford, where his work was to be printed, and the first volume of 1000 pages quarto appeared in 1849. He was invited by the University to give some courses of lectures on Comparative Philology, as Deputy Taylorian Professor, in 1850; was made honorary M.A. and member of Christ Church in 1851; was elected Taylorian Professor, and received the full degree of M.A. by decree of Convocation in 1854; was made a curator of the Bodleian Library in 1856; and elected a Fellow of All Souls' College in 1858. He was in 1860 an unsuccessful candidate for the Professorship of Sanskrit at Oxford, being opposed by a coalition of theological parties. From 1865 to 1867 he was Oriental Librarian at the Bodleian Library. In 1868 the University founded a new Professorship of Comparative Philology, and the statute of foundation named him as the first Professor. In 1872 he was invited to lecture in the reconstituted University of Strassburg as Professor of Sanskrit. He declined the appointment, but gave some courses of lectures there in 1872. As he refused to accept any salary, the University of Strassburg founded a triennial prize for Sanskrit scholarship in memory of his services. On Dec. 3, 1873, at the invitation of Dean Stanley, he delivered in Westminster Abbey a lecture on the

"Religions of the World," the only address ever delivered by a layman within the Abbey. In 1875 he wished to resign the Professorship at Oxford, intending to return to Germany, but the University requested him to remain in Oxford, and entrusted him with the edition of a series of translations of the "Sacred Books of the East," appointing at the same time a Deputy-Professor, Mr. Sayce. Fifty volumes of this series have been published, of which the first contains Max-Müller's translation of the "Upanishads," 1879, and the tenth his translation of the Dhammapada from Pali, 1881. In 1878 he delivered in the Chapter-House of Westminster a course of lectures on "The Origin and Growth of Religion, as illustrated by the Religions of India" (last edition, 1891). These lectures were the first of those delivered under a bequest made by the late Mr. Hibbert. On Nov. 13, 1877, Professor Max-Müller was elected a delegate of the University Press. On Oct. 28, 1881, he was re-elected Curator of the Bodleian Library in place of the late Professor Rolleston. In 1882 he was invited by the University of Cambridge to give a course of lectures on India, specially intended for the candidates for the Indian Civil Service. These lectures were published in 1882, under the title of "India: What can it teach us?" In addition to the "Hitopadesa," he published at Königsberg, in 1847, "Meghadūta, an Indian Elegy," translated from the Sanskrit, with notes, in German; in the Reports of the British Association, 1847, an "Essay on Bengali, and its Relation to the Aryan Languages"; in 1853, an "Essay on Indian Logic," in "Archbishop Thompson's Laws of Thought"; in 1854, "Proposals for a 'Uniform Missionary Alphabet' and 'Suggestions on the Learning of the Languages of the Seat of War in the East, with Linguistic Map,'" republished in 1855 under the title of "A Survey of Languages." In 1854 appeared his "Letter to Chevalier Bunsen on the Classification of the Turanian Languages in Bunsen's 'Christianity and Mankind'"; in 1857, at Leipzig, "The Hymns of the Rig-Veda, together with text and translation of the Prātisākhya, an ancient work on Sanskrit Grammar and Pronunciation," in German; and "Buddhism and Buddhist Pilgrims"; in 1858, "The German Classics from the Fourth to the Nineteenth Century" (new edition, 1886), and "Essay on Comparative Mythology," in the Oxford Essays, translated into French by Ernest Renan; in 1859, "History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature" (2nd edition, 1860), and "Lectures on the Science of Language," two series, delivered at the Royal

Institution (last edition, 1888); a thoroughly revised edition of this work was published in 1891, under the title "The Science of Language, founded on Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution." He published a "Sanskrit Grammar for Beginners" (2nd edition, 1870). In 1868 he delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge, "On the Stratification of Languages," and in 1870 a course of lectures "On the Science of Religion" at the Royal Institution, published in 1873 under the title of "Introduction to the Science of Religion," with "Two Essays on False Analogies and the Philosophy of Mythology" (last edition, 1882). In 1873 he gave another course of lectures at the Royal Institution on Darwin's Philosophy of Language, published in Fraser's Magazine. Most of his essays have been collected in "Chips from a German Workshop," 4 vols., 1868-75:—vol. i., Essays on the Science of Religion; vol. ii., Essays on Mythology, Tradition, and Customs; vol. iii., Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities; vol. iv., Essays on the Science of Language. A selection of them was published under the title of "Selected Essays," 2 vols., 1882, followed by a later edition of four volumes. In 1869 he published, as a specimen, the first volume of his translation of the Rig-Veda "Hymns to the Maruts, or the Storm-Gods." In 1873 appeared his edition of the two texts of the Rig-Veda (2nd edition, 1877), and in 1874 the sixth and concluding volume of his large edition of the Rig-Veda with Śāyana's Commentary. A new edition of this work in four volumes, published at the expense of the Mahārājāh of Vizianagram, appeared in 1891. Since the year 1879 Professor Max-Müller devoted himself to the teaching of several Buddhist priests who had been sent to him from Japan to learn Sanskrit. This led him to the discovery that the oldest Sanskrit MSS. existed in Japan. With the help of these Japanese MSS. he published the Sanskrit originals of several Buddhist texts, such as the Sukhāvatīvyūha (Journ. Roy. Asiatic Soc., 1880), the Vajracchedikā, in the Anecdota Oxoniensia, 1881, while one of his pupils, Mr. Bunyū Nanjō, compiled a complete Catalogue of the Buddhist Tripitaka, the Sacred Canon of the Buddhists in China and Japan, published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, in 1883. In 1881, in commemoration of the centenary of its first publication, he brought out a new translation of Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, preceded by a historical introduction by Professor L. Noiré. Of the "Critique" alone a second edition was published in 1897. In 1884 he published a volume of "Biographical Essays"; in 1887, "The Science of Thought"; in 1888, "Biographies of Words and the Home of the Aryas." In 1888 he was appointed Gifford Lecturer in Natural Religion in the University of Glasgow, and his first course of lectures was published in 1889, under the title of "Natural Religion"; the second course, "Physical Religion," in 1891; the third volume of lectures in 1892, "Anthropological Religion"; the fourth in 1893, "Theosophy, or Psychological Religion." He was re-elected Gifford Lecturer in 1891. Professor Max-Müller, who has contributed numerous articles to the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews, the Times, and various literary journals of England, America, Germany, and France, is one of the eight foreign members of the Institute of France, one of the thirty Knights of the Ordre pour le Mérite, one of the ten foreign members of the Reale Accademia dei Lincei of Rome, and has received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws and Philosophy at Cambridge, Dublin, Edinburgh, Bologna, and Budapest. In 1889 he was elected First President of the Aryan Section at the International Congress of Orientalists held in Stockholm and Christiania, and received the Northern Star (first class) from the King of Sweden. In 1892 he was chosen President of the International Congress of Orientalists held in London; in 1894 President of the Ethnological Section of the British Association. In 1893 he visited Constantinople, and was decorated by the Sultan with the Turkish Ordre pour le Mérite (Liakat) and the Star of the Medjidieh. On the fiftieth anniversary of his Doctorate (September 1893) the University of Leipzig presented him with an honorary Diploma, and on his seventieth birthday (Dec. 6, 1893) he received numerous addresses from academies and learned societies to which he belongs. In May 1896 he was made a member of the Privy Council, and in the autumn of the same year received the insignia of a Knight Com. of the Légion d'Honneur. He is also Knight Com. of the Corone d'Italia and of Albrecht the Bear. Professor Max-Müller published in February 1898 a volume of reminiscences, "Auld Lang Syne," which has passed through several editions. Permanent addresses: All Souls' College; and 7 Norham Gardens, Oxford.

MAXWELL, The Right Hon. Sir Herbert Eustace, 7th Bart., M.P., F.R.S., of Monreith, only surviving son of Sir William Maxwell by his wife Helenora, daughter of Sir Michael Shaw Stewart, 5th Baronet of Ardgowan, Lord-Lieutenant of Renfrewshire, was born on Jan. 8, 1845, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, which he left without taking a degree.

After leaving college he joined the Militia, and served for twenty-one years, finally retiring as a Major and Lieut.-Colonel. He succeeded his father in 1877, and was elected (Conservative) Member for Wigtonshire at the General Election of 1880, which county he continues to represent. He was a Lord of the Treasury in 1886-92. He has made friendly societies and provident insurance a special subject of study, and was Chairman of the Select Committee on Provident Insurance in 1885-87, and of the Select Committee on Friendly Societies in 1888-89. He has also presided over inquiries into Scottish Salmon Fisheries, Solway Fishings, and the Vole Plague in Scotland. In 1893 he was appointed a member of the Royal Commission on the Aged Poor, and in 1896-97 he was Chairman of the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1897. He is the author of numerous papers on Archæology and Natural History, besides miscellaneous essays and reviews; has written regularly for the following journals: Saturday Review, National Observer, Outlook, Literature, and Pall Mall Gazette; and has published the following books: "Studies in the Topography of Galloway," 1887; "Passages in the Life of Sir Lucian Elphin," a novel in two vols., 1889; "The Art of Love," a novel, 1890; "The Letter of the Law," a novel, 1891; "Meridiana—Noontide Essays," 1892; "Life and Times of the Right Hon. W. H. Smith (2 vols.), 1893; "Scottish Land Names," 1894; "Post Meridiana—Afternoon Essays," 1895; "A Duke of Britain: a Romance," 1895; "Rainy Days in a Library," 1896; "Robert the Bruce" (Heroes of the Nation Series), 1897; "Sixty Years a Queen," 1897; "Memories of the Months," 1897; "The Hon. Sir Charles Murray: a Memoir," 1898; "Salmon and Sea-Trout," 1898. He was appointed Rhind Lecturer in Archæology (Edinburgh, 1893), and is Director of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway and of London and Provincial Bank. He married, in 1863, Mary, daughter of Henry Fletcher Campbell of Boquhan, Stirlingshire, and has issue. Addresses: Monreith, Wigtonshire; 49 Lennox Gardens, S.W.

MAXWELL, Mrs. John, née Mary Elizabeth Braddon, daughter of Henry Braddon, solicitor (a younger son of a family long established in North Cornwall), and widow of John Maxwell, publisher, was born in Soho Square, London, in 1837, and, after a home education, became at an early age a contributor to periodical literature, writing sentimental verses, political squibs, and parodies for the poet's corner of provincial newspapers.

Miss Braddon has written a large number of novels, amongst which are "Lady Audley's Secret," "Aurora Floyd," "Eleanor's Victory," "John Marchmont's Legacy," "Henry Dunbar," "The Doctor's Wife," "Only a Clod," "Sir Jasper's Tenant," "The Lady's Mile," "Rupert Godwin," and "Run to Earth." Miss Braddon conducted Belgravia, a London magazine, to which she contributed the following novels: "Birds of Prey," "Charlotte's Inheritance," "Dead Sea Fruit," "Fenton's Quest," and a variety of short tales and novelettes. Her more recent works are: "To the Bitter End," 1872; "Lucius Davoring," "Strangers and Pilgrims," "Griselda," a drama in four acts, brought out at the Princess's Theatre in November 1873; "The Missing Witness," "Lost for Love," and "Taken at the Flood," 1874; "Hostages to Fortune," 1875; "Dead Men's Shoes" and "Joshua Haggart's Daughter," 1876; "An Open Verdict," 1878; "The Cloven Foot" and "Vixen," 1879; "Just as I am" and "The Story of Barbara," 1880; "Asphodel," 1881; "Mount Royal," 1882; "Flower and Weed," "Ishmael," "Wyllard's Weird," "Mohawks," 1886; "Like and Unlike," "The Fatal Three," "The Day will Come," 1889; "One Life, One Love," 1890; "Gerard," 1891; "The Venetians," 1892; "All Along the River" and "The Christmas Hirelings," 1893; "Thou art the Man," 1894; "Sons of Fire," 1895; "London Pride," 1896; "Under Love's Rule," 1897; "In High Places," and "Rough Justice," 1898. Addresses: Lichfield House, Richmond-on-Thames; Annesley Bank, New Forest.

MAY, Phil, who is now credited with being able to earn as much as £100 a day by his drawings, was born at Leeds on April 22, 1864, and is the second son of Philip May, engineer. He was educated at St. George's School, Leeds. He began his artistic career when he was twelve years old, at which time the Grand Theatre, Leeds, opened, and he became acquainted with the son of the local scene-painter, and helped to mix the distemper. Here Mr. May used to sketch sections of other people's designs of costumes, and eventually he designed comic masks and dresses. This brought him orders for portraits, and after a year or two the late Frederick Stimpson engaged him to play small parts and do six sketches a week as advertisement window bills. He got an engagement to design the dresses for the Leeds pantomime in 1882, but then determined to come to London as a tragedian, his finances at the time consisting of twenty shillings. An aunt had married an actor there, and he sought her out.

By his uncle he was next day despatched again to Leeds, but he left the train and walked back to London. Then ensued a time of great privation, and the first turn of good fortune he had was when he met the owner of a photograph shop, who took his drawing of Irving, Bancroft, and Toole, and published it. At last a drawing by him of Mr. Bancroft in Society brought him to the notice of the St. Stephen's Review, where he was set the task of designing a cartoon, illustrations, cover and initials for a Christmas number. A week was given him to do this in. He worked night and day and finished the whole in time. He was employed on the illustrations of the Review till an agent came from Sydney to secure an artist. He went out to the Colonies, and in fine air has grown what he is, but he says the trials of his early days made him an artist. He was three years on the Sydney Bulletin. He is now an artist on the staffs of the Graphic and Punch, for both which journals he continues to do notable and characteristic work. He has travelled for the Graphic in America. Since 1892 he has published "Phil May's Annual," and has also given to the world "The Parson and the Painter," 1891; "Phil May's Gutter-snipes," "Phil May's Sketchbook," 1896, &c. Address: Holland Park Road, Kensington, W.

MAY, William Charles, was born at Reading early in the fifties. After studying at South Kensington he proceeded to the Royal Academy Schools, where he gained a silver medal and honourable mention for the historical gold medal which that year was won by Mr. Hamo Thornycroft. For some time Mr. May was the pupil and assistant of the late Signor Monti, sculptor of the celebrated group, "The Sleep of Sorrow and Dream of Joy," which attracted so much attention at the Great Exhibition of 1862. He has been more particularly successful as a portrait sculptor, but has executed a large quantity of ideal work. His finest group in marble was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1877, and is entitled "The Death of Panthea." An exceptionally good engraving of it was published in the Art Journal in 1884, and attracted some attention. A beautiful monument in Remenham Churchyard, Henley-on-Thames, illustrative of the words "He shall give His angels charge over thee," by this artist to the memory of the late Mr. R. A. Cosier, a well-known art patron, was also greatly admired on a representation of it being published in the Builder in 1886. Mr. May was the sculptor of the memorial subscribed for by the nation, and erected on Plymouth Hoe in 1892, in commemoration of the tercentenary of the defeat of the Armada. His only son, Mr. Charles Albert Victor May, is also a sculptor.

MAYER, Michael Leopold, born Nov. 6, 1832, is a naturalised Englishman of Franco-German descent. With the exception of his boyhood, he has spent all his life in London, where, for the last quarter of a century, he has been one of the central figures of the theatrical world. Formerly a journalist, he became the lessee of the Princess's Theatre in 1875, and produced "Round the World in 80 Days," an adaptation by himself from Jules Verne's popular romance and play, "Le Tour du Monde en 80 Jours." It was a great success, and was followed by "Heartsease," an adaptation by James Mortimer of "La Dame aux Camélias," by the younger Dumas. It is, however, as the founder of a regular season of French plays that Mr. Mayer is best known to the present generation. After introducing to London the leading artists of the French stage, he, by arrangement with Mr. John Hollingshead, the then lessee of the Gaiety Theatre, brought over the whole company of the Théâtre Français for a season of six weeks, during which they performed about sixty of their most successful plays, both classic and modern. This was the first introduction to London of Madame Sarah Bernhardt. Since 1879 there has been a season of French plays every summer, and in some years a winter season too. All the leading French actors and actresses, including Mesdames Sarah Bernhardt, Hading, Bartet, and Chaumont; MM. Coquelin, Mounet-Sully, Got, Delaunay, &c., have performed in London under Mr. Mayer's management, and have at various times occupied the boards of the Lyceum, Gaiety, Adelphi, Comedy, Daly's, Royalty, Opera Comique, and the old Her Majesty's theatres. At the last-named, Mr. Mayer also gave a season of French grand opera; and at the Lyceum, about eight years ago, he gave a season of Italian opera, introducing to London for the first time Verdi's "Otello," with the whole of the famous orchestra and chorus of La Scala, Milan, under their late eminent conductor, Signor Faccio.

MAYNARD, Constance Louisa, was born in London on Feb. 19, 1849, her father belonging to the family of the Viscounts Maynard, and her mother being of French Huguenot origin. She was educated at home, with the exception of one year at Belstead, Mrs. Umphelby's School, near Ipswich, and entered Girton College, Cambridge, in 1872, where she successfully passed the Moral Sciences

Tripos in 1876, being the first woman to do so within the limits allowed by the University of Cambridge. After working in the well-known school of St. Leonard's, at St. Andrews, for three years, she came to London, and studied art at the Slade School for some time. In 1882 she joined Miss Dudin Brown in founding Westfield College, Hampstead, an institution in which women receive the education of a University College, and at the same time are carefully grounded in the tenets of the Protestant religion. Address: Westfield College, Hampstead, N.W.

MAYO, Mrs. Isabella Fyvie, born in London in 1843, of pure Scottish descent, was educated in London. She issued "The Occupations of a Retired Life," by "Edward Garrett" (nom de plume) in 1868. She was married in 1870 to Mr. John Mayo, who died in 1877. Principal works: "The Crust and the Cake," "Premiums paid to Experience," "Crooked Places," "By Still Waters," "John Winter, a Story of Harvests," "At any Cost," "Mystery of Allan Grate," 1885; "Ways and Means," 1889; "Not by Bread alone," 1890; "Her Day of Service," 1891; "Rab Bethune's Double," "A Black Diamond," 1894; "Nine-Day Wonder," 1896; "A Daughter of the Klephs," 1897, the latter story being the outcome of the two visits paid to Greece; "Other People's Stairs," 1898, &c. She has contributed innumerable articles both in prose and verse to the Leisure Hour, Good Words, the Sunday Magazine, the Sunday at Home, Atlanta, Chambers, the New Age, the Fireside, the Young Man, the Young Woman, the Argosy, the Girl's Own, the Scots Pictorial, &c. Some of these articles are under her nom de plume, and some under her own name. Address: Albyn Place, Aberdeen.

MAYOR, The Rev. John Eyton Bickersteth, M.A., Professor of Latin, Cambridge University, born at Baddegama, in Ceylon, Jan. 28, 1825, was educated at Shrewsbury School and St. John's College, Cambridge, and ordained deacon in 1855, priest in 1857. He was elected Fellow of St. John's College in 1849; was Assistant-Master at Marlborough College, 1849-53; College Lecturer in 1853; Librarian of the University of Cambridge, 1863-67, and was appointed Professor of Latin in that University in 1872, and President of the Vegetarian Society in 1883. Mr. Mayor is the editor of "Thirteen Satires of Juvenal," 1853 (3rd edit., 1881); "Juvenal for Schools," 1879; "Two Lives of Nicholas Ferrar," 1855; "Autobiography of Matt. Robinson," 1856; "Early Statutes of St. John's College, Cambridge," 1859; "Cicero's Second Philippic," with notes, 1861 (6th edit., 1879); "Roger Ascham's Schoolmaster," with notes, 1873 (new edit., 1883), Bohn's Library; "Ricardi de Cirencestria Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Angliæ," 2 vols., 1863-69; and "Thomas Baker's History of the College of St. John the Evangelist, Cambridge," 2 vols., 1869; "Bibliographical Clue to Latin Literature," 1875; "The Latin Heptateuch," 1889; and numerous other works. Mr. Mayor was one of the editors of the Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology and of the Journal of Philology. Mr. Mayor's brother, the Rev. Joseph Bickersteth Mayor, is well known as the editor of Cicero's "De Natura." "St. James," and many other works. Address: St. John's College, Cambridge.

MEAD, Frederick, is the son of George Edward Mead, a solicitor, and was born on July 22, 1847. He was educated at King's College, London, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1869. He acted as Counsel to the Treasury, at the Middlesex Sessions, from 1879 to 1886, and was engaged at the Central Criminal Court from 1886 to 1889. In the latter year he was appointed a Metropolitan Police Magistrate at the Thames Court. Mr. Mead was married, in 1878, to Sophia, daughter of R. H. Poland, of Blackheath. Address: 10 Eliot Place, Blackheath, S.E.

MEADE, The Right Rev. William Edward, D.D., Bishop of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, was born Feb. 24, 1832, and is the son of the Rev. William Meade, of Inchinabacca Rectory. He was educated at Middleton School and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he was Scholar, Senior Moderator in 1856, Bishop Law's prizeman, &c. He was appointed Rector of Ardrea in 1864, Prebendary of Armagh in 1877, and Archdeacon in 1885. He married, in 1864, Mary Ferrier, daughter of Fleetwood Churchill, M.D. Address: The Palace, Cork.

MEASON, Malcolm Ronald Laing, son of the late Gilbert Laing Meason, Esq., of Lindertis, Forfarshire, born at Edinburgh in 1824, was educated in France, and at St. Gregory's College, Downside, near Bath. He entered the army in 1839 as ensign of the 40th Regiment, and served through the second Afghan and the Gwalior campaigns in India, was very severely wounded, and received two medals. He joined the 10th Hussars in 1846, and sold out in 1851. From the latter year to 1854 he was editor of the Bombay Telegraph and Courier. In 1855 he was sent to Paris by the Daily News in conjunction with Mr. Blanchard Jerrold as one of the special correspondents for the Paris Exhibition of that year. From 1855 to 1870 he was a frequent contributor to the Daily News, Household Words, and All the Year Round. From 1866 to 1870 he was editor of the Weekly Register. In 1870 he went abroad as special correspondent of the New York Herald with the French Army. After Sedan he accepted an offer from the Daily Telegraph, and remained in France as special correspondent of that paper until the end of the war, and afterwards, for two years, as correspondent for the same journal at Paris and Versailles. He joined the staff of the Hour in 1873. In 1865 he published "The Bubbles of Finance," and in 1866 "The Profits of Panics," both being descriptions from life of the joint-stock swindles of the day. In 1868 he published a small volume on "Turf Frauds"; in 1875, "Three Months after Dato, and other Tales"; and in 1886, "Sir William's Speculations." He has contributed to the Month, the Dublin Review, Belgravia, Fraser, Macmillan, the Whitehall Review, and other periodicals.

MEATH, Bishop of. See KEENE, THE MOST REV. JAMES BENNETT.

MEATH, Earl of, The Right Hon. Reginald Brabazon, P.C., was born in London on July 31, 1841, and is the son of the 11th Earl, whom he succeeded in 1887, and of Harriet, daughter of the late Sir Richard Brooke, of Norton Priory, Cheshire. He was educated at Eton and in Germany, and entered the Foreign Office, after competitive examination, in 1863. Five years later he exchanged into the diplomatic service, and was successively at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Berlin, The Hague, and Paris until 1873. For many years Lord Meath has been exceedingly busy as a public benefactor. As Lord Brabazon, in 1874, he became first Hon. Secretary of the Hospital Saturday Fund; in 1879 he was first Chairman of the Young Men's Friendly Society. In 1882 he founded and became first Chairman of the Metropolitan Public Gardens Association, which has for its object the acquisition and laying-out of open spaces, such as disused burial-grounds, the planting of trees, the provision of seats, the supply of children's gymnasiums, protection of commons and existing open spaces &c. He was first President of the British College of Physical Education, and of the Church Reform Association. His work on the London County Council, of which he was for some years an Alderman, has been important. He was first Chairman of the Parks Committee. Latterly he has turned his attention to Dublin city and county, of which he has been since 1898 Lord-

Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum. He is Hon. Colonel of the 5th Batt. R.D. Fusiliers. He married, in 1868, the only surviving daughter of the 11th Earl of Lauderdale. Addresses: 83 Lancaster Gate, W.; and Kilruddery, Bray, Ireland.

MECKLENBURG-STRELITZ, Grand-Duke of, Frederick William Charles George Ernest Adolphus Gustavus, a Lieut.-General in the Prussian army, born Oct. 17, 1819; married, June 28, 1843, the Princess Augusta Caroline Charlotte Elizabeth Maria Sophia Louisa of Cambridge, daughter of the late Duke of Cambridge. He succeeded his father, Sept. 6, 1860, and has one son, George Adolphus Frederick Augustus Victor Ernest Gustavus William Wellington, born July 22, 1848, who married a Princess of Anhalt in 1877, his son, Adolphus Frederick George, being born in June 1882.

MEDING, Johann Ferdinand Martin Oskar, novelist (Gregor Samarow), was born April 11, 1829, at Königsberg, being the son of the Governor of East Prussia. He studied law in his native town, at Heidelberg, and at Berlin, from 1848 till 1851, when he became an advocate (Auskultator) at Marienwerder. At a later period he was employed in the magistracy and administration; and in 1859 he quitted the public service of Prussia and joined that of Hanover. He was sent on several confidential missions by the King of Hanover, George V., and was concerned as a Councillor of State in the passing of various religious and political measures. In 1863 he accompanied the King to Frankfort on the occasion of a Congress of the reigning Princes of Germany being held in that city. In 1866 he was sent on a mission to the Elector of Hesse, and subsequently went to Vienna with the deposed King of Hanover. He went to Paris in 1867 as the representative of the interests of the deposed King. In 1870 he gave in his adhesion to the Prussian Government, and, after residing two years in Switzerland and at Stuttgart, he settled in Berlin, where, keeping wholly aloof from politics, he began to write his personal reminiscences, in the form of novels, under the pseudonym of "Gregor Samarow." His works include: "For Sceptres and Crowns," a romance in five parts, 1872-76; subsequently "The Roman Expedition of the Epigoni," 1873; "The Dying Salutation of the Legions," 1874; "Heights and Depths," 20 vols., 1879-80; "Queen Elizabeth," 6 vols., 1881; "The Merchant's House," 1882; "A Difficult Choice," 1883; "Die Saxoborussen,"

1885; "Gippel und Abgrund," 1888; "Feenschloss," 1890; and "Der Weisse Adler," 1891. Under his own name Medding has published "Memoirs of Contemporary History" ("Memorien zur Zeitgeschichte"), vol. i., 1881; "A Biography of William I. of Germany, with additions and corrections by the Emperor himself."

MEDLICOTT, Henry Benedict, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., was born on Aug. 3, 1829, at Loughrea, co. Galway, Ireland, and is the second son of the Rev. Samuel Medlicott, Rector of Loughrea, and Charlotte, daughter of Colonel H. B. Dolphin, C.B. He was educated in France, Guernsey, and Dublin, where he took the degree of B.A. at Trinity College in 1850, with diploma and honours in the School of Civil Engineering; and the M.A. degree in 1870. He became a Fellow of the Geological Society of London, 1856; of the Royal Society in 1877; and received the Wollaston Medal in 1888. He is honorary and corresponding member of several foreign societies; and was awarded the Indian Mutiny Medal for special service as a Volunteer. He was appointed to the Geological Survey of Ireland, 1851; transferred to the English Survey, 1853; to the Indian Geological Survey and as Professor of Geology at the Roorkee College of Civil Engineers, 1854; Director of the Geological Survey of India, 1876-87, when he retired. He has published "A Manual of the Geology of India" (in part), 1879; scientific papers in the Journal of the Geological Society, 1868; five "memoirs" and forty-four "records" of the Geological Survey of India series, 1860-87; and pamphlets entitled "Agnosticism and Faith," 1888, and "Evolution of Mind in Man," 1892. He married Louisa, second daughter of the Rev. D. H. Mannsall. Address: c/o H. S. King & Co., 65 Cornhill, E.C.

MELBA, Madame Nellie, prima donna (Mrs. Armstrong), was born in one of the Australian Colonies on May 19, 1865. As a little child of six she sang ballads to her own accompaniment at a public concert. Subsequently she was sent to Europe, and studied under Madame Marchesi in Paris. She first appeared on the stage in October 1887, singing in "Rigoletto" at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels. The year after she appeared before a London audience as Lucia at Covent Garden Opera House. She played Ophelia at the Paris Grand Opera in 1889, and also appeared as Juliet in London. Bemberg specially wrote "Elaine" for her, and she appeared in this opera in London in 1892. In 1893 she achieved great success in "Pagliacci" at Covent Garden. In 1894 she sang at the Handel Festival, and has been much before the public in principal parts during recent operatic seasons. Address: Rue de Prony, Paris.

MELBOURNE, Bishop of. See GOE, THE RIGHT REV. FIELD FLOWERS.

MELDOLA, Professor Raphael, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in the Finsbury Technical College, City and Guilds of London Institute, was born July 19, 1849, in Annette Crescent, Essex Road, Islington. His father, Samuel Meldola, was a printer, and his grandfather, the Rev. Dr. Raphael Meldola, Chief Rabbi of the Congregation of Spanish and Portuguese Jews in London (1805-28). An obituary notice of the Chief Rabbi, who was widely esteemed for his scholarship by all denominations, appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1828. The history of the family can be traced back without a break through eleven generations to Rabbi Isaiah Meldola, described in the pedigree as "one of the sages of Castile," who died as head of the college at Mantua in 1340. Many members of the family have been distinguished divines, physicians, scholars, and writers on various subjects. Professor Meldola received his early education in private schools, first at Bristol, where his mother's family resided, and afterwards at Kew and Bayswater. He received his scientific training at the Royal College of Chemistry in Oxford Street, having entered as a student under Dr. Edward Frankland in 1866. His first appointment was as Junior Assistant in the laboratory of the late Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., where he imbibed the taste for organic chemistry which he has since cultivated. From the laboratory in Pentonville Professor Meldola transferred his services to a firm of colour manufacturers at Brentford, where he acquired his first experience as a technologist, and in 1872 he again entered the Royal College of Chemistry, then transferred to the South Kensington establishment, in the capacity of Demonstrator under Dr. Frankland. In 1874 he became associated with Mr. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S., and assisted this well-known investigator in many of his researches in Spectrum Analysis. While in the laboratory of Mr. Lockyer, Professor Meldola was sent out by the Royal Society in charge of the Nicobar Island branch of the expedition commissioned to make observation on the total eclipse of April 5, 1875. Two years after his return to England he again gave his services to chemical technology, having accepted in 1887 the post of scientific chemist in one of the leading coal-tar colour factories in this country. In the laboratory of this firm at Hackney Wick he worked at chemical research for eight years, and made many discoveries of scientific and technical importance which are associated with his name. He was appointed to the professorship which he now holds in 1885. The list of chemical papers embodying the results of original investigations carried out by Professor Meldola alone, or by him in conjunction with his assistants and students, is a very long one, numbering about seventy memoirs and notes contributed to the recognised scientific periodicals in England and Germany. Although his work has been chiefly in the domain of chemistry, he is also an enthusiastic naturalist and geologist, and much of his early work was in connection with the application of the Darwinian theory to the problems of animal coloration. His first published scientific papers were on biological subjects, and he has contributed about thirty entomological notes to various natural history journals. He is still warmly interested in the subject, and devotes most of his leisure time to collecting and observing in the field. English biologists owe to Professor Meldola the translation of Weismann's "Studies in the Theory of Descent" (1881-82), a work which first brought into notoriety in this country the eminent German biologist, and which also embodied in the form of notes many of the translator's own observations. In 1886 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and he belongs to most of the scientific societies in London and to many foreign societies. He is one of the original Fellows of the Institute of Chemistry and of the Physical Society, and an Hon. Member of the Institute of Brewing. He has been Secretary, three times Vice-President, and was President of the Entomological Society, 1896-97; he is also Foreign Secretary of the Chemical Society, a Member of Council of the Royal Society and of the British Association, and was President of the Chemical Section for the Ipswich Meeting in 1895. In connection with the British Association he has done much in helping to promote and consolidate the work of the local scientific societies throughout the country, and is Chairman of the Corresponding Societies Committee of the Association. His tastes as a field naturalist led him to take an active part in 1880 in the formation of the Essex Field Club, of which he was the first President, and has since been a warm supporter. In addition to his official addresses and scientific papers published by the Club, he (in conjunction with Mr. W. White) drew up an exhaustive "Report on the East Anglian Earthquake of 1884," which forms the first volume of the Club's Special Memoirs. His experience as a technologist as well as a scientific teacher has enabled Professor Meldola to take an active part, outside his immediate professional duties, in the Technical Education Movement. In 1886 he read a paper on "The Scientific Development of the Coal-Tar Colour Industry" before the Society of Arts, for which he was awarded a silver medal. In 1891 he delivered a course of Cantor Lectures on Photographic Chemistry before the Society of Arts. Professor Meldola's name has long been familiar as a reviewer in the pages of Nature and other journals, although much of his writing in this category is anonymous. For many years he was associated with Land and Water as natural-history correspondent in the time of Frank Buckland and John Keast Lord. He has contributed articles on special subjects to the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," to "Watt's Dictionary of Chemistry" by Morley and Muir, and to "Thorpe's Dictionary of Applied Chemistry." He is the author of a little manual of "Inorganic Chemistry," Murby, 1874; the "Chemistry of Photography," Macmillan, 1889; and "Coal, and what we get from it," published by the S.P.C.K. in 1891. Prof. Meldola has acted as an Examiner for the University of Cambridge. He was the recipient of a Jubilee Medal from the Queen in 1897. Professor Meldola married, in 1866, Ella Frederica, daughter of Dr. Maurice Davis, J.P. Permanent address: 6 Brunswick Square, W.C.

MELDRUM, Charles, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., was educated at Aberdeen University, and entered the Bombay Educational Department in 1846. He was appointed Professor of Mathematics at the Royal College, Mauritius, in 1848, was in 1851 Secretary and one of the Founders of the Meteorological Society of that colony, and in 1862 was appointed Government Meteorological Observer and in 1875 Director of the Royal Alfred Observatory. In 1876 he was elected F.R.S. For ten years he was Member of Council of the Government of Mauritius. He is an authority on sun-spots and rainfall, and these form the subject-matter of several reports made by him to the British Association and to Nature. Address: 25 South Parade, Southsea.

MÉLINE, M., French statesman, was born in the Vosges in 1838. After a distinguished career as a student he was called to the Paris Bar, and espoused journalism as a writer for the Opposition newspapers under the Empire. He entered the Chamber in 1876, and held the portfolio of Minister of Agriculture in the Ferry Cabinet from 1883 to 1885. He was elected President of the Chamber in 1889, and became best known as a Protectionist leader, and by taking a prominent part in opposing the income-tax scheme of the Bourgeois Ministry. In 1896, on the fall of M. Bourgeois, M. Méline succeeded, after several vain attempts by other statesmen, in forming a Cabinet composed wholly of Moderates. The Ministry's declaration of policy expressed a desire to re-establish the indispensable harmony of the two Houses, promised fiscal reforms, agricultural legislation, and announced that the various labour bills would be at once pushed forward. During 1896 M. Méline received a deputation on tariffs, and stated his views with regard to Agricultural Depression, Free Trade and Protection, Bimetallism, Sugar Bounties, and on Rentes Taxation. In October 1897 the Premier made an important statement on his policy, which he defined as being "neither revolution nor reaction." "The best way," he said, "of combating Socialism was to do all that was practicable for the amelioration of the lot of the masses, who would soon judge between empty flatterers and sincere friends." On the General Elections, which were held on Sunday, May 9, 1898, M. Méline's Government was returned by a majority of from 12 to 15, but this support was anything but certain, as was shown by the narrow election to the temporary Presidency of M. Deschanel (q.v.), the Government's nominee. We cannot enter here into the Dreyfus imbroglio, in which the Cabinet became involved, as so many points were thereby raised, but suffice it to say that during his whole period of office the War Minister, General Billot (q.v.), supported the action of his predecessor, General Mercier, and refused to allow the case to be re-opened. The Government was short-lived, for soon after the inaugural address of M. Deschanel, who had previously been definitely elected Vice-President of the Chamber of Deputies, M. Méline resigned office, notwithstanding the urgent representations which the President made against that decision. After some delay M. Brisson (q.v.) succeeded in the task of forming a combination of a distinctly Radical tinge.

MELLOR, Right Hon. John William, M.P., D.L., Q.C., is the eldest son of the late Right Hon. Sir J. Mellor, and was born on July 26, 1835. He completed his education at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and in 1857, when he took his B.A. degree, was eighth Senior Optime (M.A. 1860). In 1860 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and went on the Midland Circuit. He took silk in 1875, and became a Benchler in 1877. He was Recorder of Grantham from 1872 to 1874, which he subsequently represented in Parliament from 1880 to 1886; the latter year became Judge-Advocate-General. He was sworn of the Privy Council in the same year. In July 1892 he was elected Member of Parliament in the Gladstonian Liberal interest for the Sowerby Division of Yorkshire, in 1893 was appointed Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons, and subsequently, until 1895, presided over many of the contentious discussions which arose out of the Home Rule Bill debates. In 1895 he was re-elected Liberal Member for the Sowerby Division of Yorkshire. He is a J.P. and D.L. for the county of Somerset, and J.P. for Devon. He married, in 1860, Caroline, daughter of the late Charles Paget, M.P., of Ruddington Grange, Notts. Addresses: 68 St. George's Square, S.W.; Culmhead, Pitminster, Somerset.

MELVILLE, George Wallace, American naval officer, was born in New York City, Jan. 10, 1841. He was educated in his native city, and entered the United States Navy as third assistant-engineer in July 1861, with rank of midshipman, and has passed through all the intermediate grades to that of Chief Engineer, with the rank of Lieut.-Commander, which he attained in 1881. He was engineer of the Jeannette, which sailed from San Francisco, July 8, 1879, under command of Lieutenant George W. de Long, on a voyage of polar exploration. After the sinking of the Jeannette, on June 13, 1881, Engineer Melville accompanied De Long over the ice to Bennett Island, and, after the party had divided, he commanded one of the Jeannette's boats on the passage to one of the mouths of the Lena delta, which was reached Sept. 17, 1881. He now searched for Lieutenant de Long and his party, and obtained from the natives some of his records; in the following spring he explored the delta thoroughly for traces of the missing party, and about the end of March the remains of de Long and his eleven companions were found. On his return to the United States he was appointed Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineers with the rank of Commodore, Aug. 8, 1887, and Engineer-in-Chief of the U.S. Navy. He published "In the Lena Delta," 1885; and has had an important part in constructing the modernised U.S. Navy.

MENDELEEF, Dmitri Ivanovich, Russian chemist, was born at Tobolsk, Feb. 7, 1834. He was educated at the Pedagogic Institute at St. Petersburg, and then came to Paris, where he was one of the most brilliant pupils of Wurtz. He then studied the chemical properties of petroleum in the mines of Caucasia and Pennsylvania. In 1866 he became Professor of Chemistry in the University of St. Petersburg. He may be said to have a world-wide reputation, and to be familiar with every section of chemical science; but it is by his law of chemical combination that his name is chiefly known. This law has led to the discovery of more than one chemical element. His "Principles of Chemistry" was published in Russian in 1868-70, and was translated into English in 1892. He is a D.C.L. of the University of Oxford, and a member of the Academy of Sciences, of Paris. Address: Université, St. Petersburg.

MENDÈS, Catulle, a French author, was born at Bordeaux on May 22, 1841. In 1861 he established in Paris La Revue Fantaisiste, in which he published "Le Roman d'une Nuit," a drama in verse, which resulted in the author being condemned to two months' imprisonment and a fine of 500 francs, although he was still under age. At that time he belonged to the little group of artistic poets called "Parnassians," whose aim was the careful choice of words and the introduction of audacious rythmical innovations. His other works include: "Philomèle," a volume of lyrics, 1864; "Hesperus," a poem, 1869; "La Colère d'un Franc-tireur," "Odelette Guerrière," 1871; "Contes Épiques," "Les Soirs Moroses," "Le Soleil de Minuit" (poésies), 1872, republished in 1876 under the title of "Poésies"; several novels, "Les Folies Amoureuses," 1877; "Les Mères Ennemies," 1880; "La Divine Adventure," 1881, in conjunction with M. Lesclide; "Le Rose et le Noir," 1885; "Le Roi vierge," "Zo' har," "La première Maitresse," reckoned his masterpiece in realistic fiction; "Méphistophela," 1890; "Le Chemin du Cœur," 1895, and various pieces for the theatre, such as "Le Capitaine Fracasse," 1870, after Gauthier's romance; "Le Châtiment," 1887; and "Fiammetta," 1889. In October 1898 Madame Bernhardt produced his version of "Medea" at the Renaissance, Paris. M. Mendès has been described as a very good second in almost every department of literature, but first in none. In verse he has written after the manner of Hugo, Le Conte de Lisle, Théodore de Banville, and Verlaine, and only just falls beneath the level of each of these masters. In prose his short stories are only inferior to Maupassant, although a good deal broader; his realistic novels only below Zola, and his society scandals only below Gyp. He turns out an enormous quantity of copy yearly. On Dec. 6, 1898, his "La Reine Fiammetta" was produced with great success at the Odéon. It had previously been seen at Antoine's Théâtre Libre, and had been refused by the Français. In 1866 he married Mlle. Judith Gautier, from whom he has since been legally separated as the result of a somewhat famous trial. Address: 44 Rue Lafayette, Paris.

MENELEK II., Emperor of Abyssinia and King of Shoa, G.C.M.G., was born in 1843. He succeeded to the throne on the death of Johannes II., with whom he had been constantly at war. In 1877, as King of Shoa, Menelek was totally defeated in a great battle, and it was currently reported that he had been killed by Johannes. Upon the death of the latter in 1889, Menelek assumed the chief power in Abyssinia, and was crowned in November as Negus Negusti, or King of Kings in Ethiopia. For some time after his accession many attempts were made by various chiefs to overthrow him, but he defeated all their efforts. In the first year of his reign Menelek concluded a treaty with Humbert, King of Italy, which practically placed Abyssinia under the protection of the Italians, who, at the same time, agreed to lend him 4,000,000 francs. In consequence of disputes in connection with this treaty, known as the Uccialli Treaty, and the continual encroachments of the Italians, especially from the direction of Erythrea, war broke out in 1895. Menelek raised a large army and inflicted a serious reverse upon the advance-guard of the Italian forces at Ambalagi in December. Many minor engagements followed, with the result that the Negus made propositions for peace, which, however, the Italian Government declared were such as they could not accept. They included a demand for the retirement of the Italians from positions recently occupied by them, and a modification in the Treaty of Uccialli. On Feb. 24, 1896, Menelek concentrated his forces near Adowa, where he was at once pursued by the Italian troops under the command of General Baratieri (q.v.). A general advance upon the Abyssinian position was made on the 29th, the Italians attacking in three columns; but the difficulties of the ground enabled Menelek to concentrate his forces on the left column, and the other columns being unable, owing to the hills and to bad generalship, to succour it, a terrible defeat was sustained by the whole force. The Italians lost in killed and wounded over 7000 officers and men. After this reverse, which caused the fall of the Italian Ministry under Crispi, the idea of an Italian Protectorate over the country was abandoned, and in May General Valles was appointed with full powers to treat with the Emperor Menelek for the settlement of all questions at issue between Italy and Abyssinia, with the result that a treaty was signed recognising the absolute independence of the latter country. The defeat inflicted by the Abyssinian monarch upon a European Power greatly increased his prestige, and he at once renewed his negotiations with France, which had lapsed since 1891, in which year he had presented President Carnot with a decoration and two tame lions. He also sent a mission to St. Petersburg to obtain the Czar's sympathy for the Abyssinian Christians. In February 1897 he concluded a commercial treaty with the French, who despatched a Mission under M. Lagarde to Menelek in the following March. The Mission was very cordially received. In the early part of 1898 a Mission under Sir Rennell Rodd was sent to Abyssinia to negotiate a treaty between Menelek and England, with very successful results. The British Mission met with a handsome reception, 20,000 warriors being present and several Europeans, among whom were Colonel Léontieff, the head of a Russian mission, and Prince Henri d'Orléans, who were endeavouring to induce Menelek to thwart British efforts in the Soudan. By a curious coincidence the average height of the officials composing the British Mission was over 6 feet, and their striking appearance made a great impression. The more important points of the treaty, which was ratified by the Queen in July, were the settlement of the frontiers of the British Somali Protectorate; the keeping open to British commerce the caravan route between Zeila and Harar, and the prevention of the transit through Abyssinia of arms and ammunition to the Mahdists, whom Menelek declared to be the enemies of his country. In a letter to the Queen he expressed the following sentiment: "The treaty of peace which is now between your Government and our Government, we hope it will increase in firmness and last for ever." In April Lieutenant Harrington was sent to the Emperor's capital as Diplomatic Agent. During October 1898 it was reported that Ras Mangascia, Governor of Tigre, had shown signs of rebellion against Menelek's supreme authority. A large expedition was sent against the Ras, but upon negotiations being opened the difficulty was amicably arranged. The etiquette of the Abyssinian Court is very minute in its regulations, and among other usages distasteful to Europeans is that of kissing the ground on approaching the royal presence. Menelek, however, is careful not to offend foreign susceptibilities, and he never requires a stranger to go through any ceremony to which he objects. He is gifted with a capacious memory, and is very energetic, rising at 3 A.M., and devoting the first hour of the day to prayer. From four to six he works with his grand secretary, who is practically his only minister. He publicly administers justice and transacts all the affairs of State personally, being very kind to his people and accessible to all. Since his accession to the throne he has done much to consolidate his kingdom, and has very largely promoted civilisation. Menelek claims to be a direct descendant of Solomon by the Queen of Sheba. This descent is recorded on the coins which he had struck at the Paris mint some years ago. The large silver piece bears the head of Menelek, with the inscription "King of Kings of Ethiopia, 1887." The reverse side has a lion crowned and the words, "The Lion of the House of Judah has conquered," this being the motto of the House of David. On the edge of the coins are the words, "Ethiopia stretches out her hands to God alone." His wife is Queen Taitou.

MENPES, Mortimer, artist, was born in South Australia, whence, at the age of nineteen, he came to London with his father. He chose the career of art, and studied at South Kensington under Poynter and Sparkes, winning the Poynter prize for the best drawing done in any English art school. He then studied for three years in picturesque Brittany, and in 1880 exhibited etchings at the Royal Academy, which were much praised for their excellence. In 1885 he became a member of the Society of British Artists, and in 1887 went out to Japan, and returned with that unique collection of brilliant Japanese views for which he is famous. These were exhibited at Dowdeswell's in 1888. Mr. Mortimer Menpes has also twice visited India, and has sojourned in Venice, exhibiting the results of his artistic studies and appreciations in two notable exhibitions, held respectively in 1891 and 1892. In the Academy of 1898 he exhibited, in the Black-and-White Room, "Osaka, Japan," and in that of 1899 a water-colour and three portraits in black and white. He has written on Japan in the Magazine of Art. Address: 25 Cadogan Gardens, S.W.

MENZEL, Adolf Friedrich Erdmann, German historical painter, was born Dec. 8, 1815, at Breslau, but removed in 1830 with his parents to Berlin, where he studied art at the Academy. On his father's death he had to support himself, and first began by selling pen-and-ink drawings. In 1836 he made his first attempt in oil painting, "The Chess-Players," followed by several other pictures; but from 1839 to 1842 he worked at the illustrations to Kugler's "History of Frederick the Great." Since then he has become celebrated as a painter of the most life-like and accurate scenes from the age of Frederick; his first important work of the period was the "Round Table of Frederick the Great," 1850, followed by the "Flute Concert at Sans-souci," 1852; "Frederick's Reception in Breslau," and "Frederick at the Battle of Hochkirch," 1856; "Blücher and Wellington at Waterloo," 1858; and many others. All these paintings are remarkable for strong realism, great power of characterisation, and for the masterly skill with which every detail is represented. Between 1861 and 1865 Menzel was working at the "Coronation of William I."; in 1871 he completed the "King's Departure from Berlin"; and from 1872 to 1875 he worked at "Modern Cyclops," representing a scene from the great ironworks, and one of the most extraordinary and remarkable of all his paintings. His later works are the excellent illustrations to Kleist's "Broken Jug," 1877, and a clever Society picture, "The Ball Supper," besides a large number of pen-and-ink drawings and water-colours. He has been since 1856 Professor at the Berlin Academy, and is a Member of the Academies of Vienna and Munich, and Hon. Member of the English Royal Academy, the Royal Water-Colour Society, and of the Ecole des Beaux Arts of Paris. In 1885 a successful exhibition of his works was held in Paris. His illustrations to the works of Frederick the Great have been republished in 2 vols. 4to. He was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour in 1876, and his eightieth birthday was celebrated at Berlin in 1895 with much public rejoicing.

MERCIÉ, Marius Jean Antonin, a French sculptor, was born at Toulouse, Oct. 30, 1845. He was a pupil of Falguère and Jouffroy, and studied at the Ecole des Beaux Arts. In 1868 he obtained the Prix de Rome, and the same year exhibited a medallion at the Salon. In 1872 he sent from Rome a plaster statue of "David," and "Delilah," a bust; and in 1874 "Gloria Victis," a group in bronze, attracted much attention, and was purchased by the Government. "The Genius of the Arts," intended for the grand entrance of the Louvre, was exhibited in 1877; the plaster model of the bas-relief for the tomb of Michelet in Père la Chaise, in 1879; and a statue of "Arago" in 1880. Besides these he has modelled various portrait busts, including that of Victor Hugo for the Senate in 1890. Among his most recent works are "Le Regret," a statue for the tomb of Cabanel; a plaster statue of William Tell for the town of Lausanne, and a number of medallions. M. Mercié was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1874, and made a Commander in 1889. In 1887 the Institute voted him their biennial prize of 20,000 francs, and the Academy of Fine Arts elected him one of their members in 1891. He is Professor of Drawing and Sculpture at the Beaux-Arts. His Paris address is 15 Avenue de l'Observatoire.

MERCIER, Auguste, French general, and former Minister of War, was born at Arras, Dec. 8, 1833. He entered the Ecole Polytechnique in 1852, and came out second two years after. He entered the Artillery, and by successive promotions attained the rank of General of Division in 1889. He was distinguished during the campaign of Mexico for his bravery at the siege of Puebla, for which he was decorated with the Legion of Honour. During the Franco-Prussian War he took part in the battles round Metz, and was made prisoner after the capitulation of that city. After the conclusion of peace he took part in the battles of the Communards, and subsequently was appointed to the command of the artillery at Angoulême. In 1888 M. de Freycinet called him to the War Office, and in 1889 he took a conspicuous part in the manœuvres around Beauvais. Mercier being appointed to the command of the 18th Corps d'Armée at Bordeaux in 1893, the Prime Minister, M. Casimir-Perier, offered him the Ministry of War in December of the same year, which he accepted, and kept throughout the Dupuy Ministry. His tenure of office was distinguished for indefatigable work and firm decision. This was noted in his attitude with regard to M. Mirman, who was, at one and the same time, a soldier and a member of Parliament. He absolutely refused to treat him differently to other soldiers. But a much more famous case was that of Captain Dreyfus, in which he asserted the absolute guilt of the accused, and in spite of all outside influence retained his obstinate opinion and dragged him before the Council of War, which condemned him to life-long penal servitude and to public degradation from his rank (Dec. 22, 1894). On the fall of the Dupuy Cabinet in January 1895 General Mercier was appointed to the command of the 4th Corps d'Armée at Le Mans, in place of General Zurlinden. In 1895 he was promoted a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour.

MEREDITH, George, novelist and poet, born in Hampshire on Feb. 12, 1828, and educated partly in Germany, was brought up to the law, which he quitted for literature. He has written "Poems," 1851; "The Shaving of Shagpat, an Arabian Entertainment," a burlesque prose poem, 1855; "Farina, a Legend of Cologne," 1857; "The Ordeal of Richard Feverel," a philosophical novel, bearing upon the more serious questions of moral education, 1859; "Evan Harrington," a serial tale of modern life, first printed in Once a Week, and republished in a separate form, 1861; "Modern Love: Poems and Ballads," 1862; "Emilia in England," 1864; "Rhoda Fleming," 1865; "Vittoria," 1866; "The Adventures of Harry Richmond," 1871; "The Egoist," a novel, 3 vols., 1879; "The Tragic Comedians," 2 vols., 1881, a novel founded on the life and tragic fate of Ferdinand Lassalle, the German Socialist; "Poems and Lyrics of the Joy of Earth," 1883; "Diana of the Crossways," 1885; "Ballads and Poems of Tragic Life," 1887; and "A Reading of Earth," 1888. His novel, "One of Our Conquerors," was published in the Fortnightly Review in 1890, and "Lord Ormont and his Aminta," appeared in the summer of 1894. This was followed in 1895 by "The Amazing Marriage," which is supposed to introduce as hero the late Robert Louis Stevenson; "The Case of General Opie and Lady Cowper," "The Tale of Chloe," and "The House on the Beach"; and in 1897 by "Comedy, and the Uses of the Comic Spirit," recently translated into French by M. Henry Davray. In 1892 appeared the "Empty Purse," a volume of poems, and in the autumn of that year Mr. Meredith was elected President of the Incorporated Society of Authors in succession to Lord Tennyson. A style of much obscurity and an excess of epigram have long prevented Mr. Meredith's works from becoming popular with the average novel-reading public, but among the cultured and critical few he has always been regarded as the first of our living novelists. Strong expression was given to this sentiment of admiration on Feb. 12, 1898, when he completed his seventieth year, and was presented with a letter of congratulation signed by thirty of the first of English men and women of letters. The letter ran as follows: "Some comrades in letters who have long valued your work send you a cordial greeting upon your seventieth birthday. You have attained the first rank in literature after many years of inadequate recognition. From first to last you have been true to yourself, and have always aimed at the highest mark. We are rejoiced to know that merits once perceived by only a few are now appreciated by a wide and steadily growing circle. We wish you many years of life, during which you may continue to do good work, cheered by the consciousness of good work already achieved, and encouraged by the certainty of a hearty welcome from many sympathetic readers." Address: Boxhill, Surrey.

MERIVALE, Herman Charles, son of the late Herman Merivale, Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, and afterwards for India, was born in London, Jan. 27, 1839, and educated at Harrow and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1861. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1864, and served on the Western Circuit and Exeter Sessions. He afterwards practised in the Privy Council on Indian Appeals. Under the late Lord Beaconsfield's Reform Act he served on the Boundary Commission for North Wales. From 1870 to 1880 he was editor of the Annual Register, and in 1874, owing to ill-health, was obliged to give up the legal profession. Since then he has occupied himself with literature, and for a time with politics. His chief works are the plays "All for Her," 1874; "Forget me Not," 1879; "The Cynic," 1882; "Fédora" (from Sardou), 1883; and "Our Joan," 1885 (written in conjunction with his wife, Mrs. Merivale, as were also the comedies of "The Butler," "The Don," and "The Whip-Hand"); a novel, "Faucit of Balliol," 1882; "Binko's Blues," a fairy tale, 1884; "White Pilgrim, and other Poems," 1883; "Florien, and other Poems," 1884; besides some other dramas and various essays, travels, verse, &c., in All the Year Round (under Charles Dickens), and in weekly papers and monthly magazines. "Ravenswood," a blank-verse tragedy, played by Mr. Irving, on the subject of Scott's novel of "The Bride of Lammermoor," was produced in 1891. Address: Society of Authors.

MERRIMAN, Henry Seton. See SCOTT, HUGH S.

MERRIMAN, The Hon. John Xavier, the son of the Bishop of Grahamstown, was born in 1841, at Street, Somersetshire, and was educated at Rondebosch Diocesan College and Radley. He went out to the Cape in 1849, and entered upon a political career in 1869. He was a member of the Molteno Ministry from 1875 to 1878, and in 1881, and Commissioner of Crown Lands, Cape of Good Hope, from 1875 to 1878, and from 1881 to 1884. In 1890 he was the Treasurer-General of the Colony, and retained that office till 1893. He was a member of the Cape Jameson Raid Committee. He is married to Agnes Vincent, sister of L. Vincent, of the Cape Legislature. Address: Shellenbosch District, The Cape.

MERRITT, Wesley, American soldier, was born in New York in 1836, and graduated from the Military Academy at West Point in 1860, when he entered the army as brevet Second Lieutenant of Dragoons. In 1862 he became Captain of Cavalry; was on the staff of General Stoneman when he made the raid on Richmond, Va., in April 1863, and in June of the same year he was promoted to be Brigadier-General of Volunteers. From 1863 to 1864 he commanded a division of cavalry in Central Virginia, and served under General Sheridan, becoming Major-General of Volunteers and also receiving promotions on the roster of the Regular Army. At the battle of Five Forks and other engagements, and at the surrender at Appomattox, he greatly distinguished himself. He became Lieutenant-Colonel in the Regular Army on July 28, 1866, and has since served in various parts of the country, chiefly against the Indians. He was made Colonel, July 1, 1876; Brigadier-General, April 16, 1887; and Major-General, April 25, 1895. In May 1898 he was sent to San Francisco to organise a force with which to operate in concert with Rear-Admiral Dewey against the Spanish in the Philippine Islands, and in August, shortly after his arrival there, received the surrender of Manila. He was appointed Governor-General of the Islands.

MERRY, The Rev. William Walter, D.D., Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, son of the late Walter Merry, Esq., and grandson of William Merry, Esq., for many years Deputy-Secretary for War, and of his wife Elizabeth Mary Byrch, was born in 1835, and educated at Cheltenham College, whence he proceeded to Oxford, as a Scholar of Balliol, in 1853. Dr. Merry was placed in the first class in Classical Moderations in 1854, and in the second class in Lit. Humaniores in 1856. He gained the Chancellor's Prize for the Latin Essay in 1858; and in the next year he was elected Fellow and Tutor of Lincoln College, an appointment which he held till his election in 1884 to the place of Rector of that society, in succession to the late Mark Pattison. In 1861 he was presented to the Vicarage of All Saints, in the City of Oxford, in the patronage of his college. In 1880 Dr. Merry was elected to the office of Public Orator in the University of Oxford, and was appointed one of the Select Preachers, 1878-79, 1889-90; and in 1883-84 he was nominated by the Bishop of London as one of the preachers in the Chapel Royal, Whitehall. Dr. Merry has taken a prominent part in teaching and examining in the University, having frequently filled the post of Classical Moderator. The editions of classical authors which he has undertaken for the Clarendon Press are well known and widely circulated; the principal ones are "Homer, Odyssey," i.-xii., 2nd edit., 1886; the same for Schools, 50th thousand; and a series of the plays of Aristophanes. In 1891 he published "Selected Fragments of Early Roman Poetry." In 1862 he married Alice Elizabeth, only daughter of the late Joseph Collings, Jurat at the Royal Court of Guernsey. Address: Lincoln College, Oxford.

MÉTÉINER, Oscar, French journalist, was born at Sancoins, Jan. 17, 1859. He was educated by the Jesuits, and at eighteen entered the Artillery. After his term of service had expired he became Secretary to one of the Commissaires de Police in Paris, where for six years he collected valuable materials for his subsequent tales and articles. He retired from this in 1889, and took up journalism, becoming a contributor to the Gil Blas, the Journal, and other popular Parisian prints. He has published several of his short stories in volume form, and has written a biography of the singer Aristide Bruant (q.v.). His Paris address is 55 Avenue de Neuilly.

METHUEN, Lord, Lieut. General Paul Sanford Methuen, K.C.V.O., C.B., C.M.G., J.P., 3rd Baron, son of the 2nd Baron and of Anna, daughter of the Rev. John Sanford, was born at Corsham Court on Sept. 1, 1845. He was educated at Eton, and in 1862 was appointed Cornet in the Wilts Yeomanry Cavalry. He entered the army as a Lieutenant in the Scots Fusilier Guards in 1864, becoming Captain in 1867 and Adjutant to his regiment, and in 1881 he was promoted Colonel. In 1873 he was sent on special service to the Gold Coast, and the following year was appointed Brigade-Major of the Home District. Lord Methuen served in the second phase of the Ashanti War of 1874, and was present at the battle of Amoafu, being awarded a medal with clasp. In 1877 he was appointed Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, and during the same year was chosen to be Military Attaché at Berlin. He held that office until 1881, when he returned to England, and became Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Home District. In the Egyptian War his Lordship served on the staff, and was also Commandant of the Troops at Headquarters. He was present at the engagements of Tel-el-Mahuta and Kassassin, and in the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He was mentioned in despatches and was awarded a C.B. and the Osmanieh of the third class. In 1884 he served with the Bechuanaland Field Force under Sir Charles Warren, in command of Methuen's Horse, obtaining a C.M.G. and mention in despatches. For several years after he was Adjutant-General in South Africa. He was promoted Major-General, 1890, and held the command of the Home District until 1897. In 1897 he accompanied the Tirah Expedition on the Indian Frontier as Press Censor, and was present at the actions against the Afridis and Orakzais. General Lord Methuen succeeded to the title and estates in 1891. He is the Hon. Colonel of the Third Battalion of the Duke of Edinburgh's Wiltshire Regiment, and J.P. for Wilts. Lord Methuen is co-heir to the Earldom of Scarsdale. He married, in 1884, Mary, daughter of William A. Sanford, Esq., of Nynehead Court, Somerset, and has issue, his heir being the Hon. Paul Sanford, born September 1886. Addresses: 32 Cadogan Square, S.W.; and Corsham Court, Chippenham.

METSCHNIKOFF, Elias, F.R.S., Russian zoologist and embryologist, was born in the province of Kharkoff, May 15, 1845. He was educated at Kharkoff, Giessen, and Munich, and was appointed Professor of Zoology at Odessa in 1870. He resigned this post in 1882, in order to devote himself to private researches into the anatomy of the invertebrates. His chief studies have been published either in the Bulletins of the Academy of St. Petersburg, or in German scientific journals. His chief books are: "Embryologische Studien an Insecten," 1866; "Über die Metamorphosen einiger Seethiere," 1869; "Zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der Kalkschwämme," 1874; "Embryologie der Doppeltfüssigen Myriapoden," 1875. Address: Institut Pasteur, Paris.

MEURICE, François Paul, French novelist and dramatist, and brother of the famous jeweller, was born at Paris in February 1820. He had a brilliant career at the Collège Charlemagne, and one of its most momentous episodes was a resolve to play Victor Hugo's then new drama, "Hernani," at the annual school festival. The late Auguste Vacquerie and himself went as delegates to the poet to beg for permission to play his drama. The interview made such an impression on Meurice that ever afterwards he remained the fidus Achates of the great man, and more or less sacrificed his future to serve him. In 1842 his first play, "Falstaff," in collaboration with Gautier and Vacquerie, was represented at the Théâtre Français, and in 1843, a one-act piece, equally from Shakespeare, entitled "Le Capitaine Paroles," and an imitation of the "Antigone" of Sophocles. His best-known collaboration, however, is that with Dumas of a translation of "Hamlet," which is still the best acting version of that play in French. In 1848 he became editor of the Évenement, Hugo's democratic journal, and in 1851 he was imprisoned for nine months for a famous article by Charles Victor Hugo on the death penalty, which appeared in that journal. In 1869 he founded, with others, the Rappel, equally a journal of the Hugo family, and in it he contributed chiefly the literary and dramatic criticisms. To him, also, Victor Hugo intrusted the publication of the definitive edition of his works, which appeared from 1880 to 1885, in 46 volumes. In addition to the plays named above, he has written, "Fanfan la Tulip," "Les Beaux Messieurs de Bois-Doré," "Cadio La Brésilienne," "Quatre Vingt Treize," 1881; "Le Songe d'une Nuit d'Été," after Shakespeare, which was represented at the Odéon in 1886. In October 1898 M. Meurice achieved a great success by producing at the Théâtre Français a drama called "Struensee," which was the first unaided composition of his played at that theatre, although he was nearly eighty at the time. His Paris address is 24 Rue Fortuny.

MEXICO, President of the Republic of. See DIAZ, GENERAL PORFIRIO.

MEXICO, Ex-Empress of. See CHARLOTTE.

MEYER, Dr. Hans, African traveller, was born March 22, 1858, at Hildburghausen, and studied at Leipzig, Berlin, and Strasburg, where he prepared a great work on "The Strasburg Guild of Goldsmiths, from its Origin until 1681." In 1884 he entered his father's publishing business in Leipzig as partner. Previously he had travelled for two years in India, the Sunda Archipelago, Eastern Asia, and America, and had especially remained some time on the Philippine Islands, to undertake some ethnological researches on the Igorrotes, the results of which he made known in the illustrated work "Eine Weltreise," 1884. In December 1886 he went to South Africa, travelled through Cape Colony, Transvaal, and Natal; and in the summer of 1887, through the territory of the German East African Company. From Mombassa Dr. Meyer travelled through the district of Teita, as far as the Kilima Ndscharo, he being the first to ascend the same, almost to the summit of the ice-covered Kibo, 5700 metres; then he travelled through the Savannes, to the south of the Kilima Ndscharo, as far as the Pagani River, and along this stream to the coast. Later on he travelled through the Valley of the Kingani and the District of Usaranno. In 1888 Meyer, accompanied by the African traveller, O. Baumann, undertook the new well-organised expedition to the Kilima Ndscharo, which was stopped by the insurrection that had taken place in the meantime in the district of the German East Africa Company, and could penetrate only a short distance into the country. Meyer himself, as well as Baumann, was taken prisoner by the Arab leader Bushiri, robbed of all his property, and could be released only by the payment of a large ransom; this having been done, he returned to Europe, and published the splendid work, "Zum Schneedom des Kilima Ndscharo," 1888, with forty photographs. This failure did not discourage Meyer, and a new expedition was organised. It was accompanied by the Austrian mountaineer, Purtscheller; and in September 1889 the march was commenced at Mombassa through English East African territory. This time the goal was reached, the Kibo was scaled, the highest peak of which was named the Emperor William's Peak, and was estimated to be about 6000 metres' elevation. At the same time a large crater was discovered on the Kibo, and on its side the first glacier ever discovered in Africa. The ascent of the smaller Marvensi Peak proved to be impracticable.

MEYNELL, Alice, essayist, is a younger daughter of Mr. T. J. Thompson, one of Mr. Charles Dickens's most intimate friends. Devoted to literature from her girlhood, Miss Alice Thompson's first volume, "Preludes," was illustrated by her sister, Lady Butler, the painter of "The Roll Call." These early poems won the warm praise of Mr. Ruskin and Dante Rossetti; and, with a few additions of later date, they were republished in 1892, and have run through several editions. At the same date was published a companion volume of prose, "The Rhythm of Life," and other essays, which Mr. Coventry Patmore welcomed in the Fortnightly Review as "classical work," placing the author "in the very front rank of living writers in prose." This was followed in 1896 by "The Colour of Life and other Essays," upon which Mr. George Meredith wrote a paper in the Fortnightly Review, and by "The Children," 1896; "The Flower of the Mind," an anthology, 1897; and "The Spirit of Place," 1898. Miss Alice Thompson, who married in 1877 Mr. Wilfrid Meynell, has been a constant contributor to the National Observer (under Mr. Henley's editorship), the Pall Mall Gazette, the Daily Chronicle the Saturday Review, the Tablet, and the art magazines. Address: 47 Palace Court, W.

MEYNELL, Wilfrid, born in 1852, belongs to a family long settled in Yorkshire, and on his mother's side is the great-great-grandson of William Tuke, of York, to whom, as to Pinel in France, England is indebted for the adoption of humane methods in the treatment of the insane. In 1881 Mr. Meynell became, at the request of Cardinal Manning, the editor and proprietor of the Weekly Register, and a little later he founded the Roman Catholic magazine, Merry England. Mr. Meynell (sometimes using the nom de plume "John Oldcastle") is the author of "Journals and Journalism: a Guide for Literary Beginners," and of biographies of Cardinal Manning, Cardinal Newman, and Pope Leo XIII., all of which have passed through several editions; also of many contributions to the Contemporary Review, the Art Journal, the Magazine of Art, the Athenæum, the Saturday Review, the Pall Mall Budget, the Illustrated London News, and the Daily Chronicle. Address: Palace Court House, W.

MEYRICK, Canon Frederick, M.A., born at Ramsbury Vicarage, Wilts, on Jan. 28, 1827, is the youngest son of the Rev. Edward Graves Meyrick, D.D. He was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was successively Scholar, Fellow, and Tutor; graduated B.A. in honours in 1847, and afterwards held the University offices of Select Preacher and Public Examiner. He was appointed one of Her Majesty's Whitehall Preachers in 1856, Inspector of Schools in 1859, and became Rector of Blickling and Erpingham, in Norfolk, in 1868; in the same year he was appointed Examining Chaplain to the late Bishop Christopher Wordsworth, and Non-Residential Canon of Lincoln in 1869. He was the chief agent in establishing the Anglo-Continental Society, for making known in foreign countries the principles of the English Church, and with that object in view has edited many dogmatic and controversial treatises in Latin, Italian, Spanish, &c. He has written "Practical Working of the Church in Spain," published in 1851; "The Moral Theology of the Church of Rome," in 1857; "The Outcast and Poor of London," in 1858; "The Wisdom of Piety," in 1859; "But isn't Kingsley right after all?"; "On Dr. Newman's Rejection of Liguori's Doctrine of Equivocation," in 1864; "Baptism, Conversion, Regeneration," in 1882; "The Doctrine of the Church of England on the Holy Communion re-stated," 1885; "Justin Martyr," 1896. He has contributed to Dr. Smith's Dictionaries of the Bible and of Antiquities; to the Speaker's Commentary on the Bible edited by Canon Cook (Joel, Obadiah, Ephesians), to the Pulpit Commentary (Leviticus), to Hodder and Stoughton's Theological Library ("Is Dogma a Necessity?" 1883), to the National Churches series ("History of the Church in Spain," 1892), and has been editor for twenty-one years of the Foreign Church Chronicle and Review. During the year 1886-87 he was Principal of Codrington College, Barbados. He married Marion, daughter of G. Danvers, in 1859. Address: Blickling Rectory, Aylsham, Norfolk.

MÉZIÈRES, Alfred Jean François, French writer and politician, was born at Rehon, in the department of the Moselle, Nov. 19, 1826, and is the son of Professor Louis Mézières, who died in 1872. He was educated at the College of Metz, and at Sainte Barbe, at Paris, and entered the École Normale in 1845. In 1850 he went to Athens, and on his return became a Professor in the Lycée of Toulouse in 1853, in which year he took his degree of Docteur ès lettres. In 1854 he became Professor of Foreign Literature at Nancy, from which he was promoted to a similar post at the Sorbonne in 1861. He represented the University of France at the Jubilee of Shakespeare in 1864, and of that of Dante in the next year. During the Revolution of 1845 he had taken part in the repression of the rebels, and had been aide-de-camp to General Bréa; and in the Franco-Prussian War he served in a marching regiment. In 1874 he was elected a member of the French Academy, in succession to Saint Marc Girardin. In 1881 he was elected a member of the Chamber for the department of the Meurthe-et-Moselle. As a politician, his chief work was to advise the Government concerning International Conventions on Literary and Artistic property. His chief works are: "Étude sur les Œuvres Politiques de Paul Paruta," 1853; "Shakespeare, ses Œuvres et ses Critiques," 1861, which was crowned by the French Academy; "Prédécesseurs et Contemporains de Shakespeare," 1864; "Dante et l'Italie Nouvelle," 1865; "Pétrarque," 1867; "Goethe, les Œuvres expliquées par la Vie," 1872-73; and "Vie de Mirabeau," 1891. He is also a collaborator of the Temps and the Revue des Deux Mondes. He was promoted an Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1877. His Paris address is 4 Rue Cambon.

MIALI, Louis C., F.R.S., Professor of Biology in the Yorkshire College, was born at Bradford in 1842, and is the son of the late Rev. J. G. Miall, who died in 1896, and was one of the oldest Nonconformist ministers in England. He was appointed in 1871 Curator and Secretary to the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society, and in 1876 became Professor of Biology in the Yorkshire College. He has written many memoirs and papers on Anatomy and Palæontology; among others: "Reports on Labyrinthodonts" (British Assoc.), 1873-74, "Anatomy of the Elephant," with F. Greenwood, 1878; "Anatomy, &c., of the Cockroach," with Prof. Denny, 1886. He has also published many papers on Insect Anatomy, and is author of "Object Lessons from Nature," "Natural History of Aquatic Insects," "Round the Year," "Thirty Years of Teaching," and various educational articles dealing especially with elementary science. He was admitted to the Royal Society in 1892, and is Examiner in Biology and Zoology to the Science and Art Department. In 1897 he was President of the Zoological Section of the British Association at Toronto. He is married to Emily, daughter of John Pearce. Address: Crag Foot, Ben Rhydding, Leeds.

MICHAEL, Grand-Duke Nicolaievitch, brother of the late Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, and fourth son of the late Czar Nicholas I., was born Oct. 13 (25), 1832. He is a General and Grand-Master of Artillery, General Aide-de-Camp to the Czar, Governor-General of the Caucasus, and head of several regiments of artillery, cavalry, and infantry. In the war between Russia and Turkey the Grand-Duke Michael had the chief command of the army of the Caucasus. Alexander III. afterwards appointed him President of the Council of State. He married, in August 1857, Olga-Féodorovna (formerly Cecilia Augusta), daughter of the late Leopold, Grand-Duke of Baden. She died in April 1891. The eldest of his children is the Grand-Duke Nicholas, who was born in 1859.

MICHEL, Louise, a French revolutionary leader, was born at Vroncourt in 1830, and first distinguished herself by her poetical and musical talents, which were recognised and encouraged by Victor Hugo. In 1860 she opened a school in the Quartier Montmartre, Paris; and in 1870 took an active part with the revolutionary Commune, and was made prisoner; and though she eloquently defended herself before the judges, she was sentenced to transportation for life. On the amnesty to political prisoners in 1880 she returned to Paris; and, continuing to take part in Communist assemblies, she was re-imprisoned in 1883, and again in 1886. She has resided in London for some years, speaking regularly in Hyde Park and at the Anarchist Club off Tottenham Court Road, where she can always be heard. She is regarded now as the leader of the small party of English Anarchists, and invariably uses opportunities of preaching her gospel on the occasion of any public demonstration in the Parks or Trafalgar Square. A forcible, eloquent, and striking speaker, she has also published her "Memoirs," and written a novel with the essentially characteristic title of "The Microbes of Society."

MICKLETHWAITE, T., born at Wakefield in 1843, of an old Yorkshire family long settled at Hopton, near Mirfield, was educated privately and at King's College, London. He was articled to the late Sir Gilbert Scott in 1862, and commenced practice in 1869 with Mr. James Clarke, a fellow-pupil, and since then he has been largely employed, chiefly upon church work and on private houses. In 1898 he was appointed Architect to Westminster Abbey. He was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1870, served on the Council first in 1880, and is now Vice-President. He is author of "Modern Parish Churches, their Plan, Design, and Furniture," 1874; and of many papers on archaeological and antiquarian subjects printed in Archæologia, the Archæological Journal, and elsewhere. Address: 15 Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W.

MIDDLETON, Viscount, William Brodrick, D.L., J.P., eldest son of the Rev. William John Brodrick, Dean of Exeter, and afterwards 7th Viscount Middleton, and his second wife Harriet, daughter of the fourth Viscount Middleton, was born at Castle Rising, Norfolk, Jan. 6, 1830, and educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1851, and M.A. 1857. He was called to the Bar in 1855, and was returned as member for Mid-Surrey in 1868. He was High Steward of Kingston-on-Thames, 1874-93, and is J.P. and D.L. for Surrey, and J.P. for Cork. In 1876 he served on the Royal Commission to inquire into Noxious Gases, and in 1878 on the Commission of the Sale and Exchange of Livings. Lord Middleton has for many years been known as a prominent member of the Conservative party in the House of Lords and was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Surrey in 1896. He married, in 1853, Augusta, third daughter of the 1st Baron Cottesloe in 1853. Addresses: Peper Harow, Godalming; 18 Eaton Square, S.W.; The Grange, Middleton, Ireland.

MIERS, Henry Alexander, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.C.S., Waynflete Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, was born May 25, 1858, at Rio de Janeiro, being the son of Francis Charles Miers, C.E., and Susan Mary, née Fry. He was educated at Eton College, where he was a King's Scholar from 1872 to 1877, and Geographical Society's Gold Medalist in 1875; and at Trinity College, Oxford, of which foundation he was a Classical Scholar from 1877 to 1881. After serving as a first-class assistant in the Mineral Department of the British Museum from 1882 to 1895; and as Instructor in Crystallography in the Central Technical College, S. Kensington, 1886-95; he was elected Professor of Mineralogy in the University of Oxford, and Fellow of Magdalen College in December 1895. He became a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1896; he is also a member of the Mineralogical Society, of the Society of Arts, of the Mineralogical Society of France, and of the Geological Society of Sweden. He is editor of the Mineralogical Magazine; Recorder of the Geological Section of the British Association; and a member of Council of the Geological Society. He has published numerous memoirs and articles on mineralogical subjects, and, in conjunction with Dr. R. Crosskey, a small book on "The Soil in Relation to Health." Address: Magdalen College, Oxford.

MILAN (OBRENOVITCH) I., ex-King of Servia, grandson of Ephraim Obrenovitch, brother of Milos, and consequently second cousin of Prince Michael, who is noticed in previous editions of this work, was born Aug. 10, 1854, at Jassy, of a Moldavian mother, who had married the only son of Prince Ephraim. He was adopted by Prince Michael, who had no children by his marriage with Julia Hunyadi, and was sent by him, in 1864, to Paris to be educated at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand. The youth's studies were interrupted by the events of 1868, and the assassination of Michael Obrenovitch. Hastening to Servia, he was proclaimed Prince in July of that year, the government of the country being entrusted, during his minority, to a Council of Regency, consisting of Messrs. Blaznavatz, Ristic, and Garrilovics, three able and patriotic men, who continued the liberal and reforming policy begun by Michael III. Their regency terminated with the coronation of Prince Milan IV.; but M. Ristic continued to possess the confidence of the Prince, who was only eighteen years of age when he was crowned in Belgrade cathedral, Aug. 22, 1872. On Jan. 12, 1876, Prince Milan issued a proclamation stating that "the insurrection in the Turkish provinces has found its way to the frontiers of Servia, enclosing the whole Principality by an iron band," which had compelled him "to place his people under arms." Shortly afterwards (June 22) he sent what may be called a threatening letter to the Grand Vizier, and then he formally proclaimed (June 30) that he intended to join his arms to those of Bosnia and Herzegovina in order to secure the liberation of the Slavonic Christians from the yoke of the Porte. On July 2, a joint declaration of war was sent by the Prince of Servia and the Hospodar of Montenegro to the Turkish Government, their troops crossing the frontier at the same time. The Prince departed from Belgrade (July 24) to assume the command of the Servian troops in the field; but he soon returned to his capital (August 12), and appointed the Russian general, Tchernayeff, to the command of the Servian forces. On September 1, an important battle under the walls of Alexinatz resulted in the complete defeat of the Servian army. The Great Powers then interposed, but the negotiations for the suspension of hostilities were delayed by an ill-advised step which Prince Milan, at the instigation of General Tchernayeff, was induced to take. On September 16 he was proclaimed King of Servia at Deligrad, although upon the general expression of disapproval which followed, his Highness appeared disposed to disclaim any active share in the performance. War broke out again, and the Servian army, though largely reinforced by Russian volunteers—men as well as officers—was ignominiously beaten. On Oct. 31, the Turks captured the town of Alexinatz, and on the following day Deligrad was captured, thus leaving the road to Belgrade completely open. A peace was then concluded between Turkey and Servia on favourable terms to the latter. When, however, Russia made war upon Turkey, Prince Milan saw an opportunity of gaining complete independence, and a proclamation of the Servian Government, dated Dec. 14, 1877, made known that the Servian army was immediately to cross the Turkish frontier, which they did on the following day, under the command of Generals Lesjanin and Benitzki. After the close of the war the independence of Servia was recognised, and its boundaries defined by the Treaty of Berlin (July 13, 1878). Prince Milan married, Oct. 17, 1875, Natalie, daughter of the late Russian Colonel Keschko, by his wife Pulcheria, Princess of Stourdza. Servia was proclaimed a kingdom under King Milan I., on March 6, 1882. On October 23, in that year, as the King and Queen were entering the cathedral of Belgrade, Madame Markovitch, widow of Lieut.-colonel Markovitch, who had been shot for a dynastic conspiracy five years previously, fired at his Majesty, missing him and wounding in the thigh a woman who was looking on. The attempted assassination took place just after the King's return from Rustchuk, whither he had gone to visit Prince Alexander of Bulgaria. Unfortunately this friendly intercourse did not, in 1885, prevent King Milan declaring war upon Prince Alexander, on the ground of the unlawful union of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia. His army had some success at first, but within a fortnight was driven back, defeated and crushed, within the Servian frontier. Prince Alexander behaved like a hero; but it is not known that King Milan ever exposed himself under fire. King Milan has a son, the Crown Prince Alexander, born Oct. 14, 1876, in whose favour he abdicated on March 6, 1889, in consequence of the troubles arising out of his quarrel with his Queen Natalie. In January 1893 the news that he had become reconciled to Queen Natalie caused much rejoicing in Servia. The young King of Servia recalled ex-King Milan to Belgrade in January 1894, to aid him govern his subjects, who, during the whole of that year, were torn by political dissensions. Milan, despite his promises to the contrary, arrived at Belgrade on January 21. In March the decree of divorce between the ex-King and Queen was annulled, and in April Alexander restored his father and mother, by royal ukase, to their constitutional rights as members of the royal house. The Court of Cassation, on May 17, declared this ukase null and void, but on May 21 the Court itself was done away with, and the Constitution of 1888 suspended in favour of that of 1869.

MILES, Major-General Nelson Appleton, American soldier, was born at Westminster, Mass., Aug. 8, 1839. He received an academic education, and was engaged in business when the Civil War broke out. Entering the army as a lieutenant of volunteers, he rose to the full rank of Major-General of Volunteers during its progress, and at its close was made a Colonel in the regular army, 1866. In 1867 he was breveted Brigadier-General and Major-General for gallantry shown on battle-fields during the war. Since the close of the war he has been stationed chiefly in the West, where he has been engaged in a number of conflicts with the Indians. He received the full rank of Brigadier-General in 1880, and on the death of General Crook in 1890, was made a Major-General in the regular army, now the highest grade in the American service. He is at present (1898) Commander-in-chief of the Army of the United States, and accompanied the forces which invaded the island of Porto Rico in the war with Spain in the summer of 1898.

MILLER, "Joaquin," a Scottish-American poet, whose real name is Cincinnati Heine Miller, was born in Indiana, Nov. 10, 1842. When he was ten years old his father emigrated to Oregon, whence the boy went three years later to try his fortune in California. After a wandering life of seven years, he returned home and entered a lawyer's office at Eugene, Oregon, having been twice severely wounded in the Indian wars. The next year he was an express messenger in the gold-mining districts of Idaho, which he left to take charge of the Democratic Register, a weekly newspaper at Eugene. In 1863 he opened a law office in Cañon City, Oregon. Hostile Indians invested the new city, and he led an expedition against them into their own country; but after a long and bloody campaign, he was finally beaten back, leaving his dead on the field. From 1866 to 1870 he served as county judge of Grant County, and during this time began to write his poems. He published first a collection in paper covers called "Specimens," and next a volume with the title "Joaquin et al." In 1870 he went to London, where he published in the following year his "Songs of the Sierras," and "Pacific Poems." In 1873 appeared "Songs of the Sun Lands," and a prose volume entitled "Life among the Modocs: Unwritten History." His later works are "The Ship in the Desert," 1875; "First Families in the Sierras," 1875 (republished in 1881 under the title of "The Danites in the Sierras"); "The One Fair Woman," 1876; "Baroness of N.Y.," 1877; "Songs of Far-Away Lands," 1878; "Songs of Italy," 1878; "Shadows of Shasta," 1881; "Memorie and Rime," 1884; and "Forty-Nine." He is the author of several plays, mostly dramatisations of his own works; among which "The Danites," "The Silent Man," "Mexico," "49," and "Tally Ho!" are more or less popular. He went to Klondyke in 1897, and has established a Utopian social community on his estate.

MILLEVOYE, Lucien, French journalist and politician, was born at Grenoble in 1850. His grandfather was the author of the "Chute des Feuilles," and his father was a legal luminary of Lyons. He was educated for the Law, and served in the magistrature from 1877 to 1880. He then took to journalism, making foreign politics his speciality; but it was not till the rise of Boulangism that he became at all well known. He became one of General Boulanger's most devoted adherents, speaking and writing with equal vigour on his side. In the 1889 election at Amiens he defeated the ex-Premier, M. Goblet, and remained a Boulangist after the death of his chief. He is well known in the Chamber as one of the most vigorous movers of "interpellations" against whatever Government happens to be in power. During the Panama scandals he was specially violent against the directors. He is particularly hostile to Great Britain in all his political articles, which are of an extreme Chauvinistic tone, and were noticeable during the Fashoda imbroglio of 1898. His Paris address is 10 Avenue Bugeaud.

MILLS, Professor Edmund James, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.I.C., F.C.S., son of Charles Frederick and Mary Anne Mills, and a lineal descendant of the Osmonds of Lowmandale (Uplowman, Devonshire), was born in London, on Dec. 8, 1840. When he was a year old his parents removed to Cheltenham, and it was at the ancient Grammar School of that town that he received his early education, which was partly classical and partly scientific in character. It was doubtless at this school that he imbibed his strong predilection for chemistry. In 1858 he was elected to a provincial scholarship at the Royal School of Mines, London, where he studied his favourite science under the late Prof. A. W. von Hofmann. In due course (1861) he took the Technical Diploma of the School. In the same year he became assistant to the late Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., for whom he conducted various investigations in connection with organic chemistry. He was appointed in the following year to the newly-established chemical tutorship at Glasgow University, and remained there about three years, teaching and investigating. On his return to London he held an assistantship in the Laboratory of University College, 1866. He next accepted, 1867, the superintendence of the private laboratory of the late Sir Charles Taylor, Bart., where he remained seven years, busy with preparations and original investigations. In 1875 he was appointed to the Chair of Technical Chemistry founded in connection with the then Anderson's University, Glasgow, by the late Mr. James Young, F.R.S., of Kelly; this position he still retains. He took the degree of B.Sc. (first division) Lond. in 1863, and D.Sc. in 1865. At one time he held the post of Assistant Chemical Examiner in the London University. He was elected F.C.S. in 1862; F.R.S. in 1874; was one of the founders of the Institute of Chemistry and of the Physical Society of London; and is a Member of the Athenæum Club. Dr. Mills is the author of a long series of original memoirs, the first of which was published in 1860. Their general drift has been towards the dynamical, rather than the material, aspect of chemistry; and in putting to one side the atomic theory, he has deliberately adopted a position among the minority of living scientists. Of his leading memoirs may be mentioned a group upon Nitro-compounds, and another relating to Statical and Dynamical Ideas in Chemistry; an investigation of Electrostriction and Chemical Repulsion, of the fundamental phenomena of which he has been the discoverer; a theory of boiling-point and melting-point which has led to very simple and accurate mathematical expressions connecting these phenomena with chemical composition; and a theory, equally simple in character, of the formation and numerics of the elementary bodies. As a chemical technologist he has also published a variety of researches clearing up doubtful issues, adducing new points of view, and, in general, demonstrating that chemical technology is a science of measurement. "Destructive Distillation," a little book first published in 1877, is now, in its fourth edition; "Fuel and its Applications" (of which Mr. F. J. Rowan is joint-author), a very exhaustive and copious work, appeared in 1889. In 1867 Dr. Mills married Amelia, daughter of the late Mr. William Burnett, of London, by whom he had sole issue in 1869, Edith Mary, who died in 1884. A volume of poems in his child's memory appeared in 1895. Permanent address: 60 John Street, Glasgow; and Athenæum.

MILNE, John, F.R.S., F.G.S., Hon. Fellow of King's College, London, Order of the Rising Sun, Japan, &c., was born in Liverpool on Dec. 30, 1850, his father being John Milne, of Milnrow, and his mother Emma Twycross, daughter of James Twycross, of Wokingham. He was educated in Rochdale; at the Collegiate College, Liverpool; King's College, London; and at the School of Mines. He is a Fellow of the Geological, Geographical, Physical, and other learned societies in England, and an Honorary or Corresponding Member of several Societies in Europe, and in 1877 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. For services rendered to the Japanese Government in 1895 he received the Third Class Order of the Rising Sun. After working with mining engineers in Cornwall and Lancashire, Mr. Milne spent a short time at the Mining School in Freiberg, from which he visited mining districts in Central Europe. On behalf of Cyrus Field, Sir James Anderson, and others, two summers were occupied in collecting information respecting the mineral resources in Newfoundland. Labrador was visited, and at Funk Island Mr. Milne was successful in finding and bringing to this country one of the largest collections of skeletons of the Great Auk which have hitherto been made. In 1874 he joined Dr. Beke's expedition to North-West Arabia, the objects of which were the rectification of certain points in Biblical geography, and to determine the site of Mount Sinai. In 1875 he was engaged as mining engineer and geologist by the Japanese Government. After travelling slowly across Russian Siberia, Mongolia, and some 1000 miles of China, visiting mines and other objects of interest on the journey, he reached Japan in 1876. He has given much attention to the study of earthquakes and volcanoes, the outcomes from which have been numerous. In Japan a Seismological Society was established which issued 20 volumes in English. A chair of Seismology was founded at the Imperial University of that country, a bureau to control some 968 earthquake-observing stations, and a Government Committee for the investigation of earthquake and volcanic phenomena. One practical result of this work has been to establish rules and formulæ in connection with construction, the objects of which are to mitigate the effects of earthquakes, and it is satisfactory to note that these have been adopted in Japan and other countries. It having been established that the vibrations resulting from a large earthquake originating in any one portion of our globe can be recorded at any other portion of the same, Mr. Milne, as a Secretary of a British Association Committee, is now engaged in establishing around our globe the necessary instruments for these observations. In the Isle of Wight he records about seventy earthquakes per year, some of which have occurred near Japan. This novel departure in seismological investigation is already throwing light upon the physical character of the interior of our globe. By it the foci of submarine disturbances which sometimes interfere with telegraph cables, are being located, and generally it promises to add greatly to our knowledge of the globe we live on. He has published: "Earthquakes," 1883; "Seismology," 1888; "The Miner's Handbook," 1894; "Crystallography," and about 150 papers on Seismology, Geology, Mineralogy, Mining (Transactions of the Seismological Society, British Association Reports, Transactions of the Royal Society). In addition to the countries mentioned, Mr. Milne has visited Iceland, South of China, the Kuriel Islands, North Corea, Manila, Borneo, the Australian Colonies, Tasmania, New Zealand, and various parts of the United States and Canada. Address: Shide Hill House, Newport, Isle of Wight.

MILNER, Sir Alfred, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., Governor of Cape Colony and High Commissioner for South Africa, is the only son of Charles Milner, M.D., of Giessen, Germany, and Mary, daughter of Major-General Ready, Governor of the Isle of Man. He was born in 1854, and was educated in Germany, at King's College, London, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he matriculated in February 1873. He had a distinguished scholastic career, becoming Jenkyns Exhibitioner in 1875, and was successively Hertford, Craven, Eldon and Derby scholar. He obtained a first class in Lit. Hum. when he took his B.A. degree in 1877. He was also elected to a Fellowship at New College. After his admission to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1881, he was for some years engaged in journalistic work, chiefly as a member of the staff of the Pall Mall Gazette. In 1885 he unsuccessfully contested the Harrow Division in the Liberal interest. Mr. Milner was appointed Private Secretary to Mr. Goschen, Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1887, but relinquished that appointment in 1889 to become Under-Secretary of Finance in Egypt in succession to Sir Elwin Palmer who had been promoted Financial Adviser to the Khedive in the place of Sir Edgar Vincent, resigned. Under Lord Cromer he had opportunity during the four years that he held the appointment in Egypt to study the methods by which English influence has been established in that portion of Africa. In 1892 he resigned his post in the Egyptian Service, and upon his return to England was appointed Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue. In the year 1892 he published his great work, "England in Egypt," which much increased his reputation, and is admittedly the best contemporary book upon the subject. In February 1897 Sir Alfred Milner was chosen to succeed Lord Rosmead as Governor of the Cape, and at the same time was created a G.C.M.G. The appointment was received with universal satisfaction, and it was felt that the judgment and ability which Sir Alfred had shown in the several official positions he had occupied marked him as a man likely to deal with the intricate questions of South Africa with impartiality and success. He arrived in Cape Town in May and was very cordially received, and in the following August he made a Colonial tour. At the beginning of June 1899 he met President

Kruger in conference at Bloemfontein, the chief subjects of discussion being the position of the Transvaal Uitlanders.

MILTON, Viscount, William Charles de Mure Wentworth Fitzwilliam, J.P., M.P., was born in Canada in 1872, and is the eldest son of the late Viscount Milton, M.P., and Laura, daughter of the late Lord Charles Beauchamp. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge. Subsequently he became a Lieutenant, and is now Captain in the 4th Battalion of the Oxfordshire Militia Light Infantry. He was Aide-de-Camp to the Marquis of Lansdowne, Viceroy of India, from 1892 to 1893, and has travelled extensively in India. He was returned as Liberal Unionist member for Wakefield in 1895, and is the youngest member of the House of Commons then elected. He hunts his own pack of hounds, is a trustee of the Ascot Grand Stand Fund, and takes considerable interest in mining engineering. He is J.P. for West Yorkshire and co. Wicklow. Lord Milton is next heir to Earl Fitzwilliam. He married, in 1896, Maud Dundas, daughter of the Marquis of Zetland. Addresses: 46 Eaton Square, S.W.; Carnew Castle, Wicklow.

MILVAIN, Thomas, Q.C., LL.M., Chancellor of the County Palatine of Durham and Sudbury, son of the late Henry Milvain, North Elswick Hall, Northumberland, was born on May 4, 1844, and educated at Durham School and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. He took his degree of LL.B. in 1866, and of LL.M. in 1873, and was called to the Bar in June 1869. He joined the Northern Circuit in 1870, and when that was divided in 1876, elected to go the North-Eastern Circuit, of which he is now one of the leaders. He was made a Queen's Counsel in 1888. At the General Election of 1885 he succeeded in gaining the representation of the City of Durham in the Conservative interest, and was till the next General Election the only Conservative representative of the county in Parliament. He again sat for the same constituency from 1886 till 1892, when he was defeated. In 1892 he was appointed Recorder of Bradford, and also Chancellor of the County Palatine of Durham and Sudbury. While in Parliament in 1889 he introduced the Corporal Punishment Bill, which passed its second reading by a majority of 194 against 126, but owing to the pressure of other business could not be further proceeded with. He was afterwards more successful with a Bill for remedying the grave injustice of the law of slander in reference to imputations on the chastity of women, when he succeeded in obtaining the passing of the Slander of Women Act, 1881. He seconded the Address to the Throne in 1892. He unsuccessfully contested Cockermouth in 1895. He married Mary, third daughter of John Henderson, Durham. Addresses: 3 Plowden Buildings, Temple, E.C.; 17 Rutland Gate, S.W.; and East Bolton, Alnwick.

MINTO, Earl of, Gilbert John Murray Kynynmond Elliot, G.C.M.G., D.L., J.P., was born on July 9, 1845, and is the son of the 3rd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1891, and Emma, daughter of General Sir Thomas Hislop, Bart., G.C.B. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A.), and entered the Scots Guards in 1867, retiring in 1870 with the rank of Lieutenant. He was for ten years Brigadier-General in command of the South of Scotland Infantry (1888-98), and has had a varied and distinguished military career, having served with the Turkish army in 1877, and in the Afghan war in 1879. In 1881 he was Private Secretary to General Lord Roberts at the Cape, and from 1883 to 1885 Military Secretary to the Governor-General of Canada, the Marquis of Lansdowne. In the North-West Canadian Rebellion of 1885 he was Chief of Staff. In August 1898 he was appointed to succeed the Earl of Aberdeen as Governor-General of Canada, and started to take up his new duties in November 1898, when also he was created K.C.M.G., and later G.M.C.G. In April 1899 he received the honour of the Hon. LL.D. of Queen's University, Kingston. He married, in 1883, Mary, daughter of General the Hon. Charles Grey. Home addresses: 6 Audley Square, S.W., and Minto Castle, Hawick.

MIRANDA, Countess de, née Christina Nilsson, is the daughter of a labouring man, and was born at Wederslöf, near Wexjö, in Sweden, Aug. 3, 1843. At an early age she evinced great taste for music. She became quite proficient on the violin, learned the flute, and attended fairs and other places of public resort, at which she sang, accompanying herself on the violin. While performing in this manner at a fair at Ljungby, in June 1857, her extraordinary powers attracted the attention of Mr. F. G. Tornérhjelm, a gentleman of influence, who rescued her from her vagrant life, and placed her at school first at Halmstad, and afterwards at Stockholm, where she was instructed by M. Franz Berwald. She made her first appearance at Stockholm in 1860, went to Paris, continued her musical education under Masset and Wurtel, and came out at the Théâtre Lyrique, October 27, as Violetta in the "Traviata," with such success that she was engaged for three years. She made her first appearance in London at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1867, proved the great operatic attraction at that establishment during the season, and has since performed here with constantly increasing success. She paid a visit to the United States (1870), where, within less than a year, she is said to have cleared £30,000. After a Transatlantic trip of two years she reappeared at Drury Lane Theatre, May 28, 1872, in "La Traviata." After this date she still occasionally made her appearance for short periods at Brussels and St. Petersburg. She was married at Westminster Abbey, Aug. 27, 1872, to M. Auguste Rouzaud, the son of an eminent French merchant. He died at Paris, Feb. 22, 1882; and in 1887 she married, in Paris, Count A. de Miranda.

MIRBEAU, Octave, French novelist, was born at Trévirères, February 16, 1850, and early in life took to journalism, becoming in 1874 the dramatic critic of L'Ordre. After a short experience in administrative life he returned to journalism in 1877, writing for the Gaulois and the Figaro. A letter that he wrote to the latter in 1882, violently opposing the decoration of actors, gave rise to much heated discussion. Soon after he founded two short-lived newspapers, Paris Midi and Les Grimaces, in which he opposed the Republic with much violence, imitating the methods of Rochefort during the Empire. This led to his fighting several duels. He has been a contributor to nearly all the higher-class newspapers of Paris, to which he contributes short stories and artistic criticism. His letters on the decoration of actors, with M. Coquelin's reply, have been collected under the title of "Le Comédien," 1882. Other works of his are: "Lettres de ma Chaumière," 1886; "Le Calvaire," 1886; and "Sébastien Roch," 1890.

MITCHELL, Sir Charles Bullen Hugh, G.C.M.G., Governor of the Straits Settlements, High Commissioner of Borneo and the Malay Peninsula, was born in 1836, and is the eldest son of Colonel Hugh Mitchell. He was educated at the Royal Naval School, and entered the Royal Marines in 1852. During the Crimean war he was attached to the Baltic Fleet, and was mentioned in despatches, having commanded the rocket detachment at the bombardment of Sveaborg. He became Colonial Secretary of British Honduras in 1868; Colonial Secretary of Natal in 1877, acting as Colonial Commandant at Maritz-burg during the Zulu War; Governor of Fiji in 1886; Governor of Natal in 1889; and was appointed to his present post in 1893. Address: Government House, Singapore.

MITCHELL, Donald Grant, LL.D., was born at Norwich, Connecticut, in April 1822. He graduated at Yale College in 1841, travelled in Europe, and in 1847 published "Fresh Gleanings, or a New Sheaf from the Old Fields of Continental Europe," under the pseudonym of "Ik Marvel." In 1848 he was again in Europe, and wrote, under his former pseudonym, "The Battle Summer," 1849. Returning to New York, he published, anonymously, "The Lognette," a series of satirical sketches of society, 1850. In the same year appeared "The Reveries of a Bachelor," followed in 1851 by "Dream Life." In 1853 he was appointed United States Consul at Venice. Returning to America in 1855, he purchased a farm, known as Edgewood, near Newhaven, Connecticut, where he now resides. In 1873 he was United States Commissioner at the Paris Exposition. He has published: "My Farm of Edgewood," 1863; "Wet Days at Edgewood," 1864; "Seven Stories with Basement and Attic," 1864; "Dr. Johns," 1866; "Rural Studies," 1867 (subsequently issued under the title of "Out of Town Places"); "About old Story-Tellers," 1878; "Bound Together," 1885; and in 1889-90 two volumes of "English Lands, Letters, and Kings." In 1895 a third volume was published, and in 1897 a fourth on the same lines and under the same title. He has also edited (1883) an elaborate genealogical "Woodbridge Record." He has been one of the Council of the Yale School of Fine Arts since 1865, and has lectured there and elsewhere on literary and art topics. With strong rural tastes (illustrated by many of his books), he has been associated in an advisory way with the laying out of many public parks and grounds in Newhaven and other places.

MITCHELL, The Hon. Peter, Canadian statesman, was born Jan. 4, 1824, at Newcastle, New Brunswick, and was educated at the same place. He was admitted to the Bar in 1848, and in 1856 was elected a representative for his native county to serve in the Provincial Parliament. After serving for five years he was appointed Life Member of the Legislative Council, and was a member of the Executive Government of New Brunswick from 1858 till 1865, when his Government was defeated on the question of the confederation of the British American provinces. He was three times appointed delegate to Canada and England, with the view of obtaining the construction of the intercolonial railway from Halifax to Quebec, and the confederation of the provinces. In 1865 he formed, in connection with the Hon. R. D. Wilmot, an administration to test the province on confederation, and was appointed President of the Executive Committee. Having dissolved, they were sustained by a majority of thirty-three to eight, and confederation was carried. Mr. Mitchell, who was an ardent advocate of union, did much by his writings and speeches in and out of Parliament to promote British connection. On the organization of the Dominion Government in July 1867, Mr. Mitchell was called to the Cabinet as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which post he held until the resignation of the Macdonald administration in 1873. He took an active part in the settlement of the Fisheries dispute between the Dominion of Canada and the Government of the United States in 1878, and, later, gave important aid in operations connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. From 1882 to 1891 he was a representative in the Dominion Parliament for Northumberland County, New Brunswick. In 1897 he was appointed Inspector of Fisheries for the Atlantic Provinces. He bought the Montreal Herald in 1885, and is now President of the Herald Publishing Company. In 1870 he published "A Review of President Grant's Message to the United States Congress relative to the Canadian Fisheries."

MITCHINSON, The Right Rev. John, D.C.L., Master of Pembroke College, Oxford, son of the late John Mitchinson, a master-mariner trading with the East Indies, and Louisa, his wife (who died in 1896, in her 97th year), was born Sept. 23, 1833, and was educated at Durham School, whence, in December 1850, he was elected to a scholarship at Pembroke College, Oxford. There he obtained a first class in Classical Moderations in 1853, a first in Lit. Hum. in 1854, and a first in Natural Science in 1855, when he graduated B.A., proceeding in due course to M.A., which he commuted for B.C.L., and proceeded D.C.L. in 1864. On graduating B.A. he was elected Fellow of his College, and held the fellowship till he was presented in 1881 to the Rectory of Sibstone, in Leicestershire; he was made an Honorary Fellow in 1883. After residing as Fellow for a short time he became an assistant-master in Merchant Taylors' School, and was in 1858 ordained deacon by Bishop Tait in St. Paul's Cathedral, and licensed to the curacy of St. Philip's, Clerkenwell. In 1859 he was appointed head-master of the King's School, Canterbury, and was ordained priest by the Archbishop (Sumner) of Canterbury in 1860. While thus employed, he was called up to take occasional sermons in his university, was select preacher in 1872, and again in 1892-93 (this course of sermons being published); he preached the Ramsden Sermon at Cambridge in 1883. Also while head-master of Canterbury he acted twice as Examiner in Arts at Durham University, and subsequently in 1888 examined for the L.Th. He was appointed an Hon. Canon of Canterbury by Archbishop Tait in 1871, and still holds his stall there. In 1873 he was consecrated Bishop of Barbados, and subsequently the Windward Islands were grouped into a diocese under his care; also from 1879 to 1882 he was coadjutor to the aged Bishop of Antigua, so that he had the whole of the Lesser Antilles under his episcopal charge. Hence he was recalled to England to be Rector of Sibstone, and assistant to Bishop Magee of Peterborough, and in this capacity he acted under his successors. He is also Archdeacon of Leicester, and a Fellow of the College of SS. Mary and John of Lichfield. He was elected Master of Pembroke College, Oxford, in February 1899. Bishop Mitchinson has written a good deal of simple congregational music for village churches. Address: Pembroke College, Oxford.

MITTAG-LEFFLER, Magnus Gustaf, F.R.S., Swedish mathematician, was born at Stockholm, March 16, 1846, and studied at Upsala from 1865 to 1871; at Paris, under Charles Hermite, 1873-74; at Göttingen, under Schering, 1874-75; and at Berlin, under Weierstrass, 1875-76. In 1872 he passed his examination of Doctor of Philosophy at Upsala. He is also an Honorary Doctor of Mathematics of Bologna (1888), and an Honorary D.C.L. of Oxford (1894). He now holds the position of Professor of Mathematics in the University of Stockholm, and is the editor-in-chief of the Acta Mathematica. This post he has held since 1881; previously he was teacher of mathematics at Upsala, 1872; and professor at Helsingfors, 1877. He has written a quantity of mathematical dissertations, most of which have been printed in the Swedish, German, or French mathematical journals. He is a member of nearly all the learned societies of Europe, including the Philosophical Society of Cambridge, 1884; the London Mathematical Society, 1892; British Association, 1894; Royal Society, 1896; and Société Mathématique de France, 1873. He came to England in May 1899 to attend the centenary meeting of the Royal Institution. Address: Djursholm, Stockholm.

MIVART, Professor St. George, Ph.D. Rome, M.D., F.R.S., was born at

61 (then 39) Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, London, Nov. 30, 1827, and educated at Clapham Grammar School, Harrow School, King's College, London, and finally at St. Mary's College, Oscott, being prevented from going to Oxford (as intended) through having joined the Roman Catholic Church in 1844. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1851; appointed Lecturer at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School in 1862; elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1867; Vice-President of the Zoological Society in 1869 and 1882; Secretary of the Linnean Society in 1874-80; and Vice-President, 1880 and 1892; Professor of Biology at University College in 1874; created a Ph.D. Rome in 1876, and M.D. Louvain in 1884. Mr. St. George Mivart is the author of various papers in the publications of the Royal, the Linnean, and the Zoological Societies from 1864: e.g., "On the Zoology, Anatomy, and Classification of Apes and Lemurs, especially on the Osteology of the Limbs compared with the Limbs of Man" (Phil. Trans.); "The Myology of the Echidna, Agouti, Hyrax, Iguana, and certain Tailed Batrachians"; "The Osteology of Birds"; "The Sciatic Plexus of Reptiles"; "The Structure of the Fins of Fishes, and the Nature and Genesis of the Limbs and Limb-Girdles of Vertebrate Animals generally"; "A Memoir of the Insectivora," published in the Cambridge Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, and translated in the Annales des Sciences Naturelles; sundry papers in the Popular Science Review, and articles in the Quarterly, Fortnightly, Dublin, and Contemporary, and Nineteenth Century Reviews from 1870. He has also published the following books: "Genesis of Species," 1871 (two editions); "Lessons in Elementary Anatomy," 1872; "Man and Apes," 1873; "Lessons from Nature" and "Contemporary Evolution," 1876; "Address to the Biological Section of the British Association," 1879; "The Cat" (an introduction to the study of backbone animals), 1881; "Nature and Thought" (an introduction to a natural philosophy), 1883; "On Truth: a Systematic Inquiry," and "The Origin of Human Reason," 1889; "A Monograph of the Canidae," 1890; "Birds: an Introduction to Ornithology," 1892; "Types of Animal Life," 1893; and "An Introduction to the Elements of Science," from Mathematics to Metaphysics, 1894. Mr. St. George Mivart also wrote the articles "Apes," "Reptilia, (Anatomy)," and "Skeleton," in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica"; a "Defence of Freedom and Liberty of Conscience"; and "Examination of Mr. Herbert Spencer's Psychology," in the Dublin Review. He has delivered lectures at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, at the London Institution, at Leeds, Birmingham, Hull, Bradford, Bristol, Halifax, Leicester, Cardiff, Edinburgh, Dundee, and elsewhere. He is known through the "Genesis of Species" as, to a certain extent, Mr. Darwin's opponent—an opponent who, while fully asserting evolution generally, denies that it is applicable to the human intellect, as also that "natural selection" is in any instance its true cause. He represents the formation of new species as mainly due to one mode of action of that plastic innate power manifest on all hands in nature, as evidenced by the many instances referred to by him. The author brings strongly forward the independent origin of several structures, insistence upon which is perhaps his principal contribution to physical philosophy. In his "Origin of Human Reason" he has pointed out the fundamental distinction between men and animals, distinctly defining wherein the human intellect differs from the highest psychical actions of brutes. In his work "On Truth" he has demonstrated what are the ultimate principles upon which all science must repose. To these expositions no reply has as yet been made. Dr. St. George Mivart, at the invitation of the Belgian Episcopate, has accepted the post of Professor of the Philosophy of Natural History in the University of Louvain. Address: 77 Inverness Terrace, W.

MODJESKA, Helena, actress, was born at Cracow, Poland, Oct. 12, 1844, and is the daughter of Michael Opido, a music-master of that town. She early manifested a desire for the stage, and after her marriage, at the age of seventeen, with her guardian, M. Modrzejewski (which she abbreviated on the playbills to Modjeska), a beginning was made with a company of strolling players, in September 1861, in a little town of Austrian Poland named Bochnia. She then played throughout the towns of Galicia, and in 1862 was engaged at Lemberg and later at Czernowitz. It was not, however, until after her husband's death in 1865, and her marriage three years later to Count Bozenta Chlapowski, a Polish patriot and journalist, that she became the theatrical star and favourite of Warsaw. During this time Alexandre Dumas fills invited her to come to Paris and play in his "Dame aux Camélias." About 1876, failing health and the Russian censorship induced her to leave the stage and accompany her husband to the United States, where she settled on a ranch near Los Angeles, California, hoping to found there a colony for oppressed Poles, one of whom afterwards became the famous novelist, Sinkie-witz (q.v.). This did not prove so profitable as was expected, and in 1877, after only four months' study of English, she made her appearance in an English version of "Adrienne Lecouvreur" at a theatre in San Francisco. She won the American public immediately, and her record since has been one of continued triumph. She has made a number of tours through the country, has acted several seasons in London and the British provinces, and has thrice visited Poland professionally. Madame Bozenta has appeared in about twenty-five parts in America, principally in the Shakespearian rôles of Beatrice, Imogen, Juliet, and Rosalind, and also as Mary Stuart and Camille. She has also made adaptations for the Polish stage of "As You Like It" and "Twelfth Night." Latterly, however, she has not been seen in England.

MOENS, William John Charles, the son of Jacob Bernelot Moens, Esq. (d. 1856), of Upper Clapton, Middlesex, was born Aug. 12, 1833. He is a County Councillor for Hampshire, Lymington Rural East Division, 1889-1901, J.P., and Commissioner of Income and Land Taxes. He is the author of "English Travellers and Italian Brigands," 2 vols., 1866; "Through France and Belgium by River and Canal in the Steam Yacht Ytene, R.V.Y.C.," 1876; "Registers of the Dutch Church, Austin Friars, London, with History of the Strangers in England," 1884, privately printed; "The Walloons and their Church at Norwich, their History and Registers, 1565-1832," publication of the Huguenot Society of London, 1887-88; "Hampshire Allegations for Marriage Licences, granted by the Bishop of Winchester, 1689-1837, 2 vols., publication of the Harleian Society, 1893, &c. Mr. Moens is a Fellow, and Local Secretary for Hampshire, of the Society of Antiquaries of London; Vice-President of the Huguenot Society of London; Member of the Council of the Harleian Society, and of British Record Society; Hon. Member of the Maatschappij der Nederlandsche Letterkunde te Leiden; Corresponding Honorary Member of the Commission pour l'Histoire des Églises Wallonnes de Hollande, &c. Address: Tweed, near Lymington.

MOHAMED ALI KHAN, His Excellency General Alla-us-Saltaneh, the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the Shah of Persia, has had serious and valuable diplomatic experience. He was for about seven years Persian Consul-General in India, and then afterwards in the same capacity for some time at Baghdad, whence he became Gov-error of Resht; for the eight years previous to 1890 he was Persian Consul-General at Tiflis (Caucasus), the Shah having, on this promotion, raised him to the highest rank in the empire — namely, "Alla-us-Saltaneh." Address: 30 Ennismore Gardens, S.W.

MOLESWORTH, Sir Guildford Lindsey, K.C.I.E., Consulting Engineer to the Government of India for State Railways, Fellow of the University of Calcutta, Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Member of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, is the son of the Rev. John Edward Nassau Molesworth, D.D., vicar of Rochdale, and was born at Millbrook, Hants, on May 3, 1828. He was educated at King's School, Canterbury, and at the College of Civil Engineers, Putney; afterwards he served an apprenticeship to civil engineering under Mr. Dockray on the London and North-Western Railway, and also in mechanical engineering under Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester. Subsequently he was employed in various railway and other engineering works in connection with ironworks in South Wales. In 1852 he was chief assistant-engineer on the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, which he left in order to superintend the construction of buildings and machinery in the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich during the Crimean war. Afterwards he practised as a Consulting Engineer in London for some years. In 1858 the Institution of Civil Engineers awarded to him the Watt Medal and the Manby premium, for a paper read before the Institution on the subject of "Conversion of Wood by Machinery." In 1859 he went out to the Ceylon Railway as Mechanical and Locomotive Engineer, and he was appointed Chief Engineer of the Ceylon Government Railway in 1862; Director-General of the railway in 1865; Director of Public Works in 1867; and Consulting Engineer to the Government of India in 1871. His "Pocket-Book of Engineering Formulæ" passed through six editions in the first year, and is now a standard work in the profession. He originated and was mainly instrumental in introducing the system of Decimal Coinage adopted in Ceylon. His services in the enemy's country with the army in the field in time of war gained for him the Afghan War Medal, as well as the Burma War Medal and clasp, and in 1881 he received the thanks of her Majesty for excellent services rendered during the Afghan War. He retired from the service of the Indian Government in 1889, and represented the Government of India as their delegate in the International Monetary Conference at Brussels. He is the author of various publications, amongst which may be named: "Proposals for the Establishment of a Decimal Coinage in Ceylon," 1868; and in India, 1871; "Reports on Public Works in Ceylon," 1869; "Light Railways in Ceylon," 1870; "Festiniog Railway," 1871; "State Railways in India," 1872; "Gauge of Railways in India," 1873; "Graphic Diagrams," 1877; "Metrical Tables," 1879; "Masonry Dams," 1883; "Madras Harbour," and "Iron Manufacture in India," 1884; "Establishment of an Engineer Volunteer Corps in India," and "Imperialism for India," 1885; "Text-book of Bimetallism," "Land as Property," "Bimetallic Currency," "The Silver Question," "The 'Abt' System," and "Instinct and Reason in Ants," 1886; "Silver and Gold" (Prize Essay), 1891; and "Indian Currency," 1894. He was made Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire in 1879; and Knight Commander of the Order in 1888. Sir G. L. Molesworth married, in 1854, Maria Elizabeth, daughter of J. T. Bridges, Esq., of St. Nicholas Court, Thanet, and granddaughter of Sir Robert Affleck, Bart. Address: The Manor House, Bexley, Kent.

MOLESWORTH, Mrs. Mary Louisa, née Stewart, is of Scottish parentage, and was born in Holland on May 29, 1839, and partly educated abroad. Her father, of whom she was the eldest child, was Major-General Stewart, of Strath, Scotland, and her mother was Agnes Janet, daughter of John Wilson, of Transy, Fife. She has lived several years in France and Germany, and began to write very young. Her first works of any importance were four novels published under the name of Ennis Graham. These were: "Lover and Husband," "She was Young and He was Old," "Cicely," and "Not without Thorns." In 1875 she published her first book for children, "Tell me a Story." This was succeeded by "Carrots," which attained great popularity, and by other similar volumes yearly. Mrs. Molesworth has also published: "Summer Stories for Boys and Girls," "Four Ghost Stories," and "French Life in Letters." Mrs. Molesworth has also contributed to many of the best serials, and some of her serial stories have since appeared as volumes, e.g. "Hermie," "Hoodie," "The Boys and I," "The Palace in the Garden," "Neighbours," "Silverthorns," and "The Third Miss St. Quentin." The following novels are by Mrs. Molesworth: "Marrying and Giving in Marriage," "That Girl in Black," and "Hathercourt Rectory." Mrs. Molesworth has contributed every month since its first appearance to the Child's Pictorial, for very little children, and some of these stories are now published as books: "Five Minutes' Stories," and "Twelve Tiny Tales"; also "Lettice," "The Abbey by the Sea," "The Little Old Portrait," a story of the Great French Revolution, "A Charge Fulfilled," &c. The chief of Mrs. Molesworth's latest publications since 1890 are: "Mother Bunch," "The Story of a Spring Morning," "Family Troubles," "Stories of the Saints for Children," and "An Enchanted Garden" (fairy stories), 1892; "Blanche: a Story for Girls," 1894; "Havercourt Rectory," "The Red Grange," "Neighbours," "Stories for Children in Illustration of the Lord's Prayer," "Meg Langholme," "Miss Mouse and her Boys," 1897; "The Laurel Walk" and "The Magic Nuts," 1898, besides many other works for the young. Addresses: Oldway House, Paignton, S. Devon; and 19 Sumner Place, Onslow Square, S.W.

MOLONEY, Sir Cornelius Alfred, K.C.M.G., Governor of the Windward Isles, was born 1848, and is the son of the late Captain P. Moloney, of Limerick. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and entered the army in 1867. He has held several colonial posts among which may be mentioned the Secretaryship to the Governor of the Bahamas (1871-73). In the latter year he served through the Ashanti Campaign, afterwards becoming Private Secretary to the Governor of the Gold Coast, and holding other appointments in that Colony until 1879. He then acted as Governor of Lagos, and from 1884 to 1886 was Administrator of the Gambia Settlement, afterwards returning to Lagos till 1890. In 1891 he became Governor of British Honduras, exchanging for his present post in 1897. He has written a work on the forestry of West Africa.

MOMMSEN, Professor Theodor, the eminent German jurist and historian, was born at Garding, in Schleswig, Nov. 30, 1817, and is the son of a pastor. He studied at the University of Kiel, and travelled from 1844 till 1847, examining Roman inscriptions in France and Italy for the Berlin Academy. On his return he wrote numerous articles for the Schleswig-Holstein Journal, which he conducted, and was made Professor of Law at Leipzig. Having been dismissed on account of the part he took in political affairs, he was made Titular Professor of Law at Zurich in 1852, at Breslau in 1854, and at Berlin in 1858. In 1875 he was appointed Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Leipzig. On June 15, 1882, he was tried at Berlin for having in an election speech slandered Prince Bismarck, but was acquitted. The decision was appealed against, and on April 7, 1883, the Imperial High Court of Appeal at Leipzig finally acquitted Professor Mommsen of the charge. He has written numerous learned works, has edited a magnificent work on Latin inscriptions, published by the Prussian Academy of Sciences, and a work on Roman Coins, and is best known in England by his "Earliest Inhabitants of Italy," of which a translation by Robertson appeared in London in 1858, and "History of Rome," translated by W. P. Dickson, and published in London in 1862-63. In 1878 the King of Italy conferred on him the Grand Cross of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. In 1880 Professor Mommsen's library was destroyed by fire; and a number of his English admirers had the happy idea of presenting him with a selection of classical and historical books, printed in England, to compensate him for some portion of his loss. On the occasion of his seventieth birthday, in November 1887, a congratulatory address, signed by sixty-two Dons, was sent to him by members of the University of Oxford. Other works of his are: "The Oscan and other Italic Dialects," 1845; "Roman Coins," 1850; "Roman Constitutional Law," 1871; and an edition of Justinian's "Pandects," 1866-70. In 1895 he resigned his position as Perpetual Secretary of the Berlin Academy. Address: Charlottenburg.

MONACO, Albert Prince of, was born in Paris, Nov. 13, 1848, and succeeded his father in 1889. He married (1) Lady Mary Douglas-Hamilton in 1869 (this marriage was annulled in 1880), and (2) Alice, Dowager-Duchesse de Richelieu, in 1889. His heir is Prince Louis, who was born in 1870, and who is serving in the French army. The Principality consists mainly of the towns of Monaco, Monte Carlo, and Condamine; is Italian in language, but is under the control of France. The sum of £60,000 is paid annually to Prince Albert for the concession to "play" in the Casino; and in March 1896 the Prince granted a fresh concession for fifty years on condition that his annuity should be raised to £80,000. Prince Albert is interested in scientific questions, and has done some useful work in the way of deep-sea dredging, to effect which he has taken several long cruises in his steam yacht.

MONCKTON, Sir John Braddick, F.S.A., Town-Clerk of the City of London, is the son of the late Mr. John Monckton, of Maidstone, and was born in 1832. He received his education at Rugby, and was afterwards admitted a solicitor. He practised the law for a number of years, and in 1878 was elected Town-Clerk of the City. He has been annually reappointed ever since. He has been one of her Majesty's Lieutenants for the City of London, a Grand Warden of Freemasons of England, and Commissioner of Lieutenancy for London. He has been the recipient of various foreign decorations, such as the Belgian Order of Leopold, the Saviour of Greece, the Lion and Sun of Persia, and the Golden Lion of Nassau. He married, in 1858, Maria, daughter of P. B. Long (see MONCKTON, LADY). Address: The Guildhall, E.C.

MONCKTON, Lady, wife of Sir John Braddick Monckton, née Maria Louisa Long, is the second daughter of Peter Bartholomew Long, of Ipswich, and Hannah Justina, daughter of Admiral Richard Falkland. She was educated at home and in Brussels under Mme. Becker, wife of the Protestant German Chaplain of Leopold I. She early showed promise as an amateur actress, and in 1866 appeared on the stage at the Haymarket in "Jim the Penman." She created the part of Jim the Penman's wife, and became famous in the rôle. Subsequently Lady Monckton played in "The Red Lamp," "Captain Swift," "The Crusaders," "The Idler," and other dramas. She was married to Sir John Monckton in 1858. Address: 28 Montpelier Square, Knightsbridge, S.W.

MONCRIEFF, Colonel Sir Alexander, K.C.B., F.R.S., J.P., born in Scotland on April 17, 1829, is the eldest son of the late Captain Matthew Moncrieff of Culfargie, Perthshire, of the Madras Cavalry. He was educated at the High School and at the Universities of Edinburgh and Aberdeen; he entered the office of Messrs. Miller & Grainger, Civil Engineers, in Edinburgh, where he served his time as a Civil Engineer. Colonel Moncrieff did not follow the profession, but obtained a commission in the Forfarshire Artillery Militia, and afterwards in the Edinburgh or 3rd Brigade Scotch Division Royal Artillery, of which he rose to be Colonel Commandant. He travelled extensively in Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America, and received the thanks of her Majesty's Government for topographical information given to the Colonial Office in London at the particular request of the Governor-General of Canada. During the Crimean War Sir Alexander Moncrieff, then a lieutenant in the Forfarshire Militia, went to the seat of war, and received the permission of the Commander-in-Chief to visit the siege works, and to be present at the operations as a Militia officer during the first and second bombardments of Sebastopol. It was then that the idea of the invention with which his name is associated occurred to his mind; but it was some years before it was matured into a practical form. It was first submitted by Captain Moncrieff to General Sir Richard Dacres, Commanding the Royal Artillery in Ireland, at Dublin in 1857, and it was some years more before the authorities were induced to give it a trial, after which Captain Moncrieff was engaged for eight years in the Royal Arsenal attached to the Department of the Director of Artillery. The Moncrieff System of Mounting Artillery, or the protected barbette system, is sometimes called the Disappearing System, because upon firing the gun recoils into shelter, out of sight of the enemy, and the energy of the recoil is stored up so as to raise the gun into the firing position when loaded. In the first instance this was effected by means of a counterweight; and the interposition of a moving fulcrum (then for the first time employed in practical mechanics) enabled the sudden impetus of the discharge to be utilised without danger to the carriage. Another method by which the same end is accomplished, and which is applicable to sea service and to many cases in which the direct force of gravity would be unwieldy or unsuitable for application, is Moncrieff's Hydro-pneumatic System. In this case the recoil of the gun drives down a piston, which forces water into a vessel of compressed air, and the further compression of the air stores up the energy of the recoil to raise the gun to the firing position when required. His system is now largely and increasingly used in the British Service, both by land and sea; and it is used also by foreign Governments. Sir A. Moncrieff is the author of a series of papers, extending over twenty years, illustrating and advocating the importance of invisibility, dispersion of heavy guns, and the use of parapets with their superior slope formed en glacis, which are the chief characteristics of his system, and which may be said to be the converse of the old system previously universal, in which the guns or their embrasures were visible, and the works in which they stood were conspicuous. Sir A. Moncrieff is a J.P. for Perthshire, a Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, a Fellow of the Royal Society, was created a C.B. in 1880, and a K.C.B. in 1890, and is a Knight of the Imperial Order of the Rose of Brazil, which order was given to him by the Emperor when, in one of his journeys in search of scientific information, he was made acquainted with Sir A. Moncrieff's invention, and recognised its originality and importance. He married Harriet, only daughter of James Rimington Wilson, of Broomhead Hall, Yorkshire. Addresses: 15 Vicarage Gate, Kensington, W.; Bandirran, Perthshire; and Athenæum.

MOND, Ludwig, Ph.D., F.R.S., born March 7, 1839, at Hessen-Cassel in Germany, was the eldest son of Mr. M. B. Mond, a merchant of that town, and his wife, Henriette, née Levinsohn, a lady of rare attainments, who greatly influenced her son's career. He was educated at the Real-School, and subsequently at the Polytechnic School of his native town, and thence proceeded to Marburg, where he studied Chemistry under Hermann Kolbe, and afterwards to Heidelberg, where he became the pupil of the renowned Robert Bunsen. After leaving this University he held several appointments in chemical works in Germany. He first came to England in 1862 with the object of introducing his well-known process for the recovery of sulphur from alkali waste, and became connected with Mr. John Hutchinson of Widnes, at whose works he worked out and perfected his process. In 1864 he returned to the Continent to undertake the erection and management of a Leblanc Alkali Works at Utrecht in Holland. In 1867, shortly after his marriage with his cousin, Miss Frida Loewenthal, he settled definitely in this country, and installed his sulphur recovery process in a number of British and Foreign Alkali Works. In the course of his travels he met early in 1872 Mr. Ernest Solvay of Brussels, who had carried out successfully, at Couillet near Charleroi, a new process of his invention for the manufacture of soda by the intervention of ammonia, which has since become famous as the Solvay Process. Mr. Solvay gave him the fullest opportunity to examine his process, and Mr. Mond was so struck with its prospects, that he at once entered into an agreement with Mr. Solvay for its introduction into the United Kingdom, although the process was then only in its infancy, working on a small scale and requiring many improvements before it could be expected to supplant the old-established process of Leblanc. In conjunction with Mr. now Sir John T. Brunner, he established in 1873 the firm of Brunner, Mond, & Co., and erected works at Winnington, near Northwich, in Cheshire, for carrying out the Solvay process, which have grown until they have become the largest alkali works in the world. In 1881 this firm was converted into a Limited Liability Co. of which Mr. Mond is still a Managing Director. The best years of his life he has devoted to improving and perfecting the process he had taken in hand, and the amount of thought and energy he has spent in this task are evidenced by the numerous patents he has taken out in connection with the ammonia soda manufacture, and its by-products, among which his process for the production of chlorine from ammonium chloride requires special notice, as it converts the ammonia soda process into a complete cycle, leaving no waste product of any kind. But the fertility of his inventive faculty has been by no means exhausted by his work in this direction. He has made and patented many inventions of great scientific and commercial importance in allied and other branches of applied Chemistry. From an early date in his technical career, Mr. Mond's attention has been called to the great problems of the economical consumption of coal, and also of the recovery of ammonia from nitrogenous substances. Since 1883 he has taken out a number of patents for methods and appliances, which combine these two problems by utilising the coal in the form of gas, and recovering at the same time the nitrogen contained in it in the form of ammonia. The results of his work in this direction formed the subject in the year 1889 of his presidential address to the Society of Chemical Industry, which aroused considerable public interest at the time. Since then Mr. Mond has effected further important improvements in the solution of these problems, and has given particular attention to the use of the gas produced by his methods for the direct production of power by means of gas-engines, and to the utilisation of the large amount of heat up to now lost in hot exhaust gases from such engines, with the result, that he has succeeded in obtaining fully double the amount of power from a given quantity of coal (and that of the very commonest and cheapest) than it can yield by the use of the very best steam-engines. With the view of utilising the gas obtained by him from coal for the direct production of electricity, Mr. Mond worked out in conjunction with his assistant, Dr. Carl Langer, a new form of gas battery, which he communicated to the Royal Society in 1889, and which is still the most perfect appliance for solving this highly important problem. In the course of their investigations of this subject Mr. Mond and his assistants, Dr. Langer and Dr. Quincke, discovered a new series of chemical compounds of very peculiar properties composed of metals and carbon monoxide, now known as metallic carbonyls, the chemical and physical properties of which they submitted to very full investigations, and their results, which excited great interest in scientific circles, were communicated in several papers to the Royal Society, and the Chemical Society, and formed the subject of a lecture given by Mr. Mond at the Royal Institution in June 1892. The further study of one of these compounds, the nickel-carbonyl, has led Mr. Mond to devise and work out an entirely new process for obtaining nickel from its ores, which promises to revolutionise the metallurgy of that metal. Mr. Mond is a member of many learned and scientific societies, he is a Fellow of the Royal Society, a Vice-President of the Royal Institution and of the Chemical Society, Past President of the Society of Chemical Industry, Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry, Member of the Physical Society, the German Chemical Society, &c. He is also on the Council of the British Association, and the British Institute of Preventive Medicine. The Universities of Heidelberg and Padua have conferred upon him the degree of Ph.D. honoris causa. Mr. Mond, who is a naturalised British subject, has always taken the warmest interest in all efforts for the advancement of science in this country. To promote this object he has founded, endowed, and given to the Royal Institution, the Davy Faraday Research Laboratory in Albemarle Street, opened by the Prince of Wales on Dec. 22, 1896, which is devoted to scientific research in pure and physical chemistry, and provides all the facilities required for investigations in these branches of science by a number of independent investigators. Mr. Ludwig Mond was elected to the Athenæum under Rule 2 in 1898. Addresses: The Poplars, 20 Avenue Road, Regent's Park, N.W.; Winnington Hall, near Northwich; Palazzo Zuccari, Rome; and Athenæum.

MONK, Charles James, J.P., D.L., M.P., was born on Nov. 30, 1824, and is the son of the late Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which University he is M.A., having graduated B.A. with honours in 1847. In 1845 he gained Sir William Browne's medal, and was Members' Prizeman for Undergraduates in 1846, and for B.A.s the year following. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1850, and was Chancellor of Bristol, 1855-85, and of Gloucester, 1859-85. From 1881 to 1884 he was President of the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom, was appointed a director of the Suez Canal Company in 1884, and is J.P. and D.L. for Gloucestershire. He stood for Cricklade in 1857, was returned as Liberal member for Gloucester in April 1859, and sat until August, when he was unseated on petition. He was re-elected for Gloucester in 1865, and at successive Parliamentary elections until 1880, and retired in 1885. He again contested Gloucester in 1892, and was elected for that borough as a Liberal Unionist in 1895. It is to him that we owe the Revenue Officers' Disabilities Removal Act of 1868, which gave votes to civil servants in the Post Office, Customs, and Excise. Addresses: Bedwell Park, Hatfield, Herts; and 5 Buckingham Gate, S.W.

MONKSWELL, Lord, Robert Collier, eldest son of Robert Porrett Collier, 1st Baron, who was Solicitor-General, 1863-66, Attorney-General, 1868-71, and from 1871 to his death in 1886 a paid member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, by Isabella, daughter of William Rose of Wolston Heath, near Rugby, was born in 1845. He was educated at Eton, where he obtained a junior mathematical prize, and was placed in the select for the school prize. Proceeding to Trinity College, Cambridge, he graduated in 1866 in the first class of the Law Tripos, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1869. In 1871 he was appointed Conveyancing Counsel to the Treasury; and in 1885 he was appointed one of the official examiners of the High Court of Justice, an office he vacated on his accession to the peerage in the following year. Lord Monkswell is a Home Rule Liberal, and he unsuccessfully contested Launceston against the Earl of Halsbury in 1877 and 1880, and Chatham in 1885, against Sir John Gorst. In Mr. Gladstone's administration he was a Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen from 1892 to 1894, and was Under-Secretary of State for War in that of Lord Rosebery from January to June 1895. He has sat in the London County Council from its establishment in 1889 as a Progressive for the Haggerston Division of Shoreditch. He served on Lord Dunraven's Committee on the Sweating System, on Lord Sandhurst's Committee on Metropolitan Hospitals, and on Lord Hobhouse's Committee on the Law of Copyhold. He has passed through the House of Lords a Bill to amend the law of libel and the Public Libraries Act; while in 1891 he carried through the second reading a Bill to consolidate and amend the Law of Copyright, and in 1897 he passed through the Lords a short Copyright Bill, and took the chair of a Select Committee to which it was referred. For some years he was chairman of the Committee of Management of the Feltham Industrial School. He is married to Mary, third daughter of J. A. Hardcastle, M.P. Address: Monkswell House, Chelsea Embankment, S.W.; and Athenæum.

MONRO, David Binning, M.A., Hon. LL.D. of Glasgow, Hon. D.Litt. of Dublin, Provost of Oriel College, Oxford, was born in Edinburgh, Nov. 16, 1836, and is the eldest son of A. Binning Monro, of Auchenbowie, Stirlingshire. He was educated at Glasgow University, and, at the age of seventeen, matriculated at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he had gained a scholarship. Shortly afterwards he became a Scholar of Balliol (1854-59). He was in the first class in Classical and in Mathematical Moderations in 1856, gained the Ireland Scholarship in 1858, and obtained a first class in Lit. Hum. and a second class in the Final School of Mathematics in 1858. In 1859 he won the Latin Essay (B.A. 1858, M.A. 1862). He was Fellow of Oriel from 1859 to 1882, Tutor from 1863 to 1873, Vice-Provost from 1874 to 1882, Classical Moderator in 1866 and 1876, and Classical Examiner in 1869 and 1871. In 1882 he became Provost of Oriel, and is besides Delegate of the Press and of the University Museum and Perpetual Delegate of Privileges. He entered at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, and is Hon. LL.D. of Glasgow (1883), and Hon. D.Litt. of Dublin (1892). Addresses: Oriel College, Oxford; and Athenæum.

MONRO, James, C.B., son of the late George Monro, Esq., S.S.C., Edinburgh, was born in Edinburgh, Nov. 25, 1838, and was educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh University, and Berlin University. He entered her Majesty's Bengal Civil Service in 1857, being third on the list of competitors; and held in Bengal the appointments of Magistrate, District and Sessions Judge, Secretary to Board of Revenue, Commissioner of the Presidency Division, and Inspector-General of Police. On several occasions Mr. Monro received the thanks of the Bengal Government for his services. He retired from the Bengal Civil Service in 1884, and in that year was appointed Assistant-Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police in charge of the Criminal Investigation Department. In 1888 he was appointed Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, and retired from the office which he had filled with so much efficiency in 1890. He was created C.B. in 1888.

MONROE, The Right Hon. John, LL.D., Judge of the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division), Ireland, was born in 1839. He is the eldest son of the late John Monroe, Esq., of Hunter's Hall, Moira, by Jane, daughter of the late Rev. James Harvey, of Armagh. He was educated by the Rev. James Mulligan of Moira, and entered Queen's College, Galway, in 1854. He took the degrees of B.A., M.A., and LL.B. in the Queen's University in Ireland, obtaining gold medals with each. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1880. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1863, and went the North-East Circuit. He took silk in 1877. He was Law Adviser to the Irish Government in 1878-80; became a Bencher of the King's Inns, 1884; Solicitor-General, 1884-85; Judge of the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division, 1885; and was created a Privy Councillor in 1886. He married, in 1867, Lizzie, daughter of J. W. Moule, Esq., of Elmley-Lovel, Worcestershire. Address: Bartra, Dalkey, co. Dublin.

MONSON, The Right Hon. Sir Edmund John, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., D.C.L., M.A., British Ambassador in Paris, is the third son of the 6th Baron Monson, by Eliza, daughter of Edmund Larken. He was born at Chart Lodge, Kent, on Oct. 6, 1834, and was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, and obtained a first class in Law and Modern History in 1855 (M.A.). In 1858 he was elected Fellow of All Souls, and in 1868 became Examiner in modern languages for the Taylorian Scholarships. On Mar. 26, 1856, he was nominated Attaché, passed an examination in June, and was appointed to Paris. After two years in the French capital he was transferred to Florence, and in December 1858 went to Washington. From that date he was private secretary to the late Lord Lyons until August 1863, when he became Attaché at Hanover. He passed the second examination for the diplomatic service in 1863, was promoted to be third secretary, was transferred to Brussels, but resigned in 1865. In July of 1865 he unsuccessfully contested Reigate. In May 1869 he was appointed Consul in the Azores, to reside at St. Michael's; and in December of 1872 was promoted to the post of Consul-General for the Kingdom of Hungary, to reside at Pest. He was employed on special service in Dalmatia and Montenegro from February 1876 to May 1877. He received the C.B. in January 1878. On June 21, 1879, he was appointed Minister Resident and Consul-General to Uruguay, and in January 1884 became Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine, and Minister Plenipotentiary to Paraguay. At the close of 1884 he was chosen for the post of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Denmark, and in February 1888 to the King of the Hellenes. In 1886 the honour of K.C.M.G. was conferred upon him. Under the Convention of Dec. 6, 1888, he acted as Arbitrator between Denmark and the United States in the matter of the "Butterfield Claim," and gave his award on Jan. 22, 1890. In January 1892 he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of the Belgians, and in July 1893 became Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Austria. On August 18, 1896, he was appointed H.M. Ambassador at Paris on the retirement of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, K.P. His speech at the dinner of the English Chamber of Commerce in Paris in December 1898 contained a statement of the recent disagreements between England and France over Fashoda, &c., and caused great offence in many quarters in Paris. Some journals went so far as to urge his recall. Sir Edward Monson's diplomacy has, however, been conciliatory on the whole, and that during a most trying period in the relations of the two countries. He was made a G.C.M.G. in August 1892, and was sworn of the Privy Council in July 1893. He married, in 1881, Eleanor Catherine Mary, daughter of the late Major Munro, H.M. Consul-General at Monte Video. Address: British Embassy, Paris.

MONTAGU, The Right Hon. Lord Robert, second son of the 6th Duke of Manchester, born Jan. 24, 1825, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1848, was returned in April 1859 one of the members, in the Conservative interest, for Huntingdonshire, which county he represented till February 1874, when he was returned for the county of Westmeath, as a "Conservative, but in favour of Home Rule." The Home Rule he professed was, however, essentially different from that of the Irish Party. He withdrew from the Home Rule organisation in June 1877; and ceased to be a member of Parliament in March 1880. He was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, sworn a Privy Councillor and nominated First Charity Commissioner in March 1867, and held these offices till December 1868. He joined the Roman Catholic Church in 1870, and renounced it on June 11, 1882. Lord Robert Montagu has written "Naval Architecture and Treatise on Shipbuilding," 1852; "Mirror in America," 1861; "Words on Garibaldi," 1861; "Four Experiments in Church and State, and the Conflict of Churches," 1864; "Sewage Utilisation," 1866; "What is Education?" 1869; a "Lecture to Workingmen," 1870; "Arbitration instead of War, and a Defence of the Commune," 1872; "Register, Register, Register," in 1873; "Some popular Errors concerning Politics and Religion," 1874, forming vol. i. of St. Joseph's Theological Library; "Expostulation in Extremis: Remarks on Mr. Gladstone's Political Expostulation on the Vatican Decrees in their bearing on Civil Allegiance," 1874; "Foreign Policy: England and the Eastern Question," 1877; "Our Sunday Fireside," 1878; "Reasons for leaving the Roman Church," 1882; "Address on the Time of the Stuarts, or Home Rule in 1588, 1688, 1788, and 1888," 1886; "Home Rule, Rome Rule," 1886; "Recent Events, with a Clue to their Solution, 1st and 2nd edits., 1886; 3rd edit., 1888; "Scylla or Charybdis: Salisbury or Gladstone—which?" "The Sower and the Virgin," "Whither are we drifting?" 1887; "The Pope, the Government, and the Plan of Campaign," 1888; "Tercentenary of the Defeat of the Spanish Armada," 1888; "Defeat of the Armada," 1888; "The Lambeth Judgment, or Masks of Sacerdotalism," 1891. Addresses: 91 Queen's Gate, S.W.; and Athenæum.

MONTAGU, Sir Samuel. See SAMUEL MONTAGU, SIR MONTAGU.

MONTALBA, Clara, the painter of Venice, is the eldest of four sisters, of whom the three younger have also won high distinction in art. Her sisters were for a time students in the Kensington and Slade Schools, but Miss Clara Montalba received no special training, and, to use her own words, "drifted into" the artistic career. While still a girl her parents, at that time resident in London, took her during several summers to Dieppe, where from time to time she was privileged to submit her studies and sketches from nature to Isabey, the famous French impressionist marine painter. He recognised Miss Montalba's promise of genius, and taught her the rules of his art. Water-colour was her earliest medium, and her large and luminous effects soon attracted attention. In 1876 she was elected a member of the Royal Water-Colour Society, being one of the first women admitted thereto. A few years afterwards she was elected a member of the Water-Colour Society of the Hague, then of the Royal Water-Colour Society of Brussels, and subsequently of that of Rome. She enjoys the signal honour of having been asked to send her own portrait, painted by herself, to the Uffizzi. Among her most famous pictures are her "Festival of St. John" and her "Welcome to the German Emperor," both Venetian scenes. She has also painted many views in Holland and on the Thames. In recent years she has exhibited at the Royal Academy "Salt-boats, Venice," 1895. Miss Hilda Montalba is best known for her figure paintings, the subjects of which are Venetian. She sees Venice in a more tranquil light than her eldest sister, a grey light which lovers of Venice cannot fail to recognise. Miss Helen Montalba paints the charm of girlhood admirably. Miss Henriette Montalba, whose death the world of art had cause to mourn some years ago, was a sculptor of great promise. She will be remembered for her busts of Robert Browning, and the Marquis of Lorne in Canadian headgear. The work of the Montalbas filled a room at the Victorian Era Exhibition. "Here," says Miss Alice Corkran, writing in the Lady's Realm for February 1899, "their different styles were represented. Clara appeared the painter of light; Hilda of delicate and fleeting effects against which the figures of her Venetian folk stood out strongly; Ellen's feminine touch in art, and her charming representations of girlhood, contrasted with her sisters' work. A melancholy interest attached to the busts and statue signed by Henriette." The sisters, who have studied and painted emulously ever since the summer visits to Dieppe, have latterly resided in Venice in studios overlooking the Giudecca, the picturesque business quarter of the city. They only pay occasional visits to London. Address in London: The Studio, Campden-House-Road-Mews, W.

MONTEAGLE OF BRANDON, Lord, Thomas Spring-Rice, K.P., D.L., was born on May 31, 1849, and is the son of the Hon. Stephen Edmund Spring-Rice and a daughter of the late Mr. Serjeant Frere. He was educated at Harrow and at Cambridge, where he took honours as a senior optime in 1872. In 1866 he succeeded his grandfather, the first Lord, who, before being raised to the peerage, was a distinguished minister, the Hon. S. E. Spring-Rice. In 1875 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Bishop Butler. Addresses: 21 Carlyle Mansions, Cheyne Walk, S.W.; and Mount Trenchard, Foynes, co. Limerick.

MONTEFIORE, Sir Joseph Sebag.
See SEBAG-MONTEFIORE, SIR JOSEPH.

MONTÉPIN, Xavier Aymon de, French writer, was born at Apremont, March 18, 1824, made himself conspicuous as an anti-revolutionary journalist in 1848, editing Le Canard, Le Pamphlet, and Le Lampion, and since then has devoted himself to literature. His novels and plays, mostly of a sensational and melodramatic kind, are exceedingly numerous. Amongst the best-known novels are "Les Chevaliers du Lansquenec," 1847; "Confessions d'un Bohème," 1849; "Les Viveurs de Paris," 1852-56; "Les Marionnettes du Diable," 1860; "Les Tragédies de Paris," 1874; "Les Drame du Mariage," 1878; "Le Médecin des Folles," 1879. Of his plays may be mentioned: "Pauline," 1850; "La Sirène de Paris," 1860; "Le Médecin des Pauvres," 1865; "Les Enfers de Paris," 1865; "La Fille du Meurtrier," 1866; "La Femme de Paillasse," 1874, &c., &c. Among his most recent works are: "La Tireuse de Cartes" and "La Fille du Fou," 1890; and "La Dame aux Eme-raudes" and "La Perle du Palais-Royal," 1891.

MONTGOMERY, Florence, authoress, was born in 1847, and is the daughter of Sir Alexander Montgomery, Bart. At the age of twenty she brought out her first story by the advice of Whyte-Melville, the novelist. Her works are as follows: "A Very Simple Story," 1867; "Misunderstood," 1869; "Thrown Together," 1872; "Thwarted, or Duck's Eggs in a Hen's Nest," 1874; "Wild Mike and his Victim," 1875; "Seaforth," 1878; "Peggy, and other Tales," 1880; "The Blue Veil," 1883, and "Transformed," 1886; "The Fisherman's Daughter," 1888; "Colonel," 1895; "Tony," 1897. Address: 8 New Burlington Street, W.

MONTREAL, Bishop of. See BOND, THE RIGHT REV. WILLIAM BENNETT.

MONTRESOR, Miss F. F., novelist, is the fourth daughter of Admiral F. B. Montresor. Her first book, "Into the Highways and Hedges," brought her fame in 1895, since which she has published "The One who Looked On," 1895; "Worth While," and "False Coin or True," 1896; and "At the Cross Roads," 1897. Address: 15 Elvaston Place, S.W.

MONTROSE, Duke of, The Right Hon. Douglas Beresford Malise Ronald Graham, K.T., A.D.C., was born on Nov. 7, 1852, and is the son of the 4th Duke, whom he succeeded in 1874. He was educated at Eton, joined the Coldstream Guards in 1872, was transferred to the 5th Lancers in 1874, and retired as Lieutenant in 1878. He is Hon. Colonel commanding the 3rd Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, Hereditary Sheriff of Dumbar-tonshire, was appointed Lord Clerk Register of Scotland in 1890, and A.D.C. to the Queen in 1897. He is a very large landowner, and Lord-Lieutenant of Stirlingshire. Created K.T. in 1879. In 1876 he married Violet Hermione, daughter of Sir Frederick U. Graham, 3rd Bart. Addresses: 27 Pont Street, S.W.; and Buchanan Castle, Glasgow.

MOODY, Dwight Lyman, American evangelist, was born at Northfield, Massachusetts, Feb. 5, 1837. He worked on a farm until the age of seventeen, when he became a clerk in a shoe-store in Boston.

In 1856 he went to Chicago, and while engaged there in active business entered zealously into missionary work among the poorer classes. During the Civil War he was in the service of the Christian Commission, and afterwards became a lay missionary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago. In 1873, accompanied by Mr. Sankey, an effective singer, he went to England, and the two instituted a series of week-day religious services, which attracted large and enthusiastic audiences. They returned to America in 1875, where they organised similar meetings all over the country. They again visited England in 1883. In addition to the many printed accounts of his meetings and reports of his addresses, Mr. Moody has published "Heaven," 1880; "Secret Power," 1881; "Way to God, and How to Find It," 1884; "Notes from my Bible," and "Pleasure and Profit in Bible Study," 1895; "Sowing and Reaping," 1896; and "The Overcoming Life, and other Sermons," 1897. His home is still at Northfield, Mass.

MOOR, Sir Ralph Dinham Rayment, K.C.M.G., Commissioner of the Niger Coast, is the son of Dr. W. H. Moor, of Brentingford, and was born about 1856. In 1881 he became an officer of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and after ten years' service went out as Vice-Consul to the Niger Coast, then called the Oil Rivers Protectorate. From 1893 he was Acting-Commissioner and Consul-General, and in 1896 attained his present post.

MOORE, Frank Frankfort, novelist and dramatist, born in Limerick, May 15, 1855, was educated at the Royal Academical Institution, Belfast, and by private tuition. He published in 1874 a volume of verses entitled "Flying from a Shadow," and subsequently the following novels and books of adventure: "Sojourners Together," "Where the Rail Runs," "Told by the Sea," "Daireen," "Mate of the Jessica," "The Fate of the Black Swan," "The Mutiny on the Albatross," "Will's Voyages," "The Great Orion," "Under Hatches," "Highways and High Seas," "Slaver of Zanzibar," "Fireflies and Mosquitoes," "Coral and Cocoa-nut," "Sailing and Sealing," "The Ice Prison," "From the Bush to the Breakers," "The Two Clippers," "Tre, Pol, and Pen," "I Forbid the Banns," "A Gray Eye or So," "A Journalist's Notebook," "One Fair Daughter," "They Call It Love," "The Secret of the Court," "The Sale of a Soul," "Dr. Koomadhi of Ashantee," "Phyllis of Philistia," "Two in the Bush," "In our Hours of Ease," "The Impudent Comedian," "The Jessamy Bride," "The Millionaires," "The Beautiful Sisters." His plays are: "A March Hare," "Broken Fetters," "Moth and Flame," "Forgotten," "The Queen's Room," "Oliver Goldsmith," "The Mayflower," "Kitty Clive," "Nell Gwyn," "The Fatal Gift," 1899. He has travelled in South Africa, India, and Burma. He married Grace, daughter of Colonel Balcombe. Address: 17 Pembroke Road, Kensington, W.

MOORE, George, novelist, is an Irishman of Norman descent, and was educated in Paris, where he imbibed his admiration for French art and its ideals. In England his discipleship of Flaubert and Maupassant has not been understood, his realism having constantly been misinterpreted by the leading booksellers who control the taste of the public. Of late years Mr. George Moore has been the consistent champion of what might be called the freedom of fiction. He has published: "Flowers of Passion," 1877; "Pagan Poems," 1881; "A Modern Lover," 1883; "A Mummer's Wife," 1884; "Literature at Nurse," 1885; "A Drama in Muslin," 1886; "Parnell and his Island," and "Mere Accident," 1887; "The Confessions of a Young Man," and "Spring Days," 1888; "Miss Fletcher," 1889; "Impressions and Opinions," and "Vain Fortune," 1890; "Modern Painting," and "The Strike at Arlingford," a play, 1893; "Esther Waters" (with the "Mummer's Wife," his best-known book), 1894; and "Celibates," 1895. His last novel is "Evelyn Innes," 1898. Mr. Moore is a frequent contributor to the journals of the day, his article usually dealing with some phase of his controversy with the booksellers.

MOORE, Sir John Voce, Lord Mayor of London for 1898-99, is the son of the late Mr. James Moore, merchant, of Stockport, Leicester, and Loughborough, and was born at Stockport in 1826. He is the head of the firm of Messrs. Moore Brothers, tea merchants, and entered the Corporation as a member of the Court of Common Council for Candlewick Ward in 1870, serving subsequently in the Chair of most of the important Committees, including the City Commission of Sewers. In 1885 he contested a seat in the Court of Aldermen for Bridge Ward with Sir Stuart Knill, but was defeated. In 1889, on the death of Sir Thomas Dakin, he was unanimously elected Alderman of Candlewick Ward. He served the office of Sheriff in 1894, and with his colleague, Sir Joseph Dimsdale, received the honour of knighthood in joint celebration of the opening of the Tower Bridge and the birth of an heir to the Throne in the direct line in the person of Prince Edward of York. He is a member of the Loriners' Company, a Churchman, and a Conservative. He married, in 1847, Eliza, daughter of Mr. Philip Willsea, of Norwich, but was left a widower some years ago. His only daughter, Mrs. John King-Farlow, is the Lady Mayoress. Private address: 28 Russell Square, W.C.

MOORE, Mary, actress, youngest daughter of the late Charles Moore, Parliamentary agent, was born in London, and early evinced a taste for the stage. She was educated at Warwick Hall, Maida Hill, and gained prizes for acting in German and English plays. At the age of sixteen she was married to Mr. James Albery, the playwright, through whom she made the acquaintance of London managers. None of them, however, would encourage her aspirations towards the actress's career. At length Mr. Wyndham was persuaded by Mrs. Bronson Howard to give Miss Moore a place as understudy in the first "Candidate" Company. Her chance soon came, and she played her superior's Lady Dorothy so well that she was eventually cast for the part and for that of Lady Oldacre. Subsequently Miss Moore played Lady Oldacre to Mr. Wyndham himself, and in October 1885 began her long career in that part and others as leading actress at the Criterion Theatre. Two of Miss Moore's great successes have been her Quakeress Lady Amaranth in O'Keefe's "Wild Oats," 1886, and her Ada Ingot in "David Garrick," in which, with Mr. Wyndham in the title rôle, she won unprecedented applause both here and in the German form of the play. Latterly Miss Moore has played as Mrs. Mildmay in "Still Waters run Deep," as Lotty in a revival of her husband's "Two Roses," in "The Bauble Shop," 1893; "Rebellious Susan," 1894; "Home Secretary," 1895; "The Squire of Dames," and as Dorothy Cruickshank in "Rosemary," &c. Address: 8 Ulster Terrace, Regent's Park.

MOORHOUSE, The Right Rev. James, D.D., Bishop of Manchester, son of Mr. James Moorhouse, a merchant of Sheffield; was born in that town in 1826. He received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1853, M.A. 1860, D.D., jure dignitatis, 1876). He became Vicar of St. John's, Fitzroy Square, in 1862; Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge in 1865; Vicar of Paddington and Rural Dean in 1868; Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen in 1874; Prebendary of St. Paul's and Warburtonian Lecturer in 1875. In May 1876 he was appointed Bishop of Melbourne, in succession to Dr. Perry, resigned. On the death of Dr. Fraser, in 1885, he was appointed by Lord Salisbury to the Bishopric of Manchester. He is the author of "Nature and Revelation," four sermons preached before the University of Cambridge, 1861; "Our Lord Jesus Christ the Subject of Growth in Wisdom," being the Hulsean Lectures for 1865; "Jacob," three sermons before the University of Cambridge; Charge at Primary Visitation, July 1889; "Christ and his Surroundings," October 1889; various single sermons; "Dangers of the Apostolic Age," 1890; and "The Teaching of Christ, 1891. He is married to a daughter of Canon Sale, Vicar of Sheffield. Addresses: Bishop's Court, Manchester, and Athenæum.

MORAN, His Eminence Cardinal Patrick Francis, D.D., Cardinal Archbishop of Sydney, born at Leghlinbridge, co. Carlow, Ireland, Sept. 16, 1830, was educated at the Irish College of St. Agatha, Rome. He is a nephew of another well-known Irish ecclesiastic, Cardinal Cullen. He was appointed Vice-President of the College in 1856, and Professor of Hebrew in the College of Propaganda, Rome. Returning to Ireland in 1866, he was Private Secretary to his Eminence Cardinal Cullen, Archbishop of Dublin; was consecrated Coadjutor Bishop of Ossory on March 5, 1872, and succeeded, a few months later, to that See. He was translated to the Archiepiscopal See of Sydney in Australia on March 21, 1884; and was made Cardinal, July 27, 1885. Besides publishing many pastoral letters, addressed to the clergy and laity of his diocese, he has laboured a great deal to promote the study of Irish history and antiquities. Among other works he has published: "Mémorial of the Most Rev. Oliver Plunkett," 1861; "Essays on the Origin, &c., of the Early Irish Church," and "History of the Catholic Archbishops of Dublin," 1864; "Historical Sketch of the Persecutions, &c., under Cromwell and the Puritans," 1865; "Acta S. Brendani," 1872; "Monasticon Hibernicum," 1873; "Spicilegium Ossoriense, being a Collection of Documents to illustrate the History of the Irish Church from the Reformation to the year 1800," 3 vols., 4to, 1874; "Irish Saints in Great Britain," Dublin, 1879; and "Letters on the Anglican Reformation," and "Occasional Papers," 1890; &c. Address: Sydney.

MORAY AND ROSS, Bishop of.
See KELLY, THE RIGHT REV. JAMES BUTLER KNILL.

MOREAS, Jean, French poet, was born at Athens, April 15, 1856, and early in life settled at Marseille, where he spent several years, and after travelling in Italy, Germany, and Greece he finally settled in Paris towards 1880. He is known as the leader of the Decadent School, whose Pope was the late M. Stéphane Mallarmé, and he has edited several of the newspapers of this cult, such as Le Décadent and La Vogue. His verse is distinguished for its systematic disregard of prosody, and his prose for its obscurity, resulting from the use of the strangest neologisms, and from the piling up of words for the mere pleasure of sound. He is one of the inventors of the word "symbolism," used in its literary sense, of which doctrine he was the high-priest, until he suddenly abjured it to take up Romanism, by which he understands a return to the versification of the French poets of the close of the Middle Ages. His chief works are: "Les Syrtes," 1885; "Les Cantilènes," 1886; and "Le Pèlerin passionné," 1890, in which he is the complete symbolist. He has also published a novel of Parisian life, "Les Damoiselles Goubert." His Paris address is 35 Rue des Dames.

MORGAN, John T., American statesman, was born at Athens, Tennessee, June 20, 1824. He was removed to Alabama when nine years old, and receiving an academic education he studied law, and was admitted to the Bar there in 1845. He was a member of the State Convention which passed the ordinance of secession in 1861, and joined the Confederate Army as a private in May of that year. He was promoted to be major, and later lieutenant-colonel of his regiment, and in 1862 he raised the 51st Regiment of Alabama Infantry, and was made its colonel, and in 1863 became Brigadier-General. At the close of the war between the States he resumed the practice of the law at Selma, Ala., and became interested in politics; was elected to the United States Senate in 1876, and re-elected in 1882, 1888, and in 1894. On the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands by the United States in 1898 he was appointed one of the commissioners to visit that locality, and recommend what legislation would be required for the government of the islands.

MORLEY, Earl of, The Right Hon. Albert Edmund Parker, only son of the 2nd Earl, was born at Kent House, Knightsbridge, June 11, 1843, and educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a first class in classics in 1865. He succeeded to the title in 1864, and was Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen from 1868 to 1874. He was Under Secretary of State for War in Mr. Gladstone's Government from 1880 to 1885, Privy Counsellor, 1886; and on the formation of the new cabinet in February 1886 became First Commissioner of Works, but resigned in April through disagreement with Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill. He was elected Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, and was Deputy Speaker of the same in 1889. In 1876 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Staynor Holford, Esq., of Westonbirt, Gloucestershire, and Dorchester House. Addresses: Saltram, Plympton, Devon; and 31 Prince's Gardens, S.W.

MORLEY, Right Hon. Arnold, fourth son of the late Mr. Samuel Morley, was born in 1849, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took honours in the Math. Tripos, and rowed in the 1st Trinity boat when it was head of the river. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1873, joined the Midland Circuit, and first entered Parliament in 1880, as Member for Nottingham. He represented that borough until 1885, when he was returned for its Eastern Division. He is Vice-President of the "Eighty Club," and was one of the party who accompanied Mr. Gladstone in the Sunbeam to Norway. He has several times represented the Home Office at inquiries relating to accidents in mines. In Mr. Gladstone's administration of 1886 Mr. Arnold Morley held the office of Patronage Secretary to the Treasury, and First Whip, and in 1892 was appointed Postmaster-General as a member of the Cabinet. At the General Post Office he has introduced several important reforms, and one of his last administrative acts was the appointment of the "Tweedmouth Committee" to consider and report upon all complaints made by any class of post-office officials. He has travelled considerably, having been three times in America, and having spent the winter of 1896-97 in India, when he made the tour of the world, and visited China and Japan. He is no longer in Parliament, having been defeated in the general election of 1895. Addresses: 7 Stratton Street, W.; and Athenæum.

MORLEY, The Right Hon. John, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., M.P., is the eldest son of the late Mr. Jonathan Morley, surgeon, of Blackburn, Lancashire, where he was born in Dec. 24, 1838. He was educated at Cheltenham College, and at Lincoln College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1859, and M.A. in 1874; and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, of which Society he was made a Benchers in 1893. He was for some years editor of the Literary Gazette, the title of which was subsequently altered to the Parthenon. Mr. Morley was editor of the Fortnightly Review, from 1867 to October 1882. He was also editor of the Pall Mall Gazette from May 1880 till August 1883, and of Macmillan's Magazine from 1883 to 1885. He unsuccessfully contested the borough of Blackburn in 1869, in the Liberal interest, and the city of Westminster in 1880; but in February 1883, at a by-election, he was returned as an advanced Liberal by the borough of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, defeating his Conservative opponent, Mr. Gainsford Bruce, by a majority of 2256 (9443 votes against 7187). Mr. Morley presided over the great Conference of Liberals held at Leeds in October 1883. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's "Home Rule" Cabinet, February 1886, Mr. Morley was appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland; and throughout the debate on the Bill (for which he was in a great measure responsible), he was the Prime Minister's right-hand man. As almost the only cabinet minister who had been a consistent Home Ruler for many years, Mr. Morley was regarded with respect even by his most thoroughgoing opponents. He is one of the five Liberals who met in January 1887 for the purpose of discovering a modus vivendi for the re-union of the Liberal party. He was returned at the head of the poll for Newcastle, July 1886, and by a narrow majority, July 1892, and was appointed Irish Secretary in August, when he again fought the seat, the contest arousing great interest. His antagonist was Mr. Ralli, who was supported by a section of the Labour Party, headed by Messrs. Champion and Keir Hardie, M.P. Mr. Ralli gave a qualified adherence to an Eight Hours Bill, and thus won the suffrages of the working-men, while Mr. Morley entirely refused to support it. Polling took place on August 25, 1892, and Mr. Morley was returned by a majority of 1739. At the general election of 1895 he was defeated, although his Irish administration had been most successful. He had held the Newcastle seat for twelve years. In the same year he became a candidate for the Montrose Burghs, and was returned in 1896. His works are: "Edmund Burke, an Historical Study," 1867; "Critical Miscellanies," 1871, 2nd series, 1877; "Voltaire," 1872; "On Compromise," 1874; "Rousseau," 1876; "Diderot and the Encyclopædists," 2 vols., 1878; "Life of Richard Cobden," 1881; "Walpole," 1889, in the Twelve English Statesmen Series; "Studies in Literature," 1891; "The Study of Literature," 1894, and several recent speeches which have been reprinted. He is the editor of the English Men of Letters series. Mr. Morley is an Honorary D.C.L. of Oxford, LL.D. of Cambridge and Glasgow, and a Trustee of the British Museum. He was elected a member of the Athenæum Club in 1874. Addresses: 57 Elm Park Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

MORRIS, Henry, F.R.C.S., M.A., &c., received his medical education at Guy's, and afterwards graduated M.A. in 1870 at the University of London, obtaining high distinction in philosophy. He had previously taken the M.B. degree in 1867. He became F.R.C.S. in 1873, and is a Member of Council and Member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. He is Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery and Anatomy at the Middlesex Hospital, Examiner in Anatomy at the University of London, and is or has been an Examiner in Anatomy at the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons and at Durham University. He delivered the "Cavendish Lecture" in 1893, and has contributed important articles to Holmes's "System of Surgery," Ashurst's "Encyclopædia of Surgery," and to the leading medical journals. He is editor of "Morris's System of Anatomy," a work to which a number of experts contributed, and author of "The Anatomy of the Joints of Man," "Surgical Diseases of the Kidneys," &c. Address: 8 Cavendish Square, W.

MORRIS, Sir Lewis, J.P., was born in Carmarthen in January 1833, being the eldest son of the late L. E. Williams Morris, of Carmarthen, formerly of Blannant, Breconshire, by Sophia, daughter of the late John Hughes, of Carmarthen. He was educated at Cowbridge, and Sherborne Schools and Jesus College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1855 as first class in Classics and Chancellor's Prizeman; M.A. 1858; was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in November 1861, when he obtained a Certificate of Honour of the first class; practised chiefly as a conveyancing counsel until 1880; was elected an Honorary Fellow of Jesus College in 1877. In 1879 he was appointed a Knight of the Order of the Saviour (of Greece). In the same year he accepted the office of Honorary Secretary of the University College of Wales, of which he was afterwards treasurer. In 1880 he was appointed on the Departmental Committee charged by the Government to inquire into Intermediate and Higher Education in Wales, and in the same year was made a Justice of the Peace for Carmarthenshire. He was appointed Vice-Chairman of the Political Committee of the Reform Club, in the place of the late Mr. W. P. Adam, M.P.; and was a candidate, in December 1881, for the Carmarthen burghs, but retired; in 1886 he was Gladstonian candidate for Pembroke and Haverfordwest, but was defeated. In 1891, on the retirement of Sir C. P. Stepney, he was again a candidate for his native borough, but retired at the request of Mr. Gladstone, in order not to endanger the seat. It is understood that he has now renounced all connection with politics. Sir Lewis Morris is the author of numerous addresses and papers on educational subjects, especially on the now established University of Wales, of which he was one of the earliest advocates. He is a member of the governing bodies of the three Welsh colleges, but he is perhaps best known for his contributions to the poetical literature of the time. In 1871-74 appeared the 3 vols. of "Songs of Two Worlds," since collected, 23rd edition. In 1876 appeared Book ii., and in 1877 Books i. and iii., of "The Epic of Hades," now in a 37th edition. In December 1878 appeared "Gwen, a Drama, in Monologue," in March 1880, "The Ode of Life," both which are since in a 17th edition; and in October 1883, "Songs Unsung," since in a 15th edition. In 1886 appeared a tragedy "Gycia," written for the stage, but not yet represented, now in a 14th edition; and in 1887, "Songs of Britain," now in a 12th edition, embodying several beautiful Welsh legends, and containing also the Odes on the Queen's Jubilee, and on the foundation of the Imperial Institute (the latter written by request, owing to the illness of the Laureate), for which Mr. Morris received the Jubilee Medal from the Queen. The above works are now collected, and were published under the author's name, in a popular edition of one volume, in the spring of 1890, which volume has passed into a 9th edition. In October 1890 Mr. Morris published his poem, "A Vision of Saints," which, proceeding after the manner of Dante, attempts for the Christian ideal what "The Epic of Hades" did for that of the Pagan world. This poem is now in the 4th edition. Mr. Morris wrote in 1892 another tragedy from Byzantine history. In 1894 appeared "Songs without Notes," and in 1896, "Idylls and Lyrics." The Odes on the Death of the Duke of Clarence, on the opening of the Imperial Institute, and on the Marriage of the Duke and Duchess of York, are from his pen, and the last two were written by desire. Mr. Morris is the great-grandson of the well-known Welsh antiquary and poet, Lewis Morris, of Penbryn. Addresses: Penbryn House, Carmarthen; 42 Portsdown Road, W.; and Athenæum.

MORRIS, Malcolm A., F.R.C.S. Edin., received his medical education at St. Mary's Hospital, London, and in Berlin and Vienna. He is at the head of the Surgical Skin Department and Lecturer on Dermatology at St. Mary's Hospital, and has been Clinical Assistant at the Hospital for Diseases of the Skin. He was appointed by the Prince of Wales as the representative of the National Association for the Prevention of Consumption and other Forms of Tuberculosis at the Berlin Congress for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, which sat in May 1899. He has been President of the Harveian Society, is Fellow of the Royal Med. Chir. Soc., and member of many medical societies, besides being Corresponding Member to several foreign learned bodies. He is editor of the Practitioner and of the Book of Health, and author of "Skin Diseases: an Outline of the Principles and Practice of Dermatology," 1894. To the Pathological Society's Transactions, the British Journal of Dermatology, Heath's "Dictionary of Surgery," and the leading medical journals, he has contributed many papers on lupus, the hair, the skin, &c. Address: 8 Harley Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MORRIS, Lord, The Right Hon. Michael, Bart., LL.D. Dublin, Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, eldest son of Martin Morris, J.P., of Spiddal, co. Galway, by Julia, daughter of Dr. Charles Blake, of Galway, was born at the latter place on Nov. 14, 1827. He received his education at Erasmus Smith's College, Galway, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1847, First Senior Moderator and Gold Medallist. He was called to the Bar in Ireland in June 1849, and made a Queen's Counsel in February 1863, and a Bench of King's Inn in 1866. Mr. Morris, who was High Sheriff in 1849-50, held the office of Recorder of Galway from 1857 to 1865. The representative of one of the old families known as the "Tribes of Galway," he was first elected as one of the members in Parliament of the borough of Galway, on Independent principles, in July 1865 having polled 90 per cent. of the electors; was subsequently twice re-elected without opposition, on his appointment as Solicitor-General for Ireland (July 1866), and as Attorney-General (Nov. 1866) in Lord Derby's Government; and retained the seat until he was raised to the Bench, as one of the Judges of the Common Pleas in Ireland, in 1867, when he was succeeded in the representation of Galway by his brother, Sir George Morris, K.C.B. He served as a member of the Royal Commission to inquire into Primary Education in Ireland in 1868, 1869, and 1870; and became a Commissioner of National Education in 1868, and a member of the Senate of the Royal University; was appointed Royal Chief-Justice of the Common Pleas in 1876, and in 1887 was appointed Lord Chief-Justice of Ireland. He was created a baronet in August 1885. In 1889 he was made a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, and created a Peer for life under the name, style, and title of Baron Morris of Spiddal, co. Galway; and was made a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn. Lord Morris is a member of the Privy Council for Ireland since 1866, and in 1889 he was sworn a member of the Privy Council in England. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Dublin in 1887. Lord Morris married, in 1860, Anna, daughter of the late Hon. H. G. Hughes, Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland. Permanent address: Spiddal, co. Galway; and Athenæum.

MORRIS, Mowbray Walter, editor of Macmillan's Magazine, second son of Mowbray Morris, of London, was born in 1847, and educated at Eton, and at Merton College, Oxford. He has published "The First Afghan War," 1878; "Essays in Theatrical Criticism," and "Poet's Walk," 1882; "Hunting" in the Badminton Library, in conjunction with the Duke of Beaufort, 1885; and works on Claverhouse and Montrose. Club: United University.

MORRIS, Philip Richard, A.R.A., was born at Devonport, Dec. 4, 1833. The son of an engineer and ironfounder, he pursued his early artistic studies in the hours won with some difficulty from the working day. He owed his first encouragement to Mr. Holman Hunt, and by the advice of that eminent artist, studied the Elgin Marbles in the British Museum. He next entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where his first success was made by gaining the Silver Medal for the best drawing from the life. In the following year he achieved double honours by obtaining the Silver Medal for the best painting from the nude figure, and a second similar prize for the best painting from the draped figure. In 1858 he won the Gold Medal for the best historical picture, the subject being "The Good Samaritan," and subsequently competed successfully for the Travelling Studentship, which enabled him to prosecute his studies in France and Italy. While he was yet a student in the schools of the Royal Academy his first publicly exhibited picture appeared on its walls under the title of "Peaceful Days;" since which time Mr. Morris has constantly exhibited at the Royal Academy, the Grosvenor Gallery, and elsewhere. Among his best-known pictures are "The Shepherd of Jerusalem," "The Mowers," "Sailor's Wedding," "The Fête Dieu at Dieppe," "Sons of the Brave," "Circling Hours," "The Builder's Daughter," 1897; "The Return of the Dove," 1898; "Purity," 1899, and numerous portraits of children and distinguished men and women of which, one of the most recent, in 1898, was a portrait of Mr. Picking Pick, F.R.C.S. Mr. Morris was elected A.R.A. on June 18, 1877. He is married to a daughter of J. Evans of Elangollen. Address: 33 St. John's Wood Road, N.W.

MORRISON, Arthur, novelist, was born in Kent on Nov. 1, 1863. He was educated at various private schools, and was a clerk in a public office in 1883. A few years later he resigned, and took a secretaryship. At this time he was a zealous cyclist, and was well known among the comparative few who then practised the sport. For his amusement he contributed many facetious verses and articles to the cycling press of that time, and afterward began in the same way to make contributions to newspapers and magazines of the ordinary and more important sort. This led to the resignation of his secretaryship in 1890, in order to join the staff of a daily paper, and soon he became a contributor to many periodicals. In particular he became connected with the National Observer, at that time under the editorship of Mr. W. E. Henley. Before he became a journalist the business of his secretaryship and other matters had called him much into the East End of London, and he made himself intimate with the various aspects of life in that part. He had published several studies and sketches of that life before his connection with the National Observer, notably the sketch "A Street" which forms the introduction to "Tales of Mean Streets." The suggestions of Mr. W. E. Henley, however, confirmed him in an intention, already formed, to write a complete series of stories of East End life, and in consequence the greater part of the numbers afterwards printed in his first book appeared in the National Observer during the years 1892, 1893, and 1894. Gathered in a volume, and published in November 1894, with the title "Tales of Mean Streets," they attracted instant attention, and made a notable success. In the meantime Mr. Morrison had entered into a contract to produce four volumes of detective stories, one a year, for serial as well as for ordinary publication, and the first of these volumes appeared at about the same time as the "Tales," the remainder following at the agreed intervals. In the autumn of 1896 his first novel, "A Child of the Jago," appeared, with even more success than had attended "Tales of Mean Streets." An essay on these two books is included in the second volume of "Ecrivains Etrangers," by M. Teodor de Wyzewa, the eminent French critic. Mr. Morrison is also known for his large collection of prints and drawings by the old Japanese masters. His published works in their order are: "Tales of Mean Streets," 1894; "Martin Hewitt, Investigator," 1894; "Chronicles of Martin Hewitt," 1895; "Adventures of Martin Hewitt," 1896; "A Child of the Jago," 1896; "The Dorrington Deed-Box," 1897; and "To London Town," 1898. Address: Savage Club, Adelphi Terrace, London.

MORRISON, George Ernest, M.D., F.R.G.S., Times Correspondent at Peking, was born at Geelong, Victoria, on Feb. 4, 1862. He was educated at Geelong College and Edinburgh University, and graduated M.D. of the latter in 1895 (M.S. in 1887). His travels have been numerous and daring. He walked across Australia from the Gulf of Carpentaria to Melbourne in 1882-83. In October 1883 he was speared by the natives in New Guinea, and for nearly a year carried the spear-head in his body until it was extracted in Edinburgh. In 1894 he crossed overland from Shanghai to Rangoon. As Special Correspondent for the Times he has undertaken some important travels in China and Siberia (1896-97), and during the recent period of diplomatic tension in China (1898) has frequently sent home messages to his paper from which even the Government have been glad to draw their information. His overland journey of 1894 has been described by him in his volume "An Australian in China." Address: Peking.

MORTEN, Miss Honnor, Member for City Division of the London School Board since 1897, born at Cheam in 1863, is a daughter of a solicitor, and niece of William Black. She was educated at Bedford College for Women, and was for many years engaged in nursing and journalism, and helped to found the Nurses' Co-operation and the Association of Asylum Workers. She lectured on health and nursing subjects under the Home Office, the Technical Education Board, and other bodies, and is at present Lecturer on Sick-Nursing at the Borough Polytechnic. She is Warden of the Hoxton Settlement, and represents Hackney on the London School Board. She published "Sketches of Hospital Life," "The Nurse's Dictionary," "How to become a Nurse," "How to Treat Accidents and Illnesses," and has edited "The Complete System of Nursing," 1898. Addresses: Ivy Hall, Richmond, Surrey; and 280 Blegton Buildings, Nile Street, Hoxton, N.

MORTON, The Hon. Levi Parsons, LL.D., American banker and statesman, was born at Shoreham, Vermont, May 16, 1824. He entered mercantile life at an early age, and soon showed a remarkable aptitude for business. In 1850 he became a partner in a Boston firm of merchants, and in 1854 removed to New York, where he established the firm of Morton & Grinnell. He founded, in 1863, the banking houses of Morton, Bliss, & Co. at New York, and Morton, Rose, & Co. in London, the latter serving as fiscal agents of the U.S. Government from 1873 to 1884. Both these houses were active in the syndicates that negotiated U.S. bonds, and in the payments of the Geneva award of $15,500,000 and the Halifax fisheries award of $5,500,000. Mr. Morton was an Honorary Commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1878, and in the same year was elected a Republican Member of the House of Representatives, and was re-elected in 1880. He declined a nomination for the Vice-Presidency in 1880, but accepted the mission to France when it was tendered him by President Garfield. During his occupancy of that post, 1881-85, he secured the removal of the restrictions upon the importation of American pork, and obtained a legal status for American corporations in France. In 1888 he accepted the nomination for the Vice-Presidency again offered him by the Republican party, and was duly elected in November of that year for the term expiring March 4, 1893. In 1894, he was elected Governor of the State of New York. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Dartmouth College in 1881.

MOSS, The Rev. Henry Whitehead, M.A., Head-master of Shrewsbury School, was born in Lincoln on June 23, 1841, and is the eldest son of the late Henry Moss, of Lincoln. He was educated at Shrewsbury School, and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was thrice successively Porson Prizeman, Craven University Scholar in 1862, Browne's Medallist in 1863, and Senior Classic in 1864. In that year he was appointed Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College, and in 1866 to his present head-mastership. He has been frequently on the Committee of the Head-master's Conference, and was a selected Speaker at Church Congresses in 1875 and 1896. He is married to Mary, the only daughter of the Rev. W. A. Beaufort. Address: The Schools, Shrewsbury.

MOSTYN, The Right Rev. Francis, D.D., is Vicar Apostolic of Wales, the Vicariate having been erected by Pope Leo XIII. on Mar. 4, 1895. He was born at Talacre in Flintshire, on Aug. 6, 1860, and is of the family of Sir Piers Mostyn, Bart. He was consecrated Bishop of Ascalon, by Cardinal Vaughan, in September 1895. Address: Richmond Villa, Grosvenor Road, Wrexham.

MOTT, Frederick Walker, F.R.S., M.D., B.Sc. Lond.; F.R.C.P.; physician to out-patients, Charing Cross Hospital; pathologist to the London County Asylums; was born at Brighton, and is the son of Henry Mott. He was educated at University College and Hospital, London, and was University Scholar and Gold Medallist. He was at one time Lecturer in Physiology at Charing Cross Hospital Medical School, and is now engaged in investigating the Neuro-Pathology of Insanity. He is author of numerous contributions in medical journals and recent text-books of medicine, of several original papers relating to neurology in the Proceedings and Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, and in "Brain." He married Georgiana, daughter of the late G. T. Soley. Addresses: 25 Nottingham Place, W.; and Chesham Bois, Bucks.

MOTTL, Herr Felix, was born at Vienna in 1856, and studied at Lemberg and the Vienna Conservatorium. He first attracted notice as conductor of the concerts given by the Richard Wagner Verein, and in 1876 he was stage conductor under Richter (q.v.) of the Bayreuth performance of the Nibelungen tetralogy. Subsequently he became conductor of the Grand-Ducal Opera House at Karlsruhe, and in 1886 he conducted "Tristan und Isolde" at Bayreuth. He first appeared in London in 1894, and lovers of good music now look forward to his concerts as one of the regular features of the musical season. His opera, "Agnes Bernauer," was produced at Weimar in 1880.

MOUKHTAR-PACHA, Ghazi Ahmed, springs direct from a family of silk merchants of Broussa in Asia Minor. His father, Hadji Halil Agha, died young, and Ahmed Moukhtar, who was born Oct. 31, 1839, was brought up by his grandfather, who sent him, in 1851, to the preparatory military school of his native city. He manifested a remarkable aptitude for military studies, and at the expiration of five years he passed from the school first of his class. Entering the Military Academy at Constantinople, he remained four years as pupil, when, in consequence of his progress, he was, while still pursuing his studies, promoted to the grade of lieutenant. When he left, as a further reward of merit, he was made captain on the staff, and in that capacity he in 1860 joined the head-quarters of the Serder Ekrem Omar Pacha, in Montenegro, where, with a mere handful of troops, he dashed at an almost impregnable pass, and rendered such service that he was decorated on the spot with the Medjidieh of the fifth class. After a time Ahmed Moukhtar returned to the Military Academy, where he was appointed to the post of Professor of Astronomy, Military Tactics, and Fortifications. In this somewhat mixed capacity he remained until 1863, when he was sent as binbashi, or major and chief of the staff of the division of Islaheye—a division of organisation—at Alexandretta, under the command of Dervish Pacha, now mushir at Batoum. At the end of 1864 the young soldier was appointed caimakam, or lieutenant-colonel, and tutor to Prince Yousouf Issedin, the eldest son of Sultan Abdul Aziz. In this capacity he travelled over the greater part of Europe, and received the Legion of Honour, the Red Eagle, and the Crown of Iron among other decorations, and in 1867 returned to Constantinople. At that time Prince Yousouf became Colonel of the Imperial Guard, and Ahmed Moukhtar was appointed one of the commissioners for regulating the frontier of Montenegro, in which capacity he served until 1869, by his policy saving to Turkey the strategical point of Veli Malou Berdu, between Spitz and Podgoritz, while as the ex-Professor of Fortifications he made the tête du pont of Vezir Keupri. For these services he was promoted to the third class of the Medjidieh, and returning to Stamboul was made a member of the Council of War. Three months later he was nominated General of Brigade, under Redif Pacha, then commanding the Yemen expedition against the Arabs, 20,000 of whom were in insurrection. Soon after Moukhtar's arrival Redif fell ill, and the command fell into the hands of the young liwa, or Major-General. He took the city of Yedy, and was promoted for that achievement to the grade of ferik, or General of division, and chief of all the corps in Yemen, Redif becoming Governor, until he was superseded, on the ground of illness, by Essad Pacha. When Ali Pacha, the Minister of War, died, Essad Pacha became seraskier, and Moukhtar was promoted to mushir, or full General, and the Governorship of Yemen, in 1871, at the age of thirty-three. He also received the Osmanli of the first class in brilliants. After the taking of Sana he was further decorated with the first class of the Medjidieh. In 1873 he returned to Stamboul, where he was appointed Minister of Public Works, but he did not take up the post, as a few days afterwards he was named Governor of Crete. He was not destined, however, to occupy the post, for the command of the Shumla army corps fell vacant, and it was conferred on the young mushir. He remained at Shumla for 13½ months, during which time he constructed the existing fortifications. Next, appointed Governor and Military Commandant at Erzeroum, he served in the Armenian capital for another 13½ months, when, for yet a third period of 13½ months, he took the command of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Montenegro, where his friends claimed for him that he had gained twenty battles and lost only one. Now named Governor of Candia, he was at the end of ten days about to leave Constantinople when the Government detained him to have his advice on the questions affecting Montenegro, giving him the nominal command of the 4th or Erzeroum army corps. On Mar. 25, 1877, while in his bureau at Stamboul, he learned that for the first time the prospects of peace were judged hopeless by Turkish statesmen, and making an immediate application for a ship he left in a man-of-war on the 26th for Trebizond, where he arrived on the 30th, proceeding, after three days' hard work in the organisation of land transport, &c., to Erzeroum and Kars. He had only three weeks to provide for the defence of Armenia when the war broke out, and in less than a week from his arrival in Kars that fortress was invested, and Moukhtar retired on the Soghanly Dag. His gallant conduct has become a matter of history. On the evening of Oct. 1, 1877, he received the news that the Sultan had conferred on him the title of Ghazi, one of the greatest honours that can be given to an Ottoman. The word originally means fanatic, but in its modern acceptation it is both Defender of the Faith and Conqueror. Besides this title, the first class of the Medjidieh in diamonds, two fine Arab horses, and a sword in brilliants, marked his Ottoman Majesty's sense of Ahmed Moukhtar's services. In April 1878 he was appointed Grand-Master of Artillery, and in November of the same year, Commandant of Janina. In September 1883 he was chosen to proceed to Berlin to attend the German autumn military manoeuvres. He also had several interviews with Prince Bismarck with reference to the entrance of Turkey into the Austro-German alliance. In 1885 he was sent to Egypt as High Commissioner from the Turkish Government. Here he had long conferences with Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, who represented Great Britain. Moukhtar Pacha's influence on Turkish policy is described as still considerable, and, during these negotiations, he used it against England and contributed greatly to the failure of our plans in Egypt. He still resides in that country. His Excellency is the author of an astronomical work called "Fenni Bassite, ou la Science du Quadrant Solaire pour le Temps Turque"; the hours in Turkey depending upon the moment of sunset, and consequently varying from day to day. Moukhtar-Pacha has retained his early interest in mathematics and astronomy, and has written an important work on the forms of calculation adopted before the logarithms, on the astrolabe, and on a reform in the calendar, whereby the annual error is reduced to two seconds; so that, for 30,000 years, the equinox would always fall on the true day.

MOULTON, John Fletcher, M.A., M.P., Q.C., F.R.S., &c., the third son of the late Rev. James Egan Moulton, was born at Madeley, in Shropshire, on Nov. 18, 1844. He received the elements of his education at the New Kingswood School, near Bath; and subsequently proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he became a pupil of the celebrated Dr. Routh. Throughout his school and college days young Moulton displayed an extraordinary faculty for mastering any subject which he attacked; so much so as hardly ever to fail of securing the first place in any examination for which he sat. His favourite subject was mathematics. During his undergraduate course at Cambridge, he was a competitor for mathematical honours at the London University, and he succeeded in carrying off in succession a mathematical scholarship at the matriculation examination, and again another mathematical scholarship at the first B.A. examination. In the next year he became University Scholar; and, in 1868, he graduated M.A. and obtained the Gold Medal for mathematics. Meanwhile he was equally carrying everything before him at Cambridge, where he won the first mathematical scholarship at St. John's College; and, subsequently, in the same year in which he took the Gold Medal at the London University, became Senior Wrangler and first Smith's Prizeman. On this occasion his score of marks was so extraordinary that his excess of marks over what would have sufficed to secure the Senior Wranglership would alone have entitled him to a high place among the wranglers. As was natural in the circumstances, Mr. Moulton, when the choice of a profession presented itself to his mind, at first inclined to adopt an academic career, and he became a Fellow, afterwards a Lecturer of Christ's College, and subsequently a Lecturer at Jesus College. The attractions of a larger sphere, however, prevailed, and in 1873 he resigned his Fellowship and came to London, receiving in the next year a call to the Bar at the Middle Temple. He took silk in 1885, and is still in leading practice at the Bar. In politics Mr. Moulton has always been an advanced thinker. He was a Radical member of the Union Debating Society at Cambridge, over which he for a time presided, and sat for a short while in the Parliament of 1885-86 as the Liberal representative of Clapham. He became the designated Liberal candidate for the representation of Nottingham, but was defeated by a majority of 83 in the election of 1892. In March 1894, however, he was returned to Parliament, after a close contest, as member for South Hackney, from the representation of which Lord (then Sir C.) Russell had just retired. In 1898 he was returned as a Liberal member for the Launceston Division of Cornwall. He was elected an Alderman by the London County Council in 1893. In the discussion of the conditions under which the University of London should be reorganised upon a new footing, a discussion which is proceeding actively at the present time, Mr. Moulton has taken a leading part as the champion of the cause of non-resident students. Notwithstanding professional and political preoccupations, Mr. Moulton has from time to time made contributions to current scientific discussion, and in particular during the year 1879 he wrote, in collaboration with the late Dr. William Spottiswoode, at that time President of the Royal Society, two elaborate papers upon the discharge of Electricity through rarefied gases, or, to speak more popularly, in vacuum tubes. The merit of these contributions was at once recognised in scientific circles, and Mr. Moulton was, in June 1880, elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society. Again, in 1881, he assisted at the Congress of Electricians, which met during that year in Paris, and on that occasion was decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honour. He married, in 1875, Clara, the widow of the late R. W. Thompson of Edinburgh; she died in 1889. Addresses: 57 Onslow Square, S.W.; and 11 King's Bench Walk.

MOUNET, Jean Sully, known to the theatrical world of France as Mounet-Sully, the tragedian, was born at Bergerac, Dordogne, on Feb. 27, 1841. He showed a precocious love of the drama, and the actor's career, and met with opposition from his family. At the age of twenty-one, however, he undertook his own dramatic education, entered the Conservatoire, and was praised by Bressant. In 1868 he won a first prize for tragic acting, and made a modest début at the Odéon in Paris. During the war of 1870 he was in command of a company of mobiles; and for a time, in 1871, thought of giving up the stage, but in July 1872 he was at length given the part of Oreste at the Théâtre Français. In this rôle he won his laurels, and in eighteen months his services as a tragedian won him his election as sociétaire to the first theatre in the world. He has remained there ever since, and has become famous for the power and nervous intensity of his acting and the beauty of his voice. His most celebrated parts are Achilles in "Iphigénie," Xiphaires in "Mithridate," Hyppolytus in "Phèdre," and Orosmanes in "Zaire." In 1888 he surpassed himself as Œdipus Rex in the Sophoclean tragedy of that name, which was acted amid the ruins of the Roman theatre at Orange. He is also famous for his impersonation of Hamlet, and of various modern rôles such as the King in "Le Roi s'Amuse," Fabrice in "L'Aventurière," and Saint Megrin in "Henri III. et sa Cour." He was elected a Knight of the Legion of Honour in 1889. He has himself written a drama in five acts, "La Buveuse de Larmes." When the Comédie Française visited London in 1894 Mounet-Sully was one of the chief attractions. His Hamlet especially was contrasted with that of Sir H. Irving and that of Mr. Tree. He may be described as a fine French classical actor of the old school. His brother, Jean Paul Mounet, is also an actor of some eminence. He was born in 1847, and in 1889 entered the Théâtre Français.

MOUNT-EDGECUMBE, Earl of, The Right Hon. William Henry Edgumbe, D.C.L., D.L., was born on Nov. 5, 1832, and is the son of the 3rd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1861, and Caroline, daughter of Rear-Admiral Charles Fielding. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took honours in the final Mathematical School in 1853 (M.A.). In 1858 he was appointed Esquerry to the Prince of Wales, and, as Viscount Valletort, represented Plymouth in Parliament from 1859 till 1861. From 1862 to 1866 he was Lord of the Bedchamber to the Prince of Wales, from 1879 to 1880 Lord Chamberlain of the Queen's Household, and from 1885 to 1886 and 1886 to 1892 Lord Steward. He was A.D.C. to the Queen from 1881 to 1897, has been Lord-Lieutenant of Cornwall from 1877 onwards, and in 1889 was appointed Hon. Colonel of the 2nd Volunteer Battalion of the Devonshire Regiment. He married, in 1858, Katherine, daughter of the 1st Duke of Abercorn, K.G. She died in 1874. Addresses: 5 Victoria Square, S.W.; and Mount-Edgumbe House, Plymouth, &c.

MOUNTFORD, Edward William, is the son of Edward Mountford, and was born at Shipston-on-Stour, Worcestershire, on Sept. 22, 1855. Educated privately, he was articled in 1872 to Messrs. Habershon & Pite, architects, and began to practise as an architect in 1881. Amongst the various buildings, which have been erected from his designs, there may be mentioned: The Sheffield Town Hall, 1890; Battersea Town Hall, Battersea Polytechnic, St. Olave's Grammar School, Southwark; Northampton Institute, Clerkenwell; Museum and Technical School at Liverpool. Mr. Mountford is a Member of Council of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and he was President of the Architectural Association from 1893 to 1895. Address: 17 Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.

MOUNT-STEPHEN, Lord, George Stephen, Bart., was born at Dufftown, Scotland, on June 5, 1829. He emigrated to Canada in 1850 and became a merchant in Montreal. In 1872 he was elected a Director of the Bank of Montreal, of which he was made President in 1878. In 1879 he became President of the St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Manitoba Railway Company, and in 1881 President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. In 1887 as a memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee, he and Sir Donald Smith (now Lord Strathcarron) gave £200,000 to found the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal, and in 1896 they gave £200,000 more to provide a permanent endowment fund. In 1886 he was created a Baronet for his public services in connection with the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in 1891 was raised to the Peerage under the title of Lord Mount-Stephen. He married (1) Charlotte, daughter of Benjamin Kane (died 1896), and (2), in 1897, Gian, daughter of the late Commander Robert George Tufnell. Addresses: Bocket Hall, Hatfield; 16 James Street, Buckingham Street, S.W.; and Grand Metis, Quebec.

MOWAT, The Hon. Sir Oliver, G.C.M.G., Q.C., LL.D., Canadian statesman, was born at Kingston, July 22, 1820, and is the eldest son of the late John Mowat, of Canisby, Caithness. He was called to the Bar of Upper Canada in November 1841, and was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1856, and a Bench of the Law Society for the Province in the same year. From 1856 to 1857 he was a Commissioner for consolidating the Public General Statutes of Canada and Upper Canada. He entered political life in 1857, as representative of South Ontario, and was Provincial Secretary in the following year in the Brown-Dorion Government, which, however, lasted but a few days. He was Postmaster-General in 1863-64; and from November 1864 until October 1872 was one of the Vice-Chancellors of Ontario. He left the Bench at the latter period to form a new administration in Ontario, and became Premier and Attorney-General for the Province, and representative of North Oxford in the Legislature, positions which he held till his resignation, in July 1896, to enter Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Cabinet as Minister of Justice. He was appointed Lieut.-Governor of Ontario, Nov. 18, 1897. He is the author of many important legislative measures in the Provincial Parliament, and is a Liberal in politics. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Queen's College, Kingston, in 1872, and by the University of Toronto in 1889. In 1892 he was made K.C.M.G., and in 1897 he was promoted to be a Knight Grand Cross of the same order. He married Jane, second daughter of the late John Ewart, of Toronto, in 1846. She died in 1893. Address: Toronto.

MUDFORD, William H., the life editor of the Standard, was born in 1839, and is the son of the proprietor of the Kentish Observer and the Canterbury Journal. He became manager of the Standard in 1873, and editor in 1876. It is said that the success of that important paper is mainly due to the ability and moderation of its present editor, who nightly communicates with his staff by telephone from his house at Sandgate, Kent. Address: 63 Cornhill, E.C.

MUIR, Matthew Moncrieff Pattison, was born at Glasgow on Nov. 1, 1848, and educated at the High School of Glasgow and the University of Glasgow. He studied chemistry under the late Dr. Penny at Anderson's College, Glasgow, and under Professor Fittig at the University of Tübingen. He was Demonstrator in Chemistry in Anderson's College, 1871-74; Assistant Lecturer and Demonstrator in Chemistry in the Owens College, Manchester, 1874-77; and was appointed Prælector in Chemistry at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, 1877. He took the degree of M.A., honoris causa, given by the University of Cambridge in 1880; and was elected a Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, 1881. He was Examiner in Chemistry in the Natural Sciences Tripos (Cambridge) 1884 and 1885, and is the author of "Qualitative Analysis and Laboratory Practice," with T. E. Thorpe, 1874 (several editions published since); "Chemistry for Medical Students," 1878; "Chemists" in "Heroes of Science" series, 1883; "A Treatise on the Principles of Chemistry," 1884; 2nd edit., 1889; "Elements of Thermal Chemistry," 1885; "Elementary Chemistry," (with Chas. Slater), 1887; "Practical Chemistry" (with D. J. Carnegie) 1887; joint-editor of a new edition of Watts's Dictionary of Chemistry, 1888; and author of "The Chemistry of Fire," 1893; "The Alchemical Essence and the Chemical Element," 1894; "The Story of the Chemical Elements," 1896; and "A Course of Practical Chemistry," 1897. Address: Caius College, Cambridge.

MUIR, Sir William, K.C.S.I., D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D., Principal and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Edinburgh, son of Mr. William Muir, of Glasgow, was born in 1819. He was educated at the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and at Haileybury College; entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1837; has been Secretary to the Government of India in the foreign department; was appointed Provisional Member of the Governor-General's Council in India in December 1867, and Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces in 1868; was invested with the Order of the Star of India in 1867; appointed Financial Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India in 1874; and retired in 1876; Member of the Council of India, 1876 to 1885; Principal of the University of Edinburgh, 1885, in succession to the late Sir Alexander Grant. He is LL.D. of Glasgow and Edinburgh; was created an honorary D.C.L. of the University of Oxford in 1882; and Ph.D. of Bologna in 1888. His works are: "The Life of Mahomet and History of Islam, to the Era of the Hegira," 4 vols., Lond., 1858-61 (3rd edit., 1 vol., 1894); Annals of the Early Caliphate, 1883; "The Caliphate," 2nd edit., 1893; "The Corân, its Composition and Teaching, and the Testimony it bears to the Holy Scriptures," 1878; "Extracts from the Corân, with English rendering," 1880; "The Apology of Al-Kindy," 1881 and 1887; "The Early Caliphate and Rise of Islam," being the Rede Lecture for 1881, delivered before the University of Cambridge; "Sweet First-Fruits" and "Beacon of Truth"; "The Mameluke Dynasty"; "The Mohammedan Controversy," 1897; "Cyprian," &c. He married, in 1840, Elizabeth, daughter of James Wemyss, B.C.S. She died in October 1897. Address: Dean Park House, Edinburgh.

MULHALL, Michael G., born 1836, is third son of the late Thomas Mulhall, lawyer, St. Stephen's Green, Dublin. He was educated at the Irish College, Rome. In 1861 he founded the Buenos Ayres Standard, the first English daily paper printed in S. America. Since 1880 he has been a constant contributor to the Contemporary Review and to Section F. of the British Association. He was elected to the Committee of the Association in 1884, and attended the Anglo-American Scientific Congress, held that year at Philadelphia. His principal works are; "The Progress of the World," 1880; the "Dictionary of Statistics," 1886, of which the fourth edition has appeared; and the "Industries and Wealth of Nations," 1896. His wife, Mrs Marion Mulhall, published, in 1883, a book of travels "Between the Amazon and the Andes," and received a complimentary letter from the Royal Italian Geographical Society. In 1896-97 she contributed some historical essays to the Dublin Review, besides an article in the Contemporary Review on Technical Schools for Girls. Permanent address: Killiney Park, co. Dublin.

MULLER, Max. See MAX-MÜLLER, THE RIGHT HON. PROFESSOR FRIEDRICH.

MULLINGER, James Bass, M.A., was born at Bishop Stortford, Herts, being the second son of John Morse Mullinger, and Mary, second daughter of the Rev. James Bass, of Halstead, Essex. He studied at University College, London, in the classes of the late Professors De Morgan and Malden. In 1862 he entered at St. John's College, Cambridge; graduated B.A. in 1866 in double honours, third class in Classics, and second class in Moral Sciences, and was Le Bas, Hulsean, and Kaye University Prizeman. He was for two years Lecturer on History at Bedford College, London, and is at the present time Cambridge University Lecturer on History and Lecturer and Librarian to St. John's College. He was Birkbeck Lecturer on Ecclesiastical History to Trinity College, 1890-94, and Lecturer on History of Education to Teachers' Training Syndicate at Cambridge from 1885 to 1895. He was President of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society for the year 1896-97. Mr. Mullinger is the author of "Cambridge Characteristics in the Seventeenth Century," 1867; "The Ancient African Church," 1869; "The New Reformation," a narrative of the Old Catholic movement, published under the nom de guerre of "Theodorus," 1875; "The University of Cambridge, from the Earliest Times to the Accession of Charles I.," 2 vols., 1873-84 (on the third volume of which he is at the present time engaged); "The Schools of Charles the Great," 1877; and joint-author, with Dr. S. R. Gardiner, of "An Introduction to English History," which has gone through several editions. He has written also various historical articles in the "Dictionary of Christian Antiquities"; and is the author of those on "The Popedom," "The Reformation," and "Universities" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He has been a frequent contributor to the Academy, the Revue Historique, the Contemporary Review, and the "Dictionary of National Biography." Address: St. John's College, Cambridge.

MUN, Adrien Albert Marie, Comte de, French politician and philosopher, was born at Lumigny, Feb. 23, 1841, and is the great-grandson of the celebrated materialist philosopher, Helvetius. Before taking to politics, he was in the army, and rose to be a Captain of Cuirassiers. However, he left the service in 1875, owing to his devotion to the cause of Roman Catholicism, which he furthered by founding workmen's clubs throughout France. In 1876 he was elected Deputy for Pontivy, once a centre of the Breton Chouans, and sat among the Extreme Right in the Chamber, where he rendered himself famous by his clerical and anti-Republican motions. During the Boulanger agitation he kept outside all strife, and in 1892, when Leo XIII. invited the French monarchists to give in their adhesion to the Republic, the Comte de Mun formally renounced politics, and devoted himself to the task of reconciling Church and State. In 1897 he was elected a member of the French Academy to the seat lately occupied by Jules Simon, and formerly by Massillon. His speech at his election in praise of his predecessor was greatly admired, for he is in the front rank of French orators. His Paris address is 5 Avenue de l'Alma.

MUNKACS, Michael von, or Michael Lieb, Hungarian painter, was born near Munkacs, Oct. 10, 1846. His parents were poor, and he was apprenticed to a carpenter, but his genius for painting soon manifested itself, and he left the bench for the easel, gaining a prize of eighty florins from the Pesth Art Union, which enabled him to study in the Vienna Art Galleries and afterwards at Munich and Düsseldorf. His picture, "The Last Day of a Condemned Prisoner," was exhibited in the Paris Salon in 1870, and at once established his reputation. This was followed by "An Episode of the Hungarian War of 1849," "The Night Prowlers," "The Studio," "The Two Families," "Milton Dictating 'Paradise Lost' to his Daughters," 1878; "Christ before Pilate," 1882; "Christ on Calvary," 1884; "The Last Moments of Mozart," 1886; "Allegory of the Italian Renaissance," a fresco, 1890; "The Favourite Air," 1891; and three portraits of ladies, 1890-92. He was promoted to be a Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1890, and has obtained medals at successive Exhibitions in Paris, and a grand prize in 1889. He is famous for his fine colouring, surprising effects of light and air, and daring originality, but his canvases are occasionally too crowded with figures. In 1896 he returned to Hungary permanently from Paris, where he had lived since the early seventies, but in 1897 he developed symptoms of insanity, and he has lived in seclusion ever since.

MUNRO, Robert, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.E., Secretary to Lord Rosebery when Foreign Secretary of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, was born in Ross-shire, July 21, 1835, and married 8th Sept. 1875. Dr. Munro received his early education in the parish of Kiltearn, Ross-shire, whence he was sent for a couple of years to Tain Royal Academy preparatory to entering the University of Edinburgh. After completing his studies at that University, graduating both in Arts and Medicine, he settled as a medical practitioner in the town of Kilmarnock, Ayrshire. Shortly afterwards he had an opportunity of gratifying an early acquired taste for foreign travel by making a tour through Egypt and Palestine. During his residence at Kilmarnock some remarkable discoveries of Lake Dwellings were made in the West of Scotland in which he became greatly interested, and these ultimately supplied him with materials for his work "On the Ancient Scottish Lake Dwellings," 1882. In 1885 he was President of the Glasgow and West of Scotland Branch of the British Medical Association, when he delivered an address on "The Scientific Basis of Medicine." Retiring from the medical profession in 1886, he has since devoted his time to anthropological and archaeological pursuits. In 1888 he was appointed by the Council of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland Rhind-Lecturer in Archaeology for that year, the subject assigned to him being "The Lake Dwellings of Europe." These lectures formed the nucleus of his exhaustive work on that subject which appeared in 1890. In 1893 he was President of the Anthropological Section of the British Association Meeting held at Nottingham. He was invited by the Government of Bosnia-Herzegovina to attend a special Congress held at Sarajevo (August 1894) for the purpose of discussing some very remarkable discoveries recently made in that country. The outcome of that journey was the publication in 1895 of "Rambles and Studies in Bosnia-Herzegovina and Dalmatia," the only work in the English language which gives an account of the great neolithic station at Butmir and of the early Iron-Age Cemeteries of Glasinac and Tezerine. In June 1896 Dr. Munro delivered a course of two lectures on "Lake Dwellings" at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. His latest work, "Prehistoric Problems," 1897, contains among other subjects his much discussed essay on the influence of the erect posture on the intellectual development of the brain. Dr. Munro has also contributed largely to the journals of Scientific, Medical, and Archæological Societies. He is (causa honoris) Member of the Royal Irish Academy, Fellow of the R. Soc. of Antiq. of Ireland, Member of the R. Society of Northern Antiquaries, Corr. Member of the Anthropological Societies of Berlin and Vienna, &c. During his travels he has visited North America, China and Japan, India, Egypt, and all the principal archæological centres in Europe. His residence is 48 Manor Place, Edinburgh.

MUNRO-FERGUSON, Ronald Craufurd, M.P., J.P., D.L., is the eldest son of the late Colonel R. Munro-Ferguson, of Raith, M.P. He was born in 1860, and was educated at Sandhurst. He was for a time Lieutenant in the Grenadier Guards. He was Liberal representative in the House of Commons of Ross and Cromarty from 1884 to 1885, and since 1886 has represented the Leith Burghs. In 1894 he was appointed a Lord of the Treasury, going out of office in June 1895. He was Private Secretary in 1886 and again in 1892-94. He is J.P. and D.L. for Fifeshire, D.L. for Ross-shire, and in 1885 became Captain of the 1st Fife Light Horse Rifle Volunteers. In 1889 he married Helen, daughter of the Marquis of Dufferin. Addresses: Raith House, Kirkcaldy, &c.; and 46 Cadogan Square, S.W.

MÜNSTER-LEDENBURG, Georg Herbert, Count, German Diplomatist and Ambassador in Paris, was born in London, Dec. 23, 1820, and is the son of the famous Hanoverian statesman. He was educated at the Universities of Bonn, Heidelberg, and Göttingen, and sat by hereditary right in the Hanoverian Upper House. From 1856 to 1864 he was on an Extraordinary Mission to St. Petersburg; on the annexation of Hanover he became a Member of the Upper House of Prussia, and afterwards of the North German Confederation, and finally of the Imperial Reichstag. He was appointed Ambassador to England in 1873, and to Paris in 1885. His services were rewarded by the Order of the Black Eagle in 1889, and in 1898 he celebrated his twenty-fifth year of ambassadorial rank. The German Embassy is situate at 78 Rue de Lille, Paris.

MURAVIEFF, Count, Russian Foreign Minister, was born in 1845 of a distinguished Russian family. He was educated at Poltava and Heidelberg, and entered the Russian Diplomatic Service. In 1864 he was attached to the Russian Embassy at Berlin, and was afterwards at Stockholm and Stuttgart. In 1874 he became Secretary at the Hague, and from 1880 to 1884 he was at Paris. In 1893 he was promoted to be Minister to Denmark, where he created a favourable impression on the Dowager-Empress, who is a daughter of the King. Probably this led to his being chosen to succeed Prince Lobanoff as the Czar's Minister for Foreign Affairs in January 1897. This post he has held with conspicuous success ever since, and in August 1898 he was the channel through which the Czar's wishes for a Peace Congress were made known to the Great Powers.

MURRAY, Alexander Stuart, LL.D., F.S.A., Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities in the British Museum, was born near Arbroath, Jan. 8, 1841, and is the eldest son of George Murray. He was educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh, the University of Edinburgh, and the University of Berlin. He was appointed Assistant in the British Museum in 1867, and Keeper in 1886, in succession to Sir C. T. Newton, K.C.B., retired. He is best known by a work on the History of Greek Sculpture, 2 vols., 1880 and 1883; and a Handbook of Greek Archæology, 1892. He has also contributed numerous articles to the Nineteenth Century, Contemporary Review, Revue Archéologique, and Journal of Hellenic Studies, &c. He is an active and prominent member of the Hellenic Society. Addresses: British Museum, and Athenæum.

MURRAY, Alma, actress, was born in London, and is a daughter of Leigh Murray, the actor. She was educated privately, and first appeared on the stage at the Olympic whilst still a little girl. Since 1879 she has played at the Lyceum, and all the principal London theatres. In 1897 she played Rosalind, her first appearance in the part, at the Metropole Theatre, Camberwell. The Shelley and the Browning Societies have chosen her as the interpreter of the chief female characters in their arduous revivals. Thus in the daring revival by the Shelley Society of "The Cenci," she took the part of Beatrice. She is well-known for her recitations. Her husband is Mr. Alfred Forman, the Wagnerian. Address: 49 Comeragh Road, West Kensington, W.

MURRAY, The Right Hon. Andrew Graham, Q.C., M.P., Lord Advocate of Scotland, was born in Edinburgh on Nov. 21, 1849, and is the only child of the late T. Graham Murray, W.S., of Stenton. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was a scholar (M.A. 1875). He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1874; was Advocate Depute from 1888 to 1890; Sheriff of Perthshire from 1890 to 1891; Solicitor-General for Scotland for two periods, viz., from 1891 to 1892, and 1895-

96, and in 1896 was appointed Lord Advocate. Since 1891 he has been Conservative member for Bute. He became Q.C. in 1891, and was sworn of the Privy Council in 1896. London address: Kensington Palace Mansions, S.W.

MURRAY, David, A.R.A., A.R.S.A., A.R.W.S., R.S.W., was born in Glasgow on Jan. 29, 1849, and is the eldest son of James Murray of that city. He was educated at Glasgow, entered upon a commercial career, and after more than ten years chose the profession of art. He lived for a time in a hut in Skye, studying landscape. His landscapes include Highland views, a series of pictures of Picardy and of Hampstead Heath, and views on the Kennet and Avon, &c. Since 1875 he has been a constant exhibitor in the Royal Academy. Address: 1 Langham Chambers, Portland Place, W.

MURRAY, David Christie, was born at West Bromwich, Staffordshire, April 13, 1847, and educated at a private school there. He began press life as a reporter on the Birmingham Morning News, under the editorship of his friend George Dawson; came to London in 1873, served on the Daily News, and was on the staff of the World. He acted as special correspondent of the Scotsman and the Times in the Russo-Turkish War. On his return he abandoned journalism for fiction. In 1879 he published his first long work of fiction in Chambers's Journal—"A Life's Atonement." "Joseph's Coat" appeared in 1880; "Val Strange" and "Coals of Fire," "A Collection of Short Stories," in 1881; "Hearts" and "By the Gate of the Sea," in 1882, the latter being the latest serial published in the original series of the Cornhill Magazine. In 1883 Mr. Murray published "The Way of the World," and in 1886 "Aunt Rachel," which appeared first in the English Illustrated Magazine; "Old Blazer's Hero," 1887; "A Dangerous Catpaw" (written in connection with Mr. Henry Murray); and "Wild Darrie," 1889; "Bob Martin's Little Girl," 1892; "A Wasted Crime," 1893; "In Direst Peril," "The Great War of 189—" (in conjunction with P. Colomb), "The Making of a Novelist," "Mount Despair," and "A Gospel o' Nails," 1894; "The Bishop's Amazement," and "A Rogue's Conscience," 1896; "This Little World," and "My Contemporaries in Fiction," 1897; "Tales in Prose and Verse," "The Cockney Columbus," and "A Race for Millions," 1898; and in collaboration with the late Henry Herman, "Our Travellers Returned," "The Bishop's Bible," and "Paul Jones's Alias." During the earlier part of the year 1898 Mr. Christie Murray was in Paris, where he had constant interviews with M. Zola, and warmly espoused his cause. He delivered lectures on the celebrated Dreyfus imbroglio, employing the aid of the magic lantern to demonstrate the merits of the famous "bordereau." Address: Clan y don, Pensarn, near Abergele.

MURRAY, Professor George Gilbert Aimé, was born in Sydney, Jan. 2, 1866, and is the third son of the late T. A. Murray, who was the first Speaker in the Legislative Council of New South Wales, and for ten years its President. G. G. A. Murray was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and at St. John's College, Oxford, where, in his first year, he carried off the Hertford and Ireland Scholarships, and subsequently every open scholarship and prize of the University, and was elected to a Fellowship at New College. In 1889, at the age of only twenty-three, he became Professor of Greek at the University of Glasgow. He published in 1890, "Gobi or Shamo: a Story of Three Songs"; "History of Ancient Greek Literature," 1897, and has written much on Hellenic subjects in the Speaker, the Journal of Education, and the Göttigen Philologus. In November 1889 he married the Hon. Lady Mary Howard, eldest daughter of the Earl of Carlisle. Address: 5 The College, Glasgow.

MURRAY, The Hon. George Henry, Q.C., Premier and Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia, was born at Grand Narrows, N.S., June 7, 1861. He was educated at Boston University, and was called to the Bar in 1883, and practised at North Sydney. He was appointed to the Legislative Council of Nova Scotia in 1889, and in 1896 unsuccessfully fought Sir Charles Tupper (q.v.) for the representation of Cape Breton. In July of the same year he succeeded Mr. Fielding as Premier of Nova Scotia, and in August was returned to the Dominion Assembly for Victoria. He was made a Q.C. in 1895 by Lord Aberdeen. Address: Halifax, N.S.

MURRAY, Sir George Herbert, K.C.B., the eldest son of the Rev. G. E. Murray, late Rector of South Fleet, was born in 1849. He began his career in 1873 as a clerk in the Foreign Office, and in 1877 acted as Secretary to the Commission for negotiating a new commercial treaty with France. In 1880 he was appointed Private Secretary to Sir Charles Dilke, and in the same year was transferred to a clerkship in the Treasury, where he remained up to the beginning of 1897, being latterly a
